a means of shifting its cars, which has been strongly condemned by us, as we have seen, or it must take the consequences of its causing injury to persons in the lawful use of its crossings, or, at least, it must, by proper signals, whether from the top of the car or on the crossing, and by the exercise of that degree of care, which is commensurate with the danger it has produced or enhanced, provide against resulting damage. Maxton is a populous town, one of our largest and most prosperous, and this crossing is much used by the public, including school children. Common prudence demands that care, duly proportioned to the great risk they incur when they cross its tracks, should be taken in order that it will not be further increased by the continuance of unnecessary and highly dangerous methods in the operation of trains.

This case illustrates the danger of the "flying switch" and shows how easily it may entrap the unsuspecting traveler. 1. The following car was not coupled to an engine, which by its noise and smoke, its bell or whistle, would attract attention, and, being much lighter, it moved almost noiselessly. 2. The engine with its cars had passed, making noise by ringing its bell and otherwise at the other end of the track, and by its movements indicating its return. 3. No one was at the crossing to signal that shifting was in progress. 4. The traveler relies upon the reasonable supposition that there is no danger ahead, and goes on, not anticipating that defendant, in violation of the law, would make a flying switch, especially under such circumstances. 2 Thompson on Neg. §§ 1612, 1697, and note. Add to all this the intervening line of cars which entirely obstruct his view and conceal the impending danger, and the trap is complete.

We do not impute any moral wrong to defendant, as we are dealing only with the legal aspect of the case; but the defendant was negligent to the point of recklessness, even if its acts were thoughtlessly and not intentionally committed.

[16] The second exception is clearly untenable. It was irrelevant to the controversy that the witness C. C. Hatch had measured other box cars, unless it had been shown that the box cars near or at this crossing were of the same dimensions. It is admitted that there is no uniformity in the width of box cars, and that those on the oil mill siding, which obstructed plaintiff's view, were not measured by the witness or any one else. The rule for estimating or judging one thing by its resemblance to another, therefore, does not apply, as, at least, substantial identity between them must first be shown before it is admissible to institute the comparison so that you may reason from one to the other, for the purpose of proving the objective fact. This is so in regard to values, and is equally so as to size, quality, and quantity, or any other characteristic which admits of comparison. If the car at the crossing had been measured, no comparison would have been necessary. It is similitude that opens the door to this kind of evidence and lets it in. We have so held. Warren v. Makely, 85 N. C. 12; Chaffin v. Manufacturing Co., 135 N. C. 95, 47 S. E. 226. Without this element, the evidence, if admitted, would be purely conjectural, and would introduce irrelevant and diverting matters, confusing to the jury and prolonging the trial indefinitely. Waters v. Roberts, 89 N. C. 145. We have assumed, for the sake of argument, that the question would otherwise be competent and relevant, which is by no means clear or to be taken as granted, and for that reason have left out of consideration other reasons assigned in support of the court's ruling.

[17] Plaintiff was permitted to show, against defendant's objection, that Bonnie Helmes, one of its witnesses and employed as its brakeman, had come to the place of trial on a free pass, given to him by defendant. The purpose was to show his bias. Wigmore says, in his work on Evidence (volume 2, § 949): "The range of external circumstances from which probable bias may be inferred is infinite. Too much refinement in analyzing their probable effect is out of place. Accurate concrete rules are almost impossible to formulate, and where possible are usually undesirable. In general, these circumstances should have some clearly apparent force, as tested by experience of human nature, or, as it is usually put, they should not be too remote. The relation of employment, present or past, by one of the parties, is usually relevant." But the very point was squarely decided in A. G. S. R. Co. v. Johnston, 128 Ala. 283, 29 South. 771, where it is said: "A witness may be questioned on cross-examination about matters which tend to show bias or partiality towards the party by whom he is introduced; and, in an action against a railroad company to recover damages, it is permissible for the plaintiff, on cross-examination of witnesses introduced by the defendant, to show that they were furnished free transportation for their attendance on the trial, or that they were given the general privilege of riding on the defendant's road, such evidence having a tendency towards establishing a bias on the part of such witnesses." See 1 Greenleaf Ev. (16th Ed.) 450. The case of Cecil v. Henderson, 119 N. C. 423, 25 S. E. 1018, cited by counsel for defendant, is not applicable. The two questions are essentially different.

[18] The defendant moved in the court below to set aside the verdict, because it is against the weight of the evidence and the damages are grossly excessive, and the motion was pressed in this court with zeal by counsel, but we must deny it, as we are not authorized to try the facts or to revise the findings of the jury in a case like this, nor do we assent to the claim that the damages are grossly or "shockingly" excessive. We are not, therefore, at liberty to review the ruling against defendant on the motion, but must leave it as we find it, the final appeal in such cases being to the presiding judge; and we may add that there is nothing in the evidence to show that his discretion was not properly exercised, nor are we willing to intimate that we would reverse if we had the power to review. The eminently just judge, before whom the case was tried, would not have hesitated to set aside the verdict if, upon a fair consideration of the proof, it was right to do so. We have just said, at this term, in Pender v. Insurance Co., 79 S. E. 293: There "was some evidence which was properly submitted to the jury, and the defendant having failed to have the verdict set aside by the judge below, because it was against the weight of the evidence, must abide by the result as final and beyond our control. We can review by appeal 'any decision of the courts below upon any matter of law or legal inference'; but in jury trials, at least, our jurisdiction ends when that is done. We cannot review findings of fact in such cases. Const. art. 4, § 8." See Benton v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 1007, 30 S. E. 333, and cases therein cited.

[19] We are of the opinion, though, that there was an error in the charge as to damages. The three clauses in the charge to which exceptions were specially reserved in the assignment of errors are these: (1) "He is entitled to the difference between what he would make if the injury had not been done and what he would make with it done." (2) "If you reach this issue, and say what is the value of his diminished earning capacity, then, when you do that, you are to add reasonable compensation for his pain and suffering." (3) "He is entitled to the difference between what he would make if the injury had not been done and what he would make with it done," and the following: "If you reach this issue and say what is the value of his diminished earning capacity, then, when you do that, you are to add compensation for his pain and suffering." Also the following: "And when you ascertain that, you add that to such amount as you may have determined to be the amount to which his earning capacity has been diminished by the injury." The same instruction was given in Fry v. Railroad, 159 N. C. 357, 362, 74 S. E. 971, 973. It will be sufficient to sustain this exception that we refer to that case and what we there decided. We there said: "There was error in the following instruction as to damages: 'If you find that he has been permanently injured, and that such injury partially incapacitates him to earn money, then he would be entitled to recover damages for partial incapacity, if you find the injury was caused by the negligence of the defendant. He would be entitled to recover the difference between what he is able to earn at the present time, and in the future, and what he would have been able to earn if the accident had not happened; and, passing upon his expectancy, the mortuary table has been read to you, and you will bear that in mind in awarding damages, if you find that the plaintiff is entitled to recover anything.' In an action for injuries by negligence, such as this one, the plaintiff is only entitled to recover the reasonable present value of his diminished earning power in the future, and not the difference between what he would be able to earn in the future, but for such injury, and such sum as he would be able to earn in his present condition. Railroad v. Paschall [41 Tex. Civ. App. 357] 92 S. W. 448. Where future payments for the loss of earning power are to be anticipated by the jury and capitalized in a verdict, the plaintiff is entitled only to their present worth. Goodhart v. Railroad, 177 Pa. 1 [35 Atl. 191, 55 Am. St. Rep. 705]. The damages to be awarded for a negligent personal injury resulting in a diminution of earning power is a sum equal to the present worth of such diminution, and not its aggregate for plaintiff's expectancy of life. O'Brien v. White, 105 Me. 308 [74 Atl. 721]. The rule, as we see, may be stated with varying phraseology, but they all carry the same idea, that the estimate should be based upon the present value of the difference between plaintiff's earning capacity, and not the total difference caused by the injury. The rule is supported by many authorities in this and other jurisdictions. Pickett v. Railroad, 117 N. C. 616 [23 S. E. 264, 30 L. R. A. 257, 53 Am. St. Rep. 611]; Wilkinson v. Dunbar, 149 N. C. 20 [62 S. E. 748]; Benton v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 1007 [30 S. E. 333]; Watson v. Railroad, 133 N. C. 188 [45 S. E. 555]; Railroad v. Carroll, 84 Fed. 772 [28 C. O. A. 207]; Fulsome v. Concord, 46 Vt. 135; Kinney v. Folkerts, 84 Mich. 616 [48 N. W. 283]. In Pickett v. Railroad, 117 N. C. 616, 23 S. E. 264, 30 L. R. A. 257, 53 Am. St. Rep. 611, a similar instruction was held (opinion by Avery, J.) to be objectionable, because "it left * * * the date which should be the basis of the final calculation, to say the least, uncertain, if his language was not susceptible of the construction that the net income would be estimated as of the period when those dependent on him would have realized the benefit of his labor had he not come to an untimely end." It is there said that the jury should be told that it is the present value of the net earnings or income, the rule being stated succinctly and clearly in the seventh headnote of the case. The identical rule is laid down in Benton v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 1007, 30 S. E. 333 (opinion by Clark, J.), citing Pickett's Case; Burton v. Railroad, 82 N. C. 504; Kesler v. Railroad, 66 N. C. 154. This is not merely the just and reasonable rule, where all the damages are to be awarded and paid presently, and not as they accrue in the future, but it is the only one admissible under the statute, and it is said in Benton's Case to have been established by the precedents. Any other principle, if adopted, would enable a plaintiff to recover more than could possibly be earned, as no man realizes at once the full earnings or accumulations of a lifetime.

[20] There must be a new trial of the issue as to damages, and it is restricted to that issue, as was done in Tillett v. Railroad, 115 N. C. 662, 20 S. E. 480; Pickett v. Railroad, supra; the error relating only to the damages.

New trial.

On Motion for New Trial.

[21] Since this case was argued, the defendant has moved for a new trial, upon the ground of newly discovered evidence. Applications of this kind, as we have held, should be carefully scrutinized and cautiously examined, and the burden is upon the applicant to rebut the presumption that the verdict is correct and that there has been a lack of due diligence. 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Pl. & Pr. 790.

[22] We require, as prerequisite to the granting of such motions, that it shall appear by the affidavit: (1) That the witness will give the newly discovered evidence; (2) that it is probably true; (3) that it is competent, material, and relevant; (4) that due diligence has been used and the means employed, or that there has been no laches, in procuring the testimony at the trial; (5) that it is not merely cumulative; (6) that it does not tend only to contradict a former witness or to impeach or discredit him; (7) that it is of such a nature as to show that on another trial a different result will probably be reached and that the right will prevail. Turner v. Davis, 182 N. C. 187, 43 S. E. 637; State v. Starnes, 97 N. C. 423, 2 S. E. 447; Brown v. Mitchell, 102 N. C. 347, 9 S. E. 702, 11 Am. St. Rep. 748; State v. De Graff, 113 N. C. 688, 18 S. E. 507; Shehan v. Malone, 72 N. C. 59; Mottu v. Davis, 153 N. C. 160, 69 S. E. 63; Aden v. Doub, 146 N. C. 10, 59 S. E. 162. When we examine the affidavit of Hector Austen, and the others, upon which the defendant bases its motion for a new trial, we find that it falls far short of complying with the rule we have just stated. In some respects the proposed testimony is merely cumulative, and in others it only tends to contradict or impeach the plaintiff's witnesses at the trial. It is not very definite. The witness does not speak with sufficient positiveness and directness to give us the slightest assurance that there will be a different result if we grant the application. He states that the brake was not applied to the car making the flying switch, which would tend rather to strengthen than to weaken the plaintiff's case. It is not satisfactorily shown that the testimony of the witness, if desired, could not have been secured at the trial by the exercise of proper diligence. We are convinced that the testimony, if it had been introduced before, would not have changed the result. We refer now to the second affidavit of Hector Austen, made in behalf of plaintiff.

Motion denied.

VARNVILLE FURNITURE CO. v.
CHARLESTON & W. C. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 15, 1913.)

1. COMMERCE (§§ 10, 61*)—INTERSTATE COMMERCE—VALIDITY OF STATE LEGISLATION.

Civ. Code 1912, § 2573, providing that every claim for freight overcharged or for loss of or damage to property while in the possession of common carriers shall be adjusted and paid within 30 days in case of shipments wholly within the state, and within 40 days in case of shipments from without the state, and that failure to adjust and pay such claims within such periods shall subject the common carrier so failing to a penalty of $50, does not unlawfully regulate or unreasonably burden interstate commerce, and is valid in the absence of legislation by Congress on the same subject.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Commerce, Cent. Dig. §§ 8, 81-84, 89; Dec. Dig. §§ 10, 61.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 2*)—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§§ 247, 303*)—LOSS OF OR INJURY TO GOODS—PENALTIES FOR DELAYED SETTLEMENT.

Such section does not deprive carriers of their property without due process of law, or deny to them the equal protection of the laws.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 4, 5; Dec. Dig. § 2.* Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 708, 863-866; Dec. Dig. §§ 247, 303.*]

3. COMMERCE (§ 8*)—INTERSTATE COMMERCE—VALIDITY OF STATE LEGISLATION.

The Carmack amendment to the interstate commerce law (Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 7; para. 11, 12, 34 Stat. 593 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1307]), which provides that any common carrier receiving property for interstate transportation shall issue a receipt or bill of lading therefor, and shall be liable to the holder thereof for loss, damage, or injury to such property caused by it or any connecting carrier, does not defeat the recovery of penalties under Civ. Code 1912, § 2573, for the failure of a carrier to adjust and pay claims for overcharges of freight or loss of or damage to property promptly, where such penalties were incurred prior to its enactment, even if section 2573 is superseded and annulled by that amendment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Commerce, Cent. Dig. § 5; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

4. COMMERCE (§ 8*)—INTERSTATE COMMERCE—VALIDITY OF STATE LEGISLATION.

Civ. Code 1912, § 2573, requiring carriers to adjust and pay claims for overcharges of freight, or for loss of or damage to property while in its possession within 30 days in case of shipments wholly within the state, and within 40 days in case of shipments from without the state, and imposing a penalty of $50 for each failure to adjust and pay a claim within the period specified, is not inconsistent with, and was not superseded by, the Carmack amendment to the interstate commerce law (Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 7, para. 11, 12, 34 Stat. 593 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1307]), which provides that common carriers receiving property for interstate transportation shall issue a receipt or bill of lading therefor, and shall be liable to the lawful holder thereof for any loss, damage, or injury to such property caused by it or any connecting carrier, that no contract, receipt, etc., shall exempt the carrier from the liability thereby imposed, but that nothing therein shall deprive any holder of such receipt or bill of lading of any remedy or right of action which he has under existing law, and that such carrier may recover from the carrier on whose line the loss occurred the amount it may be required to pay, since that amendment applies only to the subject of liability on contracts, while section 2573 applies to the entirely different subject of settlement of the claims of shippers, and hence, Congress not having acted on the subject covered by section 2573, that section is valid as applied to interstate commerce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Commerce, Cent. Dig. § 5; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

5. COMMERCE (§ 8*)—INTERSTATE COMMERCE—VALIDITY OF STATE LEGISLATION.

The authority of Congress to regulate interstate and foreign commerce is supreme and unlimited except by the federal Constitution, and when Congress legislates upon any particular subject of such commerce, all conflicting state laws, whether statutes or common law, affecting the same subject are thereby superseded; but, in the absence of such legislation, the police power of the state remains unimpaired.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Commerce, Cent. Dig. § 3; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

6. COMMERCE (§ 8*)—INTERSTATE COMMERCE—VALIDITY OF STATE LEGISLATION.

There is no conflict, as to the carrier against which actions shall be brought, between Civ. Code 1912, § 2573, imposing a penalty for the failure of carriers to pay claims for overcharges of freight or for loss or damage to property within periods therein specified, and the Carmack amendment to the interstate commerce law (Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 7, para. 11, 12, 34 Stat. 593 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1307]), which requires common carriers receiving property for interstate transportation to issue a receipt or bill of lading therefor, and making such carriers liable to the holder thereof for any loss, damage, or injury to such property caused by it or any connecting carrier, and providing that nothing therein shall deprive any holder of such receipt or bill of lading of any remedy or right of action which he has under existing law, since, conceding that the proviso saves only remedies under existing federal laws, the amendment does not limit the remedy of the holder of the bill of lading to an action against the initial carrier, as at the time of its enactment such holder, under the law as it then existed and was administered by the federal courts, had a right of action against the carrier actually causing the loss or damage, and, moreover, section 2573 does not require all actions to be brought against the terminal carrier.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Commerce, Cent. Dig. § 5; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

7. COMMERCE (§ 8*)—LOSS OF OR INJURY TO GOODS—DAMAGES.

The provision of the Carmack amendment to the interstate commerce law (Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 7, para. 11, 12, 34 Stat. 593 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1307]), that nothing in that section shall deprive any holder of a receipt or bill of lading issued by a common carrier of any remedy or right of action which he has under existing law continues all rights and remedies for the redress of some specific wrong or injury, whether given by the interstate commerce act, by state statute, or common law, not inconsistent with the rules and regulations prescribed by the provisions of that act.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Commerce, Cent. Dig. § 5; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

Watts, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Hampton County; R. W. Memminger, Judge.

Action by the Varnville Furniture Company against the Charleston & Western Carolina Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. B. Grier, of Greenwood, and J. W. Manuel, of Hampton, for appellant. S. G. Varn, of Varnville, and J. W. Vincent, of Hampton, for respondent.

HYDRICK, J. Plaintiff recovered judgment against defendant in a magistrate's court for $14.75, damages done to a shipment of furniture, while in defendant's possession in this state, and $4.66, overcharges in the freight collected by defendant thereon, and $50, the penalty allowed by statute (Civ. Code 1912, § 2573), for the failure of defendant to pay plaintiff's claim for said damages and overcharge within 40 days after the filing thereof with defendant's agent. The initial carrier, the Southern Railway Company, received the shipment at High Point, N. C., to be transported over its own and connecting lines and delivered to plaintiff at Varnville, S. C., and issued its usual bill of lading therefor. Defendant received the shipment from the Southern Railway Company at Allendale, S. C., and delivered same to plaintiff at destination in a damaged condition. The circuit court affirmed the magistrate's judgment.

The only question made in the courts below and brought here by the grounds of appeal is that the statute above cited, under which defendant was penalized for its failure to pay plaintiff's claim within the time required, is void, as applied to interstate commerce, because: (a) It unlawfully regulates and unreasonably burdens the same; and (b) it deprives defendant of its property without due process of law, and denies to it the equal protection of the laws; and (c) it is in conflict with that provision of the federal statute regulating interstate commerce known as the Carmack amendment (Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 7, para. 11, 12, 34 Stat. 593 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1307]).

[1, 2] The learned counsel for appellant admits that the first and second grounds above stated have been foreclosed by the decisions of this court which have been affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States in A. C. L. R. Co. v. Mazursky, 216 U. S. 122, 30 Sup. Ct. 373, 54 L. Ed. 411, in which the validity of the statute now under consideration was affirmed. He contends, however, that the third ground was not involved in any of those cases, and that the effect of the federal statute above referred to, as it has been interpreted and applied in recent decisions of the federal Supreme Court, has been to supersede and annul the state statute.

[3] It is said that the delicts upon which the penalties were inflicted in the Mazursky Case, and the others decided with it, occurred prior to the adoption of the Carmack amendment. As to that matter, the reports of those cases (except the Charles Case) are silent. But, if the fact be as stated by appellant's counsel, it is true that the federal statute would not have defeated the recovery of penalties incurred prior to its enactment. Yazoo, etc., R. Co. v. Greenwood Grocery Co., 227 U. S. 1, 33 Sup. Ct. 213, 57 L. Ed. 380, decided January 20, 1913.

[4] But the arguments in the Supreme Court of the United States in the Mazursky Case show that the point was made and pressed upon the attention of the court that, if the state ever had power to enact this statute, it was valid only until Congress should take action upon the same subject, and that Congress having taken such action, by the passage of laws regulating interstate commerce in great detail, it had thereby excluded or superseded the power of the state. At the time those cases were argued, the Carmack amendment had been on the statute books over three years; and, if it had the effect which is now claimed for it, it is strange that it was not mentioned either by counsel who argued the cause or by the court in its opinion in disposing of the contention above stated, as was done in the Greenwood Grocery Company's Case above cited, with regard to a similar effect given to the provisions of the Hepburn act. The omission points with force to the conclusion that it was not supposed, either by counsel or by the court, to have any bearing upon the point at issue. Because, even though for the reason above stated it could not have controlled the decision, yet it would almost certainly have been advanced as an argument tending to show the intention of Congress to take possession of the field covered by the state statute. Besides this, the Mazursky Case has been cited several times by the Supreme Court of the United States in cases subsequently decided, which involved the superseding effect of the provisions of the federal statute regulating interstate commerce upon conflicting state laws, without any intimation that its authority is limited by the fact suggested. On the contrary, in Southern Ry. Co. v. Reid, 222 U. S. 436, 32 Sup. Ct. 140, 56 L. Ed. 260, in answering the contention, which was based upon the authority of the Mazursky Case and the James Case, 162 U. S. 350, 16 Sup. Ct. 934, 40 L. Ed. 1105, that the North Carolina statute under consideration was a valid exercise of the police power of the state, the court said: "In those cases, and in the later case of Western U. Tel. Co. v. Commercial Mill. Co., 218 U. S. 406, 31 Sup. Ct. 59, 54 L. Ed. 1088 [36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 220, 21 Ann. Cas. 815]. the principle is expressed that 'there are many occasions where the police power of the state can be properly exercised to insure a faithful and prompt performance of duty within the limits of the state upon the part of those engaged in interstate commerce.' Such exercise of power, it was further said, was in aid of interstate commerce, and, although incidentally affecting it, did not burden it. But the facts of those cases distinguish them from the case at bar, and make their principle inapplicable. In the Telegraph Company Cases, there was a failure to transmit or deliver telegrams, in violation of the duty so to do imposed by particular state statutes. In the Railroad Case, a statute of the state of South Carolina which required carriers to settle within a specified time claims for loss of or damage to freight while in their possession within the state was sustained against the objection that it was an interference with interstate commerce. In none of the cases, however, was there any federal legislation upon the subject involved, and in all of them such circumstance was stated as an element of decision. The circumstance is important, and we are brought to the inquiry whether it exists in the present case." (Italics added.) It appears therefore that, even as late as the decision of the Reid Case, which was filed in January, 1912, the court had not discovered that there was any conflict between the Carmack amendment and this statute, the validity of which was affirmed in the Mazursky Case upon the ground of the absence of "any federal legislation upon the subject involved."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[6] But, treated as an open question, the conclusion is inevitable that there is no such conflict. We wish to make it clear at the outset that we concede that the authority of Congress to regulate interstate and foreign commerce is supreme and unlimited, except by the federal Constitution, and that, when Congress legislates upon any particular subject of such commerce, all conflicting state laws, whether statute or common law, affecting the same subject, are thereby superseded. On the other hand, we maintain that, in the absence of such legislation, the police power of the state remains unimpaired. These propositions are universally recognized, and they have been reaffirmed in the very latest decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 8 Sup. Ct. 564, 31 L. Ed. 508; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Solan, 169 U. S. 133, 18 Sup. Ct. 289, 42 L. Ed. 688; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hughes, 191 U. S. 477, 24 Sup. Ct. 132, 48 L. Ed. 268; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Arkansas, 219 U. S. 453, 31 Sup. Ct. 275, 55

L. Ed. 290; Adams Express Co. v. Croninger, 226 U. S. 491, 33 Sup. Ct. 148, 57 L. Ed. 314, decided January 6, 1913; Simpson v. Shepard, 230 U. S. 352, 33 Sup. Ct. 729, 57 L. Ed. 1511 (Minnesota rate case), decided June 9, 1913.

Let us inquire, then, what is meant by "the subject," when it is said that, when Congress has legislated upon or taken possession of "the subject," inconsistent state laws are superseded. This question was considered in Southern Railway Co. v. Reid, supra, where the court said: "It is well settled that if the state and Congress have a concurrent power, that of the state is superseded when the power of Congress is exercised. The question occurs, To what extent and how directly must it be exercised to have such effect? It was decided in Missouri P. R. Co. v. Larabee Flour Mills Co., 211 U. S. 612, 29 Sup. Ct. 214, 53 L. Ed. 352, that the mere creation of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the grant to it of a large measure of control over interstate commerce does not, in the absence of action by it, change the rule that Congress by nonaction leaves power in the states over merely incidental matters. 'In other words,' and we quote from the opinion, * * * 'the mere grant by Congress to the commission of certain national powers in respect to interstate commerce does not of itself and in the absence of action by the commission interfere with the authority of the state to make those regulations conducive to the welfare and convenience of its citizens. * * * Until specific action by Congress or the commission the control of the state over those incidental matters remains undisturbed.' The duty which was enforced in the state court was the duty of a railroad company engaged in interstate commerce to afford equal local switching service to its shippers, notwithstanding the cars concerning which the service was claimed were eventually to be engaged in interstate commerce. This duty was declared * * * to be a common-law duty which the state might, 'at least, in the absence of congressional action, compel a carrier to discharge.' The principle of that case, therefore, requires us to find specific action, either by Congress in the interstate commerce act, or by the commission, covering the matters which the statute of North Carolina attempts to regulate." (Italics added.)

The same question is so clearly and fully discussed in Savage v. Jones, 225 U. S. 501, 32 Sup. Ct. 715, 56 L. Ed. 1182, and that case is so directly in point, that we quote from the opinion at length. After stating that the statute of Indiana, which was assailed in that case, and which was adopted in 1907, after the passage of the pure food and drugs act of Congress of June 30, 1906 (Act June 30, 1906, c. 8915, 34 Stat. 768 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1354]), covered the same general subject, the court pointed out that the provisions of the state statute upon which it was attacked as being in conflict with the food and drugs act were not included in the legislation of Congress, and on that ground it was held that there was no conflict between the two, and that the state law was therefore valid. The court said:

"But this (the legislation of Congress) does not cover the entire ground. It is one thing to make a false or misleading statement regarding the article or its ingredients (the thing prohibited by the act of Congress), and it may be quite another to give no information as to what the ingredients are (the thing required by the state statute). As is well known, products may be sold, and in case of so-called proprietary articles frequently are sold, under trade-names which do not reveal the ingredients of the composition, and the proprietors refrain from revealing them. Moreover, in defining what shall be adulteration or misbranding for the purposes of the federal act, it is provided that mixtures or compounds known as articles of food under their own distinctive names, not taking or imitating the distinctive name of another article, which do not contain any added poisonous or deleterious ingredients, shall not be deemed to be adulterated or misbranded if the name be accompanied on the same label or brand with a statement of the place of manufacture.

\ * * Congress has thus limited the scope of its prohibitions. It has not included that at which the Indiana statute aims. Can it be said that Congress, nevertheless, has denied to the state, with respect to the feeding stuffs coming from another state and sold in the original packages, the power the state otherwise would have to prevent imposition upon the public by making a reasonable and nondiscriminatory provision for the disclosure of ingredients, and for inspection and analysis? If there be such denial, it is not to be found in any express declaration to that effect. Undoubtedly Congress, by virtue of its paramount authority over interstate commerce, might have said that such goods should be free from the incidental effect of a state law enacted for these purposes. But it did not so declare. There is a proviso in the section defining misbranding for the purposes of the act, that 'nothing in this act shall be construed' as requiring manufacturers of proprietary foods which contain no unwholesome added ingredient to disclose their trade formulas, 'except in so far as the provisions of this act may require to secure freedom from adulteration or misbranding.' Section 8. We have already noted the limitations of the provisions referred to. And it is clear that this proviso merely relates to the interpretation of the requirements of the act, and does not enlarge its purview or establish a rule as to matters which lie outside its prohibitions.*

"Is, then, a denial to the state of the exercise of its power for the purposes in question necessarily implied in the federal statute? For when the question is whether a federal act overrides a state law, the entire scheme of the statute must, of course, be considered, and that which needs must be implied is of no less force than that which is expressed. If the purpose of the act cannot otherwise be accomplished—if its operation within its chosen field else must be frustrated and its provisions be refused their natural effect—the state law must yield to the regulation of Congress within the sphere of its delegated power. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co., 204 U. S. 426 [27 Sup. Ct. 350], 51 L. Ed. 553, 9 Ann. Cas. 1075; Northern P. R. Co. v. Washington, 222 U. S. 370, 378, 32 Sup. Ct. 160 [56 L. Ed. 237]; Southern R. Co. v. Reid, 222 U. S. 424, 436, 32 Sup. Ct. 140 [56 L. Ed. 257].

"But the intent to supersede the exercise by the state of its police power as to matters not covered by the federal legislation is not to be inferred from the mere fact that Congress has seen fit to circumscribe its regulation and to occupy a limited field. In other words, such intent is not to be implied unless the act of Congress, fairly interpreted, is in actual conflict with the law of the state. This principle has had abundant illustration. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Solan, 169 U. S. 133, 19 Sup. Ct. 289, 42 L. Ed. 688; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Haber, 169 U. S. 613, 18 Sup. Ct. 488, 42 L. Ed. 878; Reid v. Colorado, 187 U. S. 137, 23 Sup. Ct. 92, 47 L. Ed. 108; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hughes, 191 U. S. 477, 24 Sup. Ct. 132, 48 L. Ed. 268; Crossman v. Lurman, 192 U. S. 189, 24 Sup. Ct. 234, 48 L. Ed. 401; Asbell v. Kansas, 209 U. S. 251, 28 Sup. Ct. 485, 52 L. Ed. 778, 14 Ann. Cas. 1101; Northern P. R. Co. v. Washington, 222 U. S. 370, 379, 32 Sup. Ct. 160, 56 L. Ed. 237, 240; Southern R. Co. v. Reid, 222 U. S. 424, 442, 32 Sup. Ct. 140, 56 L. Ed. 257, 262.

"In Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Haber, 169 U. S. 613, 18 Sup. Ct. 488, 42 L. Ed. 878, the Supreme Court of Kansas had affirmed a judgment against the railway company for damages caused by its having brought into the state certain cattle alleged to have been affected with Texas fever, which was communicated to the cattle of the plaintiff. The recovery was based upon a statute of Kansas which made actionable the driving or transporting into the state of cattle which were liable to communicate the fever. It was contended that Act Cong. May 20, 1884, c. 60, 23 Stat. at L. 31 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 299), known as the animal industry act, together with Act March 3, 1891, c. 544, 26 Stat. at L. 1044, appropriating money to carry out its provisions, and section 5258 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3564), covered substantially the whole subject of the transportation from one state to another state of live stock capable of imparting contagious disease, and therefore that the state of Kansas had no authority to deal in any form with that subject. The act of 1884 provided for the establishment of a bureau of animal industry, for the appointment of a staff to investigate the condition of domestic animals, and for the report upon the means to be adopted to guard against the spread of disease. Regulations were to be prepared by the Commissioner of Agriculture and certified to the executive authority of each state and territory. Special investigation was to be made for the protection of foreign commerce, and the Secretary of the Treasury was to establish such regulations as might be required concerning exportation. It was provided that no railroad company within the United States, nor the owners or masters of any vessel, should receive for transportation, or transport, from one state to another, any live stock affected with any communicable disease, nor should any one deliver for such transportation, or drive on foot or transport in private conveyance from one state to another, any live stock knowing them to be so affected. It was made the duty of the commissioner of agriculture to notify the proper officials or agents of transportation companies doing business in any infected locality of the existence of contagion; and the operators of railroads, or the owners or custodians of live stock within such infected district, who should knowingly violate the provisions of the act, were to be guilty of a misdemeanor punishable by fine or imprisonment.

"The court held that this federal legislation did not override the statute of the state; that the latter created a civil liability as to which the animal industry act of Congress had not made provision. The court said (169 U. S. 623, 624 [18 Sup. Ct. 492, 42 L. Ed. 878] supra): 'May not these statutory provisions stand without obstructing or embarrassing the execution of the act of Congress? This question must of course be determined with reference to the settled rule that a statute enacted in execution of a reserved power of the state is not to be regarded as inconsistent with an act of Congress passed in the execution of a clear power under the Constitution, unless the repugnance or conflict is so direct and positive that the two acts cannot be reconciled or stand together. Sinnot v. Davenport, 22 How. 227, 243, 16 L. Ed. 243, 247. * * * Whether a corporation transporting, or the person causing to be transported, from one state to another cattle of the class specified in the Kansas statute should be liable in a civil action for any damages sustained by the owners of domestic cattle by reason of the introduction into their state of such diseased cattle is a subject about which the animal industry act did not make any provision. That act does not declare that the regulations established by the Department of Agriculture should have the effect to exempt from civil liability one who, but for such regulations, would have been liable either under the general principles of law or under some state enactment for damages arising out of the introduction into that state of cattle so affected. And, as will be seen from the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, that officer did not assume to give protection to any one against such liability.'

"In Reid v. Colorado, 187 U. S. 137, 23 Sup. Ct. 92, 47 L. Ed. 108, the question arose under a statute of Colorado which had been passed to prevent the introduction into the state of diseased animals. The statute made it a misdemeanor for any one to bring into the state between April 1st and November 1st any cattle or horses from a state, territory, or county south of the thirty-sixth parallel of north latitude, unless they had been held at some place north of that parallel at least 90 days prior to importation, or unless the owner or person in charge should procure from the state veterinary sanitary board a certificate, or bill of health, to the effect that the cattle or horses were free from all infectious or contagious diseases, and had not been exposed thereto at any time within the preceding 90 days. The expense of any inspection in connection therewith was to be paid by the owner.

"The plaintiff in error had been convicted of bringing cattle into the state in violation of the statute. There was no proof in the case that the particular cattle had any infectious or contagious disease, but it did appear that they were brought from Texas, south of the thirty-sixth parallel, without being held or inspected as the statute required. Its provisions were ignored altogether as invalid legislation. When the plaintiff in error refused to assent to the state inspection he showed to the authorities a certificate signed by an assistant inspector of the federal bureau of animal industry, who certified that he had carefully inspected the cattle in Texas and found them free from communicable disease. It was insisted that the statute of Colorado was in conflict with the animal industry act of Congress, but the court sustained the state law for the reason that, although the two statutes related to the same general subject, they did not cover the same ground, and were not inconsistent with each other.

"The court thus emphasized the general principle involved (187 U. S. 148, 23 Sup. Ct. 96, 47 L. Ed. 108, supra): 'It should never be held that Congress intends to supersede or by its legislation suspend the exercise of the police power of the states, even when it may do so, unless its purpose to effect that result is clearly manifested. This court has said—and the principle has often been reaffirmed—that "in the application of this principle of supremacy of an act of Congress in a case where the state law is but the exercise of a reserved power, the repugnance or conflict should be direct and positive, so that the two acts should not be reconciled or consistently stand together." (Italics added.)

In each of the cases hereinbefore cited, the court holds that the police power of the states still exists unimpaired, except in so far as laws adopted thereunder may conflict with the legislation of Congress upon the same subject. Therefore we cannot accept as sound the contention of appellant's counsel that the Supreme Court of the United States has held that the act to regulate commerce "was intended to cover and regulate the entire subject of interstate commerce, leaving nothing to the state, either by way of legislation, policy, or regulation." To sustain that contention, he cites the following from the Croninger Case: "Almost every detail of the subject is covered so completely that there can be no rational doubt but that Congress intended to take possession of the subject and supersede all state regulation with reference to it." When the language quoted is given its proper setting, and read in connection with the context, it clearly appears that "the subject" referred to was not the whole subject of interstate commerce, but the limited subject "of liability of the carrier under a bill of lading which he must issue," as required by the Carmack amendment. The whole paragraph from which the quotation is taken reads as follows: "That the legislation (the Carmack amendment) supersedes all the regulations and policies of a particular state upon the same subject results from its general character. It embraces the subject of the liability of the carrier under a bill of lading which he must issue, and limits his power to exempt himself by rule, regulation, or contract. Almost every detail of the subject is covered so completely that there can be no rational doubt but that Congress intended to take possession of the subject and supersede all state regulation with reference to it. Only the silence of Congress authorized the exercise of the police power of the state upon the subject of such contracts. But when Congress acted in such a way as to manifest a purpose to exercise its conceded authority, the regulating power of the state ceased to exist." (Italics added.) Read as a whole, the passage shows clearly that "the subject" which the court had in mind was "the subject of such contracts"; that is, of liability on contracts which any carrier receiving property for interstate transportation is required to issue.

Having seen what the subject of the Carmack amendment is, let us examine the state statute to see what subject is dealt with by it, and thereby determine whether they cover the same subject, and whether there is any conflict between them. The state statute merely penalizes the failure of carriers to perform a common-law duty—namely, the duty to make reasonably prompt settlement of the claims of shippers for loss of or damage to property while in their possession. The performance, or the failure of performance, of that duty has nothing whatever to do with the liability of the carrier under the contract of shipment. The statute does not attempt to impose, increase, or diminish that liability, or to affect it in any way whatever. It merely says that, assuming the liability to exist, the carrier should discharge it with reasonable promptness, and penalizes his failure to do so. With as much reason could it be said that a statute which imposes the costs of the action upon the losing party imposes or affects in any way the liability upon which the action is predicated. The two things are separate and distinct. The payment of costs is imposed as a penalty for failure to pay the debt without suit, and the payment of the penalty is imposed for a like reason—the failure to pay a just claim within a reasonable time, without compelling the shipper to resort to the courts to collect it. Where no liability exists, no penalty can be recovered; and, unless the shipper recovers the full amount which he has claimed, he cannot recover the penalty. The carrier is therefore protected against being penalized for the failure to pay unjust or exorbitant claims.

We look in vain through the legislation of Congress to find any rule or regulation on the subject of the prompt settlement of such claims. By no sort of implication can that subject be brought within the provisions of the Carmack amendment. That it is one proper for the exertion of the state authority, in the absence of congressional action, is settled by the Mazursky Case. The reason for the statute and the grounds upon which it should be sustained are set forth in that case and in the Seegers Case, 73 S. C. 71, 52 S. E. 797, 121 Am. St. Rep. 921, and 207 U. S. 73, 28 Sup. Ct. 28, 52 L. Ed. 108. The annulling of it would leave shippers at the mercy of interstate carriers, and allow them to practically confiscate small claims for loss of or damage to property while in their possession; because, in the great majority of cases, the amounts involved are too insignificant to justify the employment of legal counsel to collect them. That there was great abuse in that regard, and an evil which needed a remedy, is evidenced by the statute.

We shall next consider the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States which are relied upon by appellant to show that the state statute conflicts with the legislation of Congress, and attempt to show that they cannot be so interpreted. The Carmack amendment reads as follows: "That any common carrier, railroad, or transportation company receiving property for transportation from a point in one state to a point in another state shall issue a receipt or bill of lading therefor and shall be liable to the lawful holder thereof for any loss, damage, or injury to such property caused by it or by any common carrier, railroad, or transportation company to which such property may be delivered or over whose line or lines such property may pass, and no contract, receipt, rule, or regulation shall exempt such common carrier, railroad, or transportation company from the liability hereby imposed: Provided, that nothing in this section shall deprive any holder of such receipt or bill of lading of any remedy or right of action which he has under existing law. That the common carrier, railroad, or transportation company issuing such receipt or bill of lading shall be entitled to recover from the common carrier, railroad, or transportation company on whose line the loss, damage, or injury shall have been sustained the amount of such loss, damage, or injury as it may be required to pay to the owners of such property, as may be evidenced by any receipt, judgment, or transcript thereof."

This legislation was construed and applied in the case of Adams Express Co. v. Croninger, supra, in which the company was held liable in the state court for the full value of a diamond ring and interest thereon, to wit, $137.52, notwithstanding a limitation of the company's liability, by stipulation in the bill of lading, to the agreed value, to wit, $50, when the shipper had obtained the lower of two alternative rates of transportation, which were based upon the value of commodities above and below $50, which rates had been made and filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and duly published. The ruling of the state court was based upon the state law, which declared void all contracts limiting the common-law liability of carriers. The Supreme Court of the United States held that the Carmack amendment indicated "a purpose to bring contracts for interstate shipments under one uniform rule of law not subject to the varying policies and legislation of particular states." That being the purpose, all state laws conflicting therewith were necessarily superseded. As to the liability thereby imposed, the court said: "The statutory liability, aside from responsibility for the default of a connecting carrier in the route, is not beyond the liability imposed by the common law as that body of law applicable to carriers has been interpreted by this court, as well as many courts of the states." (Italics added.) As the liability imposed (except that for the default of connecting carriers) is not beyond that imposed by the common law, it certainly cannot be said to cover the same field as the statute of this state, which imposed a liability unknown to the common law. We have heretofore pointed out the essential differences between the federal and state law.

In Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Carl, 227 U. S. 639, 33 Sup. Ct. 391, 57 L. Ed. 683 (decided March 10, 1913), the principle of the Croninger Case was reiterated, and, in addition, it was held that any valid limitation of liability stipulated for in the bill of lading for the benefit of the initial carrier and its connecting carriers insured to the benefit of each succeeding carrier in the route.

The case of Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Harriman Bros., 227 U. S. 657, 33 Sup. Ct. 397, 57 L. Ed. 690 (decided March 10, 1913), came within the principle of the Croninger and Carl Cases, and it was further held, in that case, that a stipulation in the bill of lading limiting the time to 90 days within which an action could be brought against the carrier to enforce the liability incurred thereunder was reasonable and valid, and that it superseded state statutes which declared such a stipulation invalid, in so far as the same were applied to interstate shipments. In each of the foregoing cases, the subject regulated by the state was embraced in the contract for interstate transportation, control of which had been assumed by Congress in the Carmack amendment.

The case of Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Hardwick Farmers' Elevator Company, 226 U. S. 426, 33 Sup. Ct. 174, 57 L. Ed. 284 (decided January 6, 1913), does not come under the Carmack amendment, but under section 1 of the Hepburn act, amending the original act to regulate commerce. In the Hardwick Case, the state court imposed upon a carrier a penalty provided by a statute of Minnesota for delay in furnishing cars to initiate an interstate shipment. The original act to regulate commerce declared that the term "transportation" should embrace all instrumentalities of shipment or carriage, and the Hepburn act declared that it "shall include cars and other vehicles and all instrumentalities and facilities of shipment or carriage, irrespective of ownership or of any contract, express or implied, for the use thereof and all services in connection with the receipt, delivery, elevation, and transfer in transit, ventilation, refrigeration or icing, storage, and handling of property transported; and it shall be the duty of every carrier subject to the provisions of this act to provide and furnish such transportation upon reasonable requests therefor, and to establish through routes and reasonable rates applicable thereto." (Italics added.) The Supreme Court reversed the state court, and held that "Congress has legislated concerning the deliveries of cars in interstate commerce by carriers subject to the act." Not only had the act of Congress imposed upon such carriers the specific duty of furnishing cars for interstate shipments, but it had gone further and provided remedies and penalties for the violation of that duty. It necessarily followed that the state law was superseded because it covered the same field.

In the case of St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Edwards, 227 U. S. 265, 33 Sup. Ct. 262, 56 L. Ed. 506 (decided February 24, 1913), the court of Arkansas imposed upon an interstate carrier the penalty provided by what was called "the demurrage statute" of that state, because of a failure to make prompt delivery of freight on arrival at destination." The Supreme Court reversed the judgment, and held under the principle announced in the Hardwick Case, that the subject of the delivery of interstate shipments is so far embraced in the provisions of the Hepburn act, above quoted, as to supersede the Arkansas statute, which dealt with the same subject. We fail to see wherein this state statute has anything whatever to do with contracts made by the initial carrier relative to its liability or that of its successors in the route for loss or damage to the property caused by it or them so as to bring it within the principles of the Croninger, Carl, and Harriman Cases, or with the receipt or delivery of interstate shipments so as to bring it within the principles of the Hardwick and Edwards Cases.

In this connection, we notice the statement in the argument of appellant's counsel that this court held in the Charles Case, 78 S. C. 36, 58 S. E. 927, 125 Am. St. Rep. 762, that "prompt delivery of goods" is the legal equivalent of "prompt settlement of proper claims for damages," and that the Supreme Court of the United States held the same in the Mazursky Case. Counsel has evidently misunderstood the court. The language used was: "The penalty imposed is for a delict of duty appertaining to the business of a common carrier, and in so far as it may affect interstate commerce, it is an aid thereto by its tendency to promote safe and prompt delivery of goods, or its legal equivalent—prompt settlement of proper claims for damages." From the context, it appears that the court meant only that the effect of the statute was not to burden interstate commerce, but rather to benefit it, by stimulating carriers to take proper care of goods while in their custody, so that delivery thereof in good condition would be made, knowing that, if they failed in that duty, they would be under the compulsion of the statute to perform the alternative duty of making prompt settlement of proper claims therefor. The language of this court above quoted, and much more of the opinion of this court in the Charles Case, was quoted in the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Mazursky Case, but no comment was made upon this point, and it was not an element of decision.

[5] Appellant's next contention is that the Carmack amendment conflicts with and supersedes the state statute, because it required that all actions for loss of or damage to interstate shipments shall be brought against the initial carrier, while the state statute requires that they shall be brought against the terminal carrier. In this appellant has erroneously construed both the federal and the state statutes. The federal statute does not limit the right or remedy of the holder of the bill of lading, in case of loss or damage, to an action against the initial carrier receiving property for interstate transportation. While it says that that carrier shall be liable, on the principle that succeeding carriers in the route are its agents, it does not say that it alone shall be liable, or that the holder of the bill of lading shall pursue that carrier only. On the contrary, the act expressly preserves the right of the holder of the bill of lading to pursue the carrier which actually caused the loss or damage, for it says, "Nothing in this section shall deprive any holder of such receipt or bill of lading of any remedy or right of action which he has under existing law." Certainly, under the law as it existed at that time, the holder of the bill of lading had a right of action against the carrier which actually caused the loss or damage. In fact, prior to the Carmack amendment, as the result of the almost universal practice of carriers to limit their liability by stipulation in the bill of lading to loss or damage occurring on their own lines, that was practically the only right he did have, in case of loss of or damage to his goods in the course of interstate transportation; and the fact that he frequently found it very difficult, and sometimes impossible, to find out which one of the several connecting carriers was actually in default, and the expense and inconvenience of prosecuting his claim against a carrier in a distant state, were some of the reasons which led to the adoption of the Carmack amendment. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Riverside Mills, 219 U. S. 200, 31 Sup. Ct. 164, 55 L. Ed. 180, 81 L. R. A. (N. S.) 7. To hold that the initial carrier alone is liable to the holder of the bill of lading would, in many cases, cause the very expense and inconvenience which the statute was designed, in part at least, to obviate. A consignee in South Carolina might be compelled to bring suit against the initial carrier in California to collect a claim of insignificant amount, or abandon it, when the carrier whose default caused the loss or damage was at his door. Such a construction of the act would defeat one of its purposes. Why should the owner of the goods be compelled to sue the initial carrier, if he can prove that the terminal carrier lost or injured his goods, and what right has the carrier who lost or injured his goods to contend that he should not be held liable in an action by the owner? If the initial carrier is held on his statutory liability, the carrier in default is liable over to him. What difference can it make to the carrier who is ultimately liable whether he pays the damages to the owner of the goods or to the initial carrier?

It is argued, however, that in the Croninger Case, the Supreme Court construed the proviso above quoted as preserving to the holder of the bill of lading only the rights or remedies which he may have had under existing federal law. Without conceding that the language of the court, used in the connection in which it was, can be properly construed to so limit the effect of the proviso, it cannot be denied that, under the law, as it then existed and was administered by the federal courts, the holder of such bill of lading did have a right of action against the carrier which actually caused the loss or damage. Referring to the language in the Croninger Case, which is relied upon by counsel for appellant, the court gave, as an instance of the rights preserved by the proviso, the then existing right of the holder of the bill of lading to a remedy against a succeeding carrier in default, in the following language: "One illustration would be a right to a remedy against a succeeding carrier, in preference to proceeding against the primary carrier, for a loss or damage incurred upon the line of the former."

[7] While the foregoing is sufficient to dispose of this contention, so far as it affects the decision of this case, it might not be amiss, in this connection, to say that the remark of the court which appellant relies upon was made in answering the contention in argument in that case that all rights and remedies under all existing laws, including state laws which were in conflict with the purpose and intent of the act, were preserved by the proviso. The court pointed out the absurdity of that construction by showing that it would result in the destruction of the act by the proviso, and in the nullification by a conflicting state law of the regulation of a national subject by the supreme authority of Congress, and said, in answering that argument, that a more rational construction would be "to construe this proviso as preserving to the holder of any such bill of lading any right or remedy which he may have had under existing federal law at the time of his action." But that was far from saying that that was the proper construction, or the only one, to be given to the proviso. On the contrary, the court had already given the proviso the same construction which it had given a similar provision in the act of 1887, in the Abilene Case, to wit, "that it was 'evidently only intended to continue in existence such other rights or remedies for the redress of some specific wrong or injury, whether given by the interstate commerce act, or by state statute, or common law, not inconsistent with the rules and regulations prescribed by the provisions of this act.'" (Italics added.) By this language, the proviso was held to preserve rights and remedies for the redress of some specific wrong or injury given by state statute or the common law, provided the same are not inconsistent with any rule or regulation prescribed by the act itself, a construction which merely harmonizes the provisions of the act with its purpose.

Equally untenable is the construction put upon the state statute by the appellant—that it requires all actions to be brought against the terminal carrier. This court has expressly held that the terms of the statute limit "the loss and damage which a carrier is required to adjust and pay for to that which befalls while the goods are in the possession of such carrier, and excludes the idea of liability for loss or damage to the goods while in the possession of another carrier." Venning v. A. C. L. R. Co., 78 S. C. 56, 58 S. E. 983, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1217, 125 Am. St. Rep. 768.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

GARY, C. J., and FRASER, J., concur.

WATTS, J. (dissenting). This action was brought in the magistrate's court to recover $14.76 damages to a shipment of furniture, in transit, from High Point, N. C., to Varnville, S. C., and for $5.25 overcharge in freight, and for $50 penalty for failure to pay the claim in 40 days. The defendant demurred to so much of the complaint as asked for penalty of $50 on the grounds, in substance, that the statute under which this action is brought is unconstitutional because it amounts to a burden on and regulates interstate commerce, because it deprives the defendant of its property without due process of law, and because it deprives it of equal protection of the laws. The magistrate overruled the demurrer, and defendant answered, denying the allegations of the complaint, and the case was tried before the magistrate without a jury. From the testimony it appears that in the first week in March, 1912, the plaintiff ordered a car load of furniture from High Point, N. C., to be shipped to Varnville, S. C. The shipment was delivered to the Southern Railway Company, at High Point, N. C., to be transported over its line from High Point, N. C., to Allendale, S. C., and there delivered to the Charleston & Western Carolina, the defendant, at which point the defendant received the shipment and transported it to Varnville, S. C., and there made delivery to the plaintiff, the consignee and owner and holder of the bill of lading.

The evidence shows: That the furniture was damaged in transit, but whether on defendant's line or not it does not appear. At the trial the defendant asked the magistrate to hold that the claim for $50 as a penalty as applied to an interstate shipment was a burden on interstate commerce. That the penalty act as applied to an interstate shipment was unconstitutional, null, and void. The magistrate refused to so hold, and gave judgment for plaintiff, for full amount claimed, and $50 penalty. The defendant appealed to circuit court, and his honor Judge Menninger, affirmed the judgment of the magistrate's court. The defendant appeals, and questions the correctness of his honor's ruling. These exceptions question the validity of the penalty act of February 23, 1903 (24 St. at Large, p. 81) as amended Feb. 19, 1910 (26 St. at Large, p. 719) on the ground that said act as applied to an interstate shipment is unconstitutional and in conflict with the due process clause and the commerce act of the federal Constitution. That it is a regulation of interstate commerce, and it is in conflict with the act of Congress as amended June 29, 1906. These exceptions should be sustained. The recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court, the final arbiter in such matters, and by whose decisions this court is bound, clearly establishes the propositions: First, legislation of the states in regulation of interstate commerce was permissive only, permission being implied by failure of Congress to legislate, but the permission has been taken away by recent federal legislation, especially the Hepburn act, and the Carmack amendment. Second, the provision "that nothing in this section shall deprive any holder of such receipt or bill of lading of any remedy or right of action he has under existing laws" refers to rights and remedies provided by federal statutes, and necessarily excludes those provided by the state statutes. Third, the duties and liabilities of carriers in interstate commerce are provided by the federal statute, and the regulations of the federal statute supersede and annul all state statutes providing penalties for the failure to perform any duty or obligation incident to interstate commerce.

Transportation is declared by the federal statutes to embrace all instrumentalities of shipment and carriage, including "all services in connection with the receipt, delivery, elevation and transfer in transit, ventilation and refrigeration, icing, storing and handling of property transported." The words italicized indicate the reason for holding that this case falls within the rule above set out, laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States in the following cases: Chicago, etc., Railroad Co. v. Hardwick Elevator Co., 226 U. S. 427, 33 Sup. Ct. 174, 57 L. Ed. 284; Adams Express Co. v. Croninger, 226 U. S. 491, 33 Sup. Ct. 148, 57 L. Ed. 314; Kansas City, etc., Railroad Co. v. Carl, 227 U. S. 639, 33 Sup. Ct. 391, 57 L. Ed. 683; St. Louis, etc., Railroad Co. v. Edwards, 227 U. S. 265, 33 Sup. Ct. 262, 57 L. Ed. 506; M., K. & T. R. Co. v. Harriman Bros., 227 U. S. 657, 33 Sup. Ct. 397, 57 L. Ed. 690. These cases so fully and conclusively cover the principle involved that it seems clear to me that the judgment should be reversed.

DEAVER-JETER CO. v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 1, 1913.)

1. COMMERCE (§ 8*)—CONCURRENT POWERS—FREIGHT—ACTIONS FOR LOSS—JURISDICTION. The courts of this state are not deprived of jurisdiction of an action against a delivering carrier for damages for loss of goods, on the ground that the shipment was interstate, and that under the Carmack amendment to the interstate commerce act only the initial carrier was liable, it being a resident of another state and liable there for the loss.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Commerce, Cent. Dig. § 5; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 76*)—FREIGHT—ACTIONS FOR LOSS—PARTIES PLAINTIFF.

The consignee of freight who purchased the goods and received a bill of lading was the real party in interest to an action against the railroad company for damages for the destruction en route; the title being in the consignee in the absence of an intention or agreement to the contrary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 256-271, 363; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 132*)—FREIGHT—ACTIONS FOR LOSS—BURDEN OF PROOF—DESTRUCTION BY ACT OF GOD.

In an action against a delivering carrier for damages for the destruction of goods en route, the burden was upon defendant to prove that the goods were destroyed by the act of God, and that it had exercised due care to prevent the consequences of such act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 578-582, 605; Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 109*)—FREIGHT—ACTIONS FOR DESTRUCTION—WHAT LAW GOVERNS.

An action against a delivering railroad company for damages for the destruction of goods en route is a common-law action, so that the state law, and not the law as declared by the federal courts, would be applicable though the shipment was interstate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 496; Dec. Dig. § 109.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Union County; F. B. Gary, Judge.

Action by the Deaver-Jeter Company against the Southern Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 91 S. C. 503, 74 S. E. 1071.

B. L. Abney, of Columbia, and Sanders & De Pass, of Spartanburg, for appellant. John K. Hamblin, of Union, for respondent.

HYDRICK, J. In August, 1908, the Fehelmer-Kelfer Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, sold plaintiff a bill of goods and delivered them to the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company for transportation and delivery to plaintiff at Carlisle, S. C. The goods were destroyed at Hamberg, S. C., while in defendant's possession. Defendant denied liability for the loss on the ground that it was caused by the act of God, to wit, an unprecedented flood in the Savannah river. Under the instructions of the court, the verdict establishes the fact that the flood was not the sole cause of the loss, but that the goods could have been saved by the exercise of due care, after the defendant knew, or should have known, that they were in peril.

[1] Appellant's first contention is that the circuit court had no jurisdiction of the action, because the shipment was interstate, and, therefore, under what is known as the Carmack amendment to the act of Congress regulating interstate commerce, only the initial carrier is liable for the loss, and, of course, that carrier can be sued only in the courts of the state of its legal residence. We have recently decided that contention adversely to appellant's view in the case of Varnville Furniture Company v. C. & W. C. Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 700.

[2] The next question is, Is the plaintiff the real party in interest, and entitled to maintain this action? There is no doubt of it. The testimony is that the goods were sold to the plaintiff and delivered to the initial carrier for the plaintiff, and the bill of lading was sent to the plaintiff. The general rule is that, in such circumstances, in the absence of an intention or agreement, expressed or implied, to the contrary, the title is in the consignee. 35 Cyc. 317; 4 A. & E. Enc. L. (2d Ed.) 525. In so far as the agreement of the Fechheimer-Keifer Company to save the plaintiff harmless from the costs and expenses of the action is relied upon by the defendant to sustain this objection, it is concluded by the decision on the former appeal in this case. 91 S. C. 503, 74 S. E. 1071. In so far as the testimony of the manager of the plaintiff company is relied upon for that purpose, it may be said that it was nothing more than his opinion on a question of law. The undisputed facts vested in plaintiff at least a prima facie title to the goods, and the right to maintain the action. There was no direct evidence that the sale had ever been rescinded. Even if it can properly be said that there was any conflict in the evidence, the question was submitted to the jury and resolved in plaintiff's favor.

[3] There was no error in the instruction that the burden was upon defendant to prove that the goods were destroyed by the act of God, and that it had exercised due care to prevent the consequences of the act of God.

[4] Appellant cites and relies upon the case of Railway Co. v. Reeves, 10 Wall. 176, 19 L. Ed. 909, for the proposition that, when a carrier shows that a loss was caused by an act of God, as by flood, he is excused, without proving affirmatively that he was guilty of no negligence, and contends that, as this was an interstate shipment, the law as declared by the federal Supreme Court must be applied to the case. We cannot sustain that contention. The cause of action is not created or given by any federal statute. It is an action given by the common law, and it is therefore subject to the same rules of law and evidence as any other common-law action. Aldrich v. Railroad Company, 79 S. E. 316, and cases cited. If the question were an open one, the case cited by appellant would be of very high persuasive authority, but as no federal question is involved, it would not be of controlling authority, and as the question has been frequently decided otherwise in this court, we feel bound to follow our own decisions. In Ferguson v. Railway, 91 S. C. 61, 74 S. E. 129, the rule as stated in Slater v. Railway, 29 S. C. 96, 6 S. E. 936, was approved. In the Slater Case the rule is thus stated: "Where an act of God causes injury to property in the hands of a common carrier, and such act is the sole cause of such injury, then the proof of this fact is a perfect shield. But if there be any negligence on the part of the carrier, which, if it had not been present, the injury would not have happened, notwithstanding the act of God the carrier cannot escape responsibility. And the onus is upon the carrier to show, not only that the act of God was the cause, but that it was the entire cause; because it is only when the act of God is the entire cause that the carrier can be shielded."

Without attempting any detailed statement or analysis of the testimony, which can subserve no useful purpose, we think there was evidence from which a reasonable inference could have been drawn that, if defendant had exercised proper diligence after it discovered, or should have discovered, that the goods were subject to the perils of the flood, they could have been saved. There was therefore no error in submitting that issue to the jury, or in sustaining the verdict.

Judgment affirmed.

GARY, C. J., and WATTS and FRASER, JJ., concur.

BENNETT v. SOUTHERN RY.-CAROLINA DIVISION et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 15, 1913.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 274*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In an action for the death of a locomotive fireman, who was killed when the engine was derailed at a burning trestle, evidence of the engineer's reputation for carelessness is inadmissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 939-949; Dec. Dig. § 274.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 270*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In an action for the wrongful death of a locomotive fireman, killed when his engine was derailed at a burning trestle, where it appeared that immediately after another engine had passed over the trestle it was discovered to be on fire, testimony of a witness that he saw places nearby where fire had been dropped is admissible as tending to show the origin of the fire.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 913-927, 932; Dec. Dig. § 270.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 139*)—RIGHT TO NONSUIT.

If there is any competent evidence at all tending to sustain the allegations of the complaint, the case should be submitted to the jury, and nonsuit denied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 332, 333, 338-341, 345; Dec. Dig. § 139.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 295*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—ACTIONS—PRIMA FACIE CASE.

A statement in the charge that proof of an injury to a servant by defective machinery was prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the master was not error, where from the whole charge it was made clear that plaintiff could not recover, unless she showed affirmatively by a preponderance of the evidence that the injuries sued for were caused by the master's negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 708-717; Dec. Dig. § 295.*]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 250½, New, vol. 15 Key-No. Series)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—NEGLECT OF MASTER—FEDERAL STATUTE.

As the federal Employers' Liability Act (Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1322]) is general in its terms, and makes no specific regulations as to the quantity and method of proof of negligence, the laws of the state wherein the action is brought govern, and hence, even in an action brought under such statute, proof that the injury was caused by defective appliances makes out a prima facie case of negligence on the part of the master, where that is the rule of the state.

6. TRIAL (§ 295*)—INSTRUCTIONS—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for the wrongful death of a locomotive fireman, brought under the federal Employers' Liability Act (Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1322]), the court charged that proof of injury to defendant by defective machinery was prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the master. Other portions of the charge correctly stated the master's duty to furnish the servant with a safe place to work and appliances; it nowhere being even intimated that the master was an insurer of the safety of his servant. The charge further limited the jury to a consideration of the negligence specified in the complaint, and required proof by a preponderance of the evidence to justify a verdict for plaintiff. Held that, as the court required the jury to consider the charge as a whole, it was not objectionable as a charge upon the facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 703-717; Dec. Dig. § 295.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 882*)—PERSONS ENTITLED TO ALLEGE ERROR.

Where the court gave the requests of defendant, he cannot complain of the error therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3591-3610; Dec. Dig. § 882.*]

8. DEATH (§ 95*)—WRONGFUL DEATH—DAMAGES—ELEMENTS.

The recovery under federal Employers' Liability Act (Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1322]) for the wrongful death of a servant is limited to compensation for pecuniary loss.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 108, 109, 111-115, 120; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

9. DEATH (§ 95*)—WRONGFUL DEATH—DAMAGES—ELEMENTS.

A recovery of punitive damages allowed in case of wrongful death is limited to the material loss which is susceptible of a pecuniary valuation, and does not include the inestimable loss of the society and companionship of a deceased relative, though it is broad enough to include damages for the loss of the services of husband or wife, and, in case the beneficiary is a child, damages for the loss of training, counsel, education, and nurture which the deceased would have bestowed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 108, 109, 111-115, 120; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

10. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 979*)—ALLOWANCE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Where there is sufficient testimony to support the verdict, the allowance of a new trial is discretionary with the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3871-3873, 3877; Dec. Dig. § 979.*]

Fraser, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Fairfield County; T. S. Sease, Judge.

Action by Hattie E. Bennett, as administratrix of the estate of Luther W. Bennett, deceased, against the Southern Railway-Carolina Division and the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

The exceptions were as follows:

"(1) Except because the presiding judge erred in excluding and not allowing the question and answer of the witness W. H. Green, on cross-examination, as to whether he considered McAlister, one of the defendants' engineers, and in charge of the train on which plaintiff's intestate was killed, one of the most careful engineers in the service; this testimony being proper in reply to the charges and specifications of negligence made in the complaint as to the running of the train on which the deceased was at the time of his death, the error being in denying the right of the defendants to show the general reputation and character of its servant who had charge, and was alleged to have been reckless in the management and operation of its engine, which said reckless operation resulted in the death of the deceased, and, further, who was also charged with willful and wanton conduct in running and operating its train at a dangerous and reckless rate of speed, and in failing to keep and maintain any lookout, or give any signal or warning to plaintiff's intestate.

"(2) Except because the presiding judge erred in allowing and permitting the witness W. A. Summers, on his direct examination, over the objection of defendants, to testify that he saw a couple of places where fire had been dropped out at a point about a mile above Alston, and at least 2½ miles from the trestle in question; the error being that such testimony was incompetent and irrelevant, such fires not being shown to have originated from coals escaping from defective, old, and burned-out ash pans and grates, as charged in the complaint, but originating from sparks from the smokestack and no negligence being alleged as to defects in the smokestack or as to fires connected therewith.

"(3) Except because the presiding judge erred in not granting a nonsuit in the cause upon motion of defendants; there being no testimony showing or tending to show any negligence upon the part of the defendants or breach of duty owing to plaintiff's intestate in the particulars alleged in paragraph 7 of the complaint: (a) It appearing that there was no evidence showing or tending to show negligence, as specified, in subdivision (a) of paragraph 7 of the complaint; that the defendant company carelessly, recklessly, wantonly, and willfully operated locomotive engines on its line of railroad over the trestle bridge therein mentioned, which said engines contained defective, old, and burned-out ash pans and grates which permitted sparks and live coals to drop on said trestle bridge. (b) It appearing that there was no evidence tending to prove the allegations of negligence contained in specification (b) of the seventh paragraph of the complaint; that there was a failure to inspect the trestle bridge on which plaintiff's intestate was killed; or that said trestle bridge was composed of old, worn-out, and defective timber and materials which caused the same to become easily ignited by fire. (c) It appearing that there was no testimony to prove or tending to prove negligence, as specified in subdivision (c) of the seventh paragraph of the complaint; that the defendant company furnished and maintained an unsafe and dangerous place, to wit, the trestle bridge, upon which plaintiff's intestate was required to perform the duties required of him as locomotive fireman. (d) It appearing that there was no testimony to prove or tending to prove that the defendant company failed to properly inspect and repair the engines and parts of engines through which fire, coal, and cinders might fall, and escape, and ignite the trestle bridge, as set forth in subdivision (d) of the seventh paragraph of the complaint. (e) It appearing that there was no testimony to prove or tending to prove that the defendants failed to properly inspect and repair, or failed to maintain in a safe, suitable, and proper condition the said trestle and trestle bridge upon which plaintiff's intestate lost his life, or that there was any failure upon the part of the defendant company, its agents, and servants to inspect such trestle and trestle bridge, as set forth in subdivision (e) of the seventh paragraph of said complaint. (f) It appearing that there was no testimony to prove or tending to prove that the defendants negligently, wantonly, or willfully ran and operated the first locomotive engine, to which the engine on which the plaintiff's intestate lost his life was attached, at a dangerous and reckless rate of speed, and without keeping and maintaining a proper lookout, or giving any signal or warning by bell, whistle, or otherwise to plaintiff's intestate, or that such alleged negligence caused the engine, on which plaintiff's intestate was discharging his duty, to run into said burning trestle.

"(4) Except because the presiding judge charged the jury, after stating to them that the relation which existed between the plaintiff's intestate and the defendant company was that of master and servant, and that the master must furnish a reasonably safe place, instrumentalities, tools, and the like to the servant in the discharge of his duties as such servant, that, 'where it appears that the servant is injured by defective instrumentalities, machinery, places or things of that kind, it is prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the master, and the master assumes the burden of showing that he exercised due care in furnishing means, places, and instrumentalities in matters of that kind,' the error being, it is submitted that the master is not the absolute insurer of the safety of the servant, nor does any presumption as to the master's negligence arise from the fact of injury to the servant, nor does the burden of proof in an action by the servant against the master for an injury from instrumentalities or machinery shift from the servant to the master, but the servant must prove the negligence of the master, as alleged in his complaint; that this is true both as to law prevailing in this state, and especially under the Employers' Liability Act of Congress, under which this action was brought and tried, and that said charge is an improper and erroneous construction of said act and deprives the defendants of their full right of defense under said act.

"(5) Except because the presiding judge erred in charging the jury with reference to the duties and liabilities existing between a master and servant as follows: 'The master must use due care, the care that is due, to see that the place in which, the instrumentalities with which, the servant is to perform his duties as a servant are safe and suitable. Where it appears that the servant is injured by and through defective instrumentalities, machinery, or places and things of that kind, it is prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the master, and the master assumes the burden of showing that he exercised due care in furnishing places, means, instrumentalities, and matters of that kind;' the error being: (a) That no presumption of negligence on the part of the master arises from mere proof of injury to a servant through defective instrumentalities, machinery, or places, nor is it prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the master, nor does the burden of proof shift from the servant to the master to show that the master exercised due care in furnishing places, means, instrumentalities, and matters of that kind. (b) That such charge entirely excludes the element of knowledge upon the part of the master, and would make the master liable upon mere proof of defective instrumentalities, machinery, or places, without proof that the master knew of such defects, or ought to have known of such defects in the exercise of reasonable care. (c) That said charge was erroneous, because it deprived the defendants of a substantial right of defense, arising under a proper construction of the act of Congress known as the federal Employers' Liability Act, under which this case was brought and tried, and which was the sole and exclusive law upon the subject. (d) That, as applied to the case before the jury, the above charge was a charge upon the facts, and was tantamount to telling the jury that, in the event they found that there were defects in the trestle or in the instrumentalities of the defendant company's engines, and that by reason thereof Bennett lost his life, that they should find, and that the law was that this made out a case of negligence against the defendants, and that their verdict should be for the plaintiff, unless the defendants showed by the preponderance of the testimony that they had exercised due care in furnishing places, means, instrumentalities, and matters of that kind, and that such charge was in violation of the Constitution of this state.

"(6) Except because the presiding judge erred in refusing the motion of defendants for a new trial, which was made upon the ground that the verdict in the case was so excessive that it cannot be sustained under the facts or charge in the case as a verdict for compensatory damages under a proper construction of the federal Employers' Liability Act, which limits the measure of damages to the actual pecuniary loss sustained by the beneficiaries under that act; the error being as it is respectfully submitted: (a) That there is no testimony tending to sustain a verdict for $20,000, when the undisputed testimony of the plaintiff herself shows that her husband and intestate was earning only $65 to $75 per month at the time of his death, and it was an error of law, under the federal Employers' Liability Act, under which the action was brought and tried, to allow such verdict to stand as a verdict for compensatory damages; there being no testimony to support it for such an amount. (b) That, by the refusal to set aside such verdict and grant a new trial, the defendants have been deprived of a substantial right secured to them by said act of Congress, and it was error of law not to grant a new trial absolutely, when the undisputed evidence shows that such verdict was for a grossly larger sum than compensatory damages, or damages for the pecuniary loss sustained by the plaintiff and the other beneficiaries under said federal Employers' Liability Act, and when the provisions of that act contain the supreme and exclusive law that authorized or allowed an action for the recovery of damages to and by the plaintiff for the alleged wrongful death of her said husband and intestate, and when said act, as construed by the federal courts, limits the damages recoverable thereunder, in cases of wrongful death, to the actual pecuniary loss sustained by the beneficiaries for whose benefit an action is allowed by said act. (c) That the verdict was clearly against the charge of his honor to the jury, when applied to the undisputed facts, and it was error of law not to wholly set it aside, and grant a new trial absolute."

B. L. Abney, of Columbia, and McDonald & McDonald, of Winnsboro, for appellant. W. Boyd Evans, E. J. Best, and P. A. McMaster, all of Columbia, and G. W. Ragsdale, of Winnsboro, for respondent.

WATTS, J. This was an action brought in the court of common pleas by the plaintiff to recover $75,000 damages on account of the alleged negligent, reckless, and willful killing of her husband, Luther W. Bennett, while he was engaged in the employment of the defendant as a locomotive fireman. The action is brought for the benefit of plaintiff and her three infant children. The case was heard before his honor, Judge Sease, and a jury at September term of the court, for Fairfield county, 1912, and resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff for $25,000. A motion for a new trial was thereupon made, which was granted, unless the plaintiff would remit $5,000 of the verdict. The remittitur was thereafter made. Judgment entered therein, and appeal was made therefrom, and appellants by six exceptions ask for reversal. The exceptions should be set out in the report of the case.

[1, 2] Exceptions 1 and 2 allege error on the part of his honor in the exclusion of the testimony of the witness W. H. Green, on cross-examination, and admitting over objection the testimony of the witness W. O. Summers. As to the first exception, which imputes error to his honor in excluding the question and answer of the witness Green, on cross-examination, whether he considered McAlister, the engineer in charge of the train on which plaintiff's intestate was killed, one of the most careful engineers of the defendants, it is overruled as being without merit. The question for the jury was not to determine what the engineer's general reputation was, but what his conduct was on the particular occasion—whether or not at this particular occasion he was guilty of any negligence or dereliction of duty. As to exception 2 in imputing error to his honor in allowing witness Summers to testify that he saw places where fire had been dropped about two miles from the trestle bridge, which was on fire, on the ground that the same was incompetent and irrelevant, this exception is overruled. It was competent to go to the jury for them to determine how the fire originated. It was discovered immediately after one of defendant's locomotive engines had passed over the bridge in question, and it was a question for the jury to determine how cross-ties and bridge caught fire and burned. This testimony tended to elucidate how and by what means the fire originated which destroyed the trestle, and his honor's ruling is sustained in the case decided by the Supreme Court of the United States of Grand Trunk Ry. v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 454, 23 L. Ed. 356. This exception is overruled.

[3] The third exception alleges error on the part of his honor in refusing to grant the motion for nonsuit. The law is so well settled that there is no error in refusing a motion of nonsuit; if there is any competent evidence at all to sustain the allegations of the complaint that quotation of authority is unnecessary under such circumstances, the case must go to the jury. There was sufficient evidence in this case to carry the case to the jury, and his honor committed no error in so holding. This exception is overruled.

[4, 5] Exceptions 4 and 5 allege error on the part of his honor in his charge to the jury; said error being in charging the jury that proof of injury to a servant by defective machinery is prima facie evidence on the part of the master, it being alleged, among other things, that such charge deprived the defendants of a substantial right of defense arising under a proper construction of the act of Congress, known as the federal Employers' Liability Act (Act April 22, 1903, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1322]), and also upon the ground that such a charge was in violation of the Constitution of this state as a charge on the facts. We do not think the charge of the circuit judge, to the effect that the proof of injury to a servant by defective machinery is prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the master, was erroneous, and not in harmony with the federal decisions, when his whole charge is considered. By reference to his charge as a whole the jury could not have inferred that the plaintiff could recover, unless she showed affirmatively by the burden of proof on the part of the plaintiff that the deceased's injuries were caused by the master's negligence. The federal Employers' Liability Act is general in its terms, and makes no specific regulation as to the quantity, quality, and methods of proof of negligence, and, in the absence of any such regulation, will conform as near as possible to the state law in the manner and mode of trial and the rules of pleading, evidence, and law applicable thereto as was said by the Supreme Court of North Carolina in Fleming v. Norfolk Southern Ry. Co., 160 N. C. 196, 76 S. E. 212: "The federal statute being thus general in its terms, and making no specific regulations as to the methods by which the fact of contributory negligence should be established, when the action is brought in the state court, the procedure should conform as near as may be to that of the state law applicable, including the 'character of the action, the order and manner of trial, the rules of pleading and evidence,' etc. Hughes on Federal Procedure, p.

355; Cochran v. Ward, 5 Ind. App. 89, 29 N. E. 795, 81 N. E. 581, 51 Am. St. Rep. 225."

In Green v. Railway Co., 72 S. C. 402, 46 S. E. 47, 5 Ann. Cas. 166, the court says: "When an injury to a servant is proved to result from a defective machine, the law puts upon the master the burden of proving that he used due care in making it safe." The court further says: "It sometimes happens, however, that a description of the appliance and of the nature of the accident will indicate negligence by the master in providing appliances which he could not, as a reasonable man, regard adequate for the purpose for which they were used. But this is an inference from proof of the circumstances or physical facts as given in evidence, and not a presumption of law."

"Proof of negligence is a condition precedent to the liability of the master. The proof may be either direct or circumstantial; but the plaintiff must assume the burden of furnishing evidence of one kind or the other."

[6] An examination of the judge's charge, as a whole, satisfies us that the language he used and issues he submitted to the jury to determine under the pleadings and evidence in the case was not prejudicial to the defendants and not a charge on the facts. In charging what duty was imposed on the master, as to furnishing the servant with a place to work, instrumentalities, machinery, appliances, etc.; he correctly defined what the law was, as decided by this court in a number of cases, and from nothing that he said could the jury infer that the master was an insurer of the safety of the servant. The charge of the judge told the jury in substance that the plaintiff's case was to make out by preponderance of the testimony, and in this connection used the following language: "The action here being tried is based entirely upon negligence, and, in order for the plaintiff to recover, the law imposes upon her the burden of proof of satisfying you by the preponderance or greater weight of the testimony that the defendants were negligent in the particulars described in the complaint. Every cause of action depends entirely upon the negligence alleged in the complaint, and, even if you were to find the defendants were negligent in some particulars, but were not negligent in the particulars mentioned in the complaint, then the plaintiff could not recover. In other words, in order to recover in this action, the plaintiff must establish by the preponderance of the evidence that the defendants were negligent in the particulars alleged in the complaint. No other negligence could be considered by you in making up a verdict. If you should find in favor of the plaintiff." During his honor's charge he said this to the jury: "Now, as I sometimes tell juries, I cannot give you all the law in one proposition, therefore you must take my charge as a whole. It is not intended to be contradic-ory; that is, one proposition contradict another. They are intended to qualify or modify one another. And, gentlemen, this is a long case. The principal points involved and the requests are very long. You will have to pay strict attention, and take my charge as a whole." Take the charge as a whole—the general charge, what was said by his honor in charging defendants' request—we fail to see wherein his honor said anything that was prejudicial to the defendants as complained of in this assignment of error, and this exception is overruled.

The errors complained of in the fifth exception are overruled, for the same reason that exception 4 is overruled.

The sixth exception complains of error on the part of the judge in refusing a new trial absolute, on the ground that the verdict was excessive, and could not be sustained as compensatory damages under a proper construction of the federal Liability Act, and against the law laid down by the court when applied to the undisputed facts of the case.

[7-8] We have already held that his honor committed no error in refusing the motion for a nonsuit, and sending the case to the jury for their determination. The judge, in charging the jury as to the measure of damages, and the mode of ascertaining the same, and what elements enter into the consideration of the same, could not have considered anything but pecuniary loss or damage. The judge charged the written requests of defendants, as prepared by them and asked for, and adopted the exact language. They cannot now be heard to complain of getting what they asked for; but his honor charged the correct law as laid down in the case of Mich. Cent. R. R. Co. v. Vreeland, 227 U. S. 59, 33 Sup. Ct. 192, 57 L. Ed. 417, by the Supreme Court of the United States, February 15, 1913:

"The word 'pecuniary' did not appear in Lord Campbell's Act, nor does it appear in our act of 1908. But the former act and all those which follow it have been continuously interpreted as providing only for compensation for pecuniary loss or damage. A pecuniary loss or damage must be one which can be measured by some standard. It is a term employed judicially, 'not only to express the character of the loss of the beneficial plaintiff which is the foundation of the recovery, but also to discriminate between a material loss which is susceptible of a pecuniary valuation and that inestimable loss of the society and companionship of the deceased relative upon which, in the nature of things, it is not possible to set a pecuniary valuation.' Patterson, Railway Acci. Law, § 401. Nevertheless, the word as judicially adopted is not so narrow as to exclude damages for the loss of services of the husband, wife, or child, and, when the beneficiary is a child, for the loss of that care, counsel, training, and education which it might, under the evidence, have reasonably received from the parent, and which can only be supplied by the service of another for compensation.

"In Tilley v. Hudson River R. Co., 24 N. Y. 471, and 29 N. Y. 252, 86 Am. Dec. 297, the court stated that: 'The word "pecuniary" was used in distinction to those injuries to the affections and sentiments which arise from the death of relatives, and which, though grievous and painful to be borne, cannot be measured or recompensed in money. It excludes, also, those losses which result from the deprivation of the society and companionship, which are equally incapable of being defined by any recognized measure of damages.' To the same effect are the cases of Schaub v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 106 Mo. 74, 16 S. W. 924, which was followed by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit in Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Wilson, 1 C. C. A. 25, 4 U. S. App. 25, 48 Fed. 57; Lett v. St. Lawrence & O. R. Co., 11 Ont. App. Rep. 1; Penn. R. Co. v. Goodman, 62 Pa. 332; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Rush, 127 Ind. 545, 26 N. E. 1010; Tiffany, Death by Wrongful Act, §§ 154 to 162, inclusive; Patterson, Railway Acci. Law, §§ 401-406.

"No hard and fast rules by which pecuniary damages may in all cases be measured is possible. In Lett v. St. Lawrence & O. R. Co., cited above, it was said, in the opinion of Patterson, J. A., after a review of all the English cases construing the act of Lord Campbell: 'That there is through them all the same principles of construction applied to the statute. Each fresh state of facts as it arose was dealt with, and furnished a further illustration of the working of the act. The party claiming was held to be entitled or not to be entitled, the scale of compensation acted upon by the jury was approved or disapproved, in view of the immediate circumstances; but in no case has it been attempted to decide by anticipation what are the limits beyond which the benefits of the statute cannot be claimed.' The rule for the measurement of damages must differ according to the relation between the parties plaintiff and the decedent, 'according as the action is brought for the benefit of the husband, wife, minor child, or parent of minor child, for the loss of services or support to which the beneficiary was legally entitled, or is brought for the benefit of a person whose damages consist only in the loss of a prospective benefit to which he was not legally entitled.' Tiffany, Death by Wrongful Act, §§ 158, 160-162.

"The court below instructed the jury that they could not allow damages for the grief and sorrow of the widow, or as a 'balm to her feelings.' They were directed to confine themselves to a proper compensation for the loss of any pecuniary benefit which would reasonably have been derived by her from the decedent's earnings. The court did not stop there, but further instructed the jury that: 'In addition to that, independent of what he was receiving from the company, his employer, it is proper to consider the relation that was sustained by Mr. Wisemiller and Mrs. Wisemiller, namely, the relation of husband and wife, and draw upon your experiences as men, and measure as far as you can what it "would have reasonably been worth to Mrs. Wisemiller in dollars and cents to have had during their life together, had he lived, the care and advice of Mr. Wisemiller, her husband." Vreeland v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. (C. C.) 189 Fed. 496. This threw the door open to the widest speculation. The jury was no longer confined to a consideration of the financial benefits which might reasonably be expected from her husband in a pecuniary way. A minor child sustains a loss from the death of a parent, and particularly of a mother, altogether different from that of a wife or husband from the death of the spouse. The loss of society and companionship, and of the acts of kindness which originate in the relation, and are not in the nature of services, are not capable of being measured by any material standard. But the duty of the mother to minor children is that of nurture, and of intellectual, moral, and physical training, such as, when obtained from others, must be for financial compensation. In such a case it has been held that the deprivation is such as to admit of definite valuation, if there be evidence of the fitness of the parent, and that the child has been actually deprived of such advantages. Tilley v. Hudson River R. Co. and Lett v. St. Lawrence & O. R. Co., both cited above. If the case at bar had been of such character, the loss of 'care and advice' might have been a proper matter for compensation.

"Neither 'care' nor 'advice,' as used by the court below, can be regarded as synonymous with 'support' and 'maintenance,' for the court said it was a deprivation to be measured over and above support and maintenance. It is not beyond the bounds of supposition that by the death of the intestate his widow may have been deprived of some actual customary service from him, capable of measurement by some pecuniary standard, and that in some degree that service might include as elements 'care and advice.' But there was neither allegation nor evidence of such loss of service, care, or advice, and yet, by the instruction given, the jury were left to conjecture and speculation. They were told to estimate the financial value of such 'care and advice from their own experiences as men.' These experiences, which were to be the standard, would, of course, be as various as their tastes, habits, and opinions. It plainly left it open to the jury to consider the value of the widow's loss of the society and companionship of her husband. In this part of the charge the court erred. The assignments of error are otherwise overruled. But for this error the judgment must be reversed, and a new trial ordered."

[18] There was sufficient testimony to sustain the verdict, and it was within his honor's discretion to grant or refuse a new trial. This exception is overruled.

Judgment affirmed.

GARY, C. J., and HYDRICK, J., concur.

FRASER, J. I cannot concur in the result in this case. Ordinarily this court has no jurisdiction to consider the amount of the verdict in damage cases. This is an action under the federal statute, and the Supreme Court of the United States in Michigan Central Rail Road Co. v. Vreeland, 227 U. S. 59, 83 Sup. Ct. 192, 57 L. Ed. 417 (Feb. 15, 1913), construed the statute and held that the recovery is confined to the pecuniary loss alone, and that the pecuniary loss is to be determined by the allegations of the complaint and the evidence in the case. The only evidence of pecuniary loss in this case is the wages of the deceased. The wages did not exceed $900. There was no other evidence of pecuniary loss. The loss of $900 per annum is not a basis of a judgment for $20,000. There may be undisclosed circumstances which would render the verdict entirely proper. Under the Vreeland Case the circumstances must be alleged and proved. No evidence is a question of law. I find no evidence upon which this judgment for $20,000 can be sustained under the Vreeland Case. The court says in the Vreeland Case, 227 U. S., at page 74, 83 Sup. Ct., at page 197, 57 L. Ed. 417: "It is not beyond the bounds of supposition that by the death of the intestate his widow may have been deprived of some actual customary service from him, capable of measurement by some pecuniary standard, and that in some degree that service might include as elements 'care and advice.' But there was neither allegation nor evidence of such loss of service, care, or advice; and yet, by the instruction given, the jury were left to conjecture and speculation. They were told to estimate the financial value of such 'care and advice from their own experiences as men.' These experiences, which were to be the standard, would, of course, be as various as their tastes, habits, and opinions. It plainly left it open to the jury to consider the value of the widow's loss of the society and companionship of her husband. In this part of the charge the court erred. The assignments of error are otherwise overruled. But for this error the judgment must be reversed, and a new trial ordered."

The only difference is that in the Vreeland Case damages, which were discretionary, were allowed in the charge and here they were allowed in the judgment. It is the judgment that counts. For these reasons I cannot concur.

BENNETTSTVILLE & C. R. CO. v. GLENS FALLS INS. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 25, 1913. On Petition for Rehearing, Oct. 23, 1913.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 413*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action by a railroad company to recover upon an insurance policy, issued to indemnify it from loss by fire of cotton for which it was liable as a common carrier, evidence of an agreement between the carrier and the shippers whereby the carrier became liable as a common carrier for cotton is admissible, not tending to modify the contract of insurance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1855-1857, 1859, 1860; Dec. Dig. § 413.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 146*)—CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION—AMBIGUITY.

Where there is an ambiguity in a contract of insurance, it should be construed against the insurer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 292, 294-298; Dec. Dig. § 146.*]

3. INSURANCE (§ 175*)—CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION.

A fire policy was issued to indemnify a railroad company from loss of cotton by reason of its liability as a common carrier, the policy providing that liability should attach from the issuance of the company's bill of lading and terminate upon delivery. Cotton which was intended for an immediate shipment was accepted without the issuance of a bill of lading, not all the cotton being delivered simultaneously, the company holding the bales as they were delivered until a suitable quantity were hauled, whereupon it made a shipment and issued a bill of lading. Held, that though the bill of lading was not issued to the shipper until after the cotton was burning, the insurer was liable, the shipper being liable as a common carrier for the loss of the cotton; the ambiguity in the policy being resolved in favor of the insured.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 362-371; Dec. Dig. § 175.*]

4. INSURANCE (§ 165*)—CONTRACTS—LIABILITY.

Where a fire policy was issued to indemnify a railroad company upon all liability as a common carrier of cotton in bales in transit in cars, or in or on depots or platforms, on line of assured's road, the policy covered cotton which was placed on the ground, but was intended to be immediately shipped.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 351; Dec. Dig. § 165.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 931*)—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where it was stipulated that the court should find the facts, it will be presumed that he disregarded all incompetent testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3728, 3762-3771; Dec. Dig. § 931.*]

Fraser and Hydrick, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Marlboro County; J. A. McCullough, Special Judge.

Action by the Bennettsville & Cheraw Railroad Company against the Glens Falls Insurance Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The defendant's exceptions are as follows:

"(1) It is respectfully submitted that his honor, the presiding judge, erred in overruling the objection of defendant's counsel to the testimony of E. H. Duvall and other witnesses as to an agreement between said Duvall, representing Alex. Sprunt & Son, of Wilmington, N. C., for the delivery of cotton in bales by wagons at plaintiff's platform at Kollock, by which said plaintiff was to issue bills of lading each afternoon for all cotton delivered during the day, its liability as a common carrier, however, to begin on delivery of said cotton for shipment, and in refusing defendant's subsequent motion to strike out all such testimony, because inadmissible, as the alleged agreement was between other parties, without the knowledge or consent of defendant, and not binding on it.

"(2) It is respectfully submitted that his honor, the presiding judge, erred in holding and ruling that 'the contract was intended to insure the plaintiff against any liability as a common carrier for cotton in bales, in transit cars, or in or on depots, or platforms, on lines of assured's road; that the stipulation to the effect that the liability of the railroad company attaches from the issue of assured's bill of lading would not, under the agreed statement of facts in this case, and the undisputed facts, prevent a recovery; that the cotton here was actually delivered to the railroad company as a common carrier, was accepted by it as such. Its liability in case of loss attached. The stipulation with reference to the bill of lading only goes to the question of delivery and acceptance, and the delivery and acceptance can be proven and established otherwise than by the issuance and acceptance of the bill of lading'—because in so holding and ruling his honor treated the contract as intended to secure a certain object, stated by him as sought by the plaintiff, and which object was not otherwise revealed, and then interpreted the contract accordingly, by giving force and effect to only the first clause or paragraph of the rider, and declining to give any effect to the second clause, which fixed the period of the insurance on each lot of cotton; that is, its beginning and its termination, essential and vital elements in any contract, but especially an insurance contract.

"(3) It is respectfully submitted that his honor, the presiding judge, erred in considering the testimony and recognizing the agreement between the shipper and the railroad company mentioned in the first exception as valid and binding on defendant and enforceable as against it, and constituting a reason why it was liable under said policy, notwithstanding that the bill of lading was not issued until after the fire, and the destruction of practically all of the 43 bales of cotton, which he did in the last half of the 'ruling.'

"(4) It is respectfully submitted that his honor, the presiding judge, erred in ruling and holding that the defendant was liable under its said policy, notwithstanding it appeared that when said bill of lading was issued said cotton was mostly consumed, and all of it was then scattered about the nearby grounds, and not in bales or on platform, etc., as required by the terms and conditions of said policy.

"(5) It is respectfully submitted that his honor, the presiding judge, erred in holding that the interpretation and construction of the contract as to its not attaching until issue of bills of lading fixed by the parties thereto after deliberate consideration five months before the fire, as shown by the letters in evidence and the declaration and admission of Mr. Page, general manager of plaintiff, was not binding on them, and was immaterial.

"(6) It is respectfully submitted that his honor, the presiding judge, erred in failing to give to the contract its natural, fair, and reasonable construction in all of its terms and conditions invoked and relied upon by defendant, and in giving it a strained and unauthorized construction, ignoring and disregarding plain and essential conditions of its becoming effective, especially when there was no sufficient evidence of waiver to be considered, or which was considered.

"(7) It is respectfully submitted that on the above grounds his honor, the presiding judge, erred in holding the defendant liable to plaintiff for the amount of the loss sustained on said cotton, and directing the jury to find a verdict therefor, with interest, against the defendant."

John T. Seibels, of Columbia, and J. K. Owens, of Bennettsville, for appellant. McColl, McColl & Le Grand and Stevenson, Matheson & Stevenson, all of Bennettsville, for respondent.

WATTS, J. This was an action brought to recover $3,005.32 insurance on 43 bales of cotton burned on the depot platform of the plaintiff at Kollock, S. C. The plaintiff alleges that the defendant, by contract in writing on August 4, 1909, agreed to insure the plaintiff for a term of one year from August 20, 1909, against all direct loss and damage by fire, as stated in paragraph 1 of its "rider," in the words: "On all liability of assured as a common carrier of cotton in bales, in transit in cars, or in or on depots, or platforms, on line of assured's road." The policy also has this: "This insurance covers all legal liability of the assured as a common carrier, not exceeding the actual cash value (market) of the cotton immediately preceding the fire, which cash value shall in no case exceed what it would then and there cost to replace same with cotton of like kind and quality, and attaches from the issue of assured's bill of lading, and terminates upon delivery to consignee or succeeding carrier." After issue was joined the case came on to be heard before Hon. Joseph A. McCullough, as special judge, and a jury; after evidence was taken and case argued, the court directed a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount claimed, $3,517.21, and after entry of judgment defendant appeals, and by seven exceptions questions the correctness of judge's rulings, and alleges error; these exceptions should be set out in the report of the case.

[1] The first exception alleges error in admitting in the first instance over objection, the evidence of E. H. Duvall and other witnesses as to an agreement between Duvall, representing Sprunt & Son, and the plaintiff railroad company in reference to the delivery of cotton to railroad, issuance of bills of lading, etc., and later, in refusing the motion to strike out the same, as the alleged agreement was between other parties than the defendant and without its knowledge or assent. This exception is overruled for the reason it was competent to show by such testimony that the cotton destroyed or injured, had been tendered and accepted by the railroad company under such agreement or circumstances as to render the railroad company liable as a common carrier. The testimony was not offered to modify, vary, explain, or enlarge the contract made by insurance policy between the plaintiff and defendant, but for the purpose indicated, and is competent under the case of R. E. Allen, Bro. & Co. v. Burnett, 92 S. C. 99, 100, 75 S. E. 368, and authorities therein cited.

[2, 3] The second exception alleges error on the part of his honor in holding that "the contract was intended to insure the plaintiff against any liability as a common carrier for cotton in bales, in transit cars, or in or on depots, or platforms, on lines of assured's road. That the stipulation to the effect that the liability of the railroad company attaches from the issue of assured's bill of lading would not, under the agreed statement of facts in this case, and the undisputed facts proven, prevent a recovery. That the cotton here was actually delivered to the railroad company as common carrier was accepted by it as such. Its liability in case of loss attached. The stipulation with reference to the bill of lading only goes to the question of delivery and acceptance, and the delivery and acceptance can be proven and established otherwise than by the issuance and acceptance of the bill of lading." We think the court correctly held that the bill of lading covered the cotton, and it was delivered and accepted by the railroad for shipment. From the admitted facts in the case the court finds "that the cotton, which was burned, was accepted by the railroad company in good faith, and that it was liable as common carrier for the loss; that before the bill of lading was issued, and after 43 bales had been delivered to the defendant railroad and accepted by them, the fire was discovered, and effort made to save the cotton, and it was taken from the depot and scattered about, and some time during the progress of the fire the bill of lading was actually issued." There was nothing in this contrary to good business principles; the railroad in the course of business had a perfect right, in the orderly dispatch of its business, to arrange with a party, who was engaged in the business of purchasing and shipping out cotton, to allow it to be put in its shipping yard, depot, or platform, bale by bale, one or more at a time, for the purpose of having a sufficient quantity to ship out on a car or flat, and not issue bills of lading for each lot as placed, but wait until a sufficient number were received to warrant a shipment, and issue bills of lading for the whole. The evidence shows this was done, and was the arrangement between the railroad and Duvall, and a receipt by them under these circumstances and conditions made them receivers as common carriers and liable as such, and the evidence shows that the cotton was received, not for storage, but for actual shipment by the railroad, and under such conditions that the liability attached as against them as common carriers even though no bills of lading had been issued by them. The judge committed no error in his construction of the two paragraphs of the rider in holding that the first one covers liability of the assured as common carrier on the cotton situate as this was and received by the common carrier under the agreement and the circumstances the cotton was received, and the second covers the legal liability of the assured as common carrier of the cotton so situated, and in holding, under the terms of the policy, "that this liability attaches from the issuance of assured's bill of lading and terminates upon delivery to the consignee or succeeding carrier." If there is any ambiguity, the phrases must be construed more strongly against the insurance company and in favor of the insured.

It is said in A. and E. Ency. Law, vol. 16 863: "If the terms of a policy are susceptible of two interpretations, equally reasonable, it is the general rule that the construction which is more favorable to the insured must be adopted." "In determining the meaning of the insurance contract the surrounding circumstances must be considered, and the interpretation, if capable of two, which will protect the insured should be adopted." Mellon v. Ohio Ins. Co., 40 Pa. Super. Ct. 623. The property in this case was tendered and accepted for shipment prior to the signing of the bill of lading, and the liability attached to the railroad, as common carriers, from that time, to wit, from the time it was received and accepted by them for shipment regardless of the fact that the bills of lading were not issued until later. Copeland v. Southern Ry. Co., 76 S. C. 476, 57 S. E. 535; Mobile R. Co. v. Jurey, 111 U. S. 584, 4 Sup. Ct. 566, 28 L. Ed. 527.

[4] The third and fourth exceptions allege error on the part of his honor in considering testimony and recognizing the agreement between the shipper and the railroad, and in holding that defendant was liable when the bill of lading was issued when cotton was partially consumed and scattered over the grounds, and not on platform, etc., as required by the terms and conditions of the policy. His honor was correct in admitting evidence to show what the agreement was between Duvall and the railroad, for the reason stated in considering the first exception herein, and that the evidence proves an agreement that the railroad company was receiving and accepting the cotton, not for storage, but for actual shipment, and under this state of facts becomes liable as common carrier. There is nothing in the policy that restricts the railroad from receiving and accepting cotton for shipment, even on the ground if, at or near its depot, platform, and shipping point, that would be a narrow construction to place on the agreement between the parties as to terms and place of insurance to hold that in order to load cotton received and accepted by a common carrier for shipment you should first put it on the platform, or in the depot, when it might be more convenient and less expensive to load from the ground near or at the platform, or depot. If cotton got on fire the railroad company had the right, in order to save it or minimize the loss, to throw it on the ground, and it would be still covered by insurance. The evidence showed that the issuance of the bill of lading was carrying out the contract previously made between the shipper and the railroad, and his honor committed no error in so holding and recognizing this agreement between the shipper and the railroad. These exceptions are overruled.

[5] The fifth, sixth, and seventh exceptions are overruled for the reasons given in overruling the other exceptions, and for the further reason it was agreed between counsel, representing both sides, that his honor should decide the facts of the case, and it is reasonable to suppose that in reaching his conclusions he did not consider any incompetent or irrelevant testimony, and there is sufficient testimony to sustain his findings, and we see no error of law in any of the exceptions. All the exceptions are overruled.

Judgment affirmed.

GARY, C. J., concurs.

FRASER, J. I dissent. The rider covered (1) the property insured; (2) the limitations of its liability as to value, including the time of the commencement and termination of liability; (3) the conditions under which it will not be liable at all; (4) the terms of payment of premiums. By the express terms of the contract the defendant was not to be liable before the bill of lading was given, nor after it had been delivered to a succeeding carrier. The defendant had the right to say, at the time of issuing the policy, "I will not be liable to you until you have fixed your liability to the shipper in writing." It did say so, and the plaintiff agreed to the stipulation by accepting the policy. Suppose the goods had been burned while in the hands of a succeeding carrier, and plaintiff having lost the evidence of the delivery should be made to pay the loss. Suppose, further, upon a suit for the loss which it (the plaintiff) had paid, the insurance company should be able to supply the proof of the delivery. Could any one hold that the delivery to the succeeding carrier was not a complete defense? The contract provided that the liability "attaches from the issue of the assured's bill of lading," and I do not think the courts have power to change it.

HYDRICK, J., concurs.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. After careful consideration of the within petition, it has not been made to appear that any matter of fact or question of law material to the case has been overlooked or disregarded. It is therefore ordered that the petition be dismissed, and the stay of remittitur heretofore granted be revoked.

GREER v. ARRINGTON.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 23, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. TRIAL (§ 89*)—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

In a suit under our civil damage act, it is not error to deny defendant's motion to exclude plaintiff's evidence, when the evidence tends in an appreciable degree to support the theory of the declaration and on which right of action is based.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 228-234; Dec. Dig. § 89.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 260*)—OBJECTION BELOW—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Error, if any, in the admission of evidence, if competent, will not be regarded here, unless covered by an exception at the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1503-1515; Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

If on the trial of an action under our civil damage act there be evidence that defendant sold intoxicating liquors to plaintiff's husband, contributing to his habits of inebriety, other evidence that he was intoxicated in defendant's saloon on a particular day, from liquors not proven to have been sold by him, though not very material, is not wholly irrelevant, and it is not reversible error to admit such evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1068, 1069, 4153-4157, 4166; Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 48*)—ADMISSIBILITY—IMPEACHING EVIDENCE.

Though evidence of plaintiff, admitted over defendant's objection, tends to contradict the evidence of one of the latter's witnesses, on a collateral matter, and may not be good as impeaching evidence, nevertheless, if such evidence be good as evidence in chief, and as tending to support any of the issues, it is not reversible error to admit it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 120; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

5. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 309*)—ACTION FOR DAMAGES—EVIDENCE.

If such evidence as is referred to in the preceding point, tends to show defendant's knowledge, or reason to believe plaintiff's husband was in the habit of drinking intoxicating liquors to excess, that being the ground of action, and a fact necessary to establish, it is not error to admit it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 444-448; Dec. Dig. § 309.*]

6. TRIAL (§ 252*)—INSTRUCTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In such action it is error to submit instructions to the jury on the question of injury to plaintiff's person, when there is no evidence of such personal injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 505, 598-612; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

7. DAMAGES (§ 215*)—EXEMPLARY DAMAGES—INSTRUCTIONS.

It is also reversible error in such action to peremptorily charge the jury that they shall or should find exemplary damages, such damages being wholly within the discretion of the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 543-547; Dec. Dig. § 215.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1031*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS—EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

Where the trial court has committed error in giving such peremptory instructions, this court cannot assume from the size of the verdict that defendant has not been prejudiced thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4038-4046; Dec. Dig. § 1031.*]

9. TRIAL (§ 267*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

Though an instruction be good as an abstract proposition of law, but as applied to the concrete case, may tend to mislead the jury, it is not error to so modify the language as to make it cover the case presented.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 663-672, 674; Dec. Dig. § 267.*]

10. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 216*)—WAIVER OF ERROR—FAILURE TO OBJECT.

And though it is the duty of the trial court, by sections 4 and 5, chapter 38, Acts 1907 (Code Supp. 1909, c. 131, §§ 9aIV, 9aV), on so modifying an instruction, if objected to, to so inform the jury, and give the instruction as its own, and not as that of the proponent of the original instruction, yet if there be no timely objection or exception to such erroneous action of the court, the error will be deemed to have been waived.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 216;* Trial, Cent. Dig. § 674.]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Error to Circuit Court, Mason County.

Action by Lena Greer against E. P. Arrington. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed, and new trial awarded.

John L. Whitten and Somerville & Somerville, all of Point Pleasant, for plaintiff in error. Rankin Wiley, of Point Pleasant, for defendant in error.

MILLER, J. In her declaration, in two counts, a wife charges defendant in the first with having sold intoxicating liquors to her husband, who, to the knowledge of defendant, had acquired the habit of drinking to excess, beginning April 30, 1908, and had continued therein up to the date of the institution of her suit, and by reason whereof he had neglected his work, squandered his money, and whereby she had been injured in her means of support, and by reason whereof he had been discharged from his employment, and had been without employment for the period of three months, and was yet without employment, and whereby he was sick and disordered, and was unable and did not provide or furnish means of support for plaintiff, and whereby she was injured in her means of support. She also charges that by reason of such unlawful acts she sustained great bodily pain, anguish and anxiety.

In the second count she charges defendant with the same unlawful acts, and that they were done willfully and with intent on his part to injure plaintiff and deprive her of her means of support, with like results to her and her husband, and depriving her of her good health and injuring her in her domestic relations and affairs and inflicting on her other wrongs and injuries; all to her damage $5,000.00.

Numerous errors are assigned in the petition for the writ; but we will notice those only which seem to have merit, or have been relied on in argument, treating the others as abandoned.

[1] First, it is insisted that the court erred, on the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence, in denying defendant's motion to exclude plaintiff's evidence relating to the discharge of John W. Greer from its employment by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company. The contention is that plaintiff's action is based solely on the theory of injury sustained solely from the discharge of her husband and by reason of sales of liquor to him on the day or the day preceding such discharge, and that there being no evidence of any sale or sales to him on that day, the case must fail. In this view we think defendant is in error. The declaration is not based on that theory, but on the theory of a sale or sales beginning April 30, 1908, and continuing thereafter up to the date of the suit, and by reason of which plaintiff's husband was discharged. The facts were not very well or very clearly developed on the trial, but there is evidence that defendant made numerous sales to plaintiff's husband while he owned the saloon, between June, 1906, and April 23, 1908, the latter being the date of the suit, and the jury might very well have concluded, as they likely did, that these sales contributed to the injury of plaintiff in her means of support, provided of course there was evidence of such loss of support. The evidence is abundant that plaintiff's husband was in the habit of drinking to intoxication, and that this fact was known to defendant, or to his bartenders, one of them plaintiff's brother, at the time sales were made, which sales were unlawful, and may have contributed to his habits of inebriety, and her consequential loss of support. We think there was no error in the ruling of the court admitting this evidence.

[2] Another point of error is based on defendant's bills of exception Nos. 4 and 5. These relate to certain testimony of plaintiff as to her alleged loss of support by sales of intoxicants to her husband. The main point against this evidence is that the questions and answers assumed that Greer's discharge by the railroad company was the result of alleged illegal sales of intoxicants to him by defendant, as to which it is contended there is no evidence. With respect to bill of exception No. 4, the motion, which was overruled, was not to strike out all the evidence, but only that part of it and covered by one of the questions and answers stating that Greer had been out of employment nearly one half of the time during that season. With respect to bill of exception No. 5, the questions and answers relate to plaintiff's changed condition of living after her husband's discharge by the railroad company. The answers were each objected to and none of them were answered except the last, namely, whether prior to that time plaintiff kept a servant. The bill of exception does not cover the answer, nor was the answer objected to. The answer was, "Yes, sir." This was followed by the question: "Was the servant discharged?" Answer, "Yes, sir," and "For what cause?" Answer, "Because I did not have the money to pay her." To which questions and answers there was no objection or exception. We cannot, therefore, notice the alleged error. Besides we see no error in this testimony. True the questions and answers are based on plaintiff's theory, that defendant had sold liquors to her husband, and that he had lost his job on the railroad due to his inebriety, and that plaintiff had been injured in her means of support, and that defendant had contributed thereto. And we cannot see that this evidence was not pertinent to the questions before the jury.

[3] The next point is covered by bill of exception No. 6, involving evidence of Horton Greer, son of plaintiff. This relates to the condition his father was in at the railroad station, the day or day before he was discharged. It was proven not only by this witness, but by defendant, that Greer was drunk on that day. Though numerous questions and answers are covered by the bill of exceptions, only the last, relating to the father's condition, was objected to. True what Greer's condition, as to sobriety, was on that day, was not very material unless defendant sold him the liquor, which we may say was not proven, but he was in defendant's saloon only a few minutes before he was seen at the railroad station, and if by prior sales which defendant did make, he contributed to his drunken habits, a question for the jury on the whole evidence, and not for the court, we do not think the evidence wholly irrelevant. As already noted, plaintiff's case did not depend alone on the condition her husband was in on that day.

[4, 6] By his bill of exceptions No. 8, defendant complains of the evidence of plaintiff, admitted over objection, as to an alleged conversation with her brother, Wirt Greer, a witness for defendant, as to which the latter had been interrogated by plaintiff, on cross-examination. He did not remember the conversation. Mrs. Greer being recalled did recollect it, and swears, that her brother in a conversation, in February, year not designated, but presumably the February preceding the trial in October, 1909, referring to an occasion when her husband had been drunk, and he had taken his money and watch off of him for safe keeping, told her that because her husband was then in a drunken condition they did not then sell him more than three drinks. As to this matter Greer's testimony, though given on cross-examination, was in chief, for defendant had not examined him on that subject. It is therefore contended that plaintiff's evidence was improper, not binding on defendant, because relating to a conversation, at which he was not present, and was not proper to impeach Greer. The evident purpose of interrogating Greer was to show knowledge on his part, that plaintiff's husband was in the habit of drinking to intoxication. But as he did not remember the incident, her testimony, of course, his being on a collateral issue, would not be proper to impeach his. But was her evidence not proper evidence in chief, as tending to show that defendant's bar tender and agent had notice when selling liquors to her husband of his intemperate habits? The incident, if it occurred in January or February, 1909, antedated the suit, and if sales were then made to Greer, they were covered by the declaration, and took place within the time of defendant's ownership of the saloon. On this view the evidence was material and proper, for section 21, chapter 32, Code, makes sales of liquor to persons in the habit of drinking to intoxication, unlawful, if with knowledge, or reason to believe such persons in the habit of drinking to excess. It was, therefore, essential to her success that plaintiff should show knowledge or reason for believing her husband in the habit of becoming intoxicated, for by section 26, of said chapter, right of action is given only when such knowledge or reason for belief is properly imputable to the defendant, and the evidence excepted to tended to show this, the unlawful sale being the ground of the action. Duckworth v. Stalnaker, 68 W. Va. 197, 200, 69 S. E. 850, citing Pennington v. Gillaspie, 66 W. Va. 643, 66 S. E. 1009; State v. Nichols, 67 W. Va. 659, 69 S. E. 304, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 419, 21 Ann. Cas. 184; State v. Davis, 68 W. Va. 184, 69 S. E. 644. We think the evidence was proper.

[8] Another point of error relied on, relates to the giving of plaintiff's instructions numbered 4 and 6. Both instructions told the jury, that if they found certain facts assumed therein, and that plaintiff had been injured in her person or means of support, they should find for her such damages as they might find from the evidence she had sustained by reason of her husband's intoxication, "and also exemplary damages," not exceeding the sum sued for.

Three points are made against these instructions: (1) That both submit to the jury the question of injury to plaintiff's person, when there was no evidence of such injury; (2) that there was no evidence of injury to plaintiff's means of support; (3) that both substantially tell the jury they "should also find exemplary damages." Points 2 and 3, we think, are well founded. There is absolutely no evidence of injury to plaintiff's person. Without this the question was erroneously submitted to the jury. Pennington v. Gillaspie, 66 W. Va. 643, 66 S. E. 1009; Carpenter v. Hyman, 67 W. Va. 4, 66 S. E. 1078, 20 Ann. Cas. 1310.

[7, 8] Respecting the third point we have likewise held that it is judicial error for the trial court, under any circumstances, involving our civil damage act, to tell the jury that they shall or that they should find exemplary damages. The question of exemplary damages is dependent solely on the discretion of the jury, when actual damages are proven, and found by them, and the court is not permitted to control that discretion by peremptory instructions. Fink v. Thomas, 66 W. Va. 487, 66 S. E. 650, 19 Ann. Cas. 571; Carpenter v. Hyman, supra; Pennington v. Gillaspie, supra.

It is argued for plaintiff, on these two points, that as the sum found by the jury was so small, no damages to plaintiff's person, or exemplary damages, were or could have been included in the verdict of the jury. This argument is based solely on the size of the verdict. How do we know that it is not wholly made up of damages to person, or exemplary damages? By submitting these questions to the jury the court assumed there was some evidence justifying them, but we find none. Besides in the third point and on the motion of defendant, overruled, to set aside the verdict for want of evidence of injury to her means of support, the sufficiency of the evidence to support any verdict is challenged.

[9] Another point is that defendant's instruction No. 5, good it is claimed under the rule of Mayer v. Frobe, 40 W. Va. 248, 22 S. E. 53, was modified and given by the court as modified over objection. As proposed this instruction would have propounded to the jury the proposition, that before they could assess damages against defendant, even if they should find he gave or sold intoxicating liquors to plaintiff's husband, within one year next before suit brought, they must believe from the evidence that he sold such liquors to plaintiff's husband with gross fraud, malice, oppression or wanton, willful, or reckless conduct or criminal indifference to civil obligations affecting plaintiff's rights. The only effect of the modification was to make the same rule apply whether the sale was made by defendant personally, or by his agents or bar tenders. Otherwise, as given, it was the same as proposed, and there was no error in this regard, in the modification. The original, perhaps, implied all that the amended instruction stated in clearer terms, but the jury might have misinterpreted it.

[10] But it is argued, that the court, in obedience to sections 4 and 5, chapter 88, Acts 1907 (Code Supp. 1909, c. 131, §§ 9aIV, 9aV), after modification of the instruction, should have given it, not as defendant's instruction, but as its own, and have so stated to the jury. Such, we think, is the clear mandate of that statute, and the statute should have been respected. But according to the record, while objection was made to the modification, which we think was not error, there was no timely objection to the reading of the instruction as if propounded by defendant. By not so objecting at the time, as we said in State v. Clark, 64 W. Va. 625, 645, 63 S. E. 402, the error was waived. On another trial it should not be overlooked that proof of an illegal sale of liquor in the eye of the law supplies the necessary ingredients of gross fraud, malice, etc., covered by this instruction. Pennington v. Gillaspie, supra.

Lastly, the motion for a new trial based on want of sufficient evidence to support the verdict. As for errors already noted there must be a new trial, we will not undertake to comment on the weight or sufficiency of the evidence.

The judgment below will be reversed and the defendant awarded a new trial.

SWARTHMORE LUMBER CO. v. PARKS.†
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
June 17, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EQUITY (§ 11*)—JURISDICTION.

A court of equity will not take cognizance of a fraud, working injury as a mere tort.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. §§ 21, 23, 24; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

2. CONTRACTS (§ 324*)—BREACH OF CONTRACT—REMEDY IN EQUITY.

For breaches of contract, cognizable at law, there is no jurisdiction in equity to give redress by way of compensation or damages, if the bill has no object or purpose other than recovery of such compensation or damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1549-1557; Dec. Dig. § 324.*]

3. EQUITY (§ 26*)—JURISDICTION—ACTIONS EX DELICTO.

Chapter 106 of the Code of 1906, authorizing attachments in equity, confers upon courts of equity no jurisdiction as to causes of action ex delicto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. §§ 86, 87; Dec. Dig. § 26.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 448*)—RIGHT OF ACTION—BREACH OF CONTRACT WITH PROMOTER.

A corporation does not succeed to the right of action of one of its promoters against his agent for breach of the contract of agency, antedating the existence of the corporation and complete in all respects before the date of its organization, in the absence of an express assignment thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1709, 1789-1792; Dec. Dig. § 448.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Randolph County.

Bill by the Swarthmore Lumber Company against J. F. Parks. From a decree of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Taylor & Allen and W. B. & E. L. Maxwell, all of Elkins, for appellant. Blue & Dayton, of Philippi, and Harding & Harding, of Elkins, for appellee.

POFFENBARGER, P. The bill in this cause, dismissal of which for want of equity is complained of, proceeds upon two theories of right of recovery, a contractual relation between the parties in connection with which the defendant perpetrated a fraud, and a fraud on his part independent of such relation, working injury to the plaintiff. At the institution of the suit, an attachment, based upon fraud in the incurrence of the alleged liability, was sued out.

The fraudulent act complained of in the bill and set up in the affidavit for the attachment was a misrepresentation on the part of the defendant, an estimator of timber, as to the quantity of timber on a large tract of land of which the plaintiff became the owner. He was employed to make the estimate before the purchase was made, but not by the plaintiff. It is a corporation organized shortly after he made his report as to the quantity of timber. J. G. Rouse, a promotor of the plaintiff corporation, procured the estimate to be made in the month of January, 1907. Having in view or contemplation the purchase of about 4,000 acres of timber land and a sawmill and other property from one J. Scott Bell, who represented the quantity of timber on the land to be more than 40,000,000 feet, Rouse, through one Capt. W. H. Cobb, employed the defendant to go upon the land and estimate the timber. Parks began his estimation about January 1st, and made his report on January 8, 1907, showing 39,000,000 feet of spruce and hemlock, 1,000,000 feet of bass wood, and 1,000,000 feet of other kinds of timber, making a total of 41,000,000. On the faith of this report and Bell's representation, Rouse, on the 12th day of January, 1907, entered into a contract with Bell for the purchase of the property at the price of $162,331. By this contract, Bell bound himself to execute a deed on February 1, 1907, or immediately thereafter, to Rouse, or some one designated by him. In pursuance thereof, the deed was executed on January 30, 1907, to Albert A. Blakeney, as agent for the Swarthmore Lumber Company, the plaintiff corporation, which had not yet been organized or chartered. Rouse represented some undisclosed associates. On the 29th day of January, 1907, the interested parties held a meeting, and they decided definitely to organize a corporation to take over the property. Pursuant to this agreement, they entered into a formal one for incorporation, on the 20th day of February, 1907, and the certificate of incorporation issued by the Secretary of State bears date February 23, 1907. In the meantime, the contract with Bell was consummated in the following manner: Rouse had made a $5,000 cash payment, and on the 30th day of January, 1907, a deed in which Bell is described as the party of the first part, Rouse as the party of the second part, and the Swarthmore Lumber Company as the party of the third part, was executed. It recited payment by Rouse of $5,000, and stipulated for an additional payment of $79,500 by the party of the third part on or before the delivery of the deed, as well as the execution of seven notes for $5,000 each and one for $4,165.50, all to bear date January 12, 1907. This deed was acknowledged February 1, 1907, and on the next day delivered to the clerk of the county court of the county for record, all of which indicates payment of the purchase money of the property in the name of the Swarthmore Lumber Company before the date of its organization.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

† Rehearing denied.

The allegations of the bill, sustained by proof, show that, after its organization, the plaintiff corporation took charge of the property, operated the mill for a time, cut and manufactured some of the timber, and ascertained the existence of a very large shortage in the estimated quantity, about 16,000,000 feet, and the plaintiff claims to have been injured and damaged by the defendant's false representation as to the quantity of timber to the extent of $48,000, 16,000,000 feet at the price of $3 per thousand. In September, 1908, it sued Bell in equity in the common pleas court of Erie county, Pa., to enjoin the collection of a balance due on the purchase-money notes, amounting to $39,166.50, and for such other relief as it was entitled to have upon the facts and circumstances stated in the bill. The injunction granted thereon was afterwards dissolved, and the suit dismissed in consequence of a settlement of the matters in difference between the parties by an agreement.

Treating Bell and Parks as joint wrongdoers, the plaintiff claimed the right to recover from the latter as damages said sum of $48,000. It also claims alternatively right of recovery of such sum from him, by virtue of his contract with Rouse, as damages for violation of its obligation by perpetration of the alleged fraud. A demurrer to the bill having been overruled, the cause was heard and decided on its merits.

Notwithstanding Parks was paid by Rouse for the estimate he made, he entered into an agreement with one McDaniel, who was interested as agent of Bell in effecting a sale of the property, by which he was to receive $700 for his assistance in the consummation of the proposed sale. McDaniel paid him $500 at about the time he reported his estimate, and he recovered the remaining $200 in an action before a justice of the peace later. The bill charges him with having accepted this sum of money as an inducement to make a false report or estimate. On the contrary, the defendant says the agreement with McDaniel was made after his estimate had been completed and reported. As to this, there is some conflict in the testimony.

[1] In so far as the bill seeks a decree for money for damages for a mere wrong, done to the plaintiff, independent of any relation of contract, it states a cause of action not within the jurisdiction of a court of equity. A plain, clear, and positive declaration of this proposition and express application of it by way of decision is found in Laidley v. Laidley, 26 W. Va. 525. Fraud is a well-recognized ground of equity jurisdiction, and the statement of this principle is often made without limitation, but it has its limitations nevertheless. If the fraud amounts to nothing more than a mere tort, usually expressed by the phrase, "an injury by fraud and deceit," making a case in which the remedy at law is complete and fully adequate, there is no ground of equity jurisdiction. It is much easier to state the few instances in which courts of equity decline cognizance of causes of action arising out of fraud than to enumerate the great number of instances in which it does intervene. "A court of equity can give damages in no case where the party has a clear remedy at law; nor even when he has no such remedy, unless, perhaps, under very peculiar circumstances." Meze v. Mayse, 6 Rand. (Va.) 660. "A court of equity will not entertain a bill filed for compensation of a breach of a contract, or to recover damages for a fraudulent representation, unless other distinct grounds of equitable jurisdiction are alleged and proved, and such compensation or damages are merely incidental to such distinct equitable jurisdiction." Laidley v. Laidley, cited.

[2] If the defendant could be regarded as standing in a relation of contract with the plaintiff, lack of general equity jurisdiction is equally obvious. The fraud alleged amounted to no more than a breach of the contract of agency, resulting in damage, making a cause of action for which an action at law is a remedy just as efficacious as a bill in equity. "It may be stated, as a general proposition, that for breaches of contract and other wrongs and injuries cognizable at law, courts of equity do not entertain jurisdiction to give redress by way of compensation or damages, where these constitute the sole objects of the bill." 2 Story's Eq. Jur. § 794.

In neither instance is the lack of jurisdiction supplied by the first paragraph of section 1 of chapter 106 of the Code, authorizing attachments in equity. Its terms, general in character and apparently giving right to attach in equity in all cases and for all sorts of demands, are to be taken distributively. They mean no more than that there may be an attachment in equity when the cause of action is one of equitable cognizance, and at law when the action is at law. The expression of legislative will was put in these general terms for mere brevity and convenience. Peyton & Co. v. Cabell, 25 W. Va. 540.

[3] The only exception in this respect is found in the last paragraph of section 1 of chapter 106, authorizing an attachment in a court of equity for a debt or claim, legal or equitable, whether the same be due or not, upon any of the grounds stated. In this clause, the words "debt or claim" do not include damages for a wrong. By the first paragraph of the section, an attachment is given in actions to recover such damages, but the last paragraph, conferring special equity jurisdiction, carefully omits claims arising out of tort. The first paragraph enumerates three classes of actions, those for claims or debts arising out of contract, and damages for wrongs. But two of these are enumerated in the last paragraph. The omission clearly signifies intent not to allow an attachment in equity for causes of action ex delicto. In the absence of terms expressly conferring it, such statutes are interpreted as not giving equity jurisdiction. Dunlop & Co. v. Keith, 1 Leigh (Va.) 480, 19 Am. Dec. 755.

[4] As between the defendant and Rouse, who employed him to make the estimate, the claim asserted by the bill might be regarded as one arising out of contract for which an attachment is authorized. But there was no such relation between the plaintiff and the defendant. As between them, there was no employment nor any contract. The employment was effected and the work done before the plaintiff came into legal existence. That contract was completed and ended. Nothing remained to Rouse except a mere right of action, not in any sense an incident or concomitant of the conveyance to the corporation. It was a separate and distinct thing from what the corporation acquired under the deed of January 30, 1907. Assuming it to have been assignable, without deciding the question, that deed did not operate as an assignment thereof, nor is there any evidence of an assignment in any other form or by any other instrument. Corporations sometimes succeed to or take over rights and contracts of promoters, but, strictly and technically, contracts of promoters are not the contracts of the promoted corporations. The latter merely take over the rights acquired by the promoters. Many of the acts of the latter are thus adopted or inure to the benefit of the corporation, but they are acquired only as incident to property or contracts conveyed, assigned, or made over to the corporations. In no instance are the acts done before the corporation is organized the acts of the corporation itself.

Seeing no error in the decree complained of, we affirm it.

THOMAS v. STATE BOARD OF HEALTH.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 7, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS (§ 3*)—LICENSING—REGULATION BY STATE BOARD OF HEALTH.

Section 9, c. 150, Code 1906, as amended and re-enacted by chapter 66, Acts of 1907 (Code Supp. 1909, c. 150), vests "the state board of health of West Virginia" with discretion to make reasonable rules and regulations respecting the granting of license to medical licentiates of other states with whose licensing authorities it has established reciprocal relations, and to refuse to grant license to those who have not complied with such rules and regulations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Physicians and Surgeons, Cent. Dig. § 3; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

2. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS (§ 3*)—LICENSING—REGULATIONS BY STATE BOARD OF HEALTH.

A rule or regulation which requires a foreign medical licentiate to reside and practice his profession in the state which licensed him for one year before making application for license in this state is reasonable, and the failure of the applicant to comply with it will justify the state board of health in refusing him a license.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Physicians and Surgeons, Cent. Dig. § 3; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

3. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS (§ 3*)—LICENSING—REGULATIONS BY STATE BOARD OF HEALTH—CONSTRUCTION.

The year's practice in the foreign state must be in compliance with its laws.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Physicians and Surgeons, Cent. Dig. § 3; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

4. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS (§ 3*)—LICENSING—REGULATIONS OF THE STATE BOARD OF HEALTH—CONSTRUCTION.

The interpretation given by said board to a rule or regulation adopted by it will be followed by the court, unless it appears to be clearly unreasonable and arbitrary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Physicians and Surgeons, Cent. Dig. § 3; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

Original application for a writ of mandamus by Claude A. Thomas against the State Board of Health. Mandamus refused.

M. F. Stiles, of Charleston, and McCluer & McCluer, of Martinsburg, for petitioner. A. A. Lilly, Atty. Gen., John B. Morrison, of Sutton, and J. E. Brown, of Charleston, for respondent.

WILLIAMS, J. Dr. Claude A. Thomas has made original application to this court for a writ of mandamus to compel the state board of health of West Virginia to issue him a license to practice medicine in this state.

Petitioner avers that he is a resident of the state of Maryland; that about the 6th of June, 1912, he was graduated from the Maryland Medical College of Baltimore, a reputable medical college in good standing in Maryland and in this state; that after receiving his college diploma the board of medical examiners of the state of Maryland issued to him on the 24th of July, 1912, a license to practice medicine and surgery in that state, and that thereupon he immediately entered upon, and has ever since been continuously engaged in, the reputable practice of medicine in that state; that the standard of qualification to practice medicine in Maryland is equivalent to the standard in West Virginia, and that each of said states accords to the medical licentiates of the other like privileges; that the board of health of West Virginia has heretofore established and maintained reciprocal relations in the said matter with like authorities in the state of Maryland, and has granted to graduates of said Maryland Medical College and licentiates of the board of medical examiners of Maryland licenses to practice medicine in this state; that on the — day of July, 1913, he made proper application to the state board of health of West Virginia, on blank forms furnished for the purpose by said board, setting forth therein the foregoing facts, for license to practice medicine in West Virginia, and accompanied said application with the license issued to him by the board of medical examiners of the state of Maryland, and with the affidavits of nine reputable citizens and residents of Baltimore, Md., testifying to petitioner's good character, and to the fact that he had practiced medicine in Baltimore for one year prior thereto, and also tendered with his application $25 to pay the fee required by section 11, c. 66, Acts 1907 (Code Supp. 1909, c. 150), and that said state board of health, at a regular session held in the city of Charleston on the 4th of August, 1913, refused to grant him a license, which action petitioner alleges was unjust, arbitrary, and contrary to the express terms of the statute, and greatly to his wrong and prejudice.

[1] On this petition an alternative writ was issued, to which "the state board of health of West Virginia" has made return, admitting its refusal to grant petitioner license, and assigning a number of reasons therefor, only one of which, however, we need consider, deeming it a sufficient justification for respondent's action in the premises; that is, that, under the reciprocal relation existing between respondent and the medical examining board in the state of Maryland, a medical licentiate from that state is required, by a rule or regulation adopted by respondent prior to petitioner's application, to reside and practice his profession in Maryland for one year after receiving his license there, and before making application for license here, which regulation it appears petitioner has not complied with. It may not be that respondent is given an unlimited discretion in the matter of granting or refusing licenses to applicants therefor, still, in view of the very nature of its duties and powers, as prescribed and defined by chapter 150, Code of West Virginia (1906), it must necessarily be vested with a very wide discretion, and especially so in the matter of establishing reciprocal relations between itself and like bodies in other states having similar powers, and in prescribing regulations for the granting of licenses to licentiates from such other states. Section 3 of said chapter authorizes it to "make and adopt all necessary rules, regulations and by-laws not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of this state or of the United States, to enable it to perform its duties and transact its business under the provisions of this chapter." Section 9 of said chapter, as amended and re-enacted by chapter 66, Acts 1907, clearly gives it power to fix the standard of qualification for practitioners of medicine by empowering it to examine the applicant in respect thereto before issuing him a license, and by authorizing it to determine what medical colleges are reputable in its judgment, and what ones are not. It also has discretion to enter into reciprocal relations with like boards in other states, whose standards of qualification are equal to that established by it in this state, and to admit licentiates of those states to practice in this state, without subjecting them to an examination, or to refuse to enter into such relation, and to require such applicants to pass an examination.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[2] It appears, however, that such reciprocal relation has been established between respondent and the board of medical examiners in the state of Maryland. Therefore, in view of its large discretion in these matters, respondent's regulation requiring medical licentiates of the state of Maryland to reside and practice their profession in that state continuously for one year before applying for license in this state is a reasonable one and wholly within its discretion. The board of medical examiners of Maryland exacts a like requirement of medical licentiates from this state who make application to it for license in that state. It is a reciprocal arrangement.

[3] The return denies that petitioner resided and practiced in Maryland for a year after he had been licensed there, and before making his application for license here, and avers that during the time petitioner claims to have resided and practiced in Baltimore, Md., he was residing in Martinsburg, W. Va., and practicing his profession in this state without a license so to do, which respondent charges to be dishonorable conduct. Petitioner replied specially to this and other charges in the return, and a number of affidavits, pro and con, were taken and filed. But it is not necessary to decide this question of fact, or the question of law growing out of it, i. e., whether, if the charge is true, it amounted to dishonorable conduct, for the reason that petitioner admits the fact that his Maryland license was not delivered to the recording court in the city of Baltimore, where he claims to have resided and practiced, until in January, 1913, which was only seven or eight months before he made application to respondent for license. If he did, in fact, practice his profession in that state prior to filing his license for recordation, it was unlawful, and could not avail him anything. Under the statutes of Maryland his license was inoperative until it was filed for recordation. Section 59, c. 217, Acts of Maryland 1894, makes it a misdemeanor for a physician or surgeon to attempt to practice his profession in that state without first having his license registered, and subjects the violator of the law to a fine of from $10 to $200 for each offense. So solicitous is the Legislature of that state regarding the enforcement of this statute that by another act (section 61a, c. 612, Acts 1902) it is made the duty of the police commissioners in the city of Baltimore and of the sheriffs of the various counties to see that all practicing physicians in the state are duly registered in the respective counties in which they practice.

[4] Respondent's regulation respecting the granting of licenses to medical licentiates from the state of Maryland was reasonable and authorized by its discretionary powers, and petitioner had not complied with it.

For this reason, we refuse the writ.

BOWER v. VIRGINIAN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 30, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

RAILROADS (§ 446*)—INJURY TO LIVE STOCK —EVIDENCE.

Demurrer to evidence rightly sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1627-1641; Dec. Dig. § 446.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Raleigh County.

Action by R. L. Bower against the Virginian Railway Company. Demurrer to the evidence sustained, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

File & File, of Beckley, for plaintiff in error. McGinnis & Hatcher, of Beckley, G. A. Wingfield, of Norfolk, Va., and E. W. Knight, of Charleston, for defendant in error.

ROBINSON, J. Did the court err in sustaining defendant's demurrer to the evidence? In other words, could the jury have found from the evidence that defendant's servants in charge of a heavy freight train were negligent in running the train on plaintiff's horse so that the animal was lost to plaintiff?

We are of opinion that the court's action is right. None of plaintiff's witnesses saw the train run on the horse. They mainly speak from what they observed as to the horse's tracks on the roadbed of the railroad. One of them was riding in the caboose of the train, but his testimony by no means establishes negligence. The mere absence of a continuous blowing of the whistle, or the failure to stop the train with a jolt, do not, under the circumstances presented, make negligence. Plaintiff's witnesses do not show that the train could have been stopped in time to prevent injury. On the other hand, the sole witness for defendant, the engineer, testifies to decisive facts wholly uncontradicted in the case—that he used every reasonable precaution to protect the horse from injury, that he made every effort to stop the train as soon as the horse darted to the roadbed from where it was grazing fifty feet away, and that the train could not have been stopped in a shorter distance than that in which it was stopped. All that plaintiff's witnesses say may be true, and still all that the engineer says as to the exercise of due care on his part and as to his inability to stop in a shorter distance may be true.

The testimony simply showing the distance the horse had run on the roadbed, as determined from the tracks of the animal, does not establish that the train could have been stopped in that distance. The jury could not merely infer that such distance was that in which the brakes on a heavy freight train going down grade could be put on with proper regard for the safety of the train and the train be brought to a standstill. If the engineer's uncontradicted testimony as to facts decisive in the case were false, plaintiff should have produced contradiction thereof, otherwise the engineer's testimony in such particular can not be disregarded.

Quite clearly, if the case had gone to the jury and a verdict for plaintiff had been found, it would have been the duty of the court, on motion, to set the same aside. Therefore, defendant's demurrer was well taken. Dempsey v. Norfolk & Western Ry. Co., 69 W. Va. 271, 71 S. E. 284, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682. The judgment will be affirmed.

LAMON v. GOLD et al.†

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
June 17, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 801*)—LIEN—ENFORCEMENT. When a judgment becomes barred by the statute of limitations, it ceases to be a lien on the debtor's land, and a court of equity will not enforce it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1387, 1575; Dec. Dig. § 801.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 795*)—LIEN—CONTINUANCE.

The lien of a judgment continues so long as the right to have execution issued or to bring an action or writ facias on it is not barred.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1388-1394, 1397-1406; Dec. Dig. § 795.*]

3. JUDGMENT (§ 795*)—LIEN—DEBTOR'S DEPARTURE FROM STATE—EFFECT.

Notwithstanding a debtor's departure from and residence out of the state, after a judgment has been recovered against him, may not obstruct the creditor in the enforcement of his lien, it will suspend the running of the statute and preserve the lien of the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1388-1394, 1397-1406; Dec. Dig. § 795.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

4. JUDGMENT (§ 801*)—LIEN—MATTERS WHICH "OBSTRUCT"—ENFORCEMENT.

Code 1906, c. 139, § 11, relating to limitation of time for enforcement of judgments, provides for omission from computation of time for reasons stated in chapter 104, § 18, providing that "where any such right as is mentioned in this chapter shall accrue against a person who had before resided in this state, if such person shall by departing without the same, or by absconding or concealing himself, or by any other indirect ways or means obstruct the prosecution of such right, * * * the time that such obstruction may have continued shall not be computed as a part of the time within which the said right might or ought to have been prosecuted." Held that, as thus used, the word "obstruct" does not mean to prevent altogether but rather to interrupt, to impede, or embarrass the creditor in the pursuit of any of his remedies.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1387, 1575; Dec. Dig. § 801.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 4890-4894.]

5. JUDGMENT (§ 801*)—ENFORCEMENT BY "SUIT."

The word "suit," as used in Ann. Code 1906, c. 139, §§ 10, 11, relating to proceedings for enforcement of judgment liens, means a suit in equity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1387, 1575; Dec. Dig. § 801.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 6768-6778; vol. 8, p. 7809.]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Berkeley County.

Bill by J. M. Lamon against Robert Gold and others. Decree for plaintiff, and Maria E. Janney appeals. Affirmed.

Faulkner, Walker & Woods, of Martinsburg, for appellant. J. O. Henson, of Charleston, for appellee.

WILLIAMS, J. This is a judgment creditors' suit, and Maria E. Janney, a defendant and judgment creditor, has appealed from a decree overruling her exceptions to the report of a master commissioner, to whom the cause was referred, to make report of the lands owned by the judgment debtor and the liens thereon.

In the years 1897 and 1898 a number of judgments were recovered against Robert Gold and his several indorsers on notes executed by him to different persons. Those judgments bear different dates. W. O. Nicklas, as administrator of Louisa Martin, deceased, recovered two judgments against said Gold on the 11th of January, 1898, for $984.86 and $492.73, respectively. Maria E. Janney paid these two judgments and took an assignment of them. In November, 1897, George I. Pitzer, first indorser on a note held by the Citizens' National Bank and joint judgment debtor with said Gold to said bank, having paid the judgment, instituted a suit in chancery against Gold and others, the purpose of which was to subject all his lands, except his estate in remainder in the dower lands of his mother, to the payment of the liens thereon. In that suit all his lands, except his said estate in remainder, were sold, and the proceeds derived therefrom were sufficient to pay only a portion of the liens. The purposes of that suit having been accomplished, it was retired from the docket by decree made on September 30, 1898.

J. M. Lamon, indorser for, and joint judgment debtor with, said Gold, having paid the judgment against him and his principal in favor of the Citizens' National Bank, brought the present suit on the 3d of June, 1909, the purpose of which is to subject Gold's undivided one-third interest in remainder in a tract of 69 acres; it being the tract which was assigned as dower to his mother out of the lands of which his father had died seised.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

†Rehearing denied.

More than ten years had elapsed between the return days of the last executions issued on all of the judgments against said Gold and the bringing of the present suit, except the two judgments now held by Maria E. Janney. Executions were issued upon those two judgments on January 4, 1907, and were returned not satisfied on February 4, 1907, which was within ten years from the return of the last executions that had been issued thereon. Notwithstanding executions had not been issued on the prior judgments for a period of more than ten years before the suit was brought, the commissioner reported them as liens superior in dignity to the lien of the judgments held by Maria E. Janney, and she excepted to the report, and the court overruled her exceptions. Appellant's judgments are subsequent in date, but she contends that the prior judgments have not been kept alive by having executions issued thereon within the time required by section 10, c. 139, Code 1906, while she was diligent and did keep her judgments alive. She contends that her judgments are the only existing liens.

Robert Gold was a resident of the state at the time the judgments were recovered, but some time in the year 1899 he left the state and has ever since continued to be a nonresident. He was proceeded against, in this suit, by order of publication, but before final decree he filed his answer, admitting that the judgments reported in favor of appellees had not been paid.

Relying upon Welton v. Boggs, 45 W. Va. 620, 32 S. E. 232, 72 Am. St. Rep. 833, counsel for appellees insist that the statute of limitations is purely a personal defense to the debtor, and that, so long as he is living, one judgment creditor cannot rely upon it to defeat the lien of another judgment creditor. But counsel for appellant attack the soundness of that decision and have presented very strong argument in their brief to show that it is inequitable and against the weight of authorities upon that question and should therefore be overruled. In support of their argument they cite the following cases, viz.: Callaway v. Saunders, 99 Va. 350, 38 S. E. 182; McCartney v. Tyrer, 94 Va. 198, 26 S. E. 419; Monk v. Exposition Corporation, 111 Va. 121, 68 S. E. 280; Brandenstein v. Johnson, 140 Cal. 29, 73 Pac. 744; De Voe v. Rundle, 83 Wash. 604, 74 Pac. 836; Boucofski v. Jacobsen, 86 Utah, 165, 104 Pac. 117, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898; 19 A. & E. E. L. (2d Ed.) 146. But we do not think that a decision of this question is essential to a determination of the case, for the reason that the suit is brought to enforce liens against the real estate of the debtor; and, if the court can see that the liens ceased to exist before the bringing of the suit, it will not enforce them. The court will not enforce a right which it sees does not exist. Although section 5, c. 139, Code 1906, creating the lien of a judgment, does not expressly limit its duration, yet, in view of other provisions of the law, the lien ceases to exist after a time, if certain requirements for keeping it alive and in existence have not been complied with.

[1] The lien of a judgment is a right created by statute, and the Legislature has prescribed conditions and requirements for the preservation of such right, and noncompliance with those requirements will operate to divest the right. Ordinarily limitations relate to and affect the remedy without destroying the right. But a lien is a right; the enforcement of it is a remedy. If time has destroyed the lien, it cannot be restored by simple consent; it must be done by some kind of legal proceeding. So, while a barred judgment may furnish the basis of an action or scire facias on which another judgment may be obtained, if limitation is not pleaded, it is not evidence of a lien.

[2] The creditor's right to the lien of his judgment is gone forever when his right to sue out execution on the judgment or to revive it by scire facias is barred. In Wendenbaugh, Adm'r, v. Reid, 20 W. Va. 588, it was held that: "The lien of a judgment ceases when the right to sue out execution on the judgment or to revive it by scire facias is barred by the statute of limitations." The same question was decided in Shipley v. Pew, 23 W. Va. 487, and in Reilly v. Clark, 81 W. Va. 573, 8 S. E. 509. In the latter case Judge Snyder, in his opinion at page 573 of 31 W. Va., page 510 of 8 S. E., says that it has been repeatedly decided and has become the settled law of this state. One who seeks the enforcement of a right must certainly satisfy the court that the right exists; and if his bill is brought to enforce a judgment lien which the court sees does not exist, because the creditor's right to sue out execution on, or to revive, his judgment by scire facias is barred, it will not enforce it. It does not follow that, because a creditor obtained a judgment against his debtor, he may, at any time thereafter, enforce it as a lien against his debtor's land. If it is more than ten years old, he must show that he has kept it alive. But plaintiff alleges in his bill, and it is also an admitted fact, that Robert Gold left the state in 1899 and has ever since then been a nonresident.

This brings us to a consideration of the next question raised in the case, which is whether the debtor's absence from the state has prevented the running of the statute of limitations and has saved the liens of the judgments. Sections 10 and 11, c. 139, Code 1906, prescribe limitations upon the time of issuance of an execution on a judgment and also upon an action, suit, or scire facias brought on a judgment within a period of ten years from its date, or if execution issued within two years from the date of the judgment, then in ten years from the return day of the last execution which has not been returned or which has been returned unsatisfied. Section 11 says no execution shall issue, and no action, suit, or scire facias shall be brought on any judgment after the time prescribed in section 10, but it contains the following provision in regard to computing the time, viz.: "The period mentioned in the fourth section of chapter one hundred and thirty-six of this Code, and any time during which the right to sue out execution on the judgment is suspended by the terms thereof, or by legal process, shall be omitted from the computation; and the sixteenth, seventeenth, eighteenth and nineteenth sections of chapter one hundred and four of this Code shall apply to the right to bring such action, suit or scire facias, in like manner as to any right, action, suit or scire facias, mentioned in those sections."

[3] The terms of the judgments in question place no limitation upon the right to sue out execution, and we have already said more than ten years had elapsed between the issuance of executions on all of the judgments, except upon the two now owned by appellant, and the bringing of this suit. But the judgment debtor left the state in 1899 and has ever since resided elsewhere, and therefore counsel for appellees insist that the debtor's becoming a nonresident after the recovery of the judgments, and his continuance as such, stopped the running of the statute, not only against their right to bring an action or scire facias upon the judgment, but also against their right to sue in equity for the enforcement of their liens. Section 18 of chapter 104 is referred to in section 11, c. 139, and is expressly made a part of it. So much of said last-named section as relates to the question under consideration reads as follows: "Where any such right as is mentioned in this chapter, shall accrue against a person who had before resided in this state, if such person shall, by departing without the same, or by absconding or concealing himself, or by any other indirect ways or means, obstruct the prosecution of such right, or if such right has been or shall be hereafter obstructed by war, insurrection or rebellion, the time that such obstruction may have continued shall not be computed as any part of the time within which the said right might or ought to have been prosecuted."

There is a very able and ingenious argument by counsel for appellant in their brief to demonstrate that the time of the debtor's absence from the state should not be omitted from the computation of time unless his absence actually prevented the bringing of the suit. Otherwise they say the creditor has not been obstructed, and the statute was intended to apply only when there has been an actual obstruction of the right. But the language of the statute is too plain, it seems to us, to admit of doubt that the Legislature regarded absence from the state, in and of itself, such an obstruction of the creditor's right as to justify a suspension of the statute of limitation on that account and did so suspend it. Whether, in all cases, absence from the state does operate as an obstruction or not, we think the Legislature, by the clearest intendment, so regarded it. It is put on the same footing with a party's absconding or concealing himself, and then follow these words, "or by any other indirect ways or means, obstruct the prosecution of such right." The words quoted clearly indicate that a debtor's departing from the state suspends the running of the statute. It is true that the debtor's absence did not prevent the bringing of this suit; he was proceeded against by order of publication, and that could have been done at any time after he became a nonresident. The location of the land sought to be subjected to the lien conferred jurisdiction. But the statute, being designed to protect a right, is entitled to a liberal construction; and, even if an actual obstruction were necessary to give it application, the obstruction of any of the creditor's remedies for the collection of his debt would be sufficient.

[4] The word "obstruct," as here used, does not mean to prevent altogether, but it rather means to interrupt, to impede, or embarrass the creditor in the pursuit of any of his remedies, whether by execution, action, scire facias, or by suit in equity. So, while the creditors were not prevented, by Gold's absence, from proceeding to enforce their liens against his land or from having executions issued on their judgments, they were, certainly prevented from bringing an action on them or reviving them by scire facias; jurisdiction of the debtor's person being essential to those remedies. Hence his absence from the state has actually prevented the judgment creditors from pursuing some of their remedies.

The lien of a judgment remains so long as the right to bring an action on it or revive it by scire facias exists. If the debtor had returned to the state, at the time this suit was brought, we do not think the right of his creditors to bring an action or scire facias on their respective judgments and to exclude from the period of limitation the time of his absence can be doubted. Having such right, their liens are preserved and may be enforced in this suit. It was not necessary to revive the judgments by actions or scire facias before bringing the suit. The liens of the judgments never ceased. Sections 10 and 11, c. 139, authorize the bringing of a suit to enforce a judgment lien whenever and as long as the creditor has the right to bring an action or a scire facias. The statute treats them as alternative remedies; and, if any one of them is saved to the creditor, all are saved.

[5] The term "suit," as used in sections 10 and 11, clearly means a suit in equity for the enforcement of a judgment lien.

Finding no error, we affirm the decree.

McLAIN v. WEST VIRGINIA AUTOMOBILE CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 30, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS (§ 7*)—KEEPER OF GARAGE—CARE OF AUTOMOBILE—DILIGENCE.

The law enjoins on the keeper of a garage for hire the duty safely to keep an automobile left in his custody, and he is bound to the exercise of reasonable diligence and care to that end.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Livery Stable Keepers, Cent. Dig. § 6; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

2. LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS (§ 7*)—KEEPER OF GARAGE—DUTIES AND OBLIGATIONS.

A count in assumpsit charging a garage keeper with the duty to take due and proper care of an automobile left in his custody and safely and securely to keep, store and care for the automobile without damage or injury, does not charge a higher degree of care than the law enjoins—reasonable or ordinary care to protect from injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Livery Stable Keepers, Cent. Dig. § 6; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

3. DAMAGES (§ 159*)—EVIDENCE—PLEADINGS.

A smaller amount of damages or injury than that laid in the declaration may be proved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 429-438, 440-444, 447, 449-453; Dec. Dig. § 159.*]

4. LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS (§ 7*)—GARAGE KEEPERS—DILIGENCE—CUSTOMS.

A custom of garage keepers contrary to the implied obligation of reasonable care for safe keeping, arising in favor of an automobile owner by the storing of his car at a public garage, can not absolve the garage keeper from observance of such care.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Livery Stable Keepers, Cent. Dig. § 6; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

5. LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS (§ 6*)—GARAGE KEEPERS—CUSTODY OF CAR.

No garage keeper in the exercise of reasonable care can release a car left in his custody to another than the owner, without the latter's order, expressed or reasonably implied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Livery Stable Keepers, Cent. Dig. § 6; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

6. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 302*)—TORTS OF SERVANT—SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT.

A garage keeper cannot leave the garage solely in the hands of a servant and then say that the latter's negligence in releasing a car to one without authority from the owner is beyond the scope of his employment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1217-1221, 1225, 1229; Dec. Dig. § 302.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Ohio County.

Action by W. H. McLain against the West Virginia Automobile Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

James W. Ewing, of Wheeling, for plaintiff in error. J. B. Sommerville, of Wheeling, for defendant in error.

ROBINSON, J. This is an action in assumpsit by the owner of an automobile against a garage keeper, for damages arising from failure to exercise due and proper care in the keeping of the automobile.

Plaintiff delivered his automobile to defendant for the ordinary storage which owners and users of automobiles must necessarily have. Defendant was to receive from plaintiff eight dollars per month therefor. Thus defendant became a bailee for hire, with the obligations pertaining to such relation. Defendant's servant in charge of the garage at night, permitted one, who had no authority from plaintiff, to take the automobile out at two o'clock in the morning, and, on the "joy ride" which followed, the car was wrecked and broken to pieces. Plaintiff sought and has recovered the amount that he necessarily expended for the rebuilding and repair of the car.

[1] The law applicable to the relation of the parties herein has been modernly stated: "The liabilities of the garage keeper depends upon his care of the automobile while it is in his custody. He is bound to exercise reasonable care and prudence in keeping the machine in a safe manner, and must furnish reasonably safe accommodations. Any damage caused to the machine while in his custody, resulting from the lack of reasonable diligence and care, renders the garage keeper liable for whatever injuries the machine may have sustained. The failure to exercise due care constitutes a breach of the contract of bailment." Huddy on Automobiles, sec. 243. "The garage keeper is not an insurer of the automobiles left in his charge to be cared for, but he is bound to use reasonable or ordinary diligence in their care and keeping to the end that they be not damaged or destroyed." Berry on Automobiles, sec. 207.

[2] A demurrer to each of the two counts of the declaration was overruled. We are of opinion that the first count sufficiently states a cause of action, and, as the case was tried under that count wholly, it is unnecessary that we should consider the second count. It is true that the first count is not artfully drawn. It would have been well for the pleader in stating the case to have observed 2 Chitty on Pleading (11th Amer. Ed.) 341, 342. But we do not find the count susceptible to the criticism made that it charges defendant with a higher degree of care than the law implies. In a practical sense, the count, charging as it does defendant with the duty to take due and proper care of the automobile left in defendant's custody and safely and securely to keep, store and care for the automobile without damage or injury, does not charge a higher degree of care than the law enjoins—reasonable or ordinary care to protect from injury.

[3] A bill of particulars had been filed. It was proper to permit proof under it of the cost of the repairs to the automobile made necessary by defendant's want of care, though the declaration averred that the automobile was "wholly lost to plaintiff." A smaller amount of damages or injury than that laid in the declaration may be proved. 1 Chitty, sec. 839.

[4] It was not error to exclude defendant's offer to prove the custom of garage keepers with reference to the care of automobiles in their custody and in respect to the surrender of such automobiles to chauffeurs or employees of the owners. In this case the contract arose from the relation of the parties. There was no conflict as to what that contract was. It was merely such as the law implied. A custom of garage keepers, to which plaintiff was no party, could not change the contract which the law established in his behalf. That law of course forbade such negligence in the garage keeper as the permitting of the car to leave the garage in the hands of one having no authority to take it. Such custom as defendant evidently sought to prove would have been a direct violation of the implied contract which called for reasonable care in the safe keeping of the automobile. It is not ordinary or reasonable care for one charged with the safe keeping of an automobile in a garage to allow it to go out on the road in the hands of a third party without the owner's consent. There may be a custom of surrendering automobiles at garages to chauffeurs of the owners, but the question of the authority of a chauffeur to take his employer's car from the garage is another matter.

[5] The party who was permitted by defendant to take plaintiff's car out had in fact no authority to do so. As to this point there is indeed no conflict in the evidence. But defendant sought to excuse itself by showing that the party had apparent authority to run the car because the latter had instructed plaintiff in its use on several occasions about two months previous. The evidence adduced is not sufficient to excuse defendant from the want of reasonable care in releasing the car. No garage keeper in the exercise of reasonable care can let out cars on such slight appearances of authority as is disclosed in this case. The only surrender of a car that the garage keeper can rightfully make is on the order of the owner, expressed or reasonably implied. No reasonable implication of authority arose in this instance. Indeed the employee in charge of the garage at the time virtually admits that he knew of the want of authority from plaintiff. He was the sole representative of defendant, charged with responsibility in its behalf. The court rightly refused the instruction asked for by defendant, tending to absolve it on the theory of apparent authority in the party to whom it released plaintiff's automobile.

[6] Another instruction sought by defendant and refused would have submitted to the jury the proposition that defendant was only liable for the negligent acts of its servants when they were acting within the scope of their employment. If the instruction meant to refer to the servant in charge of the garage, the refusal was proper; for, it was surely within the scope of the employment of that servant to prevent cars from leaving the garage in the hands of those not authorized to take them. The garage keeper can not leave the garage solely in the hands of a servant and then say that his negligence in letting a car out is beyond the scope of his employment. That would leave the garage without anyone to protect cars; in itself it would be want of reasonable care. But if the proposed instruction meant to refer to another servant of defendant who accompanied the party that took out the car without authority from plaintiff, its refusal was proper because an instruction which was given for defendant concretely covered the point. An order will be entered affirming the judgment.

BERNARD GLOEKLER CO. v. CARR.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 30, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SALES (§ 23*)—CONTRACT—PROPOSAL AND ACCEPTANCE—BINDING EFFECT.

An offer and acceptance for the sale of drug store fixtures were in the following form: "We propose to furnish and erect complete in your store at Charleston, W. Va., the following fixtures: 25-foot wall case (McLean style); 18-foot tincture shelving; 11-foot patent medicine case; 6-foot tobacco case and humidior; 6-foot mirror; 12-foot R X work counter; 12-foot R X partition; 18-foot 6-inch settee, upholstered in green leather; 7-foot 6-inch mirror, above settee; 14-foot 6-inch 'L' case; three 6-foot cases; 5-foot wrapping counter, glass front and sliding door; 10-foot laboratory table. Exposed parts of above in solid and veneered mahogany; all glass bevel plate and all mirrors No. 1 grade same, metal back; all cases to be all plate—plate shelves 10-inch marble base; finish—best quality, hand polished and rubbed. Complete plans, specifications and details to be submitted and approved by purchaser. Price $2,145. Bernard Gloekler Co., per Leon Shipman. Accepted: Jas. A. Carr, Carr's Drug Store." Held, in view of the evidence, that the contract was mutually binding on both parties, and Carr could not revoke it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 44-48; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

2. SALES (§ 177*)—CONTRACT—BREACH—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

His refusal to take the fixtures in conformity with the contract was a breach thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 445-450; Dec. Dig. § 177.*]

3. SALES (§ 23*)—CONTRACT—VALIDITY.

The contract was not invalid and unenforceable because of the concluding clause thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 44-48; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

4. SALES (§ 1*)—CONTRACT—DESCRIPTION—SUFFICIENCY.

The contract is sufficiently definite in the description of the fixtures.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1, 3-5; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Kanawha County.

Action by the Bernard Gloekler Company against James A. Carr, trading, etc. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Goettman & Blecher and Cato & Bledsoe, of Charleston, for plaintiff in error. Price, Smith, Spilman & Clay, of Charleston, for defendant in error.

LYNCH, J. By an action of assumpsit brought in the intermediate court of Kanawha county, plaintiff seeks to recover damages for the breach of a contract between it and the defendant. The jury first impaneled found for defendant. On writ of error, the circuit court set the verdict aside and remanded the case. On the second trial the jury, at the direction of the court, found for plaintiff the sum of $469.22; that being the amount claimed by the plaintiff in its bill of particulars and affidavit filed with the declaration. The intermediate court rendered judgment on the verdict, which, on writ of error, the circuit court affirmed.

[1-3] The contract, the breach of which is averred, is in substance that plaintiff proposed in writing to furnish and erect complete in defendant's store certain fixtures, designating each item by name or number or otherwise, and adding: "Exposed parts of above in solid and veneered mahogany; all glass bevel plate, and all mirrors No. 1 grade same, metal back; all cases to be all plate—plate shelves 10-inch marble base; finish—best quality, hand polished and rubbed. Complete plans, specifications and details to be submitted and approved by purchaser. Price $2,145. [Signed] Bernard Gloekler Co., per Leon Shipman. Accepted: Jas. A. Carr, Carr's Drug Store."

On writ of error here, the defendant raises two questions, and none other: First. Was the contract sued on intended to be in truth a contract or merely a preliminary agreement or order revocable by either party until the fulfillment of certain conditions? Second. If intended by the parties to be a binding agreement, is it sufficiently certain to afford any basis of enforcing it? both of which are in fact questions to be determined by the court.

The argument in support of the first proposition is that, until complete plans, specifications, and details were submitted by plaintiff and approved by defendant, the contract was incomplete, not binding on, and therefore revocable by, either of them. We do not agree to that conclusion. Nor does Plumbing Co. v. Carr, 54 W. Va. 272, 46 S. E. 458, or Barrett v. Coal Co., 51 W. Va. 416, 41 S. E.

220, 90 Am. St. Rep. 802, cited, support it. Neither case asserts any such proposition. They hold that, where work is to be done or materials furnished to the satisfaction of the owner, the latter may withhold final payment if the work and materials are not satisfactory to him, provided his "rejection is in good faith and not fraudulent." If fraudulent and not in good faith, his rejection will not avail to defeat payment. In this case Carr did not afford plaintiff an opportunity to prepare and submit plans and specifications for his approval. Within an hour after accepting the order, he arbitrarily sought to revoke it, assigning as the only reason that he had purchased the same fixtures from another company at a materially reduced price. Our opinion is that plaintiff's offer and defendant's acceptance have all the necessary elements of a contract binding on both, notwithstanding the final clause providing for the approval of plans and specifications. These were not made a condition of the offer and acceptance, either in express terms or by implication. Carr neither in his letter addressed to plaintiff the day after his acceptance of the order nor in his testimony sought to rely on the final clause as an element of the contract of purchase. In the letter the difference in cost is urged as his reason for the recall of the agreement. In his testimony he frankly repeats and emphasizes the same reason. From his testimony it is also apparent that he did not attach any importance to the plans and specifications as an element of the contract. On the contrary, it is clear that he deemed them only a detail of the final completion of the work, the performance of which plaintiff assumed by the agreement—a conclusion in accord with reason and in harmony with a fair interpretation of the agreement. He testifies that "Mr. Shipman said that the plans and specifications would come in water colors and show the store as it would appear as you would walk in from the front, set in position; that is the idea I wanted of the store, to know how it would look." It was "to suit my taste in the matter." The natural and only reasonable inference from this statement is that the plans and specifications related only to the manner of doing the work; that is, when completed the fixtures should cause the store to appear attractive to his patrons, and hence be helpful in his business—an advertisement. Even after receiving the plans and specifications prepared and forwarded by plaintiff to defendant, he admits he had no objection to them, although he at once returned them to plaintiff.

Our interpretation is sustained, to some extent, by Sellers v. Greer, 172 Ill. 549, 50 N. E. 246, 40 L. R. A. 589; Alderton v. Williams, 139 Mich. 297, 102 N. W. 753; Moran Manufacturing Co. v. St. Louis Car Co., 210 Mo. 715, 109 S. W. 47; Hinckley v. Pittsburgh Steel Co., 121 U. S. 265, 7 Sup. Ct. 875, 30 L. Ed. 967. In the Sellers Case the proposal was that Greer was to take all the Greer patents and all special machinery attached to punching machines and all other appliances belonging to the making of spikes, surrender his stock in Morris Sellers & Co., and to furnish it complete sets of templets for splices, the company to loan machine No. 4 for six months and pay Greer $1,800 towards a new machine for cutting spikes, Greer to fill all the present orders so far as the material on hand would complete them; "this agreement to be put in proper form at as early a date as possible, pending the return of the company's attorney to draw up the necessary releases, etc." The court said: "There is nothing appearing on the face of the contract, nor is there anything in the evidence introduced on the hearing," to sustain the position that the proposal was not intended to be a complete and binding contract. "The contract is definite and specific in regard to what was to be done by each of the parties."

The Alderton Case holds that "a contract by which it is agreed to change a heading mill into a stave mill and carry on the business of manufacturing staves is not void for indefiniteness in that it fails to specify the kind of machinery to be bought or the kind of staves to be manufactured." Here the fixtures sold are specified in detail.

More directly in point is the Moran Case. The order proposed by defendant and accepted by plaintiff was: "Enter our order for 1,000 net tons of bar iron at $1.70 per 100 lbs. f. o. b. our works, half card extra; no charge for cutting to length 5 feet or over; specifications to be furnished during balance of year." The car company declined to furnish the specifications, inferentially because the price of iron materially decreased before the expiration of the year. The court held that "the contract, in view of the evidence, was mutually binding on both parties, specifically stating the quantity, kind, and price of the goods sold, and the refusal of the buyer to specify and accept the goods in conformity with the contract was a breach thereof."

In Hinckley v. Steel Co., the court states the essence of the contract in the syllabus to the effect that the defendant agreed in writing to purchase from the plaintiff rails to be rolled by the latter "and to be drilled as may be directed" and to pay for them $58 per ton. He refused to give directions for drilling, and, at his request, plaintiff delayed rolling any of the rails until after the time prescribed for their delivery, and then defendant advised the plaintiff that he should decline to take rails under the contract. The court held the defendant liable in damages for the breach of the contract. In this case it is also noted that defendant's excuse for not taking the rails under the contract was that he had arranged to purchase them at a lower price elsewhere. Likewise, in Wom-ble v. Hickson, 91 Ark. 266, 121 S. W. 401, the plaintiff in error agreed for a fixed price to construct a house out of material to be furnished by Womble; the contract providing that "a drawing and specifications of said house are to be attached and become a part of the contract. The court held that "this was not a condition of the contract" and sustained a judgment for plaintiff.

[4] The argument on the second proposition is that the description of the fixtures is not sufficiently definite for the enforcement of the contract or to warrant recovery for its breach. This conclusion also fails to meet our approval. The contract definitely states what each was bound to do: The plaintiff to furnish certain fixtures fully specified and described, and the defendant to pay for them at a fixed price when set up and complete in his store. But it is said plaintiff subsequently specified each article with further detailed description. This it did in the plans and specifications submitted; but its act in this respect only made more definite that which before was already sufficiently certain to create a binding contract. Its motive, no doubt, was a desire to completely satisfy defendant and not because of any obligation resting upon it. Our conclusion upon this feature of the contract, its definiteness of description of the fixtures sold, accords with the views announced in the cases cited upon the first question propounded by defendant.

We therefore affirm the judgment.

WILSON v. JOHNSON.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 30, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. BROKERS (§ 86*)—ACTION ON CONTRACT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The verdict in this case was not plainly unwarranted by the evidence considered most favorably in support thereof, and the court below erred in setting it aside and awarding defendant a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 116-120; Dec. Dig. § 86.*]

2. NEW TRIAL (§ 70*)—GROUNDS—INSUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Though the evidence be contradictory the verdict should not be set aside or interfered with, if, when considered most favorably in support of the verdict, it does not still appear plainly unwarranted by the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 142, 143; Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1005*)—GRANTING NEW TRIAL—GROUND FOR REVERSAL.

Though according to prior decisions of this and other courts it takes a stronger case in an appellate court to reverse an order granting, than one refusing a new trial, nevertheless, that rule in its application must be properly confined to cases where the evidence is not only conflicting, but also against the weight of the evidence, and the evidence is wholly insufficient to support the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3860-3876, 3948-3950; Dec. Dig. § 1005.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Cabell County.

Action by W. H. Wilson against J. W. Johnson. Judgment for the defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed and rendered.

Simms, Enslow & Staker, of Huntington, for plaintiff in error. Williams, Scott & Lovett, of Huntington, for defendant in error.

MILLER, J. On appeal from the judgment of a justice plaintiff obtained a verdict for two hundred dollars, claimed to be due him from defendant, as per contract, for procuring one Dawkins to sell defendant a tract of timber land.

On motion of defendant the circuit court set aside the verdict and awarded him a new trial, and plaintiff has brought the case here to have that judgment reviewed, and asks at our hands judgment on the verdict in his favor, the same judgment which he contends the court below should have pronounced.

[1] No question of law is in controversy. The simple question presented is, Does the evidence warrant the verdict for plaintiff? Plaintiff proved by his own evidence that a year or two before his alleged contract with defendant, he had negotiated a sale of the tract in question to W. H. Dawkins, or the W. H. Dawkins Lumber Company; that after that nearly every time he met defendant the latter said something to him about that land, that one day when in defendant's office he said to him "Why not go and buy the timber now, or the land? Why not make the deal? It is not too late; they have not cut the timber; it is all there," and that defendant replied that, "Mr. Dawkins won't talk to me about trading on this property," that he replied "Why I believe I could induce Mr. Dawkins to sell to you." Whereupon defendant answered: "Well, Mr. Wilson, if you will do that, I will pay you $200.00 cash." Plaintiff swears he replied to that proposition: "Understand, if you will agree to pay $200.00, I will go down and talk to Mr. Dawkins and I will try and induce him to trade with you, but I am not to make up any papers; I am to set no price, because I am well acquainted with Mr. Dawkins and we have had other dealings with him and I will try to persuade him to sell you this land." Plaintiff further swears that after making this bargain he got on the car and went to see Dawkins, and that after some persuasion, the latter agreed to sell the land to Johnson, but that no price was mentioned; that he came back and reported to defendant what Dawkins had agreed to do, and that he then considered his contract fulfilled; that a short time afterwards Johnson and Dawkins closed a bargain for the land, and that shortly after that he demanded of defendant the $200.00, to which the latter replied: "Mr. Dawkins charged me so much for the land I couldn't afford to give you $200.00." He further swears that he left the matter stand in that way until defendant sold the soft timber to another company and he heard he had gotten a big price for it, when he again demanded his $200.00, and defendant again refused to pay him. Wherefore this suit.

Plaintiff is corroborated by his witness Dawkins to the extent that the latter swears that he remembers the occasion when plaintiff came to his office and asked him to sell the land to Johnson. He did not remember all that was said, thought very little was said, but that plaintiff told him Johnson wanted to buy the land and wanted to know if he would go and see Johnson and have a talk with him, that he answered that he had bought the land for an investment and was going to hold it for a while; that he thought it would bring him more money, but would sell if he could get his price. As to the result of Wilson's visit and what influenced him to go and see Johnson and to finally sell him the land, the witness swears that a short time after Wilson called on him he went to see defendant, and further testified as follows: "Q. What caused you to go to see Mr. Johnson? A. Why I understood he wanted to buy it and I was up here in Huntington and I dropped in to see him. Q. You understood from Mr. Wilson, or he told you he wanted to buy it and in pursuance of his request you went to see Mr. Johnson? Is that right? A. I suppose that it was Mr. Wilson's request. Taking the length of time it has been, I wouldn't be sure. Mr. Wilson was there and talked to me and I saw Mr. Johnson afterwards. The deal was made after Mr. Wilson was there, I know that. Q. Did Mr. Wilson request you to go and see Mr. Johnson? A. Yes, sir, he asked me to go and see him. * * * Q. (By the Court.) Had Mr. Johnson before that been there to purchase this land from you? A. I think at one time he asked me something about it, but I don't remember what time it was."

Defendant, who was his only witness, swears, positively, that he never made the alleged contract with plaintiff. He testifies moreover, that before Dawkins acquired this tract, he was about to buy it from the same persons from whom Dawkins bought it, and intimates that having given plaintiff information of this purpose, the latter intercepted him in some way and procured the owners to sell to Dawkins; that on the day Dawkins closed his contract he asked him if he would sell him the tie stumpage, and that Dawkins replied he would not; that a week or ten days after that Wilson came to his office and said he could buy the boundary of timber, the tie stumpage; that he thought he could induce Dawkins to sell him the tie stumpage of oak for ties, and that he said to him, "Mr. Wilson, if you will induce Mr. Dawkins to sell me this boundary of timber, by the tie," (at prices which he stipulated) "I will give you $200.00 to make that trade." He further swears that at the same time he dictated to his stenographer a letter to Wilson, a copy of which he produced, stating dimensions and prices to be paid for the ties, and that the contract covered by this letter was the only proposition made or agreement had with plaintiff relative to this timber, and that plaintiff had never complied with that contract.

Plaintiff admits having received such a letter from defendant, some time before he made the contract sued on, but says he paid no attention to it, never presented the proposition to Dawkins. He is corroborated in this statement by Dawkins to the extent that the latter swears, that he does not believe Wilson ever proposed buying the tie stumpage, and that he does not think he ever showed him Johnson's letter, that he does not remember that he ever saw it. The evidence of this witness also tends to show that the defendant had attempted once or twice before plaintiff claims to have made his contract to buy from Dawkins, either the timber or tie stumpage, without success.

The foregoing is substantially all the evidence on the material facts, and presents the question whether the court below, within prescribed rules, was justified in denying plaintiff the fruits of his verdict.

[2] The rule of law governing trial courts in such cases, as declared in the decisions of this court and elsewhere, is that though the evidence be contradictory the verdict of the jury should not be interfered with, if when considered most favorably in support of the verdict it does not still appear plainly unwarranted by the evidence. Gwynn v. Schwartz, 32 W. Va. 487, 9 S. E. 880; State v. Cooper, 26 W. Va. 338. The reason for this rule, founded in ancient law, is that when the case turns on the weight of the testimony, or inferences and deductions from facts proven, the jury and not the court are exclusively and uncontrollably the judges. State v. Cooper, supra; Mitchell v. United States Coal & Coke Co., 67 W. Va. 480, 68 S. E. 368.

This rule we think particularly applicable to the case here. The question of the contract depended for the most part on the conflicting oral evidence of the witnesses, with no inconsiderable corroboration of plaintiff by his witness Dawkins. Certainly the trial court, though differing from the jury in the weight and credibility of the evidence of the witnesses, could not say the verdict was plainly not warranted by the evidence, or that manifest injustice had been done.

[3] But it is contended that as the court below on conflicting evidence set aside the verdict, the rule declared in Miller v. Insurance Co., 12 W. Va. 116, 29 Am. Rep. 452, Reynolds v. Tompkins, 23 W. Va. 229, and lastly in Varney & Evans v. Lumber & Mfg. Co., 64 W. Va. 417, 63 S. E. 203, should prevail, namely, that it takes a stronger case in an appellate court to reverse an order granting, than one refusing a new trial, and that as the court below set aside the verdict and awarded a new trial, that judgment should not be disturbed. The rule invoked seems well recognized not only in our cases but in the decisions of many other states. 8 Am. Dig. 1714, and cases there collated. But the rule must be properly interpreted and applied. It may not be used to cover the error of the trial court in abusing its reasonable discretion, in awarding new trials by invading the province of the legal triers of fact, and because differing from them in the inferences or conclusions drawn from conflicting oral evidence substitute its judgment for that of the jury. As stated in Miller v. Insurance Company, supra, the rule is applicable where the evidence is conflicting and the verdict is against the weight of the evidence. As stated in 3 Am. Dig. 1714, supra, the rule is: "A stronger case must be made to justify the disturbance of an order granting a new trial for insufficiency of evidence than where one had been refused."

It cannot be truly said that the evidence of plaintiff in this case was insufficient to warrant the verdict, or that it was so overborne by the evidence of defendant as to evince corruption, partiality or prejudice on the part of the jury, justifying the court below in denying plaintiff the benefits of that verdict.

Our conclusion is to reverse the judgment below and enter judgment here on the verdict for plaintiff.

DONOHUE v. FREDLOCK, Mayor, et al.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 30, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 623*)—ABATEMENT OF NUISANCE—POWERS.

Under the provisions of the charter of a city that the council thereof shall have the power "to regulate the making of division fences and party walls by the owners of adjoining and adjacent premises and lots; to prevent injury or annoyance to the public or individuals from anything dangerous, offensive or unwholesome; and to abate by summary proceedings whatever in the opinion of the council is a nuisance," the council may abate only that as a nuisance which is recognized as such per se or branded as such by a lawful statute or ordinance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1371-1374, 1383, 1384; Dec. Dig. § 623.*]

2. INJUNCTION (§ 85*)—PUBLIC OFFICERS—ILLEGAL RESOLUTION—ABATEMENT OF NUISANCE.

Equity has jurisdiction to restrain a municipal corporation from proceeding, under an illegal and invalid order or resolution, to remove an alleged nuisance, where private rights are encroached upon and substantial injury will ensue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 155, 156; Dec. Dig. § 85.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Randolph County.

Bill by Thomas Donohoe against A. M. Fredlock, Mayor, and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, demurrer overruled, and injunction and bill reinstated.

B. D. Talbott, of Elkins, for appellant. H. G. Kump, of Elkins, for appellees.

LYNOH, J. Without an ordinance of a general character declaring what shall be deemed nuisances, and abatable because within such declaration, and without an ordinance regulating "the making of division fences," the council of the city of Elkins, assuming to act under the provisions of its charter, declared a fence constructed and maintained by Donohoe on his lots therein a nuisance, and ordered its abatement by him within a few hours thereafter, and, upon his failure to abate it, directed the police officers to remove it at his expense. Upon the bill before us, Donohoe obtained an injunction restraining enforcement of the order. The circuit court sustained defendants' demurrer to the bill and dissolved the injunction. This appeal followed.

The defendants, members of the council and its officers and agents, attempt to vindicate their action by the charter authority of the city (section 28, c. 81, Acts 1911), which provides that "the council of said city have the following general powers, * * * to regulate the making of division fences and party walls by the owners of adjoining and adjacent premises and lots, * * * to prevent injury or annoyance to the public or individuals from anything dangerous, offensive or unwholesome, * * * and to abate by summary proceedings whatever in the opinion of the council is a nuisance." They act upon the theory that these general powers are fully operative, in the absence of an ordinance enacted in due form and applicable alike to all persons and structures of the character described; the bill alleging, and the demurrer admitting, that the council had not adopted such ordinance at the date of its proceedings to abate the fence on his property.

[1] The Legislature could, in its discretion, enact, as the Legislatures of some states (Maine and Massachusetts being instances) have enacted, general laws defining and limiting the character and height of division fences. Having that power, it could, in the exercise of its legitimate authority, vest in any municipality like power and authority. Even with such a statute, the legislative grant to regulate division fences does not authorize the municipal council to declare any fence a nuisance unless and until its proper officers have, by a general ordinance, in fact declared the nature and character of the fences that may be so constructed. The power to regulate means only power to enact a reasonable ordinance for that purpose, and thereafter to enforce it by appropriate proceedings. It does not vest in the municipality the power to declare the fence of any one citizen a nuisance and abate it, without first exercising its legislative power to prescribe what fences may properly be built and maintained. This the council of Elkins may have done. But the bill charges failure thus to prescribe any general rule applicable alike to all structures of this character prior to its attempt to declare plaintiff's fence a nuisance and to abate it as such by summary proceedings.

The authority of municipal councils in respect to the exercise of the powers conferred by charter or the general statute (chapter 47, Code 1906) on cities having been but recently discussed in Parker v. Fairmont (not reported) by Judge Robinson, a rediscussion could serve no useful purpose. That case is cited for the holding (points 1 and 2 of the syllabus) that, under the provisions of the charter of a city, the same as Code 1906, c. 47, § 28, that "the council shall have power to abate or cause to be abated anything which in the opinion of a majority of the whole council shall be a nuisance," the council may abate only that as a nuisance which is recognized as such per se or branded as such by lawful statute or ordinance. The rule thus stated, when applied, as it properly may be, to the facts averred by the bill in this case, renders certain the conclusion that the action of the council of the city of Elkins is erroneous, and subject to restraint by the injunctive process of a court of equity at the suit of the plaintiff. In addition to the authorities cited by Judge Robinson, we cite the following: Grossman v. Oakland, 30 Or. 473, 41 Pac. 5, 36 L. R. A. 593, 60 Am. St. Rep. 832; Walker v. Jameson, 140 Ind. 591, 37 N. E. 402, 28 L. R. A. 679, 683, 49 Am. St. Rep. 222; St. Louis v. Heitzberg, 141 Mo. 375, 42 S. W. 954, 39 L. R. A. 551, 64 Am. St. Rep. 516; McQuillin on Mun. Ord. § 441; 3 McQuillin on Mun. Corp. § 901; Joyce on Nuisances, §§ 332, 344.

[2] Likewise, the third syllabus of the Parker Case settles the question discussed by the defendants here, namely, the existence of an adequate remedy at law by certiorari. It is that "equity will restrain a municipal corporation from proceeding, under an illegal and invalid order or resolution, to remove an alleged nuisance, where private rights are unlawfully encroached upon and irreparable injury will ensue." See, also, Teass v. St. Albans, 38 W. Va. 1, 17 S. E. 400, 19 L. R. A. 802; Railroad Co. v. Triadelphia, 58 W. Va. 487, 52 S. E. 499; Improvement Co. v. Bluefield, 69 W. Va. 1, 70 S. E. 772, 83 L. R. A. (N. S.) 759; Hartman v. Mayor, 1 Marr. (Del.) 215, 41 Atl. 74; Carney v. Barnes, 56 W. Va. 581, 49 S. E. 423.

But defendants insist that the bill is fatally defective, and therefore that the court did not err in sustaining their demurrer, because it fails to aver irreparable injury consequent upon the consummation of the proceedings by abatement. They also likewise contend that the bill is defective because of the failure to aver the absence of an adequate remedy at law. While the usual and better practice requires these technical averments, yet to hold a bill defective because of their omission, when it states the facts from which the court as well as the pleader may reasonably conclude that irreparable injury will probably ensue unless relief is granted, would seem to give to these phrases undue merit and effect. At best, they express mere conclusions from the facts averred. They are impotent for any purpose, unless the facts alleged warrant the conclusion. But there is authority at least holding it unnecessary, in order to obtain an injunction to restrain trespass, that plaintiff should aver or prove inability to obtain adequate compensation in damages in an action at law. Manchester v. Manchester, 25 Grat. (Va.) 825, 828; Anderson v. Harvey, 10 Grat. (Va.) 386, 398; Rakes v. Rustin Land Min. & Mfg. Co., 22 S. E. 498, 2 Va. Dec. 156, 158.

The court is therefore of opinion to reverse the decree, overrule the demurrer, reinstate the injunction, and remand the case for further proceedings in accordance with the principles herein announced and otherwise according to law.

BANK OF UNION v. BAIRD et al.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 30, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. PRIOR CASE APPROVED AND REAFFIRMED.

Points 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, and 8 of the syllabus in Bank of Union v. Loeb Shoe Co., 78 S. E. 883, approved and reaffirmed.

2. TIME (§ 5*)—PROCESS—TIME FOR RETURN—"MONTH."

The summons of a justice, issued August 24, 1901, and returnable September 24, 1901, is not invalid under section 202, c. 50, Code 1906. Being returnable on the day of the next succeeding "month" corresponding with its date, it, by proper construction, conforms to the requirement of that section that it shall be returnable not less than one month after its date.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Time, Cent. Dig. §§ 5-8; Dec. Dig. § 5.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4574, 4575; vol. 8, p. 7724.]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

3. GARNISHMENT (§ 191*)—COSTS—RIGHTS OF GARNISHEE.

A garnishee may, when the debtor is served with process or defends the action, disregard any irregularity, but otherwise he pays a judgment against him at his peril, and therefore is allowed to charge the funds in his hands to the extent necessary to test the validity of the proceedings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Garnishment, Cent. Dig. §§ 372-370; Dec. Dig. § 191.*]

Poffenbarger, P., and Robinson, J., dissenting.

Error to Circuit Court, Kanawha County.
Action by the Bank of Union against A. Baird, trading, etc., and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed and remanded.

A. M. Prichard, S. S. Green, and A. P. Hudson, all of Charleston, for plaintiff in error. Couch & Briggs, of Charleston, for defendants in error.

LYNCH, J. [1] The fund involved, the questions for determination except two, and the parties interested save the defendant Hooton & Baird Company, are the same fund, questions, and parties as those involved in Bank of Union v. Loeb Shoe Co., 78 S. E. 883, recently decided by this court. In each case, the controversy is between attaching creditors of Thomas Watson, an absconding debtor, who failed to appear. The opinion in the Loeb Case so fully discusses the legal questions involved that repetition thereof would avail nothing. The principles thereby announced, and sustained by sound reasoning and authority, are applicable and applied to the controverted facts of the present case.

The two questions distinguishing this from the Loeb Case are: First, whether the amount involved is sufficient to sustain jurisdiction here on writ of error; and, second, whether the second summons required by section 202, c. 50, Code, the first not having been served on Watson, who did not appear, is legally sufficient thereunder.

[3] The first was discussed by Judge Miller in the Loeb Case, but not decided because not necessary. It relates to the inclusion of the costs incurred by the garnishee on appeal from the judgment of the justice to the intermediate court of Kanawha county to test the validity of the attachment proceedings of Baird before the former. The garnishee, being a mere stakeholder, may, when the debtor is served with process to answer or is present defending the action, disregard any irregularity in such proceedings. But otherwise he pays a judgment or order against him at his peril. To this end he is allowed to charge the fund in his hands to the extent reasonably necessary to test the validity of the proceedings. Railroad v. Rogers, 52 W. Va. 450, 44 S. E. 300, 62 L. R. A. 178; Drake on Attachments, §§ 692-698; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1218. Therefore the costs incurred by the Charleston National Bank, on the writ of error to the intermediate court, are properly payable out of the funds in its hands. To this extent the fund is depleted to the injury of the Bank of Union, should it appear that the Baird judgment is valid and a binding charge against the funds in controversy. It is therefore proper to include these costs. Including them, the amount in controversy is sufficient to sustain appellate jurisdiction.

[2] As to the second question, section 202, c. 50, Code, provides that where the first summons issued by a justice in proceedings by attachment is not served on the defendant, and he does not appear to answer, there shall issue a second summons, returnable "not less than one or more than two months after its date." The summons so required and issued was dated August 24th, and made returnable September 24, 1901. The Bank of Union contends that the return day is less than one month after the date of issuance. We decline to give assent to that view. The time intervening is one month, and not less. By section 14, c. 13, Code, the word "month," when used in a statute, means a calendar month; that is, the period of time intervening between any date of one month and the corresponding date in the next succeeding month, when the latter has that number of days. Or, as generally stated, "it means a month as designated in the calendar, without regard to the number of days it may contain, and is to be computed, not by counting days, but by looking at the calendar; and it runs from a given day in one month to a day of the corresponding number in the next month, except where the last month has not so many days, in which event it expires on the last day of that month." 38 Cyc. 812, 813; Daley v. Anderson, 7 Wyo. 1, 48 Pac. 839, 75 Am. St. Rep. 870; McGinn v. State, 46 Neb. 427, 65 N. W. 46, 30 L. R. A. 450, 50 Am. St. Rep. 617; Trust & Deposit Co. v. Buddington, 27 Fla. 215, 9 South. 246, 12 L. R. A. 770; Re Gregg's Estate, 213 Pa. 260, 62 Atl. 857; Williamson v. Farrow, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 611, 21 Am. Dec. 492.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

But the bank places stress upon the word "after," as used in the section, and argues that a month after August 24th, the date of the summons, would not end until September 25th. It is pertinent to inquire what is the date for the expiration of the first month after August 24th, in view of the meaning of the word "month" prescribed by statute and as defined by the authorities cited. Is it not the corresponding date in the ensuing September? From August 24th to September 24th is one month, and the first and only period of one month after the first date. To September 25th is one month and one day after August 24th. The Legislature evidently intended the calendar month, after the date of the summons, as the month expiring on the corresponding date in the next succeeding month. See State v. Mounts, 36 W. Va. 179, 14 S. E. 407, 15 L. R. A. 243. The propriety of this construction seems so obviously manifest that further discussion seems unnecessary.

We reiterate the principles announced in the Loeb Case, so far as applicable, and apply them to the facts here, which, as stated, are in the main those involved in the former. We hold that the Bank of Union attachment is valid; that the Baird attachment is invalid, because of the imperfect affidavit on which it is based; that the amount in controversy exceeds $100; that a subsequent attaching creditor has a right to contest the validity of a prior attachment on the same fund; and that both summonses issued by the justice in the Baird attachment proceedings, under sections 26 and 202, c. 50, Code, are sufficient.

As in the Loeb Case, so in this, we think there is error in the judgment of the intermediate court of Kanawha county of July 21, 1910, and for which we reverse it and remand the case, to be further proceeded in according to the principles enunciated in both cases, and further according to the rules and principles of law governing the trial of like cases.

ROBINSON, J. (dissenting). The affidavit for the Baird attachment is sufficient. The judgment ought to be affirmed.

POFFENBARGER, P., joins in this dissent.

GUERIN et al. v. PITTSBURG, C. C. & ST. L. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Sept. 30, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 303*)—DUTY TO ALIGHTING PASSENGER.

It is the duty of a railroad company to stop its trains at stations a reasonable length of time for its passengers to alight with safety, and its failure to do so is negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1216, 1218, 1224, 1226-1232, 1234-1240, 1243; Dec. Dig. § 303.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 303*)—INJURY TO ALIGHTING PASSENGER.

A railroad company is liable to a passenger who, without fault on his part, is injured, while attempting to alight, by the starting and sudden stopping of the train, after it had stopped at his destination to let off and take on passengers, but not long enough to give him a reasonable opportunity to get off.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1216, 1218, 1224, 1226-1232, 1234-1240, 1243; Dec. Dig. § 303.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1002*)—REVIEW—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

When the verdict rests upon conflicting oral testimony of expert witnesses, and there are no controlling facts or circumstances, admitted or clearly proven, which are inconsistent with the jury's finding, the court should not disturb it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3935-3937; Dec. Dig. § 1002.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Brooke County.

Action by Estella Guerin and Frank L. Guerin, her husband, against the Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

J. B. Sommerville, of Wheeling, for plaintiff in error. R. L. Ramsey, of Follansbee, and John J. Coniff, of Wheeling, for defendants in error.

WILLIAMS, J. Estella Guerin and Frank Guerin, her husband, recovered a verdict for $5,000 in a joint action against the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway Company, a corporation, for a personal injury sustained by Mrs. Guerin, alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. The court refused to set aside the verdict and grant it a new trial on defendant's motion, and entered judgment on the verdict, and defendant obtained this writ of error.

The principal question presented is, Does the evidence support the verdict of the jury? Having purchased their tickets, plaintiffs, with their three little children, aged about one, four, and five years, respectively, boarded defendant's train at Pittsburgh to go to Follansbee. They were riding in the rear coach of a train composed of five day coaches and a baggage car. They were seated on opposite sides of the aisle, near the front end of the coach, and when the train stopped at Follansbee Mr. Guerin took the baggage and the oldest child and got off, and Mrs. Guerin was following him, carrying the youngest child in her arms and leading the other. Just as she had gotten out onto the platform of the coach and was about to start down the steps the train began to pull out. The brakeman, who was between the third and fourth cars, says he had gotten onto the step and looked back, saw Mrs. Guerin's position, and called to her to "wait a minute," and immediately ran into the coach and put on the brakes and stopped the train suddenly, which threw her against the railing of the platform with such force, she says, as to bruise and injure her internally. The train had moved about the distance of half a car length, and was going at the rate of about two miles per hour when it was stopped. This occurred at 9:35 p. m. on the 24th December, 1908. It was therefore dark. There is evidence that the coach on which plaintiffs were riding was crowded with passengers, and that Mrs. Guerin was exercising reasonable care and diligence to alight from it when she was hurt. She had a child in her arms and was leading another by the hand, and was therefore necessarily hindered in her progress.

[1, 2] It was clearly the duty of defendant to stop its train a reasonable length of time to allow all its passengers for Follansbee to alight in safety. If, on account of the large number of passengers, it was necessary to make a longer stop than usual, it was its duty to do so. 4 Elliott on Railroads, § 1628. The uncontradicted evidence is that Mrs. Guerin had gotten out of the coach onto the platform, while the train was standing, and was in the act of starting down the steps when the train started, and while she was in that position the brakeman caused the train to be stopped, after it had moved about half a car length, so suddenly as to jerk her against the railing. This was negligence. Duty v. C. & O. Ry. Co., 70 W. Va. 14, 73 S. E. 331; 4 Elliott on Railroads, § 1627, and cases cited in note 10.

[3] It is also insisted that the verdict is excessive. It appears that the railing of the car came in violent contact with Mrs. Guerin's body on her right side just above, and a little in front of, the pelvic bone. She immediately went to the home of her mother about two squares from the station, and had arnica and witch-hazel applied to the bruised parts. On the next day, which was Christmas, she and her husband went by street car to Toronto, Ohio, to visit at the home of Mr. Guerin's father, and remained there two days and nights. They then returned to Follansbee and remained there the night of the 27th, and on the next day went to Pittsburgh. On the 3d of January following she called in Dr. Henderson, her family physician at McKeesport, Pa., who gave her some medicine. He was called to see her again between the 5th and 10th of April following. At that time Dr. McCurdy was also called in, and he examined her, but gave her no treatment. She was sick abed for two weeks in August following, and was treated every day by Dr. Henderson. She then went to the home of her mother in Follansbee, and remained there two or three months, during which time, she says, she was not treated by any physician, but was ailing all the time. And in February, 1910, she was taken to the hospital in Pittsburgh and underwent an operation. Dr. Dixon, who performed the operation, says he found a tumor on the right ovary, which was adhered to the appendix, also a degeneration, in the early stage, of the left ovary, and that the uterus was turned down at right angles toward the right ovary. He says he found it necessary to remove the ovaries, and did so, and also sowed up a laceration which he found in the perineum. The testimony conflicts as to whether these serious troubles were the direct result of the hurt she received on the 24th December, 1908, or were due to childbirth. Mrs. Guerin testifies that, prior to the accident, she was a perfectly strong and healthy woman, and that shortly thereafter she began to have pains in the region of the right ovary, which continued to grow more severe until the operation was performed. Dr. Dixon, who appears to be a skillful surgeon, testified, in answer to an hypothetical question based upon the facts and circumstances testified to by plaintiff's witnesses, that her injury was the direct result of the hurt which she received when alighting from the train. In view of the nature of her injury, it being altogether internal, the opinions of skillful physicians and surgeons were the best proof of which the nature of the case was susceptible. And the opinion evidence of Dr. Dixon is sufficient to support the verdict. True he is contradicted by the opinions of other experts, but it was the province of the jury to decide upon the weight or value to be given to their testimony. There being no controlling facts or circumstances, undisputed, which are inconsistent with the testimony of Dr. Dixon, the court properly overruled defendant's motion to set aside the verdict.

Finding no error, the judgment is affirmed.

ASHBAUGH v. CHESAPEAKE & O. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 30, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 68*)—GRANT OF RIGHT OF WAY—CONSTRUCTION—WIDTH FIXED BY USE.

Possession of a strip of land by a railroad company, manifested and evidenced by maintenance of its tracks on a part thereof and inclusion of the residue within a fence and care of it, as by moving it regularly, for a long period of time, as and for its right of way, under a general and indefinite grant thereof by deed, not specifying its width, without objection on the part of the owners of the tract of land out of which the grant was made, constitutes a practical construction of the grant, fixing and determining the width of the right of way and making it coextensive with such possession, although the possession and acquiescence are not shown to have commenced with the date of the deed or the construction of the road.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 159, 160; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 68*)—GRANT OF RIGHT OF WAY—ENJOYMENT—CONSTRUCTION OF SIDE TRACK.

The construction of a side track within the area so occupied and used by the railroad company is not an enlargement of the easement granted by the deed and defined by the conduct of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 159, 160; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

Robinson, J., dissenting.

Error to Circuit Court, Kanawha County.

Action by J. W. Ashbaugh against the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed and remanded.

Simms, Enslow, Fitzpatrick & Baker, of Huntington, for plaintiff in error. A. M. Belcher, of Charleston, for defendant in error.

POFFENBARGER, J. The judgment for the sum of $250, complained of on this writ of error, was recovered in an action of trespass on the case for an alleged injury done by the construction of a side track on a strip of land about 80 feet wide and 594 feet long, which the defendant claims as a part of its right of way, and which the plaintiff claims as a part of his farm, not included in the right of way. The assignments of error insisted upon in the argument for the plaintiff in error include only rulings upon instructions and a motion to set aside the verdict. There is a general charge of erroneous rulings relating to the admissibility of evidence, but there are no specific assignments of such errors in the petition or the brief.

By their deed dated October 6, 1869, Joshua Morris and Benjamin Morris granted the right of way, the width of which is in controversy, with the following specification and description thereof: "The right of way for the construction of a double track of railway through the lands owned by them on the south side of Kanawha river in Kanawha county, West Virginia, provided no injury is done to the buildings thereon said lands lying above and adjoining the lands of Mrs. Crockett with all the privileges and immunities necessary and requisite for the construction, use and enjoyment of the same." Under this deed, the main line of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company was constructed a great many years ago, and, at the date of the inception of this controversy, it consisted of a double track through the premises. On the north side of the strip occupied by the tracks, there was at that time a strip about 40 feet wide, extending to a county road, and about 594 feet long. In the year 1904 the defendant built on this strip a side track, the center of which was distant from the center of the adjacent main track 18 feet. From the plaintiff's fence, south of the south track of the defendant, apparently used and recognized as the limit of the right of way on the south, the distance to the center of the south track is 12 feet, from the center of the south track to the center of the north track 18 feet, from the center of the north main track to the center of the side track 13 feet, and from the center of the side track to the fence running along the south side of the county road 40 feet, according to the figures given on a map filed as a part of the plaintiff's evidence. The three tracks thus appear to occupy a strip less than 50 feet wide, measured from the fence on the south side of the railroad, but the plaintiff's contention is that under this grant the railway company was entitled to use only so much land as would accommodate its two main tracks, amounting to 29 feet, 18 feet between the centers of the two tracks and an allowance of 8 feet on each side. On the other hand, the railway company claims a grant of such land as it had the right, under the statute at that time, to condemn, namely, 100 feet, and, if not that, land for the accommodation of side tracks, signal towers, and telegraph poles, in addition to its main tracks, and lastly so much of the land as it took possession of and has used under the grant.

Along the fence between the county road and the strip in controversy there are telegraph poles, some of which are on the side next to the county road and others on the side thereof next to the railroad. On these poles are the wires of the railway company and the Western Union Telegraph Company. Which company erected them in the first instance, the evidence does not show, but the employes and agents of the railway company say they belong to it. The plaintiff admits that at no time within the eight years of his ownership of his property, prior to the commencement of his action, did he in any manner exercise any control over the strip in question or make any use of it, nor is there any evidence tending to prove that his immediate predecessor in title, Mary Jane Layden, or his remote predecessors, the Morrisises, ever did so. He lived in the town of Marmet, just outside of which his land lies, for a period of about nine years, before he bought the land, and was unable to say anybody had ever made any use of the strip of land at any time during that period, but refused to admit that the railway company had done so. On the contrary, he denied that they mowed it and kept it clean. Though positively denying this in one part of his testimony, he says in another it did not do so to his knowledge, and he does not think it did. As to the location of the telegraph poles, he said, "I think some are on one side and some on another" (speaking of the fence). Having shown his ownership of the Morris land, subject to the right of way granted, he proved by the testimony of a civil engineer that it is possible to build a double-track railroad on 29 feet of ground. This witness was interrogated as to whether that would be sufficient for telegraph lines and side tracks, and he said, "No, I didn't say that; simply for the railroad tracks." When asked what would be a reasonable, necessary, and proper right of way for a double-track railroad, he said, "I could not tell that." Additional testimony of his on cross-examination shows that he did not mean to say 29 feet was a sufficient right of way for a double-track railway with "the privileges and immunities necessary and requisite for the construction, use, and enjoyment of the same."

The evidence adduced by the defendant tended very strongly to show its dominion over the strip of land for a long period of time. W. S. Spencer, roadmaster of the defendant for a period of about 15 years, ending in 1905, said that part of the road involved here was under his supervision, and he kept the grass mowed on it during all of that time, and that the fence had been built between it and the county road by the railway company in 1893 or 1894. He said the strip was kept clean by the company clear out to the county road, prior to the building of the fence. On cross-examination he was unable to give the dates on which he had seen the men under his control working on the strip, but he was positive he had been there with them. He states emphatically he had been there and seen the men at work and seen the fence and telegraph poles. He instances one particular occasion on which he was with the men and tells what they did. He declares positively that he was there on other occasions and saw them at work, and further that it was his custom to visit them on the line at least once a week. J. W. Brightwell, foreman of carpenters for the railway company for more than 19 years, says he built that fence for the railway company in the spring of 1893, and that there was no evidence upon the ground then of the existence of a prior fence at that place. This evidence was supplemented by the testimony of J. P. Nelson and C. W. Johns, civil engineers and employes of the defendant company, tending to show necessity for the use, by the defendant in the operation of its road, of all the land occupied by its tracks and the residue of the strip between the road and the county road and even more.

[1] The court, in the instructions given and its rulings upon requests for instructions not given wholly ignored the theory of a definition or establishment of the width of the right of way by the conduct of the parties, or, in other words, by practical construction of the grant. Defendant's instruction No. 2 embodying this theory, was refused. The grant being general and indefinite in its terms, the rule of practical construction is obviously applicable. The acts and conduct of both parties prior and subsequent to the grant may be considered for the purpose of ascertaining their intention. Bigelow, judge, said in Jennison v. Walker, 11 Gray (Mass.) 423: "This rule rests on the principle that where the terms of a grant are general or indefinite, so that its construction is uncertain and ambiguous, the acts of the parties, contemporaneous with the grant, giving a practical construction to it, shall be deemed to be a just exposition of the intent of the parties." In Bannon v. Angier, 2 Allen (Mass.) 128, the same judge said: "Where a right of way or other easement is granted by deed without fixed and defined limits, the practical location and use of such way or easement by the grantee under his deed, acquiesced in by the grantor at the time of the grant and for a long time subsequent thereto, operate as an assignment of the right and are deemed to be that which was intended to be conveyed by the deed and are the same, in legal effect, as if it had been fully described by the terms of the grant." This principle or rule was applied in Onthank v. Railroad Co., 71 N. Y. 194, 27 Am. Rep. 35. In Indianapolis, etc., Co. v. Lewis, 119 Ind. 218, 21 N. E. 660, involving the grant of a right of way over certain land, without any specification as to the width of the way thereby conveyed, Coffey, judge, said: "But in a case like this, where the grant of the right of way does not fix its width, the declarations and acts of the parties are admissible in evidence to fix such width." The proposition has been stated in these words: "What shall constitute a right of way for a railroad is not defined by law, but, like any other easement, it is a subject of contract, and when the contract, as to the width of the right of way, is general or ambiguous, the intention of the parties may be shown by parol evidence of their contemporaneous acts and declarations." Railroad Co. v. Reynolds, 116 Ind. 356, 19 N. E. 141. See, also, Prather v. Telegraph Co., 89 Ind. 501; Railway Co. v. Rayl, 69 Ind. 424; Railroad Co. v. Reynolds, 116 Ind. 356, 19 N. E. 141. Much additional authority might be cited, but enough has been given to show the application of a well-settled rule or principle of law to cases of this kind.

Defendant's instruction No. 2, refused by the court and, in our opinion, aptly framed to submit this theory of the case, reads as follows: "The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company in 1869 acquired from J. & B. Morris a right of way for a double-track railway with all the privileges and immunities necessary and requisite for the construction, use, and enjoyment of the same, and under said deed took possession of the land in controversy, and exercised the privileges and ownership over the same, and have had it fenced for 16 years, then they should find for the defendant."

Lack of evidence of agreement upon the width of the right of way by conduct at the date of the deed or construction of the road is urged as an objection to the application of the rule, but the determining conduct need not go back to the date of the contract. Sometimes it does, and its legal effect is then often called contemporaneous construction, but the effect of the conduct of the parties to an indefinite or ambiguous contract is frequently termed "practical construction," and these words cover both contemporaneous and subsequent conduct. Beach on the Modern Law of Contracts says at section 721: "The subsequent acts are admitted to show how the parties understood their contract and are a practical construction of it." The rule was so understood and applied in Camden v. McCoy, 48 W. Va. 377, 37 S. E. 637: "Practical construction of contracts is that given to agreements by the parties themselves by acts subsequently done with reference to the contracts. To such exposition of contracts the courts pay high regard and will effectuate it if they can do so consistently with the rules of law." Clark v. Sayers & Lambert, 55 W. Va. 512, 47 S. E. 312. Indeed, it seems that conduct under a contract by the parties thereto must of necessity be subsequent to the date thereof.

Contemporaneous conduct is not necessarily coincident with the date of the contract. The conduct may be subsequent and yet contemporaneous with the operation of the contract. In the light of these authorities, the objection is wholly untenable, and the instruction should have been given. The plaintiff failed to show the slightest objection to the defendant's dominion of the strip of land in controversy at any time within the long period of its duration. Such acquiescence on his part and that of his predecessors is conduct showing their understanding and interpretation of the grant and is legally binding upon them.

[2] The side track is within the area thus defined as the right of way. The construction thereof involves no enlargement of the easement. Hence the authorities cited against right of enlargement are inapplicable.

The evidence clearly and strongly tending to show definition and establishment of the limits of the right of way was unopposed by any adduced by the plaintiff, as will appear from the statement hereinbefore given. As a basis for a verdict in his favor, he relied altogether upon his title to the land, subject to the granted easement, and proof of the possibility of the maintenance and operation of a double-track railroad, without any privileges or conveniences, side tracks, telegraph lines, signal towers, or anything other than the mere tracks, upon a 20-foot right of way. He offered nothing at all in opposition to the evidence tending to show his acquiescence and that of his predecessors in the claim of the railway company to the strip in controversy as a part of its right of way under the grant in the deed. Hence the evidence of the defendant as to the establishment of the boundary or limits of the right of way by conduct was wholly unopposed and uncontradicted. It was clearly sufficient to sustain a verdict and of such volume and force as to render a verdict in favor of the plaintiff untenable and unjustifiable. In view of this situation, the defendant asked the court to give an instruction prepared and designated as No. 1, requiring the jury to find for the defendant, which the court refused. In so doing, it clearly erred. It is the duty of the trial court, when the evidence of the plaintiff is insufficient to sustain a verdict in his favor, or when a verdict in his favor would be contrary to the law and the evidence, to direct a verdict in favor of the defendant, if requested so to do. Hoge v. Railroad Co., 35 W. Va. 562, 14 S. E. 162; Knight v. Cooper, 36 W. Va. 232, 14 S. E. 999; Cobb v. Lumber Co., 57 W. Va. 49, 49 S. E. 1005, 110 Am. St. Rep. 734; White v. Brewing Co., 51 W. Va. 259, 41 S. E. 180. For the like reason, if the court had given defendant's instructions Nos. 1 and 2, and the jury had then found for the plaintiff, the verdict should have been set aside.

For the errors noted, the judgment will be reversed, the verdict set aside, and the case remanded for a new trial.

ROBINSON, J. (dissenting). The evidence, and the law of the case, do not justify such an extension of the grant as the majority opinion upholds. The judgment should be affirmed.

DOUTHIT v. CITY OF BLUE RIDGE.

(No. 5,047.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 642*)—VIOLATIONS OF ORDINANCES—PROSECUTION—CERTIORARI.

The writ of certiorari lies to review in the superior court the judgment of any inferior judiciary of this state; and this includes any municipal or mayor's court. See Moore v. Winder, 10 Ga. App. 385, 386, 73 S. E. 529.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1412-1415; Dec. Dig. § 642.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 642*)—VIOLATIONS OF ORDINANCES—CERTIORARI—INSUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The facts set forth in the answer of the magistrate showing that the ordinance of the municipality which the accused had been charged with violating had not been violated, the judgment of conviction was unauthorized by law, and the writ of certiorari should have been sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1412-1415; Dec. Dig. § 642.*]

Error from Superior Court, Fannin County; H. L. Patterson, Judge.

Thomas Douthit was convicted of violating an ordinance of the City of Blue Ridge. From a judgment overruling a writ of certiorari, he brings error. Reversed.

Wm. Butt and B. L. Smith, both of Blue Ridge, for plaintiff in error. Thos. A. Brown, of Blue Ridge, for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment reversed.

WIMBISH v. STATE. (No. 5,091.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 218*)—DYING DECLARATIONS.

The trial judge admitted the following statement made by the decedent as being prima facie a dying declaration: "He seemed to be conscious. He said that he could not live, and after he said that he called Ollis [the accused], and some one asked him what did he want, and he told Ollis to act fair with him, that he had promised to kill him, and if he had known that he was going to kill him he would have begged him not to do it." Held, there was no error in permitting this statement to go to the jury, with the instruction that it might be considered by them for the purpose of determining whether it was a dying declaration; the jury being clearly instructed as to what constituted a dying declaration, especially as the accused admitted on the trial that he had killed the decedent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 458, 459; Dec. Dig. § 218.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 319*)—NEW TRIAL — NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

The alleged newly discovered testimony was both negative and cumulative in character, its purpose being to show that the decedent did not make a dying declaration; and since the accused admitted on the trial that he shot the decedent and killed him, and set up self-defense, it is not probable that this evidence would produce a different result on a second trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 319.*]

3. VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.

The theory of voluntary manslaughter is supported by some of the evidence, and the verdict of that offense, approved by the trial judge, will not be disturbed.

Error from Superior Court, Sumter County; Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

Ollis Wimble was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, and brings error. Affirmed.

L. J. Blalock, of Americus, for plaintiff in error. J. R. Williams, Sol. Gen., of Americus, for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

MEEKS v. STATE. (No. 5,090.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 938*)—NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS.

There was but one witness for the state. He testified that the offense was committed in the presence of a person who at the time of the trial was not in the city where the case was being tried, and who lived 18 miles in the country. After verdict, a motion for a new trial was made on the ground of newly discovered evidence. The affidavit of the person mentioned by the state's witness was presented, and contained a statement that he was present on the occasion referred to by the witness, was with the accused during all the time claimed by the state's witness, and had ample opportunity of knowing whether the offense was committed at the time and place testified to, and that the accused did not commit the offense with which he was charged. This witness was properly vouched for, and there were also affidavits of the accused and of his counsel that they did not know, until after the testimony of the state's witness had been introduced, that the state would claim that the offense was committed in the presence of the person mentioned by the state's witness, and that the testimony of this person could not be obtained before the case was concluded, by reason of the fact that he was 18 miles in the country. Held, that in view of the fact that the father of the state's witness, who was a minor, was actively aiding the prosecution, and that the son's testimony was the only evidence against the accused, a new trial should have been granted, in order that the accused might have the benefit of the testimony of the person whose affidavit was presented on the hearing of the motion for a new trial. Williams v. State, 11 Ga. App. 21, 74 S. E. 448.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2306-2315, 2317; Dec. Dig. § 938.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Error from City Court of Carrollton; James Beall, Judge.

A. J. Meeks was convicted of crime, and brings error. Reversed.

H. C. Strickland and R. W. Adamson, both of Carrollton, for plaintiff in error. O. R. Rook, Sol., of Carrollton, for the State.

POTTLER, J. Judgment reversed.

SANDERS v. STATE (No. 5,094.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

PREJUDICIAL ERROR—EVIDENCE.

There was no material or prejudicial error in the rulings of the trial judge in the admission of the testimony objected to on any of the grounds urged thereto, and the evidence fully authorized the verdict.

Error from Superior Court, Hart County; D. W. Meadow, Judge.

Henry Sanders was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

A. A. McCurry and A. S. Skelton, both of Hartwell, for plaintiff in error. Thos. J. Brown, Sol. Gen., of Elberton, and A. G. & Julian McCurry, of Hartwell, for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

FLANNIGAN v. STATE (No. 5,185.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

While the evidence was circumstantial, and not conclusive as to the guilt of the accused, the proved facts and circumstances were sufficient to authorize the conviction.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 782*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

The following instruction to the jury was not erroneous: "The object of legal investigation is not the ascertainment of truth to an absolute or mathematical certainty. Mathematical or absolute certainty is not within the range of legal investigation."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1847, 1849, 1851, 1852, 1877, 1878, 1880-1882, 1906, 1907, 1909-1911, 1960, 1966, 1967; Dec. Dig. § 782.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 552*)—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

There was no error in the following charge to the jury: "In order to warrant a conviction upon indirect or circumstantial evidence, the proved facts must not only be consistent with the hypothesis of guilt, but must be inconsistent with every other reasonable hypothesis, save that of the guilt of the accused."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1257, 1259-1262; Dec. Dig. § 552.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 809*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

The following charge was free from error: "When you have reached a conviction under the evidence in this case, and under the principles of law controlling in this case, of the truth of the case, it is the duty of the jury to write that in their verdict. Let that verdict reflect the truth of the case as revealed by the evidence, and under the principles of law controlling and governing the case." The use of the word "conviction," taken in connection with the context, could not have misled the jury into the belief that the presiding judge had reference to the conviction of the accused, rather than to the conviction of the minds of the jury after the consideration of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1961-1967; Dec. Dig. § 809.*]

Error from Superior Court, Ben Hill County; W. F. George, Judge.

W. A. Flannigan was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

D. B. Nicholson, of Rochelle, and Wilson, Bennett & Lambdin, of Waycross, for plaintiff in error. Jos. B. Wall, Sol. Gen., of Fitzgerald, for the State.

POTTLER, J. Judgment affirmed.

DAWSON v. STATE (No. 5,141.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 923*)—NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS.

"Relationship within the prohibited degrees of a juror to the defendant in a criminal case, although unknown to the defendant and his counsel until after the verdict, is not sufficient ground to set aside the verdict on a motion for new trial." Sikes v. State, 105 Ga. 592, 31 S. E. 567, following Wright v. Smith, 104 Ga. 174, 30 S. E. 651.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2225-2237; Dec. Dig. § 923.*]

Error from Superior Court, Bryan County; W. W. Sheppard, Judge.

Thomas Dawson was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

J. H. Smith, of Eden, for plaintiff in error. W. G. Warnell, of Hagan, and N. J. Norman, Sol. Gen., of Savannah, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

CAMERON v. STATE (No. 5,121.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REPETITION.

The written request to charge was pertinent and material to the contention of the accused. The entire charge is not in the record; but the trial judge, in his order overruling the motion for a new trial, states that he submitted to the jury the contentions of the accused embraced in the written request, and incorporated in his order the substance of his instructions on the contentions covered by the request, and an examination of these instructions shows that they clearly covered the substance of the written request.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

2. REVIEW ON APPEAL.

No other error of law, except as above stated, being complained of, and the verdict being supported by the evidence, the judgment must be affirmed.

Error from City Court of La Grange; Frank Harwell, Judge.

Preston Cameron was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Mooty & Andrews, of La Grange, for plaintiff in error. Henry Reeves, Sol., of La Grange, for the State.

HILL, C. J. Affirmed.

GREER v. STATE. (No. 5,222.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 236*)—PROSECUTION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Upon the trial of one for selling intoxicating liquor, testimony that the person to whom the liquor is alleged to have been sold went to the home of the accused and got a pint of whisky "from him and his wife," and thereupon laid 75 cents on the table in the room and went away, is sufficient to authorize a conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 300-322; Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

Error from City Court of Jackson; H. M. Fletcher, Judge.

Lum Greer was convicted of violating the prohibition law, and brings error. Affirmed.

J. T. Moore, of Jackson, for plaintiff in error. C. L. Redman, Sol., of Jackson, for the State.

POTTLE, J. Judgment affirmed.

ROSS v. STATE. (No. 5,109.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 109*)—CONJUNCTIVE ALLEGATIONS—SPECIAL DEMURRER.

The accusation contained two counts. The first count charged generally the selling of intoxicating liquors. The second count charged the accused with having furnished liquor to Clarence Hogan, a minor, without first securing the written authority of the "parent and guardian" of said Clarence Hogan. The accused filed a special demurrer to the second count of the indictment, on the ground that the words "parent and guardian" were used, instead of the words "parent or guardian." The court overruled the demurrer. Held no error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 289-294; Dec. Dig. § 109.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1160*)—WRIT OF ERROR—REVIEW—VERDICT.

There was some evidence to support both counts of the indictment, although not entirely satisfactory; but, since the trial judge approved the verdict, this court will not interfere.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3084; Dec. Dig. § 1160.*]

Error from Superior Court, Gordon County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

James Ross was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

J. M. Lang, of Calhoun, for plaintiff in error. Sam P. Maddox, Sol. Gen., of Dalton, for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

HESTER v. STATE. (No. 5,102.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1151*)—APPEAL—DISCRETIONARY RULING.

Where a motion is made to continue the trial of a case because of the absence of a witness, and the state makes a countershowing as to the alleged testimony of the absent witness, this court will not interfere with the discretion of the trial judge in overruling the motion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3045-3049; Dec. Dig. § 1151.*]

Error from City Court of Quitman; Wm. H. Long, Judge.

J. M. Hester was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

J. D. Wade and Grover C. Edmondson, both of Quitman, for plaintiff in error. J. E. Morris, Jr., Sol., and M. Baum, both of Quitman, for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

FORTSON v. STATE. (No. 5,189.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 178*)—TRIAL—NOLLE PROSEQUI—"SUBMITTED."

A nolle prosequi may, without the consent of the accused, be entered at any time before the case has been submitted to the jury. Pen. Code, § 982. A case is not submitted to a jury, within the meaning of this section, until after the jury have been impaneled and sworn in the cause. Newson v. State, 2 Ga. 60; Franklin v. State, 85 Ga. 570, 11 S. E. 876; Nolan v. State, 55 Ga. 521, 21 Am. Rep. 281.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 326-329; Dec. Dig. § 178.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 6719, 6720.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 178*)—TRIAL—NOLLE PROSEQUI.

It appearing, from the allegations of the special plea in bar in the present case, that although the jury had been stricken and had taken their seats in the jury box, they had not been sworn, the plea was properly stricken on motion. Whether jeopardy begins immediately after the jury are sworn is not decided. The evidence authorized the verdict, and there was no error in overruling the motion for a new trial, which was based solely upon the ground that the verdict was contrary to the law and the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 326-329; Dec. Dig. § 178.*]

Error from City Court of Elberton; Geo. C. Grogan, Judge.

Joe Fortson was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Pulliam Proffitt, of Elberton, for plaintiff in error. Boozer Payne, Sol., and R. J. Ward, both of Elberton, for the State.

POTTLE, J. Judgment affirmed.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

Rosa Davis was convicted of violating a municipal ordinance, and from an order of the superior court, denying a writ of certiorari, she brings error. Affirmed.

Morris Macks, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error. J. L. Mayson and W. D. Ellis, Jr., both of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

SPICER v. STATE. (No. 5,172.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

No error of law being assigned, and the evidence authorizing the conviction of the accused, the trial judge did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 236*)—PROSECUTION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence to the effect that the accused was seen to hand to the person named in the indictment as the purchaser of intoxicants a bottle, which was shortly thereafter obtained from the latter, and which contained whisky, and received in return, from the party to whom the bottle was handed, something which the witness could not see, but which was placed in the pocket of the recipient, is sufficient to support the inference that the person who parted with the bottle of whisky received, either by way of sale or barter, sufficient consideration to authorize a conviction of a violation of the general prohibition law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 300-322; Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

Error from Superior Court, Mitchell County; Frank Park, Judge.

Arthur Spicer was convicted of violating the prohibition law, and brings error. Affirmed.

E. E. Cox, R. L. Cox, and J. M. Mayo, Jr., all of Camilla, for plaintiff in error. R. C. Bell, Sol. Gen., of Cairo, and Little, Powell, Hooper & Goldstein, of Atlanta, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

DAVIS v. CITY OF ATLANTA. (No. 5,148.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1158*)—WRIT OF HABEAS—DENIAL OF PETITION FOR CERTIORARI.

The plaintiff in error was convicted by the recorder of the city of Atlanta of a violation of a municipal ordinance which makes it an offense to have on hand intoxicating liquors for the purpose of illegal sale. The petition for certiorari contained no assignment of error of law, except the general assignment that the conviction was without evidence to support it. There was some evidence to support the finding of the recorder, and this court will not disturb the judgment of the superior court in refusing to sanction the petition for certiorari.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3061-3066, 3070, 3071, 3074; Dec. Dig. § 1158.*]

CRONIN v. STATE. (No. 5,087.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 146*)—OFFENSE—SOCIAL CLUBS.

On the trial of an indictment containing two counts, the first charging the accused with the offense of selling intoxicating liquors, and the second with keeping intoxicating liquors on hand at his place of business, where the defense relied upon was that he kept the liquors at a social club and furnished same to members thereof, and had paid to the state the license tax of $500, the following excerpt from the charge of the court is not only not erroneous, but clearly states the law applicable to that issue: "I charge you that that statute [referring to the tax act of 1906 as to clubs (Civil Code, § 983)] does not permit any club, organization, or association to sell or barter, for a valuable consideration, alcoholic, spirituous, or intoxicating liquors. That statute does permit an organization or club, or an association, either as an entity, as a corporation, or as a body of men, or as individuals, to keep on hand at the place selected by them, for the use of the members, alcoholic, spirituous, or intoxicating liquors, upon the payment of the license tax required by the General Assembly. But I charge you that the liquor so kept on hand, for such club, organization, or association, must belong to the club, association, or organization, either as a body, or to the individual members composing such club, association, or organization; and it is a violation of the law for such club, association, or organization, or any individual member thereof, to sell or barter, for a valuable consideration, alcoholic, spirituous, or intoxicating liquors." Union & Mechanics' Club v. Atlanta, 136 Ga. 721, 71 S. E. 1060.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 159, 160, 163; Dec. Dig. § 146.*]

2. INSTRUCTIONS.

The instructions objected to, when considered in connection with the entire charge of the court, are without material error.

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 878*)—VERDICT—SEPARATE COUNTS.

The evidence demanded a conviction on both counts of the indictment. The general verdict of guilty was therefore proper, and, if any error of law was committed, it was wholly immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2068-2101; Dec. Dig. § 878.*]

Error from City Court of Macon; Robt. Hodges, Judge.

J. P. Cronin was convicted of violating the prohibition law, and brings error. Affirmed.

John R. Cooper, of Macon, for plaintiff in error. Jno. P. Ross, Sol. Gen., of Macon, for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

BUGG v. STATE.

WYATT v. SAME.

(Nos. 5,163, 5,164.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 955*) — NEW TRIAL — BRIEF OF EVIDENCE.

There is no law that requires one moving for a new trial to make up a brief of the evidence from the official stenographer's report; and, when the movant's counsel presents a brief of the evidence for the approval of the court, it is for the judge to approve or reject it, and it is immaterial whether counsel for the opposite party agrees to the brief, or can recollect the testimony, or approves the statement thereof. "The law does not require the approval of the brief of evidence by opposing counsel. He has nothing to do with it. The law requires the brief to be approved by the trial judge only." Price v. High, 108 Ga. 149, 38 S. E. 957.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2368-2372; Dec. Dig. § 955.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 955*) — NEW TRIAL — BRIEF OF EVIDENCE.

On presentation of an incorrect brief of evidence, the trial judge may require that it be corrected, and upon the movant's failure or refusal to correct it the judge may refuse to approve it, but before refusing on the ground that the brief is incorrect, he should first call attention to the particulars in which it is incorrect and afford the movant an opportunity to correct it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2368-2372; Dec. Dig. § 955.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 955*) — NEW TRIAL — BRIEF OF EVIDENCE.

The trial judge may, for himself, require the notes of the official stenographer to be written out at the public expense, for comparison with the brief of evidence as presented by the movant for a new trial, and to aid in refreshing the court's recollection of the testimony, but he has no power to require the movant to make up a brief of evidence from the report of the official stenographer, or to produce the report, or a copy of it, to be used in verifying the brief.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2368-2372; Dec. Dig. § 955.*]

Error from Superior Court, Morgan County; J. B. Park, Judge.

Willie Bugg and Martin Wyatt were convicted of selling crops under mortgage liens, and bring error. Reversed.

M. C. Few, of Madison, for plaintiffs in error. Jos. E. Pottle, Sol. Gen., of Milledgeville, and A. G. Foster, Sol., of Madison, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The point presented in these cases is very similar to that involved in McConnell v. State, 8 Ga. App. 394, 69 S. E. 120. The defendants in the court below were convicted of a misdemeanor—selling crops that were under mortgage liens—and, though the two cases do not involve the same transaction, the cases can properly be considered together, because each relates to the dismissal of the defendant's motion for a new trial. Both defendants moved for a new trial July 15, 1913, and the hearing was set for July 21st. The motions were regularly continued until July 28th, and then by consent were continued until August 1st, on which date they were taken up for hearing. As appears from the order of the trial judge, the continuances were granted for the purpose of affording counsel for the movant time to prepare and present a brief of the evidence. At the hearing counsel for the movants presented in each case what appears to be a quite full brief of the evidence, but the judge declined to approve either brief, and, upon motion of the state's counsel, dismissed the two motions for new trial. The movants sought to have this judgment reviewed by certiorari, but the judge of the superior court refused to sanction the petition in either case, and exception is taken to the refusal to sanction.

[1] We think that the judge of the superior court should in each case have sanctioned the certiorari upon the allegations of the petition with reference to the dismissal of the motion for new trial upon the ground that the movant had failed to present a correct brief of the evidence. It is true that in the case of Bugg the reason for the dismissal does not so plainly appear from the order of the judge as in the case of Wyatt; but the reason for the dismissal is made equally plain by the averments of the petition, and these must be accepted by the judge of the superior court as true until the coming in of the answer. Linder v. Renfro, 1 Ga. App. 58, 57 S. E. 975. In Wyatt's Case the order of the judge is quoted as follows: "The within motion for a new trial having been set for hearing on the 21st day of July, 1913, and, there being no brief of evidence by counsel in this case on said date, the hearing of this motion was continued by consent of counsel until July 28th, for the purpose of preparing and presenting a brief of evidence in said case, and for the same reason the said motion was not heard on July 28th. The same came on this date to be heard by consent of parties. There being no correct brief of evidence presented by counsel for movant, it appearing that the case had been reported by the official stenographer of this court and no effort had been made by movant's attorney to get a brief of evidence based on said report, on motion of the solicitor of this court this motion is dismissed on the grounds that no correct brief of evidence is presented or made in this case, and no such brief as he could agree to had been presented. This August 1, 1913. K. S. Anderson, Judge city court of Madison."

[2, §] From this order, as well as from the recitals of the petition for certiorari and the assignments of error contained therein, it is plain that the trial judge dismissed the motion for new trial because counsel for movant had not procured a transcript of the stenographic report of the official stenographer, and because for this reason the solicitor of the city court would not agree to the brief of the evidence as presented by counsel for the movant. It does not appear, from the petition for certiorari, that the judge of the city court could not remember the testimony, and for this reason was unable to correct the brief, nor does it appear that the court called the attention of the movant's counsel to those particulars wherein the brief of evidence was incorrect, and that counsel refused to correct it in accordance with the recollection of the court. If the judge had stated in the order that he was unable to remember the testimony delivered on the trial (Martin v. Mendel, 10 Ga. App. 417, 73 S. E. 620), or even if he had stopped with the statement that he declined to approve the brief because it was incorrect, nothing would be presented for review. It seems plain to us, however, from a reading of the order that the dismissal of the motion was based upon the fact that the solicitor of the city court would not agree to the brief as presented, and the movant's counsel had not procured a transcript of the stenographic report of the official stenographer. As was held by the Supreme Court in Price v. High, 108 Ga. 149, 33 S. E. 957: "The law does not require the approval of the brief of evidence by opposing counsel. He has nothing to do with it. The law requires the brief to be approved by the trial judge only. It may be necessary for him to have the full stenographic report written out, in order to ascertain whether the material evidence is all embraced in the brief of evidence presented to him. This he can require. Central R. Co. v. Robertson, 92 Ga. 741, 18 S. E. 986. If a brief of evidence containing only the material facts should be presented to a trial judge, and he refuse to approve it, a bill of exceptions would lie to this refusal." In Central R. Co. v. Robertson, supra, as in other cases, it was held that the judge has no power to require the party moving for a new trial, or his counsel, to make up a brief of evidence from the official stenographer's report, or to produce the report, or a copy of it, to be used in verifying the brief.

The real question, when a brief of evidence is presented within the time allowed by the court for that purpose, is whether the brief is a correct statement of the material testimony delivered upon the trial. If it is, it should be approved, regardless of the views of the opposing counsel. If it is not correct the judge should point out to counsel for the movant those particulars wherein it is incorrect or defective, and afford an opportunity for the correction required by the court. It would not be fair to the movant to state in a general way that the brief is incorrect, without pointing out wherein it is incorrect. Of course, if counsel declines to make the required corrections, the court should refuse to approve the brief, unless, by reason of the fact that the court's recollection has been refreshed, the court remembers the fact in question to be as stated by counsel for the movant; and, of course, in cases like those of Martin v. Mendel, 10 Ga. App. 417, 73 S. E. 620, Williams v. Johnston, 94 Ga. 722, 19 S. E. 888, Anderson v. McLean, 94 Ga. 798, 22 S. E. 302, and Gwinn v. Almand, 110 Ga. 318, 35 S. E. 150, where by reason of lapse of time the judge is unable to remember the testimony, he may properly decline to approve the brief of evidence as presented; and in such a case dismissal of the motion for a new trial would follow. In McConnell v. State, 8 Ga. App. 396, 69 S. E. 121, this court said: "Refusal to approve the brief which had been filed and presented for approval by the attorney for the movant within the prescribed time, because the brief as presented and filed was incorrect, was not fair to the movant's counsel, unless his attention had been called to the particulars in which the brief was incorrect and an opportunity given him to make the correction. In no case is it the duty of counsel for the movant to present the stenographer's report of the evidence. He was not required by law to do so, and the judge had no power to require the movant to make up the brief of evidence from an official stenographic report, or to produce the report or a copy of it, to be used in verifying the brief. Central R. Co. v. Robertson, 92 Ga. 741, 18 S. E. 986. If the judge had deemed it necessary to have a full stenographic report written out to aid him in ascertaining whether all the material evidence was embraced in the brief as presented to him, he could have required it. Price v. High, 108 Ga. 145, 33 S. E. 956. But he certainly could not dismiss the motion because the brief of evidence was not made up from the official stenographer's report. We think that the court should not have dismissed the motion for a new trial for the reasons stated in his order; but, on the contrary, there should have been some effort made on his part to correct and approve the brief as filed and presented by the movant."

Judgment reversed.

HALL v. STUDEBAKER CORPORATION OF AMERICA. (No. 4941.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 23, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SALES (§ 445*)—BREACH OF WARRANTY—ACTION—NONSUIT.

The plaintiff having made out a prima facie case by the introduction of evidence supporting the allegations in his petition, the court erred in granting a nonsuit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1303-1308; Dec. Dig. § 445.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

2. SALES (§ 437*)—"EXECUTION" OF CONTRACT—EFFECT OF ADMISSION.

Where the defendant in an action for breach of a contract of warranty of an automobile admitted the "execution" of the contract, this was an admission of the doing of acts necessary to carry its purpose into effect and left plaintiff with the necessity of proving merely a breach and damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1248-1257; Dec. Dig. § 437.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2558-2561.]

Pottle, J., dissenting.

Error from City Court of Macon; Robt. Hodges, Judge.

Action by T. M. Hall against the Studebaker Corporation of America. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Sibley & Sibley, of Milledgeville, and A. L. Dasher, of Macon, for plaintiff in error. Hatcher & Smith, of Macon, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. Suit was brought in the city court of Macon against the Studebaker corporation of America for damages for an alleged breach of a contract of guaranty of an automobile. Upon the trial, after the introduction of evidence by the plaintiff, a nonsuit was granted. To this judgment he excepted.

[1] The plaintiff's petition contained substantially the following allegations: That the defendant was a nonresident corporation with an agent in Bibb county, Ga., to wit, the firm of Willingham & Wheeler, composed of E. J. Willingham, Jr., and J. C. Wheeler; that on June 24, 1911, plaintiff purchased of the defendant an automobile "known as an E. M. F. Roadster 30, and paid the full purchase price therefor," and at the time of purchase the defendant executed to the plaintiff the following contract of guaranty: "The Studebaker Corporation, E. M. F. Factories, Manufacturers of Automobiles. Certificate No. 6764, Motor No. 21447, Model E. M. F. 30. Detroit, Michigan, U. S. A. Guaranty: This is to certify that the Studebaker Corporation fully warrants and guarantees the automobile covered by this certificate for a period of one full year from the date of original sale by the dealer. This guaranty includes all material and all equipment (tires excepted) used in connection with the construction of such automobile. Tops and windshield not guaranteed unless bearing E. M. F. nameplate. If any part or parts of this car break or prove defective within one year from any cause whatsoever, and the customer shall forthwith communicate the fact to the Studebaker Corporation or one of its authorized dealers, giving the number of the car and the name of the dealer from whom the car was bought and the date of purchase, and if it shall appear that such breakage was not due to misuse, negligence, or accident, the Studebaker Corporation will furnish such new parts either at its branch house or its factory in Detroit, Mich., free of charge to the owner. This guaranty does not apply either directly or indirectly to consequential damages of any nature whatsoever, or to the replacement of tires which are guaranteed by the manufacturers thereof. The Studebaker Corporation. Walter E. Flanders, Third Vice President. Attest: James E. Spencer, Assistant Sec't."

It was alleged that within six months from the date of purchase the said automobile proved defective in the following parts: Radiator, gasoline tank, left front fender, and body—and that notice of these defects was given the defendant, in compliance with the contract, but that the defendant failed and refused to comply with its agreement and make good the defects, to petitioner's damage.

The defendant in its answer admitted its nonresidence, denied that it had an agent in the firm of Willingham & Wheeler, but averred that this firm were dealers in automobiles manufactured by the defendant, admitted the execution of the contract at the alleged date of sale, and admitted that notice under the contract was given by the plaintiff and that the defendant failed and refused to replace the parts, but denied that the plaintiff had purchased the automobile from it, averring that, if such purchase was made, it was from some firm, or dealer, or person other than the defendant. It denied liability.

The written contract set forth in the petition was introduced in evidence. On the back of it was the following indorsement: "The Studebaker Corporation, E. M. F. Factories, Manufacturers of Automobiles, Certificate of Guaranty. Certificate No. 6764. Model E. M. F. 30. Car No. ——. Owner, Dr. T. M. Hall. Address, Milledgeville, Ga. Date of sale, June 24, 1911." The plaintiff introduced evidence in support of the material allegations of the petition. Counsel agree that the ground upon which the presiding judge based his judgment of nonsuit was that the plaintiff failed to show any privity of contract between himself and the defendant in that the evidence showed that the plaintiff purchased the car from the R. H. McComb Auto Company, of Baldwin county, Ga., who was at that time a subdealer of Willingham & Wheeler, who were in turn dealers in "E. M. F." automobiles in Bibb county, Ga., and not agents of the defendant.

Conceding that this privity of contract between the McComb Auto Company and the defendant was totally lacking, nevertheless, under the construction that we place on the contract and in light of the allegations in the petition and admissions in the defendant's answer, we think the court erred in granting a nonsuit.

[2] The execution of an instrument such as is involved in the present case means the doing of all such acts as are necessary to carry into effect its purpose. And in a suit upon such a contract, when the defendant admits the execution of the instrument, the remaining elements of the case to be established by the plaintiff are its breach and consequential damages. In such a case, unless the defendant establishes some justification or excuse recognized by law, his liability is fixed. When, therefore, in the present case the defendant admitted the execution of the instrument, if, under the trial court's construction of the contract, this admission, together with the further admission in the answer that the notice required by the contract had been given (which notice was required to contain the number of the car, the name of the dealer from whom bought, and the date of the sale), did not carry with it the presumption that the sale was conducted through an authorized dealer or invoke the principle of ratification and so dispense with proof of authority in the McComb Auto Company, we are clear that these admissions did establish directly a privity or contractual relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant and left only the necessity of proof of a breach and damage to authorize the submission of the case to the jury.

It is true the plaintiff alleged in his petition that Willingham & Wheeler were agents of the defendant, but this allegation was merely for the purpose of showing the court's jurisdiction of the nonresident defendant; and, when the defendant appeared and pleaded to the merits, the allegation had completely served its purpose. Under the construction we place on the contract, the trial court having admitted evidence in support of the material allegations of the plaintiff's petition, the case should have been submitted to the jury's consideration and the court erred in granting a nonsuit.

Judgment reversed.

POTTLE, J. (dissenting). The alleged contract of guaranty upon which the suit was brought did not on its face purport to have been made with the plaintiff. It was therefore essential to the plaintiff's case that he should have shown that the guaranty was delivered to him by some authorized agent of the corporation by whom it was executed. It appears, from the evidence, that the defendant executed a written contract of sale with Willingham & Wheeler Auto Company of Macon, Ga. This contract provided that this agent of the defendant should appoint subdealers to handle the defendant's automobiles at various places within the territory covered by the contract. It was, however, expressly provided in the contract that all agreements made with subdealers should be on forms to be furnished by the defendant and upon terms satisfactory to it, and that no such agreement would be valid until the defendant had approved it in writing. The evidence shows that the plaintiff purchased the automobile from the R. H. McComb Auto Company, of Baldwin county, but in the evidence there is nothing to show that the seller was the authorized agent of the defendant or that it had been appointed a subdealer by the Willingham & Wheeler Auto Company in the manner provided for in the contract between it and the defendant. It was essential to the plaintiff's case to prove either that the person from whom he purchased the machine was an authorized agent of the defendant and had been appointed a subdealer as provided in the contract with Willingham & Wheeler Auto Company. Unless one or the other of these things appeared, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover on the contract of guaranty. Smith v. Williams, 117 Ga. 782, 45 S. E. 394, 97 Am. St. Rep. 220. The plaintiff's remedy was to proceed against the seller by an action for damages for a breach of an implied warranty, and the seller in turn might have its remedy over against the person from whom it received the machine. In the evidence introduced in behalf of the plaintiff, no privity of contract was shown between him and the defendant, and the nonsuit was properly granted.

GADLIN v. STATE. (No. 5,113.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 922*) — NEW TRIAL — FAILURE TO INSTRUCT.

The evidence as to alibi not being such as to exclude the possibility of the defendant's presence at the time of the commission of the offense, and there being no request for an instruction upon the subject, the failure to charge on the defense of alibi was not a ground for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2210-2218; Dec. Dig. § 922.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1160*)—WRIT OF ERROR —REVIEW OF VERDICT.

The remaining assignments of error are without merit, and the verdict of the jury, approved by the trial judge, will not be disturbed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3084; Dec. Dig. § 1160.*]

Error from Superior Court, Ben Hill County; W. F. George, Judge.

Joe Gadlin was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

J. A. Griffin and D. E. Griffin, both of Fitzgerald, for plaintiff in error. Jos. B. Wall, Sol. Gen., of Fitzgerald, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

HUNTER et al. v. STATE. (No. 5,085.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 824*)—LARCENY (§ 3*) —
ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE—DUTY TO INSTRUCT—REQUESTS—NECESSITY.

This case is controlled by the rulings of this court in Paulk v. State, 5 Ga. App. 572, 63 S. E. 659, Moses v. State, 8 Ga. App. 446, 69 S. E. 575, and Smith v. State, 11 Ga. App. 385, 75 S. E. 447. From the state of the evidence in the record, it was the duty of the court (without a request) to instruct the jury that, if the intention to steal was not formed until after the killing of the cow, the defendants would not be guilty of the offense of cattle stealing, and could not be convicted under the indictment. It was error to charge the jury, in effect, that although the killing was accidental, if the defendants thereafter formed the intention of converting the carcass to their own use, they would be guilty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1896-2004; Dec. Dig. § 824; * Larceny, Cent. Dig. §§ 3-10; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

Error from Superior Court, Colquitt County; W. E. Thomas, Judge.

William Hunter and others were convicted of larceny, and bring error. Reversed.

W. F. Way and Bryan & Bryan, all of Moultrie, for plaintiffs in error. J. A. Wilkes, Sol. Gen., of Moultrie, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment reversed.

CAROLIS v. CITY OF ATLANTA.
(No. 5,133.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 642*)—CERTIORARI—BOND—SUFFICIENCY.

The petition for certiorari not having attached thereto either a certified copy of the bond required by section 5192 of the Civil Code, nor a certificate of the recorder's court of the city of Atlanta that such bond had been filed and approved as required by law, and it further appearing, from the allegation in the petition in reference to the bond, that the alleged bond was not conditioned as required by law, the judge of the superior court did not err in refusing to order the issuance of a writ of certiorari in behalf of one who had been convicted in the recorder's court. Moon v. Jefferson, 10 Ga. App. 572, 73 S. E. 354; Cannon v. Americus, 11 Ga. App. 95, 74 S. E. 701.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1412-1415; Dec. Dig. § 642.*]

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

Chris Carolis was convicted in the recorder's court of the city of Atlanta. From the superior court's refusal to order the issuance of a writ of certiorari, he brings error. Affirmed.

Maddox & Sims, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error. J. L. Mayson and W. D. Ellis, Jr., both of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

SHIRLEY v. STATE. (No. 5,170.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

SALES (§ 484*)—CONDITIONAL SALES—TRANSFER OF PROPERTY.

It is a violation of section 722 of the Penal Code of 1910 for the purchaser of property on conditional sale, where title is retained by the vendor, to sell or incumber the property without the consent of the vendor and with intent to defraud him. If, however, one purchases personal property on credit, and title is not retained by the vendor, and a third person furnished the purchase money paid the vendor, and thereafter the purchaser executes to the person furnishing the money a bill of sale of the property as security for the indebtedness a subsequent sale of the property by the debtor without the consent of that person is not a violation of this section of the Code.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1365, 1433; Dec. Dig. § 484.*]

Error from Superior Court, Rabun County; J. B. Jones, Judge.

E. W. Shirley was convicted of violating Penal Code 1910, § 722, and brings error. Reversed.

W. S. Paria, of Clayton, for plaintiff in error. Robt. McMillan, Sol. Gen., of Clarks-ville, for the State.

POTTLE, J. The accused was convicted of a violation of section 722 of the Penal Code of 1910. The indictment charges that the accused, while holding personal property, to wit, a mule, under a conditional purchase and sale, by the terms of which the vendors, Dockins Bros., retained title until the payment of the purchase price, sold and incumbered the mule without the consent and approval of the said vendors and with intent to defraud them. The evidence shows that the accused purchased the mule from one Jordan, and that Dockins Bros. furnished all of the purchase price except $5, which was paid by the accused. After the purchase from Jordan, the accused executed a paper which recited that "the title to the mule bought of S. Jordan is in Dockins Bros. until paid for by E. W. Shirley." Under no view of the evidence can Dockins Bros. be regarded as "vendors" of the mule within the meaning of the section of the Code under which the indictment was framed.

ed. As expressed by one of the Dockins brothers, their firm "stood good for a mule for Mr. Shirley; bought him a mule and paid for it." Taking the evidence all together, it is apparent that title to the mule never was in Dockins Bros. prior to the execution by the accused of the paper above referred to. It is simply a case where the accused bought a mule from Jordan, and Dockins Bros. agreed with Jordan to see that the purchase price was paid. The sale of the mule after the execution of the paper by the accused to Dockins Bros., if an offense at all, is not a violation of section 722 of the Penal Code. It is only where "title is retained by the vendor" that a sale of the property by the purchaser is a violation of this section of the Code. We think, therefore, that the evidence did not authorize the conviction, and that a new trial should have been granted.

Judgment reversed.

BENJAMIN-OZBURN CO. v. MORROW TRANSFER & STORAGE CO.

(No. 4,988.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

ASSIGNMENTS (§ 23*)—CARRIERS (§ 76*)—INJURY TO GOODS—ASSIGNABILITY OF RIGHT OF ACTION—TRANSFER BY TRUSTEE IN BANKRUPTCY.

The allegations of the petition set out a cause of action arising ex contractu, relating to a right of property. This right, being a chose in action, was legally assignable, and a suit by the assignee was maintainable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments, Cent. Dig. §§ 40, 41; Dec. Dig. § 28; Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 256-271, 363; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Beld, Judge.

Action by the Benjamin-Ozburn Company against the Morrow Transfer & Storage Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Moore & Pomeroy, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error. Daniel MacDougald, of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. This case is here on exceptions to the judgment sustaining a general demurrer and dismissing the petition. The plaintiff brought suit in the city court of Atlanta, alleging substantially that the defendant was engaged in the business of common carrier and warehouseman; that the Southern Soda Water Company was the owner of described personal property of the value of $400, and employed the defendant to transfer this property and store the same in its warehouse; that the Southern Soda Water Company was adjudicated a bankrupt, and the plaintiff bought the property from the trustee in bankruptcy, under an order of the bankruptcy court, and the trustee, in pursuance of an order of court, "transferred to petitioner all of the right, title, and interest which the Southern Soda Water Company had in and to any claim for damages against the defendant herein, growing out of injury to any and all of the property herein described;" that while this property was in the possession of the defendant under its agreement to safely transport, store, and protect the same, it was broken and damaged by the defendant, and because of such damage it was utterly worthless. Damages were asked in the sum of $500; it being alleged that the property was damaged by reason of the negligence of the defendant in the handling of the same, and that the defendant was not in the exercise of ordinary care and diligence.

The trial judge treated the action as one sounding in tort, and the right of action as nonassignable, and the sole question for the determination of this court is whether the action was one ex delicto or one ex contractu. Section 3655 of the Civil Code provides that "a right of action is not assignable if it does not involve, directly or indirectly, a right of property; hence a right of action for personal torts or for injuries arising from fraud to the assignor cannot be assigned." But section 3653 of the Code provides that "all choses in action arising under contract may be assigned so as to vest the title in the assignee." Construing these two sections together, it is clear that any chose in action which arises from contract, or involves, "directly or indirectly, a right of property" may be assigned. These two sections of the Code distinguished damages to property and damages to person, and under them a right of action for damage to the person cannot be assigned, and a right of action for damage to property can be assigned. The petition in the present case does not claim any damages arising from a personal tort, or "from injuries arising from fraud to the assignor." The damages sought to be recovered arose from a breach of the contract of carriage or storage which the soda water company had made with the defendant company. The damages involved a right of property—a right to recover for any damage to the property while in the possession of the defendant, arising from its failure to exercise, as a bailee for hire or as a warehouseman, ordinary care in transporting and taking care of the property. If the soda water company had not been adjudicated a bankrupt, it would clearly have been entitled to recover from the defendant company damages for a breach of the contract. It is admitted that the trustee in bankruptcy had the right to transfer, under order of the bankruptcy court, this chose in action of the bankrupt. In our opinion it is clear that this chose in action arises upon the contract made by the soda water company with the defendant company; and section 3653 of the Code, supra, expressly declares that such a chose in action may be assigned "so as to vest the title in the assignee." In other words, the construction which we place upon the petition is that it is a suit for damages resulting from a breach of contract, and not from a tort or a failure on the part of the defendant to perform some statutory duty—although we do not intend to hold that injury which arises out of the nonperformance of some duty fixed by statute would not be assignable, unless it involved some personal tort or fraud in the assignor.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes 79 S.E.—48

Besides the view above expressed, we think the suit is maintainable under the ruling in Askew v. Southern Ry. Co., 1 Ga. App. 79, 58 S. E. 242. In that case it was held that "the transferee of a bill of lading may maintain an action ex contractu against the carrier for failure to deliver to him all or any portion of the goods specified in the bill of lading, and this is true whether the loss of the goods or the shortage occurred before or after he acquired title to the bill of lading." Askew & Company, the plaintiffs in that case, ordered from Horne & Goans, of Chattanooga, Tenn., a car load of corn. Horne & Goans shipped the corn via the Southern Railway from Chattanooga, consigned to themselves at Newnan, Ga., "order notify Askew & Co.," and sent through bank a draft on Askew & Co., with bill of lading attached. After the arrival of the corn at Newnan, Askew & Co. paid the draft and received the duly indorsed bill of lading, and the car of corn was delivered to them; but it was found that 22,306 pounds of corn had been lost in transit. Askew & Co. sued for the value of the lost corn, and the trial court dismissed the petition, on the ground that it set forth no cause of action; it being contended that, the corn having become lost before the plaintiff became owner thereof by securing the bill of lading, the right of action was in the consignor and not in the consignee. Judge Powell, speaking for this court, said: "Viewed solely as a tort, this might be correct; however, the failure to deliver the corn in accordance with the contract of carriage may be treated simply as a breach of the contract of carriage. Under the Civil Code [1895] § 3072 [Code of 1910, § 3648], 'personality to which the owner has a right of possession in the future, or a right of immediate possession, wrongfully withheld, is termed by the law a chose in action.' Under the Civil Code [1895] § 3077 [Code of 1910, § 3653], 'all choses in action arising upon contract may be assigned so as to vest the title in the assignee.' * * * Under the sections of the Code cited above, we think that upon the transfer to the plaintiffs of the bill of lading calling for the full quantity of corn, there was assigned to them the right of action for the defendant's loss or conversion of a part of it." Applying the principle in that decision to the facts alleged in the petition in the present case, when the trustee in bankruptcy transferred by assignment to the plaintiff the personal property which was in the possession of the defendant warehouseman or bailee for hire, there was also assigned to the plaintiff the right of action for any damage which had been done to the property by the defendant while it was in its possession, whether this damage occurred before or after the assignment by the trustee. See, also, in this connection, Parson v. Warfield, 6 Ga. App. 315, 65 S. E. 34.

If we entertained any doubt as to the character of the petition—whether it was one arising ex delicto or ex contractu—it would be our duty to accept that construction which would sustain the suit. Wright v. Southern Ry. Co., 7 Ga. App. 545, 67 S. E. 272; Southern Express Co. v. Pope, 5 Ga. App. 690 (2), 696, 63 S. E. 809. We are clear that the allegations of the petition plainly show that the action was one for the recovery of damages arising as the result of the breach of contract, that it related to damage to property rights, and involved no element of a personal tort, and that the learned judge erred in sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the petition.

Judgment reversed.

KEATON v. BIRMINGHAM FERTILIZER CO. (No. 5,020.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. AGRICULTURE (§ 7*)—FERTILIZER—ACTION ON PURCHASE-PRICE NOTE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where suit is brought on a note given for the purchase of commercial fertilizer, and the defense relied upon, based upon section 1774 of the Civil Code of 1910, was that the consideration in part of said note had failed because of a deficiency in the commercial value of the fertilizer for which the note was given, it is incumbent upon the defendant to establish such defense by evidence that the fertilizer was deficient in some or all of its ingredients as guaranteed and printed on the sacks, and that by reason of the deficiency the commercial value thereof had fallen 3 per cent. below its total commercial value. Cooper v. National Fertilizer Co., 132 Ga. 529, 64 S. E. 650. This deficiency in the commercial value of the fertilizer must be determined by a comparison with the official analysis of the state chemist.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Agriculture, Cent. Dig. §§ 13, 14; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

2. VERDICT SUSTAINED.

The evidence in behalf of the defendant did not show any deficiency in any of the ingredients composing the fertilizer for the purchase of which the note sued on was given, nor did it show that the actual commercial value of the fertilizer was less than 3 per cent. of its total guaranteed commercial value. A verdict for the plaintiff was therefore properly directed.

Error from City Court of Blakely; R. H. Sheffield, Judge.

Action by the Birmingham Fertilizer Company against P. H. Keaton. Judgment for plaintiff on directed verdict, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

B. R. Collins and Glessner & Park, all of Blakely, for plaintiff in error. Rambo & Wright, of Blakely, for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

POTTLE, J., disqualified.

BENTON-SHINGLER CO. v. MILLS et al.
(No. 4,886.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MORTGAGES (§ 458*)—FORECLOSURE—AFFIDAVIT OF ILLEGALITY—AMENDMENT.

An affidavit of illegality filed by a defendant in a mortgage foreclosure proceeding is amendable to the same extent as are ordinary pleas. McMichael v. Mackey, 7 Ga. App. 773, 68 S. E. 332.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 1339-1342; Dec. Dig. § 458.*]

2. PLEADING (§ 360*)—STRIKING OUT—ERROR—FORECLOSURE—AFFIDAVIT OF ILLEGALITY.

A judgment striking a defense to the foreclosure of a mortgage, upon the ground that it was filed without leave of the court and after the original affidavit of illegality had been filed, does not preclude the defendant from offering and having allowed at a subsequent term of the court an amendment to the affidavit of illegality, setting up the same defense that he sought to raise in the amendment previously stricken.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 996-1002; Dec. Dig. § 360.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1039*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ORDER.

Even if the judgment allowing a plea of suretyship is error, the error is immaterial, if upon the trial of the issue thus raised the jury find in favor of the plaintiff and against the plea of suretyship.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4075-4088; Dec. Dig. § 1039.*]

4. MORTGAGES (§ 114*)—DESCRIPTION OF DEBT—SUFFICIENCY.

In this state a mortgage must "specify the debt to secure which it is given." Civil Code 1910, § 8257. A mortgage which recites that it is given to secure the payment of a promissory note for a specified amount, and "such future advances in money, stock, merchandise, and plantation supplies" as may be made to the mortgagor by the mortgagee during a given year, is valid only as a mortgage to secure the payment of the note. Any indebtedness above the amount of the note is to be treated as an indebtedness on open account.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 223, 224, 241; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

5. PAYMENT (§ 38*)—APPLICATION—RIGHT TO DIRECT.

Where a person is indebted to another, both upon a mortgage and upon an open account, he has the right, when making a payment, to direct that the payment be applied to the mortgage, rather than to the open account.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. §§ 99-103; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

6. INSTRUCTIONS AND FINDING. APPROVED.

The evidence authorized an instruction upon the principle of law stated in the last preceding paragraph, and the finding of the jury was not without evidence to support it.

Error from City Court of Blakely; R. H. Sheffield, Judge.

Action by W. G. Mills and others against the Benton-Shingler Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Glessner & Park, of Blakely, for plaintiff in error. W. W. Wright, of Blakely, for defendants in error.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

TRUEHEART v. STATE. (No. 5,126.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 71*)—CERTAINTY.

The indictment charged the accused with embezzlement, in that, being the cashier of the Georgia Southern & Florida Railway Company, a railroad corporation under the laws of Georgia, and as such cashier being in possession of a sum of money of a specified amount, and being as such charged with the possession, safety, and care of such money, he did embezzle, steal, secrete, and fraudulently take and carry the money away. Held, the indictment was not subject to demurrer upon the ground that it was too vague and indefinite, in that it failed to allege what fund or funds the accused was charged with embezzling, from whom the funds were obtained, or on what account or accounts the funds were obtained, or how the money came into his possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 144, 174, 193, 194; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1103*)—APPEAL—BRIEF OF EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

The document transmitted with the record in this case as a brief of the evidence contains 34 typewritten pages. Eleven of the pages contain evidence set forth in extenso in narrative form, and the remainder of the document, to wit, 23 pages, is made up of questions and answers transcribed from the reporter's notes. Under repeated decisions of this court and of the Supreme Court, such a document cannot be considered as a brief of the evidence. Cotton v. Cotton, 136 Ga. 188, 70 S. E. 1015; Carlisle v. Ray, 133 Ga. 223, 65 S. E. 403; American Standard Jewelry Co. v. Goodman, 127 Ga. 543, 56 S. E. 642; Brown & Adams v. Weichselbaum Co., 9 Ga. App. 728, 72 S. E. 176.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2881-2884; Dec. Dig. § 1103.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1103*)—APPEAL—BRIEF OF EVIDENCE—NECESSITY.

None of the questions made in the motion for a new trial, which are dependent upon and require an examination of the document purporting to be a brief of the evidence, can be considered by this court. Whitaker v. State, 138 Ga. 139, 75 S. E. 254; Id., 11 Ga. App. 208 (7), 213, 75 S. E. 258.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2881-2884; Dec. Dig. § 1103.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 304*)—EVIDENCE—JUDICIAL NOTICE.

This court will take judicial cognizance of the fact that the Georgia Southern & Florida Railway Company is a corporation chartered under the laws of this state. Jackson v. State, 72 Ga. 28; Davis v. Bank of Fulton, 31 Ga. 69. Besides, the name imports a corporation. St. Cecelia's Academy v. Hardin, 78 Ga. 89, 3 S. E. 305.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 700-717, 2951½; Dec. Dig. § 304.*]

5. EMBEZZLEMENT (§ 39*)—EVIDENCE—INTENT.

It was not erroneous to instruct the jury in substance that if the accused falsified his account this would be a circumstance which might be considered by the jury in passing upon the question of criminal intent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Embezzlement, Cent. Dig. § 62; Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

6. EMBEZZLEMENT (§ 36*)—PROOF REQUIRED.

Nor was it erroneous to charge the jury that it was not essential for the state to prove specifically that the accused appropriated any of the money alleged to have been embezzled by purchasing with such money any particular article.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Embezzlement, Cent. Dig. § 60; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1103*)—APPEAL—BRIEF OF EVIDENCE—NECESSITY.

None of the other assignments of error made in the motion for a new trial can be determined without considering the evidence; and, there being no such brief of evidence as required by section 6093 of the Civil Code, the judgment must be affirmed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2881-2884; Dec. Dig. § 1103.*]

Error from Superior Court, Lowndes County; W. E. Thomas, Judge.

W. H. Trueheart was convicted of embezzlement, and brings error. Affirmed.

L. Goodloe and Dan R. Bruce, both of Valdosta, for plaintiff in error. J. A. Wilkes, Sol. Gen., of Moultrie, and M. K. Wilcox, of Valdosta, for the State.

POTTLE, J. Judgment affirmed.

MYRICK v. STATE. (No. 5,075.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. OTHER DECISION CONTROLLING.

The questions of law made in this case are controlled by the decision of this court in Myrick v. State, 79 S. E. 580.

2. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence authorized the verdict.

Error from Superior Court, Bryan County; W. W. Sheppard, Judge.

J. T. Myrick was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

J. H. Smith, of Eden, for plaintiff in error. N. J. Norman, Sol. Gen., of Savannah, for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

JENNINGS v. STATE. (No. 5,182.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

INCEST (§ 14*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

The evidence was not sufficient to authorize the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Incest, Cent. Dig. § 12; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

Error from Superior Court, Montgomery County; W. F. George, Judge.

E. J. Jennings was convicted of incest, and brings error. Reversed.

C. P. Thompson, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error. W. A. Wooten, Sol. Gen., of Eastman, for the State.

POTTLE, J. The accused was convicted of incestuous adultery with his stepdaughter. The evidence was substantially as follows: The girl was 17 or 18 years of age and had been living in the house with her mother and the accused ever since the marriage of the accused to the mother some 14 or 15 years before. Upon being informed by the mother that the girl had missed her menstrual period, the accused called upon a negro midwife, who at the time was living eight miles away from his home, and requested the woman to do something to relieve the girl, stating at the time that she had caught cold and was suffering from menstrual suppression. In response to a question by the midwife, the accused stated that the girl had missed her periods for several months. Thereupon the midwife declined to make any effort to give the girl relief. She finally, however, consented to go and make an examination and ascertain what the trouble was and see if she could do anything. On the way home the accused told the midwife that he had been accused of being the author of the girl's trouble, and that, if she did not "do something for him, the crowd would do something for him." At this time, however, he strenuously denied that he had anything to do with the girl. When they reached the house the midwife discovered that the girl was well advanced in pregnancy. The accused told her, if she did not believe what he stated about not having brought about the girl's condition, to ask the girl. Subsequently the midwife did ask the girl and she replied that "pa" brought about her condition. At the time this reply was made, the accused was in an adjoining room, near enough to have heard the conversation between the girl and the midwife, and made no denial of the accusation but turned and walked away. The midwife testified that she did not know whether the accused heard what the girl said or not, but that he was near enough to have heard it. It further appears that the girl had remained practically all the time in her stepfather's house, rarely, if ever, leaving the county. The girl was not sworn as a witness. The conviction of the accused was based entirely upon the testimony of the midwife, together with the evidence that the girl had been at his home continuously for a number of years. No evidence was introduced in behalf of the accused.

Eliminating immaterial facts, the only evidence produced against the accused consisted of the fact that he sought the services of a midwife to bring about an abortion; that he stated to the midwife that he was being charged with a crime in reference to the matter; that he endeavored at first to mislead the woman into the belief that the girl was not pregnant; that the girl charged "pa" with being the author of her shame; and that he did not then and there deny it. These facts and circumstances were not sufficient to justify the conviction. In every criminal case there is a presumption of law that the accused is innocent. Added to this, in a charge of this character, there is a natural presumption that the accused would not be guilty of an offense so heinous as the one charged in the present bill of indictment. To convict, the proof must be strong enough to exclude all reasonable doubt of the innocence of the accused and to exclude every other reasonable hypothesis save that of his guilt. The accused stated that he had always felt toward the child as if she was his own daughter. The jury had a right to disregard this statement of the accused entirely, but it accords with the natural feelings the law would presumptively ascribe to a person occupying toward the girl the position of the accused and would prevent his conviction, unless the proof came well up to the standard prescribed by law. The relation of stepfather and stepdaughter is such that intercourse between them is regarded by law as incestuous. Lipham v. State, 125 Ga. 52, 58 S. E. 817, 114 Am. St. Rep. 181, 5 Ann. Cas. 66. Incestuous adultery is a felony, and the female is regarded as an accomplice. Her uncorroborated testimony is therefore not sufficient to sustain the man's conviction. Solomon v. State, 113 Ga. 192, 38 S. E. 332; Yother v. State, 120 Ga. 204, 47 S. E. 555; Durden v. State, 120 Ga. 860, 48 S. E. 315. In the case last cited, it appeared that the female was a niece of the accused; that she visited his home for ten days; that about nine months after the visit she gave birth to a child, which, according to one witness, favored the accused. The girl testified that the accused was the father of the child. The conviction was set aside upon the ground that there was no sufficient evidence to support it. If the accused could not have been convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of his stepdaughter delivered under oath, certainly the mere hearsay testimony of another person that the girl had charged her "pa" with being the author of her shame would not alone be sufficient to justify his conviction.

It is true the jury were probably authorized to find that the accused heard the charge made by the girl and did not deny it. This is a circumstance against him, but it is by no means conclusive of his guilt. The natural feeling of horror and repulsion that one standing in the position of the accused would have had at a false accusation of this nature might well have caused him to turn and walk away in sorrow and shame without raising his voice in protest. He had previously protested his innocence to the midwife and had even suggested to her that she interrogate the girl to find out who had committed the offense. This conduct of the accused was more inconsistent with guilt than his silence was inconsistent with innocence. There were two witnesses for the state, the midwife and a white man who lived in the same community with the accused. With this last witness the accused put his character in issue, and from the lips of this witness came the statement that he had known the accused for 10 or 15 years; that his character was good; that before this charge was made nothing improper had ever been heard of by him; and that he was honest and upright. The state did not attempt to meet this testimony in reference to the good character of the accused. Where one is on trial for a despicable offense of this nature, good character is and ought to be regarded as a strong circumstance in his favor. A normal man is loath to believe that a man of the character which the accused seems to have been would deliberately bring about the ruin of his own stepdaughter whom he had taken into his home as an infant and nurtured just as if she had been his own flesh and blood. The accused may be guilty, but possibility of guilt is not enough to authorize his conviction. Where, as in the present case, the conviction is dependent largely upon circumstantial evidence, the circumstances must be inconsistent with innocence and must be so strong as to exclude every other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. The evidence in this case did not come up to the standard of proof required by law, and for this reason the verdict of guilty should have been set aside.

The point is made in the record that the venue of the offense was not proven. This point seems also to be well taken, but we do not deal with it specifically, because in our opinion the evidence was not sufficient to show that any offense at all was committed by the accused.

Judgment reversed.

RENFROE v. STATE (No. 5,100.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 865, 929*)—CORRECTION OF VERDICT.

The jury had had the case under consideration for some 18 or 20 hours, and, being unable to agree, called the sheriff and requested him to communicate with the court and ask the court either to recharge the jury or to order a mistrial. The sheriff replied: "Gentlemen, if it is a new charge you want, I am ready to go right down and submit it, but, if it is a mistrial, I would feel embarrassed to do it, because I have heard the judge say that he was conscientiously opposed to mistrials in Wilcox county. But I will submit it if you insist on it." This was all that passed between the sheriff and jury, and shortly afterward the jury returned a verdict of guilty. Upon the hearing of the motion for a new trial the facts above stated were admitted, and there were no properly identified affidavits from the jurors to the effect that they were not influenced by the conduct of the sheriff to return a verdict of guilty. Held, that a new trial should have been granted on account of this irregularity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2069, 2272-2279; Dec. Dig. §§ 865, 929.*]

Error from Superior Court, Wilcox County; W. F. George, Judge.

O. F. Renfrore was convicted of crime, and brings error. Reversed.

Haygood & Cutts, of Fitzgerald, for plaintiff in error. Jos. B. Wall, Sol. Gen., of Fitzgerald, for the State.

POTTLE, J. The general rule in this state is that before a plaintiff in error can obtain a reversal of the judgment complained of, he must show both error and injury. But the right of a party to a free, untrammelled, and impartial determination by a jury of the issues of fact involved is so sacred and so important that where misconduct of the jury has been shown, or where it appears that they have been unduly interfered with in their deliberations, injury to the losing party will be presumed. In all such cases a reversal necessarily results, unless it is affirmatively made to appear to the trial judge that the irregularity complained of resulted in no injury to the complaining party. Obear v. Gray, 68 Ga. 182; Shaw v. State, 83 Ga. 92, 9 S. E. 768; Styles v. State, 129 Ga. 425, 432, 59 S. E. 249, 12 Ann. Cas. 176; Suple v. State, 133 Ga. 801, 66 S. E. 919; Griffin v. State, 5 Ga. App. 43, 62 S. E. 685. In Smith v. State, 122 Ga. 154, 50 S. E. 62, the Chief Justice thus stated the rule: "This court, from the time of its organization to the present time, has striven to protect the purity and impartiality of jury trials; and, wherever there have been irregularities, unless fully explained and the court satisfied that the accused has not been injured, new trials have been granted. Where the misconduct of the officers and jury has been gross, this court and others have held that a new trial should be granted on account of public policy, whether the accused was injured or not." In Obear v. Gray, supra, it was held that for a bailiff in charge of a jury, apparently finding it difficult to agree, to tell them that in his opinion the judge would keep them out a week or compel them to agree was such practice as necessitated a new trial. In the present case the jury were unable to agree. Suppose the jury stood 11 to 1 for conviction. The sheriff in substance tells this one juror that he ought not to make a mistrial, because the trial judge is conscientiously opposed to granting mistrials in that county. Such a remark was calculated to unduly influence the jury, and probably did have that effect in the present case. They requested a recharge after having been out for some 18 or 20 hours, without having been recharged, and returned a verdict shortly after the remark complained of was made by the sheriff. If the trial judge had sent for the jury after they had been deliberating for some hours and apparently unable to agree, and had stated to them that they must arrive at a verdict because he was conscientiously opposed to granting mistrials in that county, clearly such conduct on the part of the judge would have amounted to coercion, and would have demanded a new trial. The sheriff was assuming to act as the mouthpiece of the judge, and in so doing improperly interfered with the deliberations of the jury. Such a practice cannot be approved, and a new trial should have been granted.

Judgment reversed.

JOHNSON v. STATE (No. 5,093.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 139*)—KEEPING LIQUORS IN PLACE OF BUSINESS.

The accused was convicted of keeping intoxicating liquors in his place of business. The evidence shows that he received a package of whisky by express and delivered it to a hackman, with instruction to take it to his residence and to deliver it to his wife. The hackman carried the whisky to the home of the accused, and, finding no one there, took it across the street and deposited it in a restaurant, which was being conducted by the accused. The accused was absent, and did not know that the hackman had not left the whisky at his residence, but had deposited it in the restaurant. About 10 minutes after the whisky was left in the restaurant, its presence was discovered by a policeman, and the accused was arrested while on his way to the restaurant from some point in the city. There was no evidence that the accused knew until after his arrest that the whisky had been placed in the restaurant. Held, that the conviction was unauthorized, and should have been set aside on motion for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 149; Dec. Dig. § 139.*]

Russell, J., dissenting.

Error from City Court of Americus; W. M. Harper, Judge.

Israel Johnson was convicted of keeping intoxicating liquors in his place of business, and brings error. Reversed.

W. T. Lane, of Americus, for plaintiff in error. Z. S. Childers, Sol., of Americus, for the State.

POTTLER, J. Judgment reversed.

RUSSELL, J., dissents.

JONES v. STATE. (No. 5,179.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

NO ERROR APPEARING.

The evidence would have authorized a conviction of assault with intent to murder. It abundantly justified the verdict of shooting at another. The charges complained of were free from substantial error. Taken as a whole, the charge was more favorable to the accused than he had any right to demand. No reason appears for reversing the judgment overruling the motion for a new trial.

Russell, J., dissenting.

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; W. G. Charlton, Judge.

Willie Jones was convicted of assault with intent to murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

Raiford Falligant and Gordon Saussy, both of Savannah, for plaintiff in error. W. C. Hartridge, Sol. Gen., of Savannah, for the State.

POTTLER, J. Judgment affirmed.

RUSSELL, J. (dissenting). Without regard to the real truth of the transaction (which the testimony of the witnesses seems to confuse rather than to clarify), I am of the opinion that the charge complained of was not adjusted to the defenses presented by the accused upon his trial, and practically eliminated his statement to the jury.

SWYGERT BROS. v. BANK OF HARALSON. (No. 5,003.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. PARTNERSHIP (§§ 48, 54*)—PROOF—SUFFICIENCY.

Partnership or no partnership is a fact which may be proved by statements or admissions of the alleged partners.

Where suit on a promissory note is brought against a partnership as the alleged maker thereof, and the defendants rely upon the defense that the person who executed the note was not in fact a member of the partnership, while the admissions of that person, made in the absence of the others, would not be sufficient evidence against them of the existence of the partnership, yet where each one of the alleged partners had admitted that he was a member of the firm, their admissions would be sufficient to prove the existence of the firm as alleged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 66, 68-73, 77, 79; Dec. Dig. §§ 48, 54.*]

2. PARTNERSHIP (§ 146*)—AUTHORITY OF PARTNERS—NOTES.

Under Civil Code 1910, §§ 8172, 8180, one member of a commercial partnership can bind it by signing its name to a promissory note under seal in the course of the business of the partnership.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 242-251, 253-255; Dec. Dig. § 146.*]

3. PARTNERSHIP (§ 54*)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—BILLS AND NOTES.

The partnership was proved as alleged in the petition, no error of law appears, and the verdict for the plaintiff was properly affirmed by the trial judge in his refusal to grant a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 77, 79; Dec. Dig. § 54.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

4. PARTNERSHIP (§ 37*)—DENIAL OF PARTNERSHIP—ACTION ON NOTE.

Where a bank made a loan, represented by two notes executed in the name of the partnership by one member thereof, in reliance upon a statement of each of the alleged partners that they were members of the firm, the partnership was estopped to deny its existence and membership in a subsequent action on the notes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 87, 92; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

5. PARTNERSHIP (§ 54*)—PROOF OF RELATION—SUFFICIENCY.

Only slight evidence is necessary to bind parties as partners in their relation to creditors; the proof required in such case being less than that required to establish the partnership inter sese.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 77, 79; Dec. Dig. § 54.*]

Error from City Court of Newnan; W. A. Post, Judge.

Action by the Bank of Haralson against Swygert Brothers. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

Hall & Jones, of Newnan, for plaintiffs in error. W. G. Post, of Newnan, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. Suit on two promissory notes purporting to have been made by Swygert Brothers was brought by the Bank of Haralson against Swygert Brothers, as a copartnership, and against A. M. Swygert, R. S. Swygert, W. A. Swygert, and S. C. Swygert, as the members of the firm. The individuals named were also sued as indorsers. The verdict was for the plaintiff, and the defendants' motion for a new trial was overruled. The case is here on exception to this judgment.

The record discloses that the controlling issue in the case is as to the existence of the partnership as alleged in the petition. Illustrating this issue, the evidence is uncon-troverted that the two notes were executed in the name of Swygert Brothers by R. S. Swygert, and that the money obtained from the bank on these notes was deposited in the bank to the credit of the firm of Swygert Brothers. The evidence indicates also that R. S. Swygert signed not only his own name, but also the names of the other alleged partners, as indorsers on the two notes; but in the view that we take of the case we do not regard the question as to liability of these parties as indorsers as material, the whole case turning on the questions whether R. S. Swygert was a member of the firm of Swygert Brothers at the time he executed the notes, and, if so, whether he was authorized by that relationship to execute the notes in the name of the partnership, and whether the individuals named in the petition as members of the firm of Swygert Brothers were in fact members of the copartnership.

[1] It appears from the record that this is the second verdict on these issues in favor of the plaintiff. If, therefore, there is any evidence in the record in support of the verdict, it will not be disturbed by this court, unless some material prejudicial error of law was committed. We might content ourselves with the statement that the evidence on the question of partnership supports the verdict; but we will briefly summarize the evidence on this point. Repeated admissions were proved to have been made by each one of the alleged copartners that he was in fact a member of the firm of Swygert Brothers. It is contended by the learned counsel for the plaintiff in error that the existence of a partnership cannot be proved by the admissions of those alleged to be members. The general rule on this subject, which seems to be well settled, is that a partnership may be proved by evidence that each and all of the alleged partners admitted its existence, but that the admissions of one defendant, made in the absence of the others, is not evidence against the others of the existence of the partnership. This rule is stated as follows in Flournoy v. Williams, 68 Ga. 707: "The sayings or admissions of one of an alleged partnership, not in the presence of the others, nor brought to their knowledge and assented to or ratified by them, are inadmissible to bind the other party, or establish the existence of the partnership" so as to bind the other parties. Now the evidence discloses that the existence of the partnership alleged does not depend upon the admission of one of the partners, but that each one of the individuals named as partners admitted on several separate occasions that he was in fact a member of the firm of Swygert Brothers. So on this point we have the statement of each one of the alleged members of this firm, admitting his relationship to the firm. In other words, the existence of the partnership was shown by evidence of admissions of each individual who was alleged to be a partner that he was in fact a member of the firm. The law being well settled that the admissions of an individual are binding upon him, it follows that, when all the alleged members of the firm admitted the existence of the partnership, the partnership was in fact proved. It is contended by learned counsel for the plaintiff in error that the law defines and establishes what constitutes a partnership, and that the existence of a partnership between given persons cannot be established by the admissions of one of them, and that his admission that he is a partner is simply his opinion, and the case of Flournoy v. Williams, supra, is relied upon as supporting this contention. As we have seen, that authority is simply to the effect that the admissions of one of the alleged partners would not be binding upon the others. The decision did not go to the extent of holding that the fact of partnership could not be proved or established by admissions. It is held, in Sankey v. Hall, 44 Ga. 229, that: "Partnership or no partnership is a fact, and a witness may so state, but the fact so stated may be qualified and explained by other facts in evidence, either from the witness or from other testimony;" and that: "The sayings of one of the partners, not expressly or by implication brought to the knowledge of the other, are no evidence against that other in an issue of partnership." Judge McCay, in discussing this point, says: "It is sometimes difficult to say what is a fact, and what is a conclusion. Half of what every man tells as facts is nothing but very certain conclusions. We think partnership or no partnership, ordinarily, may be stated as a fact." But, as above stated, it is well settled by authority that a partnership may be proved by evidence that each of the alleged partners admitted its existence and his membership. Gordon v. Bankard, 37 Ill. 147; Smith v. Collins, 115 Mass. 388; Huysser v. Lawson, 90 Mo. App. 82.

[4] The evidence is also undisputed that, in making the loan represented by the two promissory notes sued upon, the plaintiff bank relied upon the truth of the statement of each one of the alleged partners that they were in fact members of the firm. The bank, having acted upon these admissions, could have relied upon the doctrine of estoppel on this question of partnership under the principle laid down in Thornton v. McDonald, 108 Ga. 4, 33 S. E. 690; but the plaintiff is not compelled to invoke this doctrine. It can rely upon the fact of the partnership as proved by the admissions of each of the alleged members thereof. These admissions were denied by each one of the alleged partners; but this issue is foreclosed by the verdict.

[2] The partnership being proved, the question arises as to the authority of R. S. Swygert to execute the two notes sued on in the name of the partnership. One partner has the authority to bind the members of the firm within the legitimate business of the firm. This rule is predicated upon the doctrine of agency. Civil Code 1910, §§ 3172, 3180. It is not denied that the two notes, if authorized, were within the scope of the legitimate business of the firm, nor is it denied that the firm got the proceeds of the notes. While the general rule as to the authority of one partner to bind a partnership is based upon his being a general agent of the firm while acting in the general scope of the partnership business, it is insisted that the notes were under seal, and that the authority to make these notes by one of the firm should also have been under seal. The authority to bind the partnership in the execution of a promissory note arises from the relationship, and not from any express authority from the other partners. In Merchants' & Farmers' Bank v. Johnston, 130 Ga. 661, 61 S. E. 543, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 969, 14 Ann. Cas. 546, construing sections 2643, 2651, of the Civil Code of 1895 (Code of 1910, §§ 3172, 3180), it is held that: "One member of a commercial partnership can bind it by signing its name to a promissory note under seal, in the course of the business of the partnership." In discussing the question, the court says: "No restriction is made as to sealed instruments. In the making of promissory notes, printed forms are commonly used, a very large percentage of which are prepared with a view to their execution under seal; the recital that they are given under seal and the device to be used as a seal appearing on the printed form. It is a matter of common practice for such notes to be executed by one partner on behalf of the firm, often with no attention paid to the fact that the notes thus given are under seal, and without any question arising as to the power of the partner to bind the firm in so executing them. Such notes are doubtless regarded by the parties as binding obligations on the firm in whose behalf they are executed, and we think they are to be so regarded under the law, in view of the broad power given to a partner in the sections of the Code above referred to." In Griffin v. Colonial Bank, 7 Ga. App. 126, 66 S. E. 382, it is held that: "Prima facie the execution of a negotiable note in the name of the partnership by one partner is within the scope of the partnership business, and binds the firm and individual members thereof;" and in Bishop v. People's Bank of Calhoun, 7 Ga. App. 432, 67 S. E. 119, it is expressly held that: "One partner in an ordinary commercial partnership has authority to execute a promissory note under seal, binding his copartners." See, also, Fincher v. Hanson, 12 Ga. App. 612, 77 S. E. 1068.

[3, 5] Besides the direct evidence of the existence of the partnership as alleged, there are circumstances in proof upon which the jury would have been authorized to infer that R. S. Swygert, who executed these notes in the name of the partnership, was not only a member of the partnership, but was fully authorized to execute these notes. The evidence discloses that he was held out to the world by the other members of the firm as a member, the business of the firm was intrusted to him, and he executed all the notes and checks which were used by the firm in the transaction of its commercial business. The evidence shows that the individual members of the firm not only held themselves out to the world as partners, but they held out to the world the fact that R. S. Swygert was a partner of the firm, and that he was duly authorized as an agent to transact the business of the firm. As to creditors we think these facts were sufficient to bind each one of the defendants as partners, for it is a sound principle, both of law and honest commercial transactions, that only slight evidence would be necessary to bind the parties as partners in their relations to creditors, although it might require stronger proof to establish the partnership inter sese. Chaffee v. Rentfroe, 32 Ga. 477; Scranton v. Rentfroe, 29 Ga. 341.

We do not deem it necessary to discuss specifically each one of the special exceptions. We have examined them very carefully in the light of the general instructions to the jury and the evidence. While there may have been some immaterial inaccuracies in the instructions objected to, yet, when they are considered with reference to the entire charge of the court, we find no material error; on the contrary, the charge as a whole presents the issues most fully and favorably to the contentions of the defendant. As restricted by the rulings of the trial judge, there was no error in the admission of the evidence objected to. We have no hesitation in holding, after a careful consideration of the entire case, that the trial was not only fairly and ably conducted by the trial judge, but that his rulings were correct, that his instructions to the jury presented every material issue favorably to the defendant, and that the verdict in favor of the plaintiff is fully justified by the evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

HAYES v. STATE. (No. 5,076.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

TRESPASS (§§ 76, 84, 88*)—CRIMINAL LAW (§ 325*)—CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY—PRESUMPTIONS—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

A tenant who in good faith claims possession of land under one who bona fide claims title and right of possession thereof cannot be convicted of the offense of trespass. To authorize a conviction it is essential that it be shown that the alleged trespass was committed willfully and intentionally, and, for this reason, proof that the act alleged to be criminal was done in good faith is a perfect defense, and any evidence showing that the possession of the accused either originated or was continued in good faith is relevant and competent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass, Cent. Dig. §§ 166, 174, 182; Dec. Dig. § 76, 84, 88; * Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 729; Dec. Dig. § 325.*]

Error from City Court of Fitzgerald; D. E. Griffin, Judge.

J. C. Hayes was convicted of trespass, and brings error. Reversed.

H. J. Quincey, of Ocilla, and O. H. Elkins and Alex. Koplin, both of Fitzgerald, for plaintiff in error. W. H. Horne, Sol., McDonald & Grantham, and L. Kennedy, all of Fitzgerald, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The defendant in the lower court was convicted of the offense of trespass, and he excepts to the judgment refusing a new trial. The accusation charged the particular offense defined in section 216, par. 4, of the Penal Code; it being alleged that the accused did unlawfully squat and settle upon described land of M. Dixon, with no bona fide claim or color of title to said land, and without the consent of the owner, the said Dixon. It appears from the record that in 1912 Ike Hayes, a brother of the defendant, was in possession of this tract of land as a tenant of M. Dixon, and was about to be evicted. He moved out in the afternoon, and the defendant moved into the house in the early part of the night. From the relationship of the parties and the circumstances under which the defendant moved upon the premises, it is insisted that there was a conspiracy between these two brothers, and there are other facts disclosed by the record which might have authorized a conviction of the accused, if the jury had found him guilty, after having had submitted to them all of the evidence which was tendered bearing upon the question of his good faith. In our opinion, however, the trial judge erred in repelling certain evidence which certainly tended to illustrate the bona fides of the defendant's entry and possession of the premises claimed by the prosecutor, and, since it cannot be known what would have been the effect of this evidence upon the mind of the jury, the fact that it was withheld from them must be adjudged to have been prejudicial to the accused, and the error must be held to require the granting of a new trial.

It is perfectly plain from the record that the title to the premises upon which the accused was alleged to have squatted and trespassed is in dispute. The defendant introduced testimony showing that he is the tenant of one David Walsh, as guardian of the children of his deceased brother, William Walsh, and the prosecutor introduced a deed from L. Kennedy, as administrator of William Walsh, placing the title in himself. The testimony that the accused entered the premises as a tenant of David Walsh is unimpeached and uncontradicted by any other evidence in the record. The accused offered in evidence his sworn answer to an equitable petition brought by Dixon to recover possession of the dwelling house and premises of which the accused was in possession, and to enjoin him from going upon the land, attempting to cultivate it, or in any way interfering with the possession of the tenants of Dixon, and this answer the court rejected. In it the defendant denied all the material allegations of the plaintiff's equitable petition, set up as a defense Walsh's title and his tenancy by contract under Walsh, and offered to give any bond required of him by the court to answer for damages which the plaintiff might recover against him. This answer was sworn to on January 25, 1913, prior to the filing of the accusation, which was not preferred until February 26th thereafter. In support of this answer the defendant tendered also the pleadings and the verdict thereon in the case in which the letters testamentary of L. Kennedy, as administrator of David Walsh, deceased, were annulled. And this testimony also was rejected by the court. The ground upon which the trial judge excluded the answer of the defendant in the action brought by Dixon, perhaps, was that it was in the nature of a self-serving declaration, because the answer was made after Hayes went into possession, and it might be imagined that he feared he would be prosecuted by Dixon. Regardless of this, however, we think the court erred in excluding the documentary evidence, because the very nature of the offense of trespass, and the absolute necessity that it be shown that the act alleged to be trespass was done willfully, makes relevant any act or saying of the accused from which good faith may be imputed.

Nothing is better settled than that the issue of title to land cannot be determined by a prosecution for trespass. In Wiggins v. State, 119 Ga. 217, 46 S. E. 86, Justice Lamar, speaking for the Supreme Court, holds that a prosecution for trespass is not intended as a substitute for the remedy provided by an action for forcible entry and detainer nor to serve the office of determining title. And in Hateley v. State, 118 Ga. 79, 44 S. E. 852, it was ruled that the Code section now under consideration "was not designed to try disputed land titles, but to punish those who willfully, and without claim of right, commit acts of trespass on the lands of others." An act which, as related to the true owner of land, might appear to be trespass is not in fact a trespass, if the act is committed in good faith by one who actually and sincerely believes that he is authorized (either because authorized by the true owner, or because he believes himself to be the true owner) to do the act in question. In fact the burden rests upon the state of proving the absence of good faith on the part of one accused of trespass, because the act must generally be shown to be willfully done, and, under the particular paragraph upon which the charge against the defendant in the present case was based, it was essential for the state to show that the presence of the accused upon the premises in question was "with no bona fide claim or color of title, and without the consent of the owner." If, therefore, the defendant had any evidence which tended to show that he did have a bona fide claim dependent upon the consent of one who bona fide claimed to be the owner, it would be error to withhold such evidence from the jury, and thus deprive them of giving to the claim of the defendant equal consideration with that accorded to the claim of the prosecutor. In trespass it is altogether a question of bona fides, and not a question of real title. In Cooper v. State, 5 Ga. App. 697, 68 S. E. 719, we set aside a verdict of guilty as to two laborers who, without any knowledge of the title to the land, but in obedience to the instruction of the proper municipal officers, tore down a fence, although the evidence disclosed that the title to the land in question was without dispute in the complaining individual. This because, under the ruling of the Supreme Court in Shrouder v. State, 121 Ga. 615, 49 S. E. 702, Wiggins v. State, supra, and Hateley v. State, supra, the absence of any proof that the trespass was intended by the accused was fatal to the state's case. In McClurg v. State, 2 Ga. App. 624-626, 58 S. E. 1064, too, we held that the state must introduce such proof of bad faith as will overcome the presumption of innocence. And it follows, of course, that in rebuttal of such proof as the state adduces upon this point the defendant may submit any evidence tending to show his good faith. In Woods v. State, 10 Ga. App. 476, 73 S. E. 608, we held that the jury had the right to find that the claim of the accused was a mere pretext, and not made in good faith, and for that reason the judge did not err in approving their verdict; but in that case the prior declarations of the accused with reference to his claim of ownership were submitted to the jury, and we merely ruled, as we would rule in the present case if the defendant had been convicted after evidence submitted by him as to his good faith had been passed upon by the jury, that the jury had the right to prefer evidence indicating willfulness and bad faith to that tending to show good faith.

The fact that the guardian had no authority to rent the premises without an order from the court of ordinary, as provided in section 3067 of the Civil Code, might be immaterial on a consideration of the motive of the accused by the jury, because the presumption that every man knows the law is not of such potency, in competition with the presumption of innocence, when imputed knowledge is applied to matters of civil contract as it generally is when the act to which the ignorance relates is one denounced by the penal laws of the state. In other words, society for protection against crime indulges the presumption that all men have in mind at all times those acts which are punishable as crimes, and either abhor them or dread the punishment which will ensue upon conviction. Crimes mala in se are presumably naturally adhorrent to a well-ordered mind and a clean conscience, and the law in maintaining itself, by fiction extends the operation of these natural feelings so as to include statutory offenses which are merely mala prohibita. But it is to be doubted if the presumption that every man knows the law extends with such force to mere matters of civil contract, upon which depend only rights of property, such as title to land, or the power of a guardian to make contracts of rental. As to such matters, it seems to us that it would be for the jury to judge from the circumstances of the case, and the intelligence and education of the parties, whether they did in fact know that one who assumed to have a right was not by law entitled to it.

Judgment reversed.

WILLIAMS v. STATE. (No. 5,201.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 562*)—INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 236*)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Construing the evidence most strongly against the accused, a bare suspicion of his guilt may arise therefrom. Suspicion is not evidence, and a verdict based alone on suspicion is unauthorized by law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1253, 1263; Dec. Dig. § 562; Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 300-322; Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

Error from City Court of Hall County; F. A. Irwin, Judge.

Sonnie Williams was convicted of selling intoxicating liquors, and brings error. Reversed.

W. B. Sloan, of Gainesville, for plaintiff in error. A. C. Wheeler, Sol., of Gainesville, for the State.

HILL, C. J. Williams was convicted of selling intoxicating liquors, and he excepts to the judgment overruling his motion for a new trial.

No assignment of error of law is made, and the complaint is that the verdict is without evidence to support it. The evidence is very plain, and in substance is as follows: One witness testified, that he went to a house, where he found three men; that the accused was standing in the door; that he got a pint of whisky in the house; he did not get it or buy it from the accused, and said nothing to him about it; that he went in and got the whisky off the bed, and threw 75 cents down on the bed; that he did not pay the accused for the whisky, and does not know who got paid for it. A policeman testified that he saw this witness come from the house, and that he caught him, and searched him, and found a pint of whisky on him; that the defendant lived in the house; and that, upon finding the whisky on the person of this witness, he immediately went into the house and found no one there but defendant, who was lying across the bed. There was no other evidence, and the accused made no statement to the jury.

In our opinion, the evidence is not sufficient to warrant a verdict of guilty. While the first witness for the state, according to his evidence, did not remember from which of the three men he bought the whisky, he did testify affirmatively that he did not buy it from the accused. The facts that the officer found the accused lying on the bed, and that the accused lived in the house from which the whisky was obtained, may be suspicious circumstances against the accused; but suspicion is not evidence. It is clear that the whisky might have been obtained from one of the other men present, who might also have lived in the same house with the accused. Construing the evidence most strongly against the accused, it fails to show his guilt to a moral and reasonable certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt, and therefore the conviction was unauthorized by law.

Judgment reversed.

COOPER v. STATE. (No. 5,220.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 914*)—DEFECTS IN PRELIMINARY AFFIDAVIT—TIME FOR OBJECTION.

That an accusation charging the accused with a criminal offense is not based upon a valid affidavit, in that the affidavit was not properly attested by the magistrate before whom it was alleged to have been made, is matter for demurrer or motion to quash. Objection to such an affidavit is not a proper ground to be incorporated in a motion for a new trial, and comes too late after verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2146-2151; Dec. Dig. § 914.*]

2. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The verdict is supported by the evidence.

Error from City Court of Jackson; H. M. Fletcher, Judge.

Charlie Cooper was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

J. T. Moore, of Jackson, for plaintiff in error. C. L. Redman, Sol., of Jackson, for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

DUNN v. STATE. (No. 5,191.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 295*)—INSTRUCTIONS—PROVOCATION.

The charge of the court on that portion of section 65 of the Penal Code of 1910 relating to "provocation by words, threats, menaces," etc., excepted to, was erroneous under the decision of this court in Ross v. State, 7 Ga. App. 732, 68 S. E. 56, and that of the Supreme Court in Cumming v. State, 99 Ga. 662, 27 S. E. 177, and a new trial should have been granted on this ground.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 606-609; Dec. Dig. § 295.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 309*)—INSTRUCTIONS—VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.

The theory of voluntary manslaughter is reasonably deducible from the evidence for the accused, and it was not error to charge the jury on that subject.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 649, 650, 652-655; Dec. Dig. § 309.*]

3. HOMICIDE (§ 174*)—EVIDENCE—LACK OF EFFORT TO ESCAPE.

There was no error in refusing to allow the accused to prove that he made no effort to leave the county or to escape after the commission of the homicide.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 369-371; Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1134*)—WRIT OF ERROR—EXTENT OF REVIEW.

The assignments of error other than those dealt with above need not be determined, since it is not probable that the alleged errors will occur on another trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2587, 2653, 2986-2998, 3056, 3067-3071; Dec. Dig. § 1134.*]

Error from Superior Court, Fannin County; H. L. Patterson, Judge.

Waldo Dunn was convicted of homicide, and brings error. Reversed.

B. L. Smith and Thos. A. Brown, both of Blue Ridge, Jeff A. Hedden, of Copperhill, Tenn., and N. A. Morris and Geo. D. Anderson, both of Marietta, for plaintiff in error. Herbert Clay, Sol. Gen., of Marietta, for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment reversed.

SMITH v. STATE. (No. 5,190.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. FORGERY (§ 12*)—APPARENT LEGAL EFFICACY OF INSTRUMENT.

No error appears in the rulings of the trial judge on the admissibility of evidence, and the objections made to excerpts from the charge of the court are without merit, when considered in connection with the instructions as a whole.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Forgery, Cent. Dig. §§ 28-47; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 786, 822, 823*)—FORGERY (§ 48*)—INSTRUCTIONS—STATEMENT OF ACCUSED—CONSTRUCTION AS A WHOLE.

The trial judge clearly and fully presented to the jury the contentions of the accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1787, 1893-1901, 1960, 1984, 1990, 1991-1995, 3158; Dec. Dig. §§ 786, 822, 823;* Forgery, Cent. Dig. §§ 124-128; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

3. NO ERROR APPEARING.

No error of law appears, and the verdict was fully supported by the evidence.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

4. FORGERY (§ 16*)—"UTTER"—"PUBLISH"—"PASS"—"TENDER."

The words "pass or tender" are synonymous with the words "utter and publish." If the accused "uttered" a forged instrument, he "published" it. If he "passed" it, he "uttered and published" it. And if it be "uttered" and "published" and "passed," it necessarily was "tendered."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Forgery, Cent. Dig. §§ 51-53; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7251, 7252; vol. 7, p. 5847; vol. 6, pp. 5215-5217; vol. 8, p. 7747; vol. 8, pp. 6910, 6911.]

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; W. G. Charlton, Judge.

J. B. Smith was convicted of uttering a forged instrument, and brings error. Affirmed.

P. W. Meldrim, of Savannah, for plaintiff in error. W. C. Hartridge, Sol. Gen., of Savannah, for the State.

HILL, C. J. James B. Smith was convicted in the superior court of Chatham county on an indictment containing two counts. The first count charged him with the offense of forging a certificate of stock, fully described in the count, and the second count charged him with falsely and fraudulently uttering and publishing as true the forged instrument described, with intent to defraud the Commercial Bank of Savannah. On the trial of the case the state abandoned the first count of the indictment, on the ground that the actual forgery of the instrument described did not take place in Chatham county. The jury found the accused guilty on the second count, and, his motion for a new trial being overruled, he brings error.

The forged instrument alleged to have been uttered and published as true was a certificate of stock issued by the Merchants' & Farmers' Bank of Claxton, Ga. It was alleged that the forgery consisted in altering the figure "5" on the face of the certificate to the figures "25," and the word "five" on the face of the certificate to the words "twenty-five," and the figure "5" on the reverse side of the certificate to the figures "25." It was proved that the certificate thus altered, which was apparently a certificate for 25 shares of the bank, was presented by the accused to the Commercial Bank of Savannah and a loan procured thereon by him from the bank for the sum of $4,000, and it was proved both by the confession of the accused, repeatedly made, and by other evidence, that he had made the alterations in the stock certificate as alleged, raising the number of shares from 5 to 25 as alleged in the indictment. The introduction in evidence of the alleged forged stock certificate was objected to by the accused on the ground that there was no assignee mentioned in the transfer on the back of the certificate of stock. It appeared that the transfer on the back of the certificate was in the following form: "For value received hereby sell, assign and transfer unto ——— shares of the capital stock represented by the within certificate, and do hereby irrevocably constitute and appoint ——— to transfer the said stock on the books of the within named corporation with full power of substitution in the premises. Dated ———, 19——." Signed J. B. Smith, and attested. The certificate itself was in the following language: "Incorporated under the laws of the State of Georgia, No. 108. Shares 25. Merchants' and Farmers' Bank, Claxton, Ga. Capital, $25,000.00. This certifies that J. B. Smith is the owner of twenty-five shares of one hundred dollars each, of the capital stock of the Merchants' and Farmers' Bank, transferable only on the books of the corporation by the holder hereof in person or by attorney upon surrender of this certificate properly indorsed. In witness whereof the said corporation has caused this certificate to be signed by its duly authorized officers and to be sealed with the seal of the corporation this 12th day of March, A. D. 1912. [Signed] S. P. Smith, President. J. B. Smith, Cashier [Seal of Bank]."

[1] It is insisted by learned counsel for the plaintiff in error that stock in a corporation is a chose in action, and that under the Code of this state, section 3653, an assignment of a chose in action must be in writing, and to constitute a valid legal assignment there must be an assignor who gives title, and an assignee to take title at the time the assignment is made, and both must be named in the assignment, and that here there is no assignee mentioned, nothing mentioned as being assigned, and no date of the assignment given; the words, "Dated ———, 19——," constituting no date. It is to be borne in mind that the stock certificate was issued to James B. Smith, certifying that he was the owner of five shares of stock in the Merchants' & Farmers' Bank of Claxton, Ga. He signs the assignment as assignor, and delivers the stock certificate thus signed by him to the bank as security for a loan of $4,000. Even if this were a civil suit on the assignment, parol evidence would be admissible to prove the name of the assignee and the date of the assignment.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The writing itself would be sufficient to show that the stock certificate was the instrument or chose in action assigned by James B. Smith, to whom it had been issued by the corporation. The charge in the indictment is that James B. Smith altered this certificate of stock by raising the number of shares from 5 to 25 as stated in the indictment; and, as before stated, this was clearly proved, but this count of the indictment was abandoned by the state because the actual forgery in the raising of the number of shares from 5 to 25 was committed in some other county than that of Chatham. The second count, however, alleges distinctly that James B. Smith "did falsely and fraudulently utter and publish as true" this forged instrument, describing specifically the character of the forgery, knowing that this writing or stock certificate was falsely and fraudulently altered as described, "with the intent then and there to defraud the Commercial Bank of Savannah, the same being a banking corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of Georgia." These are the essential allegations made by the second count, and they are sufficiently proved. This being true, it was wholly immaterial whether the transfer on the back of the certificate of stock was technically complete or not. The forgery of the certificate exactly as described, the uttering and publishing as true exactly as alleged, and the perpetration of the fraud upon the Commercial Bank of Savannah by reason of the uttering and publishing as true the forged instrument, were also clearly shown; and in our opinion, these facts having been shown, the accused was guilty on the second count, and it was wholly immaterial that the transfer on the back of the certificate of stock was incomplete in the particulars claimed. The forgery and the fraud were accomplished by the unlawful conduct of the accused as specifically alleged in the indictment, and as clearly shown.

[2] 2. The trial judge, after charging the jury in the language of the statute in reference to the prisoner's statement at the trial, and telling the jury that they might believe the statement in preference to the sworn testimony in the case, added the words "provided you believe it to be true." It is insisted that this additional charge was not authorized by the statute, and had the effect of intimating a doubt on the part of the court as to the truth of the prisoner's statement. While the Supreme Court and this court have repeatedly admonished the trial courts that it is best to charge on the prisoner's statement in the language of the Code without additional words, yet this court, in McCullough v. State, 10 Ga. App. 403, 73 S. E. 546, has expressly ruled that the addition of the words objected to here was not reversible error.

[3] 3. The following excerpt from the charge is objected to: "If you should find, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant fraudulently uttered, published, passed, or tendered, the paper described in the bill of indictment, knowing that the said writing had been falsely and fraudulently altered, with intent to defraud the person alleged in the bill of indictment, then he would be guilty under the second count in the indictment." It is insisted that this charge was error because the indictment does not charge the defendant with having passed or tendered the paper described in the bill of indictment. Section 245 of the Penal Code of 1910, under which this indictment was framed, in describing the offense, uses the following language: "If any person shall fraudulently make, sign, forge, * * * or shall fraudulently utter, publish, pass, or tender the same," etc. While the indictment charged only that the accused "did falsely and fraudulently utter and publish as true," it certainly could not be erroneous for the court in describing the offense to use the exact words of the statute.

[4] But it is manifest that this objection is without merit because the words "pass or tender" are synonymous with the words "utter and publish." If the accused uttered the forged instrument, he published it. If he passed it, he uttered and published it; and, if he uttered and published and passed it, he necessarily tendered it. The judge's use of all four of the words used in the statute, descriptive of the publication of the instrument by the accused, while unnecessary, since one would have been sufficient, certainly did not constitute an error.

4. The following excerpt from the charge of the court is excepted to: "If you find when it was signed, for instance, it was for five shares of stock, as contended by the state, and was subsequently raised or altered by the defendant to make it 25 shares of stock, and that was done fraudulently, then that would be a forgery, under the law of Georgia—if it was done falsely and fraudulently, with intent to defraud any person; and if that paper, so altered by him (if you find it was so altered), was uttered, published, or passed, or tendered by him for the purpose of defrauding the person named in the bill of indictment, then that would be uttering a forged instrument." The objection made to this charge is that the words "with intent to defraud any person" lay down a wrong rule of law; the indictment specifically alleging that the intent was to defraud the Commercial Bank of Savannah. Taking the excerpt as a whole, it is perfectly apparent that the jury could not have been misled by the use of the words "any person." This is especially shown by the fact that when charging concretely upon the second count in the indictment, upon which the conviction was had, the court specifically charged the jury that any uttering and passing of the forged instrument must be for the purpose of defrauding the person named in the indictment, and the person named in the indictment was the Commercial Bank of Savannah.

5, 6. These grounds of the amended motion are fully covered by what is held in the first and fourth divisions of the opinion.

7. In charging on the probative value of evidence of good character, the trial judge used the following language: "When the guilt of the accused is made to appear to the satisfaction of the jury, they are authorized to convict regardless of the good character of the accused, but the jury have the right to consider his good character, not merely when his guilt is doubtful under the other evidence in the case, but when such testimony of good character may itself generate the doubt." It is alleged that the use of the words "to the satisfaction of the jury" were erroneous, in that it placed upon the accused too heavy a burden, because it was only necessary to raise a reasonable doubt as to his guilt in the minds of the jury. The court had previously charged fully as to the doctrine of reasonable doubt, and it was not necessary for him to repeat the charge on that subject; indeed, the charge specifically objected to in effect tells the jury that, if the evidence of good character is sufficient to generate a doubt of guilt, then they should acquit the accused.

After giving the case careful consideration, we are satisfied that no error of law was committed on the trial, and that the verdict is fully supported by the evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

WIMBERLY v. STATE. (No. 5,161.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

HOMICIDE (§ 163*)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—EVIDENCE AS TO CHARACTER OF PROSECUTOR.

A previous verdict of guilty in this case was set aside by this court, upon the ground that the court erred in certain instructions to the jury. 12 Ga. App. 540, 77 S. E. 879. Complaint is now made of several extracts from the charge of the court. The instructions complained of were free from error. The questions whether there was a specific intent to kill, and whether sufficient interval had elapsed between the shooting and a previous assault, claimed to have been made by the prosecutor upon the accused, for the voice of reason and humanity to be heard, were clearly and fully submitted to the jury for their determination. The charge of the court upon the subject of impeachment was entirely in harmony with the decisions of the Supreme Court and of this court on that subject. The judge clearly drew the distinction between a successful impeachment of a witness and a mere attack upon him in an effort to impeach him. There being no evidence that the prosecutor was attempting to make any assault upon the accused at the time the latter shot, it was not erroneous to reject evidence tending to show that the prosecutor was a man of a violent and turbulent character. Crawley v. State, 137 Ga. 777, 74 S. E. 537; Doyal v. State, 70 Ga. 134. The verdict was fully authorized by the evidence, and the punishment received by the accused was richly merited. No reason appears for granting a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 810-817; Dec. Dig. § 163.*]

Error from Superior Court, Houston County; H. A. Mathews, Judge.

Joe Wimberly was convicted of assault with intent to kill, and brings error. Affirmed.

J. C. Smith, of Ft. Valley, for plaintiff in error. Jno. P. Ross, Sol. Gen., of Macon, for the State.

POTTLE, J. Judgment affirmed.

WILLIAMS v. STATE. (No. 5,181.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence authorized the conviction of the accused.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1105*)—NEW TRIAL — AMENDMENT OF MOTION—APPROVAL.

The recitals in the grounds of the amendment to the motion for a new trial, not being approved as true by the trial judge, cannot be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2867-2869; Dec. Dig. § 1105.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 942*) — NEW TRIAL — NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

The trial judge did not err in overruling the ground of the motion for a new trial based upon alleged newly discovered testimony which was merely impeaching in its character.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2316, 2331, 2332; Dec. Dig. § 942.*]

Error from Superior Court, Laurens County; K. J. Hawkins, Judge.

Wyatt Williams was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Howard & Kea, of Dublin, for plaintiff in error. E. L. Stephens, Sol. Gen., of Wrightsville, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

WILSON v. STATE. (No. 5,125.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1159*)—APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—VERDICT.

There was evidence which would have authorized the jury to infer that, while justifiably shooting at another person, the defendant accidentally shot the person named in the indictment, but there was also evidence that the accused shot recklessly into a crowd and that by this shot the wound was inflicted. Consequently the verdict finding the accused guilty of the offense of shooting at another was authorized.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3074-3083; Dec. Dig. § 1159.*]

2. NEW TRIAL PROPERLY DENIED.

There being no error of law complained of, it was not error to refuse a new trial.

Pottle, J., dissenting.

Error from Superior Court, Randolph County; W. C. Worrill, Judge.

Gus Wilson was convicted of crime, and brings error. Affirmed.

Chas. W. Worrill and G. H. Perry, both of Cuthbert, for plaintiff in error. B. T. Castellow, Sol. Gen., of Cuthbert, and R. R. Arnold, of Atlanta, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

POTTLE, J. (dissenting). Under the evidence the accused was guilty of assault with intent to murder or not guilty of any offense. To authorize a conviction for the statutory offense of shooting at another, it must appear that the accused intentionally shot at the person named in the indictment. If he shot at another person, either with the intent to kill or to wound such person, and unintentionally hit a bystander, he could not be convicted of the statutory offense of shooting at the bystander. He might be guilty of the offense of assault with intent to murder the bystander or of murder (if the latter had been killed), but in no event could he be convicted of the statutory offense of shooting at another.

QUINLAN v. STATE. (No. 5,144.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§§ 176, 242*)—SELLING WITHOUT A LICENSE—DEFENSES—MITIGATION OF PUNISHMENT.

The evidence demanded a finding that the accused engaged in the business of selling substitutes for intoxicants, without having first obtained a license and paid the tax required by law, in violation of section 448 of the Penal Code 1910. The fact that the license was obtained and the tax paid some months after the accused began to do business might be considered in mitigation of the punishment but constitutes no defense to a prosecution under this section of the Code.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 356-361; Dec. Dig. §§ 176, 242.*]

2. JURY (§ 116*)—CHALLENGES—ARRAY OR POLL.

The fact that the jurors put upon the accused had previously tried a similar case against another person afforded no ground for challenge to the array. If the accused desired to make the point that any of the jurors were not impartial, it should have been done by a challenge to the poll. Bryan v. State, 124 Ga. 79, 52 S. E. 298; Paulk v. State, 2 Ga. App. 602, 58 S. E. 1100. In view of the fact that the jurors were put upon their voir dire and qualified as impartial jurors, the ruling in Lewis v. State, 118 Ga. 803, 45 S. E. 602, is not applicable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 542, 543; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—WRIT OF ERROR—HARMLESS ERROR.

Even if it was erroneous to admit in evidence a certified copy of the application made to sell "near beer," by the accused to the mayor and council, it was harmless error. It being admitted that the accused had engaged in the sale of "near beer" without a license and payment of the tax, it was wholly immaterial whether it was done with or without the consent of the mayor and council.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 752, 3088, 3130, 3187-3143; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 921*)—NEW TRIAL—ERROR IN ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

For the same reason it is not cause for a new trial that the court admitted in evidence copies of a letter from the Governor of Georgia to the attorney assisting in the prosecution, designating him as special agent to collect the unpaid taxes due by "near beer" dealers, and a letter from this attorney to the accused demanding payment of the tax.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2206-2209; Dec. Dig. § 921.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 918*)—NEW TRIAL—RESTRICTING TIME FOR ARGUMENT.

The refusal of the trial judge to allow counsel additional time, under superior court rule No. 5 (Civ. Code 1910, § 6264), to argue a misdemeanor case will not be cause for a new trial, when the evidence demands a conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2163-2192, 2196, 2196, 2219-2224; Dec. Dig. § 918.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1134*)—WRIT OF ERROR—EXTENT OF REVIEW.

In view of the fact that the evidence demanded the conviction, the assignments of error upon the charge of the court will not be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2587, 2653, 2886-2908, 3056, 3067-3071; Dec. Dig. § 1134.*]

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; H. A. Mathews, Judge.

J. J. Quinlan was convicted of selling liquor without a license, and brings error. Affirmed.

John R. Cooper, O. C. Hancock, and C. A. Clawson, all of Macon, for plaintiff in error. Jno. P. Ross, Sol. Gen., of Macon, for the State.

POTTLE, J. [1] The evidence demanded the conviction of the accused. It is a violation of the very letter of section 448 of the Penal Code to engage in the sale of substitutes for intoxicants without having first obtained a license and paid the tax required by law. This being so, it is wholly immaterial what instructions were given to the jury.

[2] The proper way to test the competency of an individual juror is by challenge to the poll. The fact that the panel of jurors put upon the accused had previously tried a similar case did not authorize a challenge to the array. Each juror should have been challenged, put upon his voir dire, and his impartiality tested. Under the decision in Lewis v. State, 118 Ga. 803, 45 S. E. 602, relied on by counsel for plaintiff in error, where proper challenge is made, it is duty of the trial judge to frame appropriate questions and test the competency of the jurors. The record in the present case discloses that the jurors were put upon their voir dire, and all of them qualified. The refusal of the court to sustain the challenge is not cause for a new trial.

[5] Rule No. 5 of the superior court (Civil Code, § 6264) provides that if counsel for the accused in a misdemeanor case will state in his place or on oath, as the judge may require, that he cannot do justice to his client within the 30 minutes allowed by the rule, and state how much additional time will be necessary, "the court shall grant such extension of time as may seem reasonable and proper." In Chance v. State, 97 Ga. 346, 23 S. E. 832, the judgment was reversed because the trial judge refused to allow counsel one hour within which to argue a misdemeanor case. See, also, Jones v. State, 123 Ga. 129, 131, 51 S. E. 312. Since the adoption of the Code, and of course subsequent to these rulings, the rule has been amended by the substitution of the word "may" for "shall" in the reference to the extension of time, and the rule now contemplates that the court shall have some discretion in the matter. The evidence demanded the verdict. No amount of argument could have helped the accused. It will not be assumed that the jury would have been so swayed by the argument and eloquence of his counsel as to bring in a verdict in plain violation of law. There is nothing in the decisions of the Supreme Court to conflict with what we now rule, and there was certainly no abuse of discretion in refusing to grant the additional time.

Judgment affirmed.

ALLEN v. STATE. (No. 5,103.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 784*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

"In a criminal case, in which the guilt of the defendant is wholly dependent on circumstantial evidence, the jury should be instructed that, if the proved facts are consistent with innocence, the defendant is entitled to an acquittal." Riley v. State, 1 Ga. App. 651, 57 S. E. 1081.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1883-1888, 1922, 1960; Dec. Dig. § 784.*]

Error from City Court, Houston County; A. C. Riley, Judge.

Jesse Allen was convicted of gaming, and brings error. Reversed.

J. C. Smith, of Ft. Valley, and W. J. Wallace, of Knoxville, Tenn., for plaintiff in error. R. E. Brown, Sol., of Ft. Valley, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The accused was indicted with a number of others for the offense of gaming. In our opinion the testimony as to his guilt was wholly circumstantial. The deputy sheriff, who was the main witness for the state, testified that he, in company with Mr. Rowell, the chief of police of the city of Ft. Valley, approached in sight of the alleged gamblers, and in his presence Mr. Rowell wrote down the names of all who composed two crowds of persons apparently engaged in gambling, except one man, whose name was unknown. Jesse Allen, the defendant was in one of the gatherings of persons who were apparently gambling. This witness first testified that he saw Allen playing in a game of cards for money; that Allen was playing in a game with others in a circle with him; "I saw him reaching over and picking up. I also saw him reaching over for his cards." But it very plainly appears that all of this was merely a conclusion of the witness, reached from a general survey of the surroundings, because he immediately follows this testimony with the statement, "I could not and did not see any cards or money in the defendant's hands."

We would be far from saying that this testimony would not authorize a conviction if the jury, from the circumstances detailed, had reached the conclusion evidently entertained by the witness; but this should not deprive the defendant of having accorded to him a trial strictly legal in every respect, nor obviate the necessity of the jury's taking into consideration the well-recognized rule of law that, where the guilt of the accused is wholly dependent upon circumstances from which his guilt may reasonably be inferred, it is the duty of the jury to acquit, if the innocence of the accused may with equal reason be adduced from the circumstances in proof. In the present case the jury, under such an instruction, might have concluded that the defendant stated the truth when he asserted that he did not know one card from another, or might have believed the number of witnesses who themselves admitted their guilt and yet testified that Jesse Allen did not participate in the game. The fact that the defendant cried out, "Play down," and "Bet," does not necessarily compel the conclusion that he was anything more than a bystander, perhaps using the remark jocosely to those engaged in the game; nor does it necessarily follow from the fact that the defendant reached down in the circle that he was reaching after money or cards then being employed in an unlawful game. Of course we do not know what would have been the result if the jury had been properly instructed upon the law of circumstantial evidence, but the rulings of the Supreme Court and of this court are uniform to the effect that, where the guilt of the accused depends entirely upon circumstantial evidence, it is the duty of the judge to call the special attention of the jury to that fact and to instruct them that, where there is any other theory arising from the evidence, consistent with innocence, which is as reasonable as that which points to guilt, the defendant should be acquitted. See Weaver v. State, 135 Ga. 320, 69 S. E. 483, and citations; Riley v. State, 1 Ga. App. 651, 57 S. E. 1031, and citations. The other exceptions in the motion for new trial are without merit.

Judgment reversed.

KINCAID v. STATE (No. 5,197.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. JURY (§ 116*)—CHALLENGES TO ARRAY—GROUND FOR.

The fact that the panel of jurors put upon the accused heard the evidence introduced upon a previous trial of one jointly indicted with the accused and after the conclusion of the evidence were ordered from the courtroom by the judge is no ground for challenge to the array. A challenge might have been made to any juror whose competency the accused desired to test.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 542, 543; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

2. GAMING (§ 71*)—PLAYING OR BETTING—OWNERSHIP OF MONEY.

On the trial of one charged with gaming it is not error to charge that, if the accused played and bet for money as alleged in the indictment, it is immaterial whose money it was or who put up the money with which he played.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gaming, Cent. Dig. §§ 163, 167; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 925½*)—NEW TRIAL—GROUND FOR—DISCRETION.

The refusal of the trial judge to accede to a request privately made to him before the jury had retired, but after the indictment had been handed them, to conceal from the jury, by pasting paper over it, a verdict which a previous jury had entered on the bill of indictment on the trial of one jointly indicted with the accused is no cause for a new trial. This is a matter within the discretion of the trial judge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2243-2253; Dec. Dig. § 925½.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 784*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

Where the guilt of the accused rests entirely upon circumstantial evidence, failure to charge the jury on the law relating to this character of evidence is error requiring the grant of a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1883-1888, 1922, 1960; Dec. Dig. § 784.*]

Error from Superior Court, Bartow County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Tip Kincaid was convicted of gaming, and brings error. Reversed.

Neel & Neel, of Cartersville, for plaintiff in error. Sam P. Maddox, Sol. Gen., of Dalton, for the State.

POTTLE, J. [1] 1. The accused challenged the array of jurors put upon him on the ground that the jury had heard the evidence introduced against one of the other persons jointly indicted with him and alleged to have been in the same game. This did not disqualify the entire panel of jurors, but, if the accused desired to test the competency of any particular juror, it should have been done by a challenge to the poll. Quinian v. State (No. 5,144) 13 Ga. App. —, 79 S. E. 768. In the present case the trial judge fully guarded the right of the accused by putting each of the jurors upon his voir dire and asking him the statutory questions prescribed for felony cases. If the accused was not satisfied with any of the jurors who thus qualified, he should have put them upon the court as a trior and attacked their competency.

[2] 2. It was not erroneous to charge the jury that, if the accused played cards and bet for money as charged in the indictment, it was immaterial whose money it was or who put up the money with which they played.

[3] 3. The fact that the judge declined to accede to a request privately made to him before the jury had retired, but after the indictment had been handed the jury by the solicitor general, to conceal from the jury, by pasting a paper over it, the verdict of guilty which a previous jury had rendered on the trial of one of the other persons jointly indicted with the accused is not cause for reversing the judgment refusing a new trial. The request probably came too late to avail the accused, but, even if not, this was a matter in the discretion of the trial judge.

[4] 4. The evidence was very weak and barely sufficient, if at all, to authorize the verdict. There was no direct evidence that the accused himself played or bet for money. He was in a party, some of whom either had been playing or were preparing to play. The conviction was based wholly upon circumstantial evidence, and the judge should have charged the law in reference to this character of evidence. His failure to do so is made the subject of a special assignment of error in the motion for a new trial, and, following the ruling which we have recently made in Allen v. State, 79 S. E. 769, this ground of the motion is well taken and a new trial should have been granted. The general charge of the court is not sent up with the record so as to enable us to see exactly what the judge did charge, but, in approving the recitals of fact contained in the amended motion for a new trial, the judge certifies that he omitted to charge the rule relating to circumstantial evidence.

Judgment reversed.

CURRY v. STATE HOLLINSHEAD v. SAME. WALKER v. SAME (two cases).
(Nos. 5,104-5,107.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 493*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—CONCLUSIONS.

The evidence authorized the verdict, and there was no error in refusing a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1058; Dec. Dig. § 493.*]

Error from City Court of Houston County; A. C. Riley, Judge.

Henry Curry, Wesley Hollinshead, Claude Walker, and Jay Walker were convicted of gambling, and separately bring error. Affirmed.

J. O. Smith, of Ft. Valley, and W. J. Wallace, of Knoxville, Tenn., for plaintiffs in error. R. E. Brown, Sol., of Ft. Valley, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The same exception to the charge of the court as that presented in the case of Jesse Allen v. State, 79 S. E. 769, is raised in the four writs of error now before us; but upon a review of the record it does not appear that the evidence as to these defendants is wholly circumstantial. The deputy sheriff in each of the cases now before us testified positively that he saw the defendants playing and betting for money. It may be that upon a cross-examination of the witness it would have been developed that this statement was a mere conclusion of the witness, as was apparent in Allen's Case. But the presumption is to the contrary, because it is to be presumed that counsel advisedly avoided further inquiry into the extent of the witness' knowledge, in the interest of his client, rather than that he neglected his duty to that client. For this reason there is a wide difference between the cases of these defendants and that of Allen.

Further exception is made as to the Walkers, in that complaint is made that in the charge of the court their defense was minimized by the statement that the defense of the accused rested in part upon alibi. The court's expression was not technically correct, for alibi is either a complete defense or no defense; but in the state of the evidence it is not apparent that the accused were injuriously affected by this inapposite statement of the court.

Judgment affirmed.

DUANE CHAIR CO. v. JACKSON.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

REVIEW ON APPEAL.

No error of law is complained of, and the evidence is sufficient to support the verdict.

Error from Superior Court, Whitfield County; A. W. Flite, Judge.

Action by George Jackson, by next friend, against the Duane Chair Company. From the judgment, defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Maddox, McCamy & Shumate, of Dalton, for plaintiff in error. Geo. G. Glenn and M. C. Tarver, both of Dalton, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

PAYNE v. POWER et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

PLEDGES (§ 34*)—RECOVERY BY PLEDGOR—TENDER.

A pledgor is not entitled to recover his pledge of his pledgee's assignee unless he pays the debt secured by the pledge, or tenders payment, or the facts excuse a tender. An allegation of an offer to pay is not the equivalent of a tender.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pledges, Cent. Dig. § 80; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

Error from Superior Court, Muscogee County; S. P. Gilbert, Judge.

Action by J. M. Payne against John Power and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Wynn & Wohlwender and Battle & Hollis, all of Columbus, for plaintiff in error. McCutchen & Bowden, of Columbus, for defendants in error.

EVANS, P. J. J. M. Payne filed his petition against John Power and Frank G. Power, setting up that on or about the 6th of June, 1911, he was indebted to the Bank of Phenix City, Ala., in the sum of $1,500 and was desirous of borrowing such sum for the period of six months. Plaintiff was informed by the cashier of the bank that the defendant John Power had $1,500 which he was authorized to loan, and the plaintiff agreed to substitute John Power as his creditor instead of the bank and was presented a note by the cashier, which he signed. Plaintiff had been president of the Bank of Phenix City and had for many months sustained confidential business relations to the cashier, and thus, relying upon the cashier, he did not read the note that he signed, which was made due one month after date. As collateral to secure the payment of the note, plaintiff pledged 30 shares of the capital stock of the Bank of Phenix City, of the par value of $3,000, and the reasonable market value of $3,300. The plaintiff further alleged that he heard nothing further of said note until March, 1912, when he was advised by an attorney at law, claiming to represent Frank G. Power, that he "held the said note for adjustment." Petitioner then learned for the first time that the note signed by him had been made due 30 days after date, and that the defendant John Power pretended to have privately, and without notice to petitioner, sold to the defendant Frank G. Power, and the latter pretended to have purchased, petitioner's note and stock. It was charged that there was no bona fide sale of the note and stock, and that the pretended sale was a scheme between the defendants (who are brothers) to defraud petitioner out of his stock. The tenth paragraph of the petition was as follows: "Said defendants failed and refused to surrender to your petitioner his note given as aforesaid and to account to petitioner for the overplus from the sale of his said stock after the discharge of his obligation as aforesaid, though often requested so to do, and defendants failed to permit and allow your petitioner to pay his said note, together with interest thereon, according to the true contract and agreement at the time the same was executed, and to surrender the same to petitioner, together with his stock pledged as collateral security as aforesaid." It was charged that the defendants had appropriated to their own use a dividend on said stock amounting to $210, which sum should be entered as a credit on the note. It was alleged that the transaction was a scheme between the cashier, in the alleged substitution of John Power as his creditor, for the bank, and the two defendants to defraud the plaintiff of his bank stock; that the plaintiff has always been ready, able, and willing to pay the obligation and would have at any time paid the same had he been notified of the maturity of the note, and "petitioner makes a continuing offer to pay his said note," with interest thereon. The prayers were that the defendants be required to surrender the bank stock upon the payment of the note, or, if the defendants cannot surrender petitioner's stock, then petitioner prays judgment for the difference between the amount due on his note and the reasonable and fair market value of his stock, and that his note be surrendered and canceled. The petition was dismissed on demurrer, and the plaintiff excepts.

It will be noticed that the allegation respecting the sale of the collateral is not a charge that the creditor sold the pledge without notice, but that he sold the note with the collateral. The creditor is not charged with an act having for its purpose the sale of the pledge in satisfaction of the debt; he is charged with selling the note and the collateral. Surely no one will dispute the right of assignment of a note secured by collateral. In a prior allegation the plaintiff says that the assignee's attorney notified him that he held the note for adjustment, not that he was attempting to collect any balance that might be left after crediting the proceeds from the sale of the pledged stock. Plaintiff's allegation concerning the execution of the note does not even raise an imputation of actionable fraud against either defendant. The petition, when reduced to its last analysis, complains that the plaintiff, in consideration of John Power's paying his indebtedness to the bank, gave to him a note for the amount paid, with certain stock as collateral, which note and collateral John Power has conveyed to his brother Frank, and that the latter is trying to collect it. The plaintiff says that he has not been permitted to pay his note but is willing to pay it. The law looks more to acts than good intentions; the plaintiff should have tendered his indebtedness to the holder of his note and stock, or have alleged facts excusing a tender, before complaining that his creditor is withholding stock voluntarily pledged to secure his debt. The demurrer was properly sustained.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

HANVY v. MOORE et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia, Oct. 14, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§§ 473, 474*)—PETITION FOR ACCOUNTING—PARTIES.

In a proceeding by a legatee for an accounting of an estate reduced to cash, other legatees are not necessary parties. But where the moving legatee asserts a claim against the estate, dependent upon a construction of the will, it is not error to allow the other legatees to intervene as parties for the purpose of contesting such claim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 2041-2060; Dec. Dig. §§ 473, 474.*]

2. WILLS (§ 506*)—CONSTRUCTION—"LEGAL HEIRS."

A testator, possessed of real and personal estate, died leaving a widow and eight children. He disposed of the residue of his estate as follows: "I will that the residue of my estate be distributed equally among by legal heirs." Held, that the widow was not included in the phrase "legal heirs," and did not share in the residue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1090-1099; Dec. Dig. § 506.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4063, 4064.]

3. WILLS (§ 543*)—CONSTRUCTION—REMAINDER ESTATE.

In the second item of his will the testator gave to his wife, Georgia Brown, a year's support to be taken from his general estate, and all of his household and kitchen furniture, and certain lots of land "to her during her life or widowhood; on the event of her death or the termination of her widowhood the same to go to and be equally divided among my heirs, to wit: Georgia Brown, Tony Moore, Mark A. Brown, Carrie Harris, and Ella Stokeley. If my son Mark A. Brown, or my daughter Tony Moore, should die after my death and before the death of my wife, I desire that their parts of the above-named property shall revert to my general estate and be divided among my heirs." Held, that inasmuch as the wife is expressly named as one of those to take in remainder, she takes an estate for life or widowhood in the land devised, and also one-fifth of the fee in remainder.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1169, 1302-1309; Dec. Dig. § 543.*]

4. WILLS (§ 487*)—CONSTRUCTION—PAROL EVIDENCE—INTENTION OF TESTATOR.

Where the terms of a will are plain and unambiguous, parol testimony as to the sayings or statements of the testator that he intended to dispose of his property in a certain way, and to certain persons, different from that expressed in the will, will be rejected.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1023, 1026-1032; Dec. Dig. § 487.*]

Error from Superior Court, Paulding County; Price Edwards, Judge.

Action by G. E. Hanvy, administrator, against Mrs. S. S. Moore, administratrix, and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

C. D. McGregor and A. L. Bartlett, both of Dallas, for plaintiff in error. T. W. Rucker, of Athens, J. J. Northcutt, of Acworth, Harris, Harris & Harris, of Rome, and W. E. Spinks, of Dallas, for defendants in error.

EVANS, P. J. L. L. Brown died testate, leaving a widow and eight children, all of whom were legatees under his will. The widow filed in the court of ordinary, against the executor of Brown, a petition for settlement. The executor answered that the widow had been fully settled with; and the children filed separate objections to the effect that the widow did not take under the second and sixth items of the will. An appeal was taken to the superior court. The widow died, and her administrator was made a party. The plaintiff objected to the allowance of an order making the legatees parties to the suit. In her petition she alleged that she was one of the legal heirs of her husband, and entitled to share in the residue of his estate, devised in item 6. The court dismissed this allegation on demurrer. In their intervention the legatees averred that it was the testator's intention to limit the interest in the land devised in the second item to the widow for life, and that the inclusion of her name as a remainderman was the result of a mistake. The court refused to strike this allegation on motion of the plaintiff, and submitted that issue to a jury, who returned a verdict adversely to the plaintiff.

[1] 1. A legatee may call the executor to a settlement of an estate which has been reduced to cash without making the other legatees parties to the action. Civil Code, § 5417. While this is true, we cannot see any objection to legatees voluntarily making themselves parties so as to contest the liability of the estate to the moving legatee. Though not necessary, they are proper parties.

[2] 2. The sixth item of the testator's will was as follows: "I will that the residue of my estate be distributed equally among my legal heirs." The testator left surviving him a widow and eight children. The court ruled that under this item the children of the testator took the residuary interest in the estate, to the exclusion of the widow. At common law the widow did not take any interest in the land as an heir at law. It is contended that our statute of distribution has altered the common law so as to make the widow an heir at law. Our statute declares that upon the death of the husband without lineal descendants the wife is his sole heir; if there are children, or those representing deceased children, the wife shall have a child's part, unless the shares exceed five in number, in which case the wife shall have one-fifth part of the estate. If the wife elects to take her dower, she has no further interest in the realty. Civil Code (1910) § 8931. It has been held that this statutory provision must be construed in connection with paragraph 3 of the Civil Code, § 5249, which declares that dower may be barred, by the election of the widow, within 12 months from the grant of letters testamentary or of administration on the husband's estate, to take a child's part of the real estate in lieu of dower, and that a widow does not become vested as heir at law with an absolute estate in any portion of the property which belonged to her deceased husband, but merely has the right to take a child's part, or in certain cases one-fifth thereof. If she does not elect so to do within 12 months from the grant of letters of administration upon his estate, such right is lost, and, so far as the realty is concerned, she is remitted to the right of obtaining her dower by applying therefor within the time prescribed by law. Farmers' Banking Co. v. Key, 112 Ga. 301, 37 S. E. 447. The purpose of the statute, so far as real estate is concerned, is not to confer upon the widow any absolute right of inheritance, where the deceased leaves children, but to give her an election to claim a child's part (or, if the children exceed five in number, then one-fifth) of the estate of her deceased husband, or to have an assignment of dower in all the lands of which he died seised and possessed. The question was early submitted to this court as to whether, under the statutes codified in the sections to which we have adverted, the widow of an intestate was entitled to have advancements made by the testator to his children brought into hotchpotch for her benefit; and it was held that she had no such right, and that if she died within a year after administration on the estate of her husband, without having elected to take a child's part of the real estate, her executor could not recover any share therein after her death. Beavors v. Winn, 9 Ga. 189. It was said in Snipes v. Parker, 98 Ga. 522, 25 S. E. 580, that if "a man dies intestate, leaving a widow and children, the title to his realty vests in the latter, subject only to the former's right to take a child's part or have dower assigned therein." This ruling was expressly affirmed in Farmers' Banking Co. v. Key, supra. The decisions of this court proceed upon the footing that the statutory provision for the wife in the real estate of her deceased husband where children are left is not that of strict inheritance, but an allowance, under the law, of a portion of the realty equal to a child's part, or, if the children exceed five in number, to a fifth part of his estate, available only by affirmative action on her part within 12 months from the date of administration, as a substitute for her common-law right of dower. Sumpter v. Carter, 115 Ga. 893, 42 S. E. 324, 60 L. R. A. 274. When the testator used the expression "legal heirs," in the absence of anything in the will to the contrary, it will be presumed that he had in mind those who would take naturally by inheritance, and not to embrace the widow, who was given by statute an elective right to a child's part in lieu of dower. An Iowa statute provides that if an intestate leaves no issue, one half of his estate shall go to his parents and the other half to his wife. A decedent at his death had a policy of life insurance payable to "his legal heirs." He left surviving him a widow and one child. It was held that the amount of the policy should go to the child. In the opinion the court said: "The distinction between the word 'widow' and the word 'heir' is marked in common parlance. No one having children speaks of his wife, in contemplation of her survivorship, as his heir; but it is believed, and it is universal, that she is referred to as 'widow' and the children as 'heirs.' While technically, and in the single instance stated in the statute, a widow may become a legal heir of her deceased husband, our conclusion is that, whether used in their technical or general sense, the words 'legal heirs' were not intended, and should not be construed, in this case, to include the widow." Phillips v. Carpenter, 79 Iowa, 600, 44 N. W. 898, 899.

In Gibbon v. Gibbon, 40 Ga. 562, an apparently contrary rule was promulgated. In that case a testator at the date of his will had a wife, a son, and a daughter, and brothers and sisters of both the whole and half blood. In his will he gave several legacies to his daughter for life, and at her death to her children, and if she died childless, then to the testator's "heirs of the full blood." The daughter died childless before the testator died. It was held that by the phrase "heirs of the full blood" the testator meant his statutory heirs, including his wife. The opinion in that case was pronounced by McCay, J., who based his conclusion upon a construction of the rules of inheritance now embodied in the Civil Code, § 3931, without taking into account the statute now contained in section 5249, par. 3, relating to the bar of the wife's dower. Brown, C. J., concurred, but wrote no opinion. Warner, J., dissented. In the dissenting opinion it was said: "If there are children or descendants of children, the wife is not declared, eo nomine, to be an heir of the intestate. It is true provision is made for her; she takes a child's part of the estate, unless the shares exceed five in number, in which case she takes one-fifth of it. Thus it will be seen when there are children or the representatives of deceased children, the wife does not inherit equally as an heir of the intestate." Judge McCay reached his conclusion both from an interpretation of the will and the statute, and drew from the will certain illustrations evincive of the testator's intent to include the widow within the phrase "heirs of the full blood." We do not think that case should be extended beyond its peculiar facts; because the court drew from the testator's will a conclusion that such a construction was intended by the testator, because of an omission to consider the cognate law on the subject, because it was concurred in by only two judges, and, further, because it is not in harmony with a construction of the statute as given in prior and subsequent decisions in this court.

In view of special provision made by the testator for his wife in the second item of his will, and his general testamentary scheme, we believe that his conception of the words "legal heirs" embraced only his children and their descendants, to the exclusion of the widow.

[3] 3. By the second item of his will the testator gave to his "beloved wife, Georgia," a year's support to be taken from his general estate, and also all of his household and kitchen furniture, and certain lots of land "to her during her life or widowhood; on the event of her death or the termination of her widowhood the same to go to and be equally divided among my heirs, to wit: Georgia Brown, Tony Moore, Mark A. Brown, Carrie Harris, and Ella Stokeley. If my son Mark A. Brown, or my daughter Tony Moore, should die after my death and before the death of my wife, I desire that their parts of the above named property shall revert to my general estate and be divided among my heirs." This item of the will is plain and unambiguous. The testator, in addition to giving his wife a year's support, gave her a life estate in certain described land, and specifically gave her a remainder interest in fee to be divided between herself and four children, with a reversion to his estate of the interest of two named children should they die after the testator and before the wife. This contingency did not happen, as these children survived the wife. So we hold that, under this item, Mrs. Georgia Brown took a life estate in the devised land, and also a one-fifth estate in fee in the remainder. It is not unusual for a life tenant to be interested in the remainder estate. And, whatever may have been the testator's intent with respect to his wife's share in the remainder estate, we can only give effect to that intent expressed by him in clear and unambiguous words.

[4] 4. The court permitted parol evidence tending to show that the inclusion of the wife's name as a remainderman was through the mistake of the scrivener. The rule is clear that when the terms of a will are plain and unambiguous, parol testimony as to the sayings or statements of the testator that he intended to dispose of his property in a certain way, and to certain persons different from that expressed in the will, will be rejected. Smith v. Usher, 108 Ga. 231, 33 S. E. 876; Napier v. Little, 137 Ga. 242, 73 S. E. 3, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 91, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1013.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

RICKS v. RICKS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DEMURRER TO PETITION.

The demurrer to the petition, which complained only that it was not properly paraphrased, is not borne out by the record.

2. RETURN OF SERVICE—EVIDENCE.

There was no evidence to support the traverse of the sheriff's return of service on this defendant.

3. TEMPORARY ALIMONY—EVIDENCE.

Though conflicting, there was evidence to support the finding of the judge, and to authorize the judgment granting temporary alimony.

Error from Superior Court, Emanuel County; B. T. Rawlings, Judge.

Action by H. L. Ricks against D. T. Ricks. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

L. B. Lightfoot, of Adrian, and Larsen & Larsen, of Dublin, for plaintiff in error. H. R. Daniel, of Swainsboro, for defendant in error.

ATKINSON, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

HURT v. BARNES.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. NEW TRIAL (§ 18*)—GROUNDS—OVERRULING OF DEMURRER.

The overruling of a demurrer to a plea, and of objections to an amendment to a plea, can only be taken advantage of by timely exception. Such rulings are not proper ground for new trial. Hawkins v. Stoddard, 132 Ga. 283, 63 S. E. 852, 131 Am. St. Rep. 190; Bullock v. Cordele Sash, etc., Co., 114 Ga. 627, 40 S. E. 734.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 24-29; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

2. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 38*) — TIME FOR PRESENTATION AND ALLOWANCE—INTERLOCUTORY ORDER AND RULINGS.

Upon interlocutory orders and rulings, not excepted to pendente lite, error cannot be assigned in a bill of exceptions to the overruling of a motion for new trial, certified more than 30 days after the adjournment of the court at which such interlocutory orders were passed or rulings made. Bullock v. Cordele Sash, etc., Co., supra; City Council of Waycross v. Youmans, 85 Ga. 708, 11 S. E. 865.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Cent. Dig. §§ 44-46, 48, 51-53, 56; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 255*)—FAILURE TO INSTRUCT—REQUEST.

In an action for damages for an alleged malicious arrest, where the defendant denies the allegations of the petition and pleads a set-off arising in tort, an omission to charge on the effect of the advice of counsel as bearing on the question of damages will not require a new trial, there being no request so to charge, and the court's charge not being sent up as a part of the record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 627-641; Dec. Dig. § 255.*]

4. PROPERTY (§ 9*) — EVIDENCE OF OWNERSHIP—INTEREST IN ESTATE.

Even if it was material to prove that the plaintiff had an interest in a certain estate, testimony that he was offered a certain sum of money for such interest is incompetent to prove the factum of interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Property, Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

5. VERDICT SUSTAINED.

A general verdict for the defendant is supported by the evidence.

Error from Superior Court, Baldwin County; Jas. B. Park, Judge.

Action by H. M. Hurt against J. L. Barnes. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Sibley & Sibley, of Milledgeville, for plaintiff in error. D. B. Sanford, D. S. Sanford, and L. Kenan, all of Milledgeville, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

SMITH v. TATUM.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. BROKERS (§§ 54, 63*)—RIGHT TO COMMISSION—TENDER OF PURCHASE PRICE.

The general rule, in the absence of a different agreement, is that a real estate broker in whose hands property is placed for sale earns his commissions when, during the agency, he finds a purchaser ready, willing, and able to buy, and who offers to buy, on the terms stipulated by the owner. If the evidence shows such facts, and the owner refuses to carry out the trade, it is not generally necessary, in order for the broker or agent to recover his commissions, that the proposed purchaser should make to the proposed vendor an actual tender of the purchase price.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 75-81, 94-96; Dec. Dig. §§ 54, 63.*]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 344*)—CONTRACT OF SALE—ACTION FOR BREACH—TENDER.

Where the relation between the owner of land and another is not that of principal and agent or owner and broker, but that of proposed vendor and purchaser, if the purchaser seeks to obtain specific performance of a contract of sale for cash, or to recover damages for an alleged breach of such a contract by the vendor by refusing to make a conveyance, the general rule is that a tender of the cash must be made, unless it is waived.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 1030-1035; Dec. Dig. § 844.*]

3. BROKERS (§ 82*)—VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 344*)—BREACH OF CONTRACT—TENDER—VARIANCE.

A petition alleged that the defendant, an owner of land, employed the plaintiff to procure a purchaser for it, and agreed that, if the plaintiff would find a purchaser at the price of $5,500, the defendant would convey the land to such purchaser or purchasers, and that, if the plaintiff should sell the place for more than that amount, he should have the excess as compensation for his services and expenses. The evidence on behalf of the plaintiff tended to show that the defendant agreed with the plaintiff (who was not a real estate broker) that, if the former could sell the lot and get the latter $5,500 cash, the defendant would make the plaintiff a deed to it; that the defendant did not say anything about paying the plaintiff for his services, but that if the plaintiff got any more than $5,500 it made no difference, and that the plaintiff could have any more than that sum which he got. Held, that the allegata and probata did not correspond. The former made a case of agency, with compensation to be measured by the amount in excess of $5,500 for which he could sell the property for the owner. The latter made a case of a contract to convey to the plaintiff for that amount in cash, leaving him to retain for himself any greater sum which he might receive from another purchaser.

(a) Under the case made by the evidence, a tender of the amount of purchase money was necessary, unless waived, in order to recover for a breach of the contract by a refusal to convey.

(b) There was no sufficient evidence of an unconditional tender or waiver thereof. A proposition for the owner to bring or send to a city in another state a conveyance to a purchaser from the plaintiff and receive payment, or that such proposed purchaser would send a check to a bank to be delivered upon delivery of the conveyance, did not amount to a tender. Nor did a general statement of tender by the plaintiff suffice, where it appeared that the facts did not constitute such a tender. Terry v. Kelm, 122 Ga. 43, 49 S. E. 736.

(c) No question was raised as to the statute of frauds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 101-103; Dec. Dig. § 82.* Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 1030-1035; Dec. Dig. § 844.*]

4. NONSUIT.

There was no error in granting a nonsuit.

Error from Superior Court, Dade County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Action by T. F. Smith against A. M. Tatum. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

H. P. Lumpkin, of La Fayette, and W. U. Jacoway and J. P. Jacoway, both of Trenton, for plaintiff in error. Foust & Payne, of Chattanooga, Tenn., for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

CAUDELL et al. v. ATHENS SAVINGS BANK.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EVIDENCE (§§ 157, 164*)—PAROL—SECONDARY—ACTS OF CORPORATIONS.

Ordinarily the minutes of a corporation show the formal actions of its directors and stockholders, and before parol evidence thereof can be introduced, they should be produced or accounted for. Parol evidence, however, is admissible to prove the unrecorded acts and transactions of corporations, or of their officers or directors. Bank of Garfield v. Clark, 133 Ga. 798 (7), 799, 76 S. E. 95; Fouche v. Bank, 110 Ga. 827 (6), 850, 36 S. E. 258; Ten Eyck v. Pontiac, etc., R. Co., 74 Mich. 228, 41 N. W. 905, 3 L. R. A. 378, 16 Am. St. Rep. 633; 2 Thomp. Corp. (2d Ed.) § 1842, 1847. See, also, Handley v. Stuts, 139 U. S. 417, 11 Sup. Ct. 530, 35 L. Ed. 227.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 460-470, 546, 547; Dec. Dig. §§ 157, 164.*]

2. REFUSAL OF INTERLOCUTORY INJUNCTION.

It was not error to refuse to grant an interlocutory injunction.

Error from Superior Court, Clarke County; C. H. Brand, Judge.

Action by J. J. Caudell and others against the Athens Savings Bank. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Jno. J. Strickland and Blanton Fortson, both of Athens, for plaintiffs in error. T. S. Mell, of Athens, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO. v. BUTLER.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

RAILROADS (§ 103*)—MAINTENANCE OF CATTLE GUARDS.

Civ. Code 1910, § 2699, requiring railroad companies to build and maintain cattle guards on each side of every public road or private way established pursuant to law, and on the dividing line of adjacent landowners, where the railroad may cross such public roads, private ways, or dividing lines, on written notice by the owner of lands to be affected by such cattle guards, is intended for the protection of landowners whose lands are intersected by a railroad right of way, and not for the benefit or protection of the owners of land abutting on a railroad right of way.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 315-319, 762, 763, 767, 769, 772; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

Error from Superior Court, Murray County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Action by D. S. Butler against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

D. W. Blair, of Marietta, for plaintiff in error. R. N. Steed, of Spring Place, and Maddox, McCamy & Shumate, of Dalton, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. The plaintiff sued the railroad company, claiming damage for an injury done to his growing crop by hogs, on account of the company's alleged failure to maintain a stock gap or cattle guard. The land upon which the trespass was committed was alleged to abut the railroad right of way. The defendant demurred to the sufficiency of the petition, upon the ground, amongst others, that its allegations did not show any duty on the part of the defendant to maintain a stock gap for the protection of owners of adjacent land. The court overruled the demurrer, and a verdict was returned for the plaintiff.

The plaintiff bases his right of action upon an alleged duty of the railroad company to maintain a good and sufficient cattle guard at a point on the public road where crossed by the railroad, for the protection of his land which lay adjacent to the railroad company's right of way. It is his contention that the Code section requiring railroad companies to maintain cattle guards at public crossings was intended for the protection of land which abutted on the railroad right of way, as well as that traversed by the railroad. By virtue of the Civil Code (1910) § 2699, every railroad company is required to build and maintain at its own expense good and sufficient cattle guards on each side of every public road or private way established pursuant to law, and on the dividing line of adjoining landowners, where the railroad may cross such public road, private way, or dividing lines, when necessary to protect said lands, on 30 days' written notice from the owner of the lands to be affected by such cattle guards. The cognate section (2701), which is a part of the same statute from which the other section was codified, provides that whenever the owner of any lands over which any railroad company may have acquired the right of way may desire additional cattle guards other than those provided for in the preceding section, or of any farm crossing on his land, it shall be the duty of the railroad company upon written notice to submit to the landowner a written estimate of the cost of such cattle guard or farm crossing; whereupon the landowner, if satisfied with the same, shall pay to the company the estimated sum, when the company shall at once proceed to build such cattle guards or farm crossings, etc. The plain purpose of the statute is to require railroad companies to build cattle guards at public road and private way intersections, and at dividing lines, where the railroad company constructs its track on its right of way which passes through the land of another. It was never designed that a landowner could require of a railroad company to construct cattle guards over its right of way where the landowner's land only abutted upon the railroad company's right of way. The statute is for the benefit and for the protection of landowners whose lands are traversed by the right of way of the railroad company, and not for the benefit of adjacent landowners. The landowner whose land is not traversed by a railroad could with as much reason require a railroad company to construct cattle guards on its right of way over the land of his neighbor 500 yards away from his land, as he could require a cattle guard on the railroad's property which adjoined his land. According to the allegations in the present case, this statute raised no duty on the part of the railroad company to construct the cattle guard on the land of the plaintiff lying adjacent to its right of way, and it was error to overrule the demurrer raising that point. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

McEWEN v. KELLY et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 810*)—DIRECTORS—DUTIES AND LIABILITIES.

Directors of a trading corporation must exercise ordinary care and prudence in the administration of its affairs. They may commit the active management of the business to authorized officers; but this will not relieve them from the duty of reasonable supervision.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1352-1362; Dec. Dig. § 810.*]

2. BANKRUPTCY (§ 145*)—TRUSTEE—CORPORATIONS—LIABILITIES OF DIRECTORS.

A trustee in bankruptcy of such a corporation succeeds to any right which it may have to sue directors and officers for a breach of duty, resulting in loss.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bankruptcy, Cent. Dig. §§ 205, 230-232, 234; Dec. Dig. § 145.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 831*)—DIRECTORS—LIABILITY TO CREDITORS.

In a solvent going concern directors are the agents and fiduciaries of the corporation rather than of its creditors; but, under some circumstances, creditors of the corporation may have a cause of action against its directors on account of losses occurring from their maladministration and ultimately resulting in injury to the rights of such creditors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1448, 1449; Dec. Dig. § 831.*]

4. BANKRUPTCY (§ 802*)—ACTION BY TRUSTEE—PETITION—SUFFICIENCY.

The allegations of the petition considered, and held not to show a case for recovery against the directors of the corporation, except the one who was also secretary and treasurer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bankruptcy, Cent. Dig. § 1325; Dec. Dig. § 302.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 440*)—CORRECTION OF JUDGMENT PENDING APPEAL.

After a judgment has been entered sustaining a demurrer to an action brought against three defendants and dismissing the entire case, and while the case is pending in this court on a bill of exceptions assigning error on such judgment, the judge of the trial court is without jurisdiction, even by consent of counsel, to enter another judgment reciting that it was intended to overrule the demurrer as to one of the defendants and altering the former judgment accordingly.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2198-2201; Dec. Dig. § 440.*]

Error from Superior Court, Bartow County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Action by C. McEwen, as trustee, etc., against W. M. Kelly and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part.

McEwen, as trustee in bankruptcy of the Southern Iron Company, brought suit against W. M. Kelly, W. H. Totten, Jr., and W. C. Satterfield, seeking to recover $3,490.57. So far as necessary to be set out, the allegations were as follows: Kelly, Satterfield, and Totten formed a partnership, in the latter part of the year 1905, for the purpose of mining and shipping ore, which continued until October 23, 1906, when a charter was granted to them. During the continuance of the partnership, Kelly was the treasurer. All of the stock in the corporation was taken by the three, Kelly taking 34 shares, and each of the others 33, and the three elected themselves directors. During the continuance of the partnership, the other two partners frequently asked Kelly for "a statement of the partnership," and he promised to make them a full and complete statement of its affairs but failed to do so. He drew numerous drafts on Totten to meet the expenses of the partnership. Totten and Satterfield became suspicious of Kelly and of his handling of the business. Upon incorporation, Totten and Satterfield intended to elect Satterfield secretary and treasurer, and Totten nominated him for that office and Kelly for president; but Kelly, winking at Totten and shaking his head, stated that Totten should have the honors of the corporation and nominated him for president, Satterfield for vice president, and himself for secretary and treasurer. All of them appear to have acquiesced in this, and the election was accordingly made. At some unspecified time prior to January 1, 1907, Kelly wrote to Totten, who was a nonresident, that he did not wish Satterfield to have charge of the office of secretary and treasurer, and if it were given to him he (Kelly) would withdraw from the company. It was further alleged that Totten "was unable to get any statement at that time, or between the date of incorporation and said January 1, 1907, from said Kelly as to the business of said corporation." On or about January 1, 1907, Kelly made to Totten and Satterfield a statement of the business of the company "that was unsatisfactory and meager and an exremely poor showing of the business of the company." After January 1, 1907, Kelly established the practice of drawing a draft on Totten for the amount of the pay roll and sending to Totten a check for the amount, so that Kelly could cash the draft and Totten could deposit the check in Cincinnati, Ohio, and pay the draft, thus getting the use of the money for four or five days without interest; in other words, indulging in the practice known to the business world as "kiting." Totten protested against this, but Kelly gave a plausible explanation of it. In April, 1907, Kelly telegraphed to Totten to remit to him $800 or $700 to pay an open account. Totten went to Cartersville, the home office of the company, and called a meeting of the stockholders, at which Kelly was deposed from office and a new secretary and treasurer elected. Kelly turned over to his successor "what purported to be the books of the company." They were audited by the direction of Totten and Satterfield, and the "auditor reported . . . that W. M. Kelly had expended from the funds of the company the sum of $1,655.33, for which there appeared to be no authority from the officers or directors of said company, and that in addition thereto said W. M. Kelly was due said company the sum of $2,835.24 in cash which had not been turned over to his successor in office." Kelly admitted owing these amounts, and in July paid $1,000, leaving a balance of $3,490.57. Later he gave a check for $1,000 more, but payment was refused by the bank on which it was drawn. On November 4, 1907, a petition in involuntary bankruptcy was filed against the company, and it was duly adjudicated a bankrupt, and the plaintiff was appointed its trustee in bankruptcy. The court sustained a demurrer to the petition and dismissed the action; and the plaintiff excepted. The supplemental order passed by the court is noticed in the opinion.

J. T. Norris, of Cartersville, for plaintiff in error. Thos. W. Milner & Son and Neel & Neel, all of Cartersville, for defendants in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] 1. Directors of a private corporation occupy a somewhat peculiar position. They have been variously classified as agents, mandataries, bailees, and trustees; and it has been sought to define their duties and liabilities to the corporation and its stockholders on the basis of such relations. A great deal of learning has been expended, and perhaps some of it wasted, in efforts to rigidly apply one or another of these analogies to facts to which it has not always been fully applicable. Directors are agents, but they are also agents clothed with a fiduciary character; and, while they are not express or technical trustees, they are selected to manage the affairs and property of the corporation for its benefit, and they bear to it and to its stockholders a relation which in many respects may be called a trust relation; and thus by numerous courts they have been called trustees. Aside from any express statutory liability, those who accept the position of directors impliedly undertake to exercise ordinary care and diligence in discharge of the duties thus committed to them. They may commit the active transaction of the business to duly authorized officers; but this does not absolve them from the duty of reasonable supervision. Some courts have declared that they are only liable for gross negligence or breach of duty resulting in injury. But in some, probably most, of the cases so declaring, it will be found that the failure of directors to use ordinary care in supervision has been treated as amounting to gross negligence. Thus in Hun v. Cary, 82 N. Y. 65, 37 Am. Rep. 546, it was said that, "when one voluntarily takes the position of trustee or director of a corporation, good faith, exact justice, and public policy unite in requiring of him such a degree of care and prudence, and it is a gross breach of duty (crassa negligentia) not to bestow them." In 2 Thompson on Corporations (2d Ed.) § 1268, it is said: "While they are not held responsible for ordinary mistakes or errors of judgment, they are liable for losses and waste of money and property occurring from neglect or inattention to the business or the willful violation of their duties. It is true that the degree of diligence is to be determined in each case in view of all the circumstances, such as the character of the corporation, the condition of its business, the usual method of managing such companies, as well as all other relevant facts." Breach of duty and loss or damage must concur to create liability. In Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U. S. 132, 11 Sup. Ct. 924, 35 L. Ed. 662, the decision of the majority of the court was concurred in by five justices, while four strongly dissented. The justices differed as to whether the facts there involved showed a case for holding certain directors liable, and the discussions in the two opinions are interesting. We deem it unnecessary here to deal with the exercise of discretion by directors, or the ordinary rule as to it, or the question whether liability may arise from its gross or flagrant abuse. Unfortunately some directors appear to think that they have fully discharged their duties by acting as figureheads and dummies; but this is a mistake and a delusion from which some of them are now and then awakened by a judgment for damages arising from allowing the corporation to be looted while they sat negligently by and looked wise.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[2] 2. A trustee in bankruptcy succeeds to any right of the corporation to sue for damages resulting to it by a breach of duty on the part of its directors. 2 Thomp. Corp. (2d Ed.) § 1316.

[3] 3. In a solvent, going concern, directors are the agents or fiduciaries of the corporation, not of its creditors. But directors are not wholly without duties to creditors. They cannot misappropriate the corporate assets or give them away, so that creditors are prevented from collecting their debts; and under some circumstances a trust or quasi trust relationship exists towards creditors. Thus it has often been held that in cases of insolvency all of the assets are applicable to the payment of debts and are not for distribution among stockholders, and that accordingly the directors stand in a trust relation toward creditors. In cases where, aside from statutory provisions, creditors have been held to have a right to sue directors on account of losses arising from misconduct or negligence, sometimes the decision has been based on the theory of a trust or quasi trust relationship, and sometimes on the idea that the liability of the directors to the corporation was an equitable asset, which the creditors might subject, if necessary. 2 Thomp. Corp. (2d Ed.) § 1313; Tatum v. Leigh, 136 Ga. 791, 72 S. E. 236, 25 Ann. Cas. 216.

A protracted discussion of the various decisions would be of no benefit. Light on the general subject may be found in Thompson's Liability of Officers and Agents of Corporations; 2 Thomp. Corp. (2d Ed.) § 1265 et seq.; 10 Cyc. 828 et seq. (by the same author); Hodges v. New England Screw Co., 1 R. I. 312, 53 Am. Dec. 624, and note on page 637 et seq.; Schley v. Dixon, 24 Ga. 273, 71 Am. Dec. 121; Fitzpatrick v. McGregor, 133 Ga. 332, 342, 65 S. E. 859, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 50.

[4] 4. We now come to consider the facts of this case in the light of the principles above announced. The suit was by the trustee in bankruptcy of the corporation. The defendant Kelly was charged with misappropriation of corporate funds while acting as secretary and treasurer. The other two defendants were sought to be held liable on the ground of negligence. There was no charge of knowledge of or participation by them in his misappropriation. Throughout the petition the allegations are vague, general, and lacking in any direct statements to charge these two defendants with any specific breach of duty, resulting in damages to the corporation or the creditors. It was alleged that, while the firm business continued, the other two defendants asked Kelly for a statement but did not receive any, and that he drew drafts on Totten. There was no allegation that there was any partnership agreement, rule, or custom to have statements, or that the books were not accessible to the other members of the firm, or that any wrong was done to the partnership, or that the drafts on Totten were improper or unauthorized. After the incorporation, the three defendants were not only directors but owned all of the stock in the corporation and were then substantially the only parties at interest, so far as this record shows. For some two months after the incorporation no statement was made by the secretary and treasurer. It does not appear that there was any by-law, rule, practice, or custom requiring it sooner; and only inferentially is it alleged that it was asked for or could have been made earlier. The statement which was made is characterized as "unsatisfactory and meager"; but it does not appear that it was untrue or what was the matter with it. Indeed, it does not appear whether it was unsatisfactory at that time to Totten and Satterfield or was later unsatisfactory to the pleader. That it was "an extremely poor showing of the business of the company" does not allege any falsity or error. If the business itself were poor, the showing would probably not be good. Kelly indulged in some "kiting" for the company, but he made some "plausible" explanation, and it does not appear that the explanation was untrue or the kiting was unnecessary or against the corporation's interests. In April, 1907, he called on Totten for $600 or $700. He was thereupon deposed, and the books audited. It was reported by the auditor that Kelly had expended $1,655.33 for which there appeared to be no authority from the officers or directors. What this was expended for is not stated. It was also reported that he had failed to turn over to his successor $2,835.24 in cash. When these expenditures were made, or how long he had been a defaulter, does not appear; nor is there anything to show that an examination of the books at an earlier date would have disclosed any default. After its discovery Totten and Satterfield endeavored to collect the amount due by Kelly, and there is no complaint that their efforts were not diligent, though in part unavailing. It was alleged that no bond was required of Kelly. But no by-law or custom requiring such bond was averred; nor did the allegations suffice to show that it was negligence not to make such a requirement. In its last analysis, the effort to hold Totten and Satterfield liable rests on alleged negligence in the election of Kelly to the position of secretary and treasurer and the failure to discharge him sooner. The petition is not lacking in adjective characterizations of the conduct of these two defendants; but, vague under the general allegations, we do not think that it makes out a case of breach of duty on their part, with damages resulting therefrom. As to these defendants, the demurrer was properly sustained.

As to Kelly, misappropriation of assets and admitted liability were charged. The order in the record dismisses the entire case. An agreement and a copy of an order passed by the presiding judge after the bill of exceptions had been signed and transmitted to this court were later filed here. From these it seems that the order dismissing the case as to Kelly was entered by mistake, as the court intended to overrule the demurrer as to him.

[5] The judge, however, was without authority to change a judgment as to which exception was pending in this court, nor could he do this even by consent. He having dismissed the action, and the case having been brought to the Supreme Court, it was out of his jurisdiction. We must deal with the judgment as rendered and brought to this court for review. We therefore affirm the judgment as to Totten and Satterfield and reverse the judgment as to Kelly.

Judgment affirmed in part, and reversed in part. All the Justices concur.

ARMSTRONG v. BOYD et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 35*)—PROCEEDINGS TO REVOKE LETTERS—EXPENSES CHARGEABLE TO ESTATE.

Counsel fees and expenses, incurred by an administrator with the will annexed in defending a proceeding by certain legatees to revoke his letters on the ground of mismanagement (which proceeding was voluntarily discontinued), are not chargeable against the legacies due the legatees who instituted the proceeding, in a final settlement of the estate. Where such charges are proper, they go against the general estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 227-262; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 35*)—PROCEEDINGS TO REVOKE LETTERS—ALLOWANCE FOR COUNSEL FEES.

Where the conduct of an administrator brings about a situation causing an heir to bring suit to revoke the letters of administration, he is not entitled to charge counsel fees, but where he is merely charged with misconduct, and is not guilty thereof, he should, under authority of Civ. Code 1910, § 4010, be allowed a reasonable amount to retain counsel in defending the suit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 227-262; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

Error from Superior Court, McIntosh County; W. W. Sheppard, Judge.

Petition for an allowance by William Armstrong, administrator, against W. M. Boyd, Jr., and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Reversed.

Chas. M. Tyson, of Darien, for plaintiffs in error. Wm. H. Boyd and P. W. Meldrim, both of Savannah, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. Charlotte Pullen died testate, and W. H. Boyd was appointed her administrator with the will annexed. She bequeathed to four of her grandchildren certain special legacies in money. About three or four months after the appointment of the administrator, these legatees filed a suit to remove him, on the ground that he was mismanaging the estate. Judgment was rendered in the ordinary's court removing the administrator, and an appeal was taken to the superior court. On the appeal it was agreed that the entire proceeding should be dismissed, and that the administrator should at once cite the legatees for a settlement and distribution. The proceeding to remove the administrator was accordingly dismissed, and he cited all the legatees for a settlement in the court of ordinary; and in connection therewith he filed a petition to the court of ordinary, asking that all the costs and expenses of the proceeding to remove him as administrator be charged against the legacies due the legatees who joined in that proceeding. The correctness and reasonableness of the expenses and attorney's fees incurred in that proceeding were not disputed; but the legatees resisted the petition, and claimed that such expenses and attorney's fees were not chargeable against their legacies. The petition of the administrator to be allowed such charges was refused by the ordinary, and on appeal to the superior court judgment was rendered in his favor against the legatees for these charges. Exception is taken to this judgment.

[1, 2] Our Code declares that an administrator is authorized to provide competent legal counsel, according to the exigencies of the estate he represents. Civil Code 1910, § 4010. Does this authority extend to an allowance of counsel fees for services rendered to an administrator in a proceeding to revoke his letters of administration, on the ground that he wastes or mismanages the estate? Unquestionably the purpose of supplying administrators with legal advice is for the protection of the estate he represents. It is not to be presumed that every administrator is so versed in the law as to safely act in every contingency or exigency which may arise in the due administration of an estate. In order that the estate may not be frittered away in unnecessary litigation or its assets inadvertently diverted, provision is made for supplying the administrator with the advice of competent counsel. The object of providing counsel for an administrator is to guide him through problems and exigencies of the administration as he finds them, and not to extricate him from difficulties due to his own misconduct at the expense of the heirs. If the conduct of the administrator brings about the situation that gives rise to a suit against him by an heir, he is not entitled to charge counsel fees to protect him in his own fault or misconduct. Ross v. Battle, 113 Ga. 742, 39 S. E. 287. But where there is no actual misconduct in the administration, but only a charge of it, the administrator representing all the heirs should be allowed a reasonable amount to retain counsel in defending an unjust charge. In Roberts v. Thomas, 32 Ga.

31, it was held that when a complainant is justifiable for suing a trustee to recover or secure a trust fund in the hands of the defendant, the solicitor's fees of the trustee will not be allowed for resisting the bill. The rule is stated in Lilly v. Griffin, 71 Ga. 535, as follows: "While an administrator is authorized to provide competent legal counsel for the estate he represents, according to its exigencies, he cannot charge the estate with fees of counsel retained to defend a suit brought against him to recover or to secure the trust fund, whenever it appears that the complainant is justifiable in bringing the suit." According to the doctrine of these cases, if the suit is not justifiable—and the test to determine that would seem to be the result of the issue in favor of the administrator—the administrator should be allowed the money expended by him in the employment of counsel to defend the suit brought against him. The petition to remove the executor was voluntarily abandoned by the moving legatees. We, therefore, cannot consider that such a suit was meritorious, although its discontinuance was the result of consent.

But while an administrator is entitled to an allowance of counsel fees in defending an unsuccessful and unjustifiable suit brought against him by an heir charging a devastavit, this allowance is to be paid out of the general estate, and not out of the particular estate of the complaining legatees. As was said by McCay, J., in Moses v. Moses, 50 Ga. 9, 33: "It was a simple question of account—a charge of devastavit—and there is no more propriety in charging the plaintiffs with the counsel fees of the defendant than in any other suit in which the plaintiff fails. It would, we think, be a bad policy to put such a hindrance in the way of heirs or legatees seeking their rights that they shall pay for counsel to aid the executor in resisting their charge of a devastavit."

We know of no statute or rule of law which charges an heir with the expenses of litigation of the administration solely because he may fail in the suit; and we think that the court erred in so holding.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

FIRST NAT. BANK OF LA FAYETTE v. CASE THRESHING MACH. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

GARNISHMENT (§ 210*)—CLAIM BY THIRD PERSON—SECURITY—PARTIAL DISSOLUTION.

The dissolution of a garnishment by a person not a party to the proceeding, authorized by the Civil Code 1910, § 5282, discharges the garnishee from further liability upon the filing of a dissolution bond. As the privilege of a stranger to the suit to dissolve the garnishment by bond exists only by force of the statute, a claimant of only a portion of the indebtedness admitted by the garnishee is not entitled, under the statute, to dissolve the garnishment to the extent of the indebtedness claimed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Garnishment, Cent. Dig. § 402; Dec. Dig. § 210.*]

Error from Superior Court, Walker County; Jno. W. Maddox, Judge.

Garnishment proceedings by the Case Threshing Machine Company, and the First National Bank of La Fayette interposes a claim. From the judgment the claimant brings error. Affirmed.

H. P. Lumpkin, of La Fayette, for plaintiff in error. Foust & Payne, of Chattanooga, Tenn., and E. M. W. Glenn, of La Fayette, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. A garnishment issued upon a pending suit, and the garnishee answered, admitting a certain amount of indebtedness. Judgment was entered against the defendant in the main action, and subsequently a third person, claiming a portion of the money admitted to be due by the garnishee, filed a bond to dissolve the garnishment, and also a traverse of the garnishee's answer. The court allowed a judgment against the garnishee, and the claimant excepts to the same as erroneous on the ground that the issue presented by the claim should have been first heard and determined. The correctness of the claimant's contention depends upon a statutory permission of a third person to partially dissolve a garnishment. The right of a stranger to the proceeding to have the garnished property or money released upon giving a sufficient bond does not exist independently of statute. The general design of such statutes is to enable a claimant, by a sort of intervention, to supersede the proceedings by giving security to perform the judgment of the court as to the liability of the garnishee. The statute provides that whenever any process of garnishment is served upon any person based upon any suit, and there shall be money or property in the hands of the garnishee, which is claimed to be the money or property of any person not a party to the proceeding upon which the garnishment is based, such claimant may dissolve the garnishment by filing in the proper court a bond with good security in twice the amount of the sum claimed in the suit, to be approved by the proper official, conditioned to pay to the plaintiff the sum that may be found due to the defendant upon the trial of any issue that may be formed upon the answer of the garnishee, or that may be admitted to be due in the answer, if untraversed. The garnishee upon answering shall be discharged from all further liability, and the plaintiff's remedy shall be upon the bond executed to dissolve the garnishment, and the claimant shall be a party to all further proceedings on the garnishment. Civil Code 1910, §§ 5282, 5283, 5289. Thus it will be seen that the statute does not contemplate a partial dissolution of a garnishment. The statutory scheme is to substitute the claimant's bond for the garnishee's liability to the defendant, and to eliminate the garnishee from the case upon the filing of a dissolution bond. After the garnishment is dissolved, either the plaintiff or claimant may traverse the garnishee's answer; and if on the trial of the traverse it is found that the garnishee is indebted in a larger sum than admitted in the answer, the plaintiff may recover of the claimant and his sureties on the dissolution bond the amount of such indebtedness, to the extent of his judgment against the defendant. Civil Code, § 5289. This and other provisions of the garnishment statutes make it clear that the General Assembly never contemplated a partial dissolution of a garnishment. However desirable it might be to provide for partial dissolution, no statutory provision has been made for it; and it is not within the power of courts to amend the statute in this respect. The dissolution bond in the instant case did not fulfill the requirement of the statute, and the court did not err in so treating it, and in rendering judgment against the garnishee for the amount admitted in his answer to be due to the defendant. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

JAMES v. HILL et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 34*)—LACHES—DEEDS.

Where the heirs of a grantor, with the consent of his administrator, brought suit against his grantees and persons holding by purchase under such grantees, for the purpose of canceling the conveyances and recovering the land conveyed, on the ground that their ancestor was insane and lacking in mental capacity to make a deed, and that the defendants had notice thereof, and where it appeared that the deed was made by him in January, 1896, that he died in April, 1897, and that the defendants had been in possession since that time, and the suit was not brought until 1910, and no reason appeared why the plaintiffs did not know, or by the slightest diligence could not have known, of the substantial facts, so as to bring the suit within a reasonable time after the deed was executed and after the grantor's death, the action was properly dismissed on demurrer on the ground that it was stale and that the plaintiffs were in laches. Bennett v. Bird, 139 Ga. 25, 76 S. E. 568; Spence v. Queen, 139 Ga. 537, 77 S. E. 820; Bailey v. Freeman, 140 Ga. 71, 78 S. E. 423.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 49-54; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

2. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 34*)—LACHES—EXCUSE—DEEDS.

The allegations in the petition and the amendments by which it was sought to show that the heirs, with the consent of the administrator, brought suit within a reasonable time, were not sufficient for that purpose. The administrator of the decedent, as clerk of the superior court, recorded the deed shortly after it was executed. One of the plaintiffs was a witness to it. The allegations in regard to the lack of knowledge on the part of other plaintiffs were insufficient to save the case, when considered in the light of the fact that they must have known that the defendants were in possession of the land and receiving the rents and profits thereof, and must have known of their father's mental condition, and in view of the fact that the deed from him was recorded in 1898.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 49-54; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

Error from Superior Court, Douglas County; Price Edwards, Judge.

Action by L. W. James and others against H. C. Hill and others. Judgment for defendants, and the plaintiff named brings error. Affirmed.

J. S. James, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error. W. T. Roberts and J. R. Hutcheson, both of Douglasville, and E. S. Lumpkin, of Lithia Springs, for defendants in error.

LUMPKIN, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

MURRAY COUNTY v. WILSON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN (§§ 79, 80*)—COMPENSATION—ESTOPPEL—HIGHWAYS.

An owner of land, who petitions the county authorities to lay out a new road, agreeing to give through her land "the right of way for said road as it may be laid out by the reviewers, without cost" to the county, cannot afterwards recover in an action against the county for damages for the running of the road through her property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 205-214; Dec. Dig. §§ 79, 80.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 441*)—PAROL—CONTRACTS.

A written agreement as indicated in the preceding note cannot be varied by oral testimony that the plaintiff signed the agreement because she was told the road would be run on a route different from that actually laid out. Southern Bell Telephone, etc., Co. v. Harris, 117 Ga. 1001, 44 S. E. 885; Burch v. Augusta, etc., Railroad Co., 80 Ga. 298, 4 S. E. 850; Lee v. Savannah, etc., Railroad Co., 115 Ga. 64, 41 S. E. 246.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1719, 1723-1763, 1765-1845, 2030-2047; Dec. Dig. § 441.*]

3. OVERRULING OF DEMURRER.

There was no error in overruling the demurrer.

Error from Superior Court, Murray County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Action by Mrs. S. B. Wilson against Murray County. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

C. N. King and W. W. Sampler, both of Spring Place, for plaintiff in error.

HILL, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

ARMISTEAD et al. v. WEAVER.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 441*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—CHATTEL MORTGAGES.

Where an affidavit of illegality was interposed to the foreclosure of a mortgage on personalty, grounds thereof which set up parol agreements between the parties, made at or before the giving of the mortgage, and conflicting with its terms, were properly stricken on demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1719, 1723-1763, 1765-1845, 2030-2047; Dec. Dig. § 441; Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1616.]

2. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§§ 283, 285*)—FORECLOSURE—SALE—AFFIDAVIT OF ILLEGALITY—SUFFICIENCY.

Where a mortgage on personal property is foreclosed in the statutory manner, and the defendant interposes an affidavit of illegality, but fails to replevy the property, it may be sold by special order of the court as in case of perishable property or property which is expensive to keep or liable to deteriorate from keeping.

(a) The allegations of the affidavit of illegality as to whether no order for the sale was granted at all, or whether one was granted which was averred to be illegal, and as to any illegality in the manner of conducting the sale, were vague, general, and insufficient to make any issue requiring submission to the jury.

(b) If by means of an amended affidavit of illegality the sale by the sheriff, which had taken place pendente lite, could be attacked and an accounting be had for the value of the property thus sold, the allegations of the affidavit were insufficient, and were properly stricken on demurrer.

(c) The case differs from that of Haunson v. Nelms, 109 Ga. 802, 35 S. E. 227, which arose on an equitable petition to set aside a sheriff's sale on account of the conduct of the sheriff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 569, 572, 574, 575; Dec. Dig. §§ 283, 285.*]

Error from Superior Court, Pike County; R. T. Daniel, Judge.

Action by G. A. Weaver, Jr., against J. B. Armistead and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

E. C. Armistead, of Zebulon, for plaintiffs in error. E. F. Dupree, of Zebulon, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. G. A. Weaver, Jr., foreclosed a chattel mortgage by making the statutory affidavit. The execution issued thereon was levied on the mortgaged property, consisting of two horses. The defendants filed an affidavit of illegality, which, as amended, made substantially the following points: (1) At the time of making the purchase of the two horses by the defendants from the plaintiff, it was agreed among the parties that, if the defendant should desire to sell either of the horses, they should have the right to do so, provided the purchase price of the horse thus sold should be paid to the mortgagee, leaving the other horse to stand for the balance due on the debt. Under and by virtue of this agreement, the mortgagors sold one of the horses and paid the purchase price to the mortgagee, "and by the agreement said bay horse was then relieved from the lien of the mortgage." (2) At the time of the purchase of the horses it was further agreed among the parties that, at the maturity of the note given for the purchase money, if the mortgagors should have then paid to the mortgagee one-half of the amount due for the purchase price, the mortgagee would extend the date for the maturity of the note for the space of 12 months. At the maturity of the note the mortgagors had paid one-half of the amount due, and they demanded an extension of the note for 12 months in accordance with the agreement; but the mortgagee refused to make such extension. (3) After the filing of the illegality, the sheriff sold one of the horses described in the mortgage for the sum of $51 "and perhaps a few cents"; the sale being claimed to be made under "what is known as a short-order sale." The illegality first averred that the sheriff had no order for the sale, but immediately proceeded to allege that the order was illegal and void and gave the sheriff no right to sell the horse, though it did not set out the order or show any reason why it was void. It was also alleged that the horse was not advertised "as required by law," but it was not alleged that no advertisement was made or what advertisement there was. It was then alleged that the illegality in the order and the advertisement deterred bidders who otherwise would have attended the sale, and that the horse was sold for $51, and was bought by the mortgagee, although it was worth $175. It was further alleged that the sale was conducted in an unfair manner, because it was advertised to take place within the usual hours of sale, and that as a matter of fact, as soon as the hands of the city clock reached the hour of 10 o'clock, the sheriff put up and sold the horse, in the absence of the mortgagors, "when there were no purchasers present." The mortgagors prayed that the horse be accounted for by the mortgagee at a fair valuation, "which, when done, affiants will pay any remainder that may appear to be due on said debt." On demurrer the affidavit of illegality and the amendment thereto were stricken, and the defendants excepted.

[1] 1. Both of the first two grounds of the illegality are fatally defective, for the reason that they seek to set up a parol contract made before or at the time of giving the mortgage, and by which it was sought to change its terms. There may have been other reasons which would render them demurrable, but this will suffice. It is not the purchaser from the mortgagors who is asserting title; but the mortgagors who are asserting title for him. The agreement set up was not one made after the mortgage was executed, as in Tucker v. Mann, 124 Ga. 1003, 53 S. E. 504, and Crenshaw v. Wilkes, 134 Ga. 684, 687, 68 S. E. 498, but before or contemporaneous therewith. The amount paid to the mortgagee is not stated, so as to make the plea one of partial payment.

[2] 2. Taking the pleading most strongly against the pleader, there was no positive and unqualified averment that no order was granted authorizing the sale by the sheriff. The affidavit of illegality did use the expression that the sheriff had no order to sell, but immediately thereafter it attacked the order which was granted, and which it referred to as "the pretended order," as being illegal. It showed no reason, however, why it was illegal. Where a defendant fails to replevy personal property levied on under a mortgage fi. fa., it may be sold by special order of the court as in cases of perishable property, or property which is expensive to keep or liable to deteriorate from keeping. Civil Code, § 3301. The allegations in this ground are vague and consist almost entirely of conclusions rather than of fact. If it be taken for granted that by an amended affidavit of illegality the sale could be attacked and an accounting be had for the value of the horse purchased by the mortgagee, the one filed in this case was too vague and indefinite in its character to raise an issue for submission to the jury.

The case of Haunson v. Nelms, 109 Ga. 802, 35 S. E. 227, which was cited by counsel for the plaintiff in error, arose on an equitable petition to set aside a sheriff's sale, where the sheriff had first accepted an affidavit of illegality and agreed not to sell the property, but subsequently changed his mind and sold it in a manner which evidently worked an injustice and a hardship to the defendant. It differs in its facts from the present case.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

McAULAY v. McAULAY.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept., 1913.
On Rehearing, Oct. 29, 1913.)

1. DOWER (§ 20*)—CONVEYANCE IN FRAUD OF WIFE.

A decree which, while giving the widow dower in the real estate of her deceased husband, which he on the day of but prior to the marriage deeded to his daughter, refused to set aside, as in fraud of the wife, his will to his daughter of all his other property, made a few days after the marriage, there having been no valid antenuptial contract, affirmed per an equally divided court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dower, Cent. Dig. § 15; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

Watts and Hydrick, JJ., dissenting.

On Rehearing.

2. COURTS (§ 102*)—SUPREME COURT—VACANCY ON BENCH—POWER TO DECIDE CASE.

Under Const. 1895, art. 5, § 2, providing that the Supreme Court shall consist of five judges, any three of whom shall constitute a quorum for transaction of business, section 6, providing that no judge shall preside at a trial if he have any of certain enumerated disqualifications, and that in case all or any of the judges of the Supreme Court be thus disqualified, or be otherwise prevented from presiding in a cause, the fact shall be certified to the Governor, and he shall immediately commission, specially, the requisite number, and section 12, providing that in all cases decided by the Supreme Court the concurrence of three of the judges shall be necessary for a reversal, the Supreme Court is not without power to decide a case when there is a vacancy, though its decision can only be an affirmance; there being but two judges for reversal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 351, 352; Dec. Dig. § 102.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Abbeville County; R. W. Memminger, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Ressa G. McAulay against Minna M. McAulay, individually, and as executrix of Roderick Hugh McAulay, deceased. From a decree merely setting aside a deed as respects right to dower, part only of the relief asked, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. N. Graydon, of Abbeville, for appellant. Greene & Hill, of Abbeville, for respondent.

FRASER, J. [1] This is an action to set aside a deed and will for fraud, and to establish a contract. The following statement appears in the circuit decree: "From the pleadings and testimony herein it appears that Mr. McAulay, an aged widower of Due West, S. C., with one daughter and considerable property which had come to him from her mother, his deceased wife, became enamoured of a Virginia widow, relict of a deceased minister of the gospel. The Virginia widow had also some property of her own and a small pension from the church. They entered into a long correspondence, much of which is evidence. A visit by Mr. McAulay and his daughter to the widow's home in Virginia, object matrimony, was the result. The widow declined marriage unless provided for out of the McAulay property. She testifies to an oral agreement that that would be done with Mr. McAulay, which the daughter agreed to. They were married, and returned to Due West. In less than two months Mr. McAulay died. On the very day of the marriage he had executed and delivered to the daughter, and she had forwarded for record at Abbeville, a conveyance of his real estate to her, and the same was duly recorded. The deed conveyed the property to the daughter for an expressed consideration of $10 and for love and affection, and the heirs of her body forever, but reserving the right to the grantor a life estate. Within a few days after their return to Due West, Mr. McAulay, without the knowledge of his wife, made a will devising all of his other property to the daughter and her bodily heirs. 'And should she die without heirs of her body and my wife still survives, I desire it to go to her, Ressa G. McAulay, if she still remains single, and at her death or marriage, I desire it to revert' to my kindred brothers and sisters, unless my daughter should will it otherwise.' The daughter was made executrix of this will, and the same has been duly probated, and she has qualified thereon. Practically, therefore, the Virginia widow got nothing by the deed or will."

The deceased wrote a letter to the plaintiff before marriage, stating that he had property, but he had hoped to conceal that fact until after marriage in order to reserve it as a pleasant surprise. He told her, however, that he did not want her to consider the property an inducement, as he wanted the marriage to be purely a "love scrape." The mention of a sordid consideration even by the very young and romantic suitor could not be considered by a court as entirely disingenuous—neither of these parties was young or romantic. As soon as the marriage was arranged, the deceased and the defendant left the house, and the conveyance of the real estate was made immediately before the ceremony.

The plan to defeat the rights of the wife which are about to attach must be perfected at once, and all that could be done to accomplish that purpose was done. The wife has no right in the personal property, and that can wait. They do wait, but not long. It is very clear that, having held out the property as an inducement, the husband at once set out to defeat the main consideration for the marriage, and the means used were the deed and the will. It needs no citation of authorities to show that two papers that are in fact parts of one transaction may be construed as one. The deed has been set aside as to dower. Its invalidity as to dower is conceded. The invalidity is too plain for argument. Why set aside the deed and not the will? The answer is, the wife has a right to dower, inchoate, but still a right, and there is no right to distributive share. The answer would be complete if the right had accrued; but it had not. At the moment the deed was executed there was no more right to dower than to the distributive share. It is not the engagement to be married but the marriage that gives rise to the right of dower. An engaged man may make a deed, and the future wife has no claim of dower. But a deed made in contemplation of marriage, and to defeat the future right of dower, does not deprive the wife of dower, because it is a legal fraud. If this were a business contract, and the obligor had already started a scheme to deprive the obligee of all benefits under the contract, and afterwards had made other dispositions of his property, with the same purpose in view, the courts would not hesitate to set aside every step in the accomplishment of the fraudulent scheme. It may be said that the analogy does not hold because the wife is not a creditor. In this state she is a creditor, and her rights as a creditor are of the most sacred order.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes
79 S.E.—50

Brooks v. McMeekin, 37 S. C. 303, 15 S. E. 1023: "Now, under the decision of our courts, marriage is decided to be a purchase for a valuable consideration of any rights conferred by the law upon the wife, although no expression of such results are mentioned when the contract of marriage is entered into by her. In Rivers v. Thayer, 7 Rich. Eq. 144, Chancellor Dargan announced the proposition in these words: 'Marriage is a valuable consideration. Some have considered it the highest known in law. None would say it was a lower consideration than money. There is nothing unreasonable in this. The great value of the consideration consists in this, that the wife surrenders her person and her self-dominion to the husband, and enters into an indissoluble engagement with him, foregoing all other prospects in life and if the consideration for which she stipulates fails she cannot be restored to the status in quo. She can have no remedy or relief.' In speaking of a wife's right to require the personal estate of her husband to be applied to the liens under the statutes of our state fixing the order of application of such personal estate by the deceased husband's personal representative so as to let in her claim of dower, in the case of Wilson v. McConnell, 9 Rich. Eq. 513, the court uses this language: 'But this claim is met by a corresponding equity on the part of the widow, who is entitled to the position of a purchaser for valuable consideration against all but existing liens—liens existing before marriage.'

McCreery v. Davis, 44 S. C. 226, 22 S. E. 190, 28 L. R. A. 655, 51 Am. St. Rep. 794: "So in Brooks v. McMeekin, 37 S. C. 303, 15 S. E. 1019, this court held: 'We are therefore enabled to declare it to be the law, as derived from our own decisions, that in this commonwealth marriage is a valuable consideration, paid by the wife for those rights and estates that, by our law, are accorded to the wife, as a wife.'"

It is true this authority refers to dower; but the law is not an aggregation of unrelated facts, but a science, and its rules ought to be followed to their legitimate and just consequences. It is true that a man can dispose of his personal property by will, and thereby defeat the third that would otherwise go to his wife. The question is, Can a man go to the altar with a well-defined and half-executed plan to deprive his bride of every consideration for which she marries him, and have the courts sustain the plan? Whether the consideration be money or love, both must go when the plan is revealed. Unless the rights of innocent purchasers for value are impaired, it ought not to be sustained. It is also true that a man may sell his property, and thereby defeat the claim of creditors; but, if the court finds that the sale was made for the purpose of hindering, delaying, or defeating creditors, the sale is void as to all who participated in that purpose, even though the purchaser paid full value.

Lowry v. Pinson, 2 Bailey, 324, 23 Am. Dec. 140: "A sale of lands, made for the purpose of defeating the recovery of damages for a breach of promise of marriage, is fraudulent and void, if the purchaser have notice of the fraudulent intent, although the agreement for the sale was made before suit brought for the breach of promise, and although the purchaser paid an adequate consideration, and went into immediate possession, and the whole of the purchase money was in fact applied to the payment of bona fide creditors of the vendor."

It is said in State v. Chemical Co., 71 S. C. 560, 51 S. E. 464: "The plan may make the parts unlawful."

It is urged that there is no justice in taking any of this property from the defendant, because it was really hers, and was the savings from the income from her mother's property. There is no satisfactory proof of this. The evidence makes the income so small that it is difficult to see how the deceased saved anything at all from the combined income of husband and wife, and leads to the conclusion that there were other resources of which the defendant and her witness know nothing. A witness urged him to put the Due West property in his wife's name. "He replied that he didn't think a minister should put his property under his wife's petticoat." If it were his wife's, there was no impropriety. Even if the property in the name of the deceased had been bought with the income derived from her mother's estate, and her father did not inherit from his deceased wife the one-third now claimed by the plaintiff, yet, if, as the testimony shows (she did not contradict it), the defendant represented to the plaintiff before the marriage that her father was worth $10,000, she cannot now claim that the property is and was her own. 1 Bigelow on Fraud, p. 462. "Where a marriage has taken place on the faith of representations made by a third person, in regard to the circumstances of one of the parties to the marriage, such third person must make good his representation."

It may be, as suggested in argument, that it was modesty that kept the defendant from the stand. If so, we respect it; but, however great our respect for womanly modesty, it is not a substitute for evidence in the courts. The courts are bound by the evidence.

It is said the widow cannot claim both dower and a distributive share. The statute says "accept" and not "claim." The widow has not accepted either, and claims a distributive share.

The second exception must be sustained. The plaintiff's services must have been worth at least her lodging and food, and were not a provision under the contract. The exceptions that refer to the competency of evidence under section 438 of the Code are overruled as in contravention of the statute. Those that refer to the sufficiency of the contract are overruled. The contract was too vague and indefinite, even if it could have been proved.

This court can and does set aside the deed and will, because they were parts of one scheme to defeat the rights of the plaintiff, and the case is remanded for partition.

GARY, C. J., concurs in the result.

WATTS, J. (dissenting). I cannot concur in the opinion of Mr. Justice FRASER herein. Without the testimony of the appellant, not even a semblance of contract is established in reference to a marriage contract between Ressa G. McAulay and Roderick Hugh McAulay, and her testimony is inadmissible and in contravention of the statute. Section 438 of the Code. To admit this evidence would annul and abrogate this important section. The letters introduced do not establish any binding contract, and are vague and uncertain. They are just such letters as may be expected some persons do write when they expect to persuade some woman to marry the writer. An examination of McAulay's letter to the plaintiff will show that there was an agreement to marry between the parties already before he made any statement of his intentions to provide for her, and these statements of his intention to so provide were not made to secure a contract of marriage, for he says: "I wanted to take you by surprise in all of this; but the pressure was so great on you that I could not. * * * Let me know at once, so that I can make other arrangements, if you decide not to stand to our promise and betrothal to each other."

A reading of the correspondence convinces me that McAulay already had her agreement to marry him, and was only stating what his intentions were after the marriage contract was performed, and statements made by him as to what he intended to do for his wife were made by him, not in order to induce her to contract marriage with him, for she had already made the agreement, but were a mere expression of intention on his part to do what he would have done in the natural course of events. It is natural to suppose that the husband would do his duty and make reasonable provision for the support of the wife of his bosom after his decease; but, if the woman has any doubt about it, she should protect herself by a valid legal contract made before marriage, and, if she gives herself in marriage without this, then she takes the consequences. A woman who marries without a marriage contract takes the risk of inheriting whatever her husband gives her. If he dies intestate, she gets her share, whatever that may be. If he leaves a will, she is bound by that, unless she elects to claim her dower rights, and refuses to accept under the will. To hold otherwise would be to prevent a man who marries to dispose of his property as he sees fit. Whatever intention a person has at one time as to the disposition of his property, he has the right to change that intention before he carries it out, and dispose of it differently, as was said in McKeegan v. O'Neill, 22 S. C. 473. McKeegan, in writing to his nephew in regard to certain negotiations for the sale of certain land, states price, and says: "But you will get all I am worth at my death." The court says, in regard to the intention of McKeegan: "No doubt he intended to do this, and when he wrote this letter this intention was present in his mind, not as a part of the proposed sale of Cloney, but as a long-existing intention, altogether disconnected from Cloney, and this remark was thrown in, not as an inducement for Francis to buy, but as a reason why he was willing to take from him £100 less than from any one else." Later the same case says: "The remark of John McKeegan that the plaintiff would get all of his property at his death was not put upon the event of the purchase of Cloney, or as dependent in any way upon the negotiations in reference to Cloney, but as a mere statement of what he, John McKeegan, had intended to do long since voluntarily, and without regard to any consideration moving him thereto."

But take plaintiff's testimony (which I think inadmissible under section 438 of Code 1912). She cannot rely on letter of July 31, 1911, as she says, when McAulay came to her house in 1911: "All matters relating to our marriage had been broken off, or I had refused his offer of marriage." The defendant introduced in evidence letters written by plaintiff to defendant, dated after July 29, 1911, and plaintiff announced in said letters that she did not intend to marry McAulay, and asked that the matter be dropped, and the matter terminated, and by her testimony shows that in September, 1911, when another proposal was made, it was upon another and entirely different ground, that each was to own his or her separate estate, and neither was to have any rights in the estate of the other. This proposition was not accepted. The plaintiff's claim must be based, not on the letters, but what took place at her home on the night previous to the marriage and the morning of the marriage, as the previous proposition made in the letters had been refused, and could not be made the basis of the contract of marriage. "An offer that had been refused is no longer the basis of a contract between the original parties. No subsequent acceptance of it, unless the offer is renewed, will create any obligation." 7 Enc. of Law, 128; Hyde v. Wrench, 3 Beav. 334, 6 E. R. C. 139; Smith v. Taylor, 82 Cal. 583, 23 Pac. 220.

All of the testimony of the plaintiff as to what took place between her and McAulay is incompetent to establish the contract of marriage between them under section 438 of Code, and in addition to this such a contract is not binding under the statute of frauds, unless it is in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith, and there is no such contract here.

In the case of Davidson v. Graves, Riley, Eq. 230, it is held: "In the second place, a parol promise in consideration of marriage is void; bonds and deeds executed in conformity thereto after marriage are merely gratuitous, and must, as voluntary securities and conveyances, be postponed to creditors.

* * * But a third objection is to my mind decisive of the whole case; all proof of a verbal promise before marriage is inadmissible, and cannot be heard. When the statute is pleaded or interposed, as an objection to hearing the proof, as in this case, it must first be decided on, and, if the case made or proposed to be proved is within the statute, the evidence is not heard." The rule is the same whether the agreement be for the marriage of the contracting parties or that one of them shall marry some other person. "The original contract relied upon was upon condition that the plaintiff in error would marry a certain man. That contract is claimed to have been changed by various conversations and dealings between the parties; but, whatever the terms of the final agreement, they were the outgrowth of the original contract that claimant should marry the man Diamond. However varied in terms, the promises all grew out of the agreement. No written evidence was offered by the claimant in proof of that contract.

* * * The alleged promise, being oral, and given originally in consideration of marriage, was within the statute of frauds, and no action could be maintained upon it."

Austin v. Kuehn, 211 Ill. 115, 71 N. E. 842.

The appellant contends that by marrying McAulay she fully performed her part of the agreement, and the contract of marriage consummated, and the statute of frauds had no application. This contention cannot be sustained. Pomeroy on Contracts, under the head of "Specific Performance" (2d Ed., 111) says: "When a verbal contract is made in relation to or upon the consideration of marriage, the marriage alone is not a part performance upon which to decree specific execution. This rule, which is firmly established, is based upon the express language of the statute. A promise made in anticipation of marriage, followed by a marriage, is the exact case contemplated by the statute. It is plain that the marriage adds nothing to the very circumstances described by the statutory provision, which makes the writing essential. In fact, until a marriage takes place, there is no binding agreement independent of a statute. So that the marriage itself is a necessary part of every agreement made upon a consideration of it, which the Legislature has said must be in writing." Beach, in his Modern Equity Jurisprudence (section 622), says: "It is well settled that marriage is not an act of part performance which will take a parol contract out of the statute, for the statute expressly provides that a contract in consideration of marriage shall not be binding unless it is in writing."

I think the decree of his honor should be affirmed, and construe it to mean that the appellant has no interest in the property except by way of dower.

Judgment affirmed.

HYDRICK, J. I concur in affirming the judgment below, on the ground that the contract upon which the action was brought was within the statute of frauds. I do not think that plaintiff's testimony narrating the conversation which took place between her and the defendant in the presence of Mr. McAulay is obnoxious to section 438 of the Code of Procedure, as will appear by examination of the cases cited in the footnote to that section.

On Rehearing.

GARY, C. J. [2] When this case was heard by the Supreme Court, it was composed of five members—Mr. Justice WOODS being one of them—but the opinion was not filed until he had resigned for the purpose of accepting the office of United States Circuit Judge. The decision was rendered by an evenly divided court. The appellant's attorney filed a petition for a rehearing on several grounds, the first of which is that the court was without power to render the decision, for the reason that it was then composed only of four members. The following sections in the Constitution of 1895, together with the corresponding sections in the Constitution of 1868, are applicable to this question:

Constitution of 1895.

Section 2, art. 5: "The Supreme Court shall consist of a Chief Justice and four Associate Justices, any three of whom shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business."

Section 6, art. 5: "No judge shall preside at the trial of any cause in the event of which he may be interested, or when either of the parties shall be connected with him by affinity or consanguinity, within such degrees as may be prescribed by law, or in which he may have been counsel, or have presided in any inferior court. In case all or any of the justices of the Supreme Court shall be thus disqualified, or be otherwise prevented from presiding in any cause or causes, the court or the justices thereof shall certify the same to the Governor of the State, and he shall immediately commission, specially, the requisite number of men learned in the law for the trial and determination thereof."

Section 12, art. 5: "In all cases decided by the Supreme Court the concurrence of three of the justices shall be necessary for a reversal of the judgment below, subject to the provisions hereinafter prescribed."

Constitution of 1868.

Section 2, art. 4: "The Supreme Court shall consist of a Chief Justice and two Associate Justices, any two of whom shall constitute a quorum."

Section 6, art. 4: "No judge shall preside on the trial of any cause in the event of which he may be interested, or where either of the parties may be connected with him by affinity or consanguinity, within such degrees as may be prescribed by law, or in which he may have been counsel, or have presided in any inferior court, except by consent of all the parties. In case all or any of the judges of the Supreme Court shall be thus disqualified from presiding in any cause or causes, the court or the judges thereof shall certify the same to the Governor of the state, and he shall immediately commission, specially, the requisite number of men learned in the law for the trial and determination thereof."

Section 12, art. 4: "In all cases decided by the Supreme Court, a concurrence of two of the judges shall be necessary to a decision."

In construing the foregoing sections from the Constitution of 1868, in the case of Williams v. Benet, 35 S. C. 150, 14 S. E. 311, 14 L. R. A. 825, the court said: "It is contended, however, that there cannot be a constitutional quorum without there is in existence the full number of members provided for by the Constitution. If this proposition be true as applied to the Supreme Court, we see no reason why it should not be true of every other body of which a number less than the whole is legally declared to be a quorum, and we think we may safely venture to say that such a proposition as to any other body has never been accepted and never could be accepted as correct, without paralyzing, to some extent at least, the arm of at least two of the great departments of the government. Such a proposition rests upon a fundamental misconception of the term 'quorum,' and the purposes for which it is used. The very purpose in providing for the transaction of business of any given body or tribunal by a quorum is to prevent the stoppage of the public business when a portion of the whole membership may from any cause fail to attend at the time appointed, and whether such failure results from death or some temporary cause cannot affect the question. The mischief intended to be provided against is the failure of the whole number to attend, and we do not see how it can possibly make any difference whether such failure results from one cause or another."

Again, the court said: "The framers of the Constitution must be regarded as having contemplated the contingency that at some time all of the members of the Supreme Court would not be in attendance, and therefore, to provide for such a contingency, after declaring who should constitute the Supreme Court, they immediately afterwards, and in the same sentence, qualified this general declaration by providing that any two of the constituent members of the court should constitute a quorum, so that the court might proceed with its business just as if the court were full. Any other view would, it seems to us, completely nullify the provision for a quorum. There is nothing whatever in the Constitution indicating an intention that the provision for a quorum should only apply in case of a temporary absence of one of the members of the court, and, on the contrary, the language used is equally applicable where the failure of such member to attend is occasioned by death as where it results from some temporary cause. Such, as we have seen, is the accepted view in relation to the highest judicial tribunal in this country, where the language constituting it is practically identical with that which we are called upon to construe, and such, so far as we are informed, is the universally accepted view in relation to all bodies where provision is made for a quorum."

We desire to call special attention to the further language of the court in that case, that, "from the very words of this section (section 6), it is very manifest that its purpose was not to declare or provide anything in regard to the necessary elements, constituting the Supreme Court." (Italics added.) It will thus be seen that section 6, art. 5, of the present Constitution was not intended to provide anything, with regard to the elements necessary to constitute the Supreme Court, for that had already been done in section 2; but its purpose was to prevent judges who are disqualified by reason of interest in the cause or relationship to parties from presiding, and to provide the manner of filling their places, and the places of those who, for any other reason, may not be able to sit.

The case just mentioned is conclusive of the question under consideration, unless section 29, art. 1, Constitution of 1895, requires us to adopt a different construction. That section is as follows: "The provisions of the Constitution shall be taken, deemed, and construed to be mandatory and prohibitory, and not merely directory, except where made directory or permissive by its own terms." It is contended that, as the provisions of the Constitution must be deemed to be mandatory, the Supreme Court is without power to hear a cause or render a decision, when there is a vacancy caused by death, resignation, or temporary disqualification; but that, before the court can hear a cause or render a decision, it must certify the cause of disqualification to the Governor, and must postpone action until he has commissioned, specially, the requisite number of men for the trial and determination of such causes.

Section 29, art. 1, Constitution of 1895, however, must also be construed to be mandatory as to the provision in section 2, art. 5, of the Constitution, that any three justices of the Supreme Court shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. It will thus be seen that section 29, art. 1, of the Constitution, is not conclusive of the question under consideration, and that we are therefore at liberty to resort to other canons of construction.

At the time the Constitution of 1895 was adopted section 6, art. 4, Constitution of 1868 (which is practically identical with section 6, art. 5, Constitution of 1895), had already been construed by the Supreme Court in Williams v. Benet, 35 S. C. 150; 14 S. E. 311, 14 L. R. A. 825, and effect can be given to section 6, art. 5, Constitution of 1895, by adopting the construction therein placed upon section 6, art. 4, Constitution of 1868. Whereas, if we adopt the construction for which the appellant's attorney contends, it would render null and void the provision that any three justices of the Supreme Court shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of the business.

There is another reason why the construction for which the appellant's attorney contends should not prevail, to wit, it would render section 6, art. 5, of the Constitution, inconsistent with the provision in section 12, art. 5, of the Constitution, that: "In all cases decided by the Supreme Court the concurrence of three of the justices shall be necessary for a reversal of the judgment below. * * *" It will be observed that the concurrence of three justices is only necessary for a reversal of the judgment below.

The cases of Florence v. Berry, 62 S. C. 469, 40 S. E. 871, and Hutchinson v. Turner, 88 S. C. 318, 70 S. E. 410, 806, show that it does not require three justices to affirm a judgment, yet, if the views of the appellant's attorney should be accepted, it would be necessary for three justices to concur in affirming, as well as in reversing, the judgment below. It will thus be seen that, if section 6, art. 5, of the Constitution, should be given the force and effect for which the appellant's attorney contends, it would be inconsistent, not only with section 2, art. 5, of the Constitution, but also with section 12, art. 5, of the Constitution. Such a construction would be violative of the rule announced in Deik v. Zorn, 48 S. C. 149, 26 S. E. 466, that, "when two sections * * * are inconsistent, effect will ordinarily be given to that section which is in harmony with other provisions, rather than to that which is inconsistent with more than one provision" of the Constitution.

The fact that section 6 of article 4, Constitution of 1868, was incorporated in the Constitution of 1895 as section 6, art. 5, after it had been construed in the manner hereinbefore stated, shows it was not intended that it should have the effect of rendering null and void section 2, which provides that three justices shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. The rule in such cases is thus stated in 3 Cyc. 739: "It is an established rule of construction that, where a constitutional provision has received a judicial construction, and it is afterwards incorporated in a new or revised constitution, it will be presumed to have been retained with a knowledge of that construction, and courts will be bound to adhere to it."

The next ground for a rehearing is that a decision cannot be rendered by an evenly divided court. It is only necessary to refer to the following language from the case of Hutchinson v. Turner, 88 S. C. 318, 70 S. E. 410, 806, to show that this ground is without merit: "When the Constitution was adopted, it was therein provided that the Supreme Court should consist of an even number of justices. And, as this was unusual, the framers deemed it advisable, in order to prevent confusion, to state the effect of a decision, when the justices were evenly divided in opinion, viz.: That the judgment below should be affirmed. This was merely the adoption of the rule which would have prevailed, even without that provision, especially when there was the further provision that, in all cases decided by the Supreme Court, the concurrence of three justices was necessary for a reversal of the judgment below. If the Constitution had failed to provide that a less number than the five justices composing the court should constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, then the appellant would have ground for contending that a decision could not be rendered when the justices are equally divided in opinion, as it could not be foretold whether the fifth justice would concur with the two justices in favor of a reversal, and thereby change the result. As any three justices are sufficient to constitute a quorum for the transaction of the business, a decision may be rendered when the court is composed of three members, two of whom favor affirming the judgment below, while the third is in favor of reversing it. The fact that a fourth justice participates does not change this result: the concurrence of three being necessary for a reversal."

As to the other grounds for rehearing, the court is satisfied that no material question of law, or of fact, has either been overlooked or disregarded. It is therefore ordered that the petition be dismissed, and that the order heretofore granted staying the remittitur be revoked.

HYDRICK and WATTS, JJ., concur.

FRASER, J. I concur in the result. I think the Constitution requires a temporary appointment to fill the place of a justice who is disqualified in a particular case; but there is no provision for filling the place of a justice whose place is vacant, except section 11 of article 5, and that provides for filling his place for the unexpired term. That provision is as follows: "All vacancies in the Supreme Court or inferior tribunals shall be filled by elections as herein prescribed: Provided, that if the unexpired term does not exceed one year such vacancy may be filled by executive appointment." This vacancy exceeds one year. It is true that section 6 of article 5, provides: "In case all or any of the justices of the Supreme Court shall be thus disqualified, or be otherwise prevented from presiding in any cause or causes, the court or the justices thereof shall certify the same to the Governor of the state, and he shall immediately commission, specially, the requisite number of men learned in the law for the trial and determination thereof." The words "otherwise prevented from presiding" are general enough to cover all cases; but the specific words that immediately precede this general expression are disqualifications. The rule is well stated in Sutherland on Statutory Construction, § 268, as follows: "When there are general words following particular and specific words, the former must be confined to things of the same kind." It seems to me, therefore, that the general words refer to disqualifications.

This is not in conflict with the point decided in Williams v. Benet, 35 S. C. 153, 14 S. E. 311, 14 L. R. A. 825. That case, like this, was a case of a vacancy and it is authority on that point. It seems to me that the point in this case is the filling of a vacancy. I think that there is no authority to fill the place of Mr. Justice Woods (the unexpired term being more than one year), and, unless the number of justices should become less than a quorum, the remaining justices can continue to transact the business of the court. This construction gives effect to every word of the Constitution, and, I think, is in entire accord with well-established rules of construction. But, as I understand the question before this court, the exact question is, "Is it necessary to have the Governor fill the vacancy in order to authorize this court to hear and determine a case?" On this question, the court is unanimous in saying, "It is not necessary."

IN RE BROWN'S ESTATE.

BROWN et al. v. FRIERSON.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 21, 1913.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 29*)—APPOINTMENT—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

Where the probate court has jurisdiction to appoint an administrator, the appointment cannot be collaterally attacked.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 177-182, 1411; Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 17*)—APPOINTMENT—PERSONS ENTITLED—"LEGAL REPRESENTATIVE."

Under Civ. Code 1912, § 3605, providing that persons are entitled to letters of administration in the following order, that is, first decedent's husband and wife, second, if there be no husband or wife or if they do not apply, then to the children or "legal representative," the guardian of minor children was properly appointed administrator as against decedent's brother, where the widow withdrew her application and asked that he be appointed; "legal representative" being defined as one who lawfully represents another in any manner whatever; any person who by operation of law stands in the place of and represents the interest of another.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 43-59; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4070-4079; vol. 8, p. 7704.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Lee County; Ernest Gary, Judge.

In the matter of Brown's Estate. From an order appointing S. W. Frierson as administrator, J. Ellerbe Brown and another appeal. Affirmed.

The orders of the probate and circuit courts are as follows:

Order.

Whereas, an application in due form of law as appears by proceedings, recorded in the office of the Probate Court for the County of Lee in said State has been made to me by Hattie P. Brown to appoint S. W. Frierson guardian of the person and estate of Anna Linna Brown, L. V. Brown and Roddy M. Brown, minors, now residing in the County of Lee in said State, are entitled to a distributive share of the estate of Leonard V. Brown, late of the County of Lee in said State, and whereas, the said S. W. Frierson has filed his bond in this office as such guardian as required by law:

Now, therefore, for the better securing of said estate for the benefit of said minors and for their more careful maintenance and education I do hereby commit the tuition, guardianship and education of the said Anna Linna Brown, L. V. Brown and Roddy M. Brown to you the said S. W. Frierson charging you to maintain them in meat, drink, washing, lodging, clothing and such good education as may be fitting according to circumstances of interest of the said minors during their minority, take charge of their estate, do such things as the guardian should and render a true and faithful account of the said estate and of your management thereof when thereunto duly required.

Given under my hand and seal this 10th day of December in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twelve and in the one hundred and thirty-seventh year of the Independence of the United States of America.

(Signed) John M. Smith (L. S.)
Judge of Probate for Lee County.

Order.

This matter comes on to be heard by me on appeal from the Court of Probate. I heard said appeal in open Court at Bishopville, but reserved my decision until this date. After hearing argument, pro and con, and after carefully considering the ground of said appeal, I am convinced that the order of the Judge of Probate in appointing S. W. Frierson, guardian, who is guardian of the infant children of the deceased, as Administrator of the estate of L. V. Brown, should be sustained.

I find that the Judge of Probate followed the order laid down in the statute and that he committed no error in appointing the said S. W. Frierson, who I find was the guardian and legal representative of the infant children of the said L. V. Brown as Administrator of the said estate.

The appeal is therefore overruled and the action of the Probate Court affirmed. Let a copy of this Order be certified to the Court of Probate for Lee County.

Dated Sumter, S. C., March 27th, 1913.
(Signed) Ernest Gary,
Presiding Judge in Third Circuit.

A. B. Stuckey and Marion W. Seabrook, both of Sumter, and D. W. Robinson, of Columbia, for appellants. L. D. Jennings and R. D. Epps, both of Sumter, and T. G. McLeod, of Bishopville, for respondent.

WATTS, J. This is an appeal from an order of John M. Smith, probate judge for Lee county, appointing S. W. Frierson as administrator of the estate of L. V. Brown, deceased. The appeal from this order was heard by his honor, Ernest Gary, at Bishopville, and his honor overruled the appeal and affirmed order of probate court. The record discloses that L. V. Brown was killed by a train of cars at Lynchburg, November 15, 1912; that he died intestate, leaving a widow, Hattie P. Brown, and three small children, aged six, four, and two respectively; that he left a small personal estate of the value approximately of $500; that it will be necessary for administrator to bring suit against railroad for alleged wrongful killing. The record shows that Mrs. Brown, the widow, applied for letters of administration on November 20, 1912, and citation duly issued returnable on December 5, 1912; that on November 25th she withdrew this petition, or attempted to do so by filing another petition, asking that S. W. Frierson be appointed administrator, and at the same time Frierson applied for letters of administration. Upon these two petitions a citation was issued returnable on December 10, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m. Upon this day a petition was presented by the brothers, one J. E. Brown was the oldest half-brother of the deceased, and George O. Brown, the only brother of the deceased of the whole blood, asking for their appointment as administrators of the deceased's estate, and protesting against the appointment of Frierson. The widow and her children are the sole heirs and distributees of the estate of the deceased and sole beneficiaries, under the statute against the railroad, known as the "Lord Campbell's Act," and amendment thereto. Upon proper petition the probate court on December 10, 1912, duly appointed S. W. Frierson the general guardian of the minor children of the deceased, L. V. Brown, and his widow, and this petition was made by Hattie P. Brown, with whom the children lived; she being their mother. When the hearing was had for the appointment of the administrator of the estate, the probate court appointed Frierson administrator (the widow asked this) in preference to the brother and half-brother. The order of the probate court and circuit court should be set out in the report of the case. From order of circuit court, J. Ellerbe Brown and George O. Brown appeal and seek to reverse the same.

The appellants by their exceptions present the question as to who is the proper person entitled to administer under the statute, and contend further that Frierson's appointment as guardian of the minors was illegal, null, and void, and done for the purpose of circumventing the provisions of the statute law of the state, and done secretly and surreptitiously, after the time set forth for the hearing of the cause, without their knowledge or consent. The record shows that the children were minors, living with their mother, under the age of 14 years, and upon a proper petition presented to proper authority Frierson was adjudged by a court of competent jurisdiction a fit and proper person to be appointed guardian of the minor children, that he was duly appointed and qualified as guardian of the children, and thereby became their legal representative; that the proceedings appointing him as guardian have not been appealed from, or in any manner attacked by any direct proceedings against him to set them aside.

[1] There is no question but the probate court for Lee county had jurisdiction to make the appointment, and, having done so, the appointment cannot be attacked collaterally. Section 3605 of the Code of Laws, 1912, prescribes the order in which persons are entitled to letters of administration.

First comes the husband and wife of the deceased, with proviso as to power to revoke, etc. The second is as follows: "If there be no husband or wife of the deceased, or if they do not apply, then to the child or children, or their legal representatives."

[2] We think that this expression is broad enough to sustain the order appealed from. The widow applied for letters and withdrew her application and asked that Frierson be appointed; the children were minors, and Frierson was their guardian, duly appointed, qualified, and commissioned as such, and thereby became their legal representative, and entitled to administer in preference to class 3 or class 4, in which last class the full brother would have been entitled to the letters of administration. In 25 Cyc. 175, the term "legal representative" is defined: "One who lawfully represents another in any matter whatever; one who legally and lawfully represents another in any matter or thing of whatever nature or character it may be; any person, natural or artificial, who, by operation of law, stands in the place of, and represents the interests of another; any person or corporation having a beneficial interest in property, real or personal; one who takes under the statute of distribution; sometimes the term is used as synonymous with 'representative,' 'lawful representative,' or 'personal representative.'" This view is sustained by decisions of other states. McLain v. Bedgood, 89 Ga. 793, 15 S. E. 670; Johnson v. Ames, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 173; in re Weeks' Estate, 40 Ind. App. 139, 81 N. E. 107; Mattox v. Embry, 131 Ga. 283, 62 S. E. 202.

The exceptions are overruled.

Judgment affirmed.

GARY, C. J., and HYDRICK and FRASER, JJ., concur.

EBERLE v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 24, 1913.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 253*)—MILEAGE TICKETS—SUBSEQUENT TARIFFS—EFFECT ON TICKETS ISSUED.

Where defendant carrier, under schedules filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, sold a mileage ticket to plaintiff, providing that tickets issued in exchange for mileage coupons would be honored for continuous passage to destination when presented in connection with the mileage ticket without limitation as to time, it could not by filing new schedules, providing that mileage tickets so exchanged would be honored only for continuous passage to destination commencing on the date stamped on the back thereof, which date should be that on which the tickets were issued in exchange for coupons, change plaintiff's contract so as to limit the time of use of tickets issued on his book, and the fact that such tickets were good for transportation in accordance with plaintiff's contract did not constitute a discrimination in violation of the interstate commerce act (Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, 24 Stat. 379 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3154]).

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1011, 1012, 1013, 1016-1018; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1062*)—INSTRUCTION—PREJUDICE.

Where plaintiff, in an action against a carrier for refusal to accept a mileage ticket for transportation, was entitled to a peremptory instruction that the ticket tendered was good, defendant was not prejudiced by an instruction that its agents could waive a stipulation in the contract with reference to limitation of tickets issued on mileage and leaving it to the jury to say whether they had done so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4212-4218; Dec. Dig. § 1062.*]

3. DAMAGES (§ 91*)—PUNITIVE DAMAGES—TORTS.

Though a tort-feasor is not conscious of an invasion of the rights of another, yet if a tort is committed in such a manner or under such circumstances that the jury may find that a person of ordinary reason and prudence would have been conscious of it as such, it warrants the infliction of punitive damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 193-201; Dec. Dig. § 91.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Hampton County.

"To be officially reported."

Action by A. S. Eberle against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. Moore and J. W. Manuel, both of Hampton, for appellant. J. W. Vincent and George Warren, both of Hampton, for respondent.

HYDRICK, J. This appeal is from a judgment against defendant for damages for the unlawful and wanton invasion of the rights of the plaintiff, as a passenger, by one of defendant's ticket collectors. The action grew out of the following facts: On July 12, 1910, plaintiff purchased one of defendant's mileage tickets, the coupons of which were exchangeable for passage tickets, which, by the terms of the contract, were to be honored "when presented in connection with the mileage ticket." This mileage ticket was issued in accordance with the schedule of rates which had been filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and published and was in effect at that time. Thereafter defendant filed with the Commission a mileage ticket contract, wherein the requirement as to the exchange of mileage coupons for passage tickets and the use thereof was changed, so that such tickets would "be honored for continuous passage to destinations commencing on date stamped on back of such exchange tickets, which dates shall be the dates on which such tickets are issued in exchange for coupons." This modification of the previous tariff went into effect September 21, 1910, and was effective on May 19, 1911, when defendant's ticket collector refused to honor a passage ticket from Charlotte, N. C., to Columbia, S. C., which plaintiff had obtained on October 15, 1910, by exchange of coupons from his mileage ticket, after the new mileage ticket contract had gone into effect. For reasons unnecessary to state, plaintiff decided not to use the ticket on the date of issue, which was stamped on the back of it. The ticket collector refused to honor it on the ground that it was out of date; passage not having been commenced on the date of issue.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Plaintiff testified in substance: "On deciding not to use ticket that day, went to defendant's agent at Charlotte and asked him to take it back and give me back the coupons. He refused, but said agent at Columbia would redeem ticket; saw agent at Columbia next day; said he had formerly redeemed such tickets but had not done so for some time, but that it would be redeemed if sent to Atlanta office; asked him if I could ride on it, and he said, 'Certainly I could.' On May 19, 1911, became passenger on defendant's road from Charlotte to Columbia and presented this ticket to ticket collector, who refused to honor it on the ground that it was out of date, and threatened to eject me unless I would pay fare in cash. He refused to hear or heed my explanation as to how I happened to have the ticket, and as to what defendant's agents had told me, and insulted me by telling me that I might have stolen it, and that I was lying in what I was saying about it, and that he would eject me if I did not pay my fare. On my refusal to pay and threat to forcibly resist expulsion from train, he contemptuously told me that he would pay my fare and make me a present of it. Under the circumstances I paid my fare in cash."

It appears from some of the allegations of the complaint, and testimony elicited, and the argument of plaintiff's attorneys, that they sought to bring this case within the principles of Smith v. Railway, 88 S. C. 421, 70 S. E. 1057, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 708. But that case was different from this in at least two material particulars: First, in that case no question of any departure from the tariff made and filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and published, as required by the act of Congress, or from the privileges therein and thereby contracted for, was raised by pleading or proof or presented to the circuit court and relied upon as a defense, and therefore no such question was properly before or decided by this court. Second, the contract in that case provided that the mileage coupons would be honored in exchange for passage tickets, which would be issued "in accordance with special tariffs and circulars of instructions," and that provision was one of the grounds of decision, but it does not appear that the plaintiff's contract contained any such provision.

[1] On the other hand, defendant's attorney contends that this case is within the act regulating commerce and the principles of those cases which hold that the carrier cannot depart from the tariff filed and published, as required by that act, and the privileges and facilities therein granted and allowed.

Defendant's contention that the filing of a subsequent tariff had the effect of canceling and annulling the contract which it had made with the plaintiff is untenable. The case of Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mottley, 219 U. S. 467, 31 Sup. Ct. 171, 55 L. Ed. 297, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 671, is relied upon to sustain that contention. But learned counsel has evidently overlooked the difference between the effect of an act of Congress and an act of the railroad company upon such contracts. In the Mottley Case the court held that an act of Congress, passed within the exercise of its constitutional power to regulate commerce, which made unlawful the contract which had theretofore been lawful, rendered it incapable of enforcement. But that is very different from holding that the railroad company can, by any act of its own, destroy the validity of its own valid contracts. Such a proposition cannot be sustained upon reason or authority.

It is true that, when a schedule of rates has been filed and published as required by the act, it has the force and effect of law, and, until changed in the manner prescribed by law, it cannot be departed from in favor of any passenger or shipper so as to give him any undue preference or advantage, or subject others to any unjust or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage, or create any unjust discrimination. But it is equally true that, when a member of the public makes a contract with a carrier, which the act regulating commerce permits the carrier to make, and which is in accordance with the tariff in effect when it is made, the carrier cannot, by any act of its own, destroy or impair the validity of such contract. To hold otherwise would violate the fundamental principles of law and justice. The contract which defendant made with the plaintiff, in selling him the mileage ticket, did not violate either the letter or the spirit of the interstate commerce law. The sale of such tickets is not only not prohibited by the act but is authorized, in express terms, in section 22 (Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, 24 Stat. 387 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3170]). The authority to make such contracts carried with it, by necessary implication, the right and duty to perform them according to their terms; and it also implied the declaration of Congress that, in the making and performing of such contracts, no such discrimination would be created as the act was intended to prohibit.

In Interstate Com. Com. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 145 U. S. 263, 12 Sup. Ct. 844, 36 L. Ed. 699, the court affirmed the right of carriers to sell "party rate" tickets at a lower rate than regular individual tickets on the ground that it was not an unjust discrimination in favor of the persons using them. That principle was reaffirmed in Texas & P. R. Co. v. Interstate Com. Com., 162 U. S. 197, 16 Sup. Ct. 668, 40 L. Ed. 940, and in Interstate Com. Com. v. Alabama M. R. Co., 168 U. S. 144, 18 Sup. Ct. 45, 42 L. Ed. 414.

In this case no difference was made in plaintiff's favor in the rate. The only difference between plaintiff's contract and the one subsequently filed appears to be in the time when passage tickets must be used after having been issued. We are unable to see wherein carrying out the plaintiff's contract, as to that requirement, would have given him any such undue or unreasonable preference or advantage over other passengers as the act was intended to prevent.

Plaintiff's contract, having been made in accordance with and under the sanction of the law, was valid, and the subsequent filing and publication of a tariff containing a different contract cannot be allowed to have the effect of canceling and annulling the exchange requirement of his contract and substituting for it the one subsequently filed and published. It would be as sound in principle to hold that the company could by a subsequent tariff cut down the time within which the mileage coupons in the ticket which it sold plaintiff could be used from one year to three months and thereby confiscate those which had not been used at the end of three months as to say that it could in that way destroy or impair the validity of that part of the contract which provides that passage tickets obtained by exchange for coupons from the ticket will be honored at any time within the year when presented with the mileage ticket.

This case does not fall within the principle of the Armour Packing Co. Case, 209 U. S. 57, 28 Sup. Ct. 428, 52 L. Ed. 681, which dealt with a violation of the interstate commerce act by carrying out a contract for a rate for the transportation of property, after it had been changed by the filing and publication of a higher rate. The act not only does not sanction the making of such contracts but by necessary implication forbids it, because, if allowed, they could be used as a means of creating and continuing the very discriminations and inequalities in rates which the act was intended to prevent and thereby thwart its purpose. But the act expressly permits the sale of mileage, commutation, and excursion tickets, and, as we have seen, the permission is tantamount to a declaration that no unjust discrimination will be wrought thereby and carries with it the right and the correlative duty to perform such contracts according to their terms. It appears, therefore, that the ticket tendered by plaintiff was good and should have been honored, not because of any supposed waiver of any stipulation of the contract by the defendant's agents, as plaintiff's counsel attempted to show, but because it was issued and presented in accordance with the terms of the contract. The Aldrich Case, 79 S. E. 316, recently filed, and the cases therein cited, show clearly that plaintiff could have acquired no right by virtue of anything that either of defendant's agents told him. No statement which they, or either of them, made to him gave his contract any more validity or vitality than it already had.

[2] Therefore, while the court erred in charging the jury that defendant's agents could waive the stipulation of the contract, and in leaving it to the jury to say whether they had done so, the error was favorable to defendant, because it afforded defendant an opportunity of escape from liability on the finding against the alleged waiver, when the plaintiff was entitled to have the jury instructed that the ticket was good and that it should have been honored. Therefore the error was not prejudicial.

[3] The only other question made by the exceptions is whether the court erred in refusing to charge defendant's second request, to wit: "If the jury shall find that defendant's agent on train threatened to eject plaintiff by mistake, under a supposed right, then they cannot give punitive damages; unless act was done with actual wrong intention and with such recklessness as to show malice or a conscious disregard of plaintiff's right, they cannot find any punitive damages." The request was not in accord with the principle laid down in Tolleson v. Railroad Co., 88 S. C. 7, 70 S. E. 311, where it was held that, even though a tort-feasor might not be conscious of his invasion of the rights of another, yet, if the tort was committed in such a manner or under such circumstances that the jury find that a person of ordinary reason and prudence would have been conscious of it as such, it warranted the infliction of punitive damages.

Affirmed.

GARY, C. J., and WATTS and FRASER, JJ., concur.

HOOVER v. THAMES et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 14, 1913.)

CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 172*)—ACTION FOR POSSESSION OF PROPERTY—DEFENSES—COUNTERCLAIMS.

In a chattel mortgagee's action to recover possession of property which he sold the mortgagors, for the purpose of foreclosing, the mortgagors could set up a counterclaim for damages from false representations by the mortgagee concerning the property, and for breach of warranty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 306-308, 310-315; Dec. Dig. § 172.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Hampton County; Rice, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by J. R. Hoover against James F. Thames and others. From an order allowing an amendment to the answer, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. S. Tillinghast, of Beaufort, for appellant. W. B. De Loach, of Camden, and J. W. Manuel, of Hampton, for respondents.

HYDRICK, J. Plaintiff sold defendants a planing mill, and took their notes, secured by a mortgage of the mill, in part payment of the purchase money. Defendants having failed to pay the notes at maturity, and having refused to deliver the mortgaged property to plaintiff on demand, this action was brought to recover possession thereof for the purpose of foreclosing the mortgage.

The defendants' first answer was a general denial. Subsequently they moved for leave to amend their answer by setting up a counterclaim for damages resulting to them on account of alleged false and fraudulent misrepresentations of the plaintiff in the sale of the mill as to its condition and its fitness for the purposes for which they bought it, and for breach of warranty. From the order allowing the amendment, the plaintiff appealed.

The case is controlled by the decision in Woodruff Machinery & Mfg. Co. v. Timms, 93 S. C. 99, 76 S. E. 114.

Affirmed.

GARY, C. J., and WATTS and FRASER, JJ., concur.

UNION BUILDING & LOAN ASS'N v. McNALLY.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 23, 1913.)

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS (§ 32*)—ACTIONS—COMPUTATION OF AMOUNT DUE.

In an action by a building and loan association on bonds secured by a mortgage, a bond cannot, in computing the amount due, be split into two loans, but must be treated as one loan, and the amount due be computed by calculating the interest on the same, with credits for all payments according to the laws of the state and the constitution and by-laws of the association.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Building and Loan Associations, Cent. Dig. §§ 48-59, 67; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Union County; R. W. Memminger, Judge.

Action by the Union Building & Loan Association against R. Lindsay McNally. From an order sustaining defendant's exceptions to the master's report, plaintiff appeals. Appeal dismissed, and cause remanded.

The following are the exceptions:

"Plaintiff appellant, for the purpose of appeal to the Supreme Court therefrom, excepts to the intermediate order or decree of his honor Judge Memminger, herein, dated February 14, 1913, upon the following grounds:

"Because his honor erred therein:

"(1) In holding and deciding that the master could not split the loan evidenced by the six hundred ($600) dollars bond into two loans, as he did, to wit, a loan of $400 as of date May, 1901, and a loan of $200 of date of the $600 bond, and sustaining defendant's second and fourth exceptions to the report of the special master, and reversing the master in that particular.

"(2) In holding and deciding that the master, in ascertaining the amounts due plaintiff on the several bonds, must give the defendant credit for all payments as made by him; and sustaining defendant's tenth exception, which is as follows: 'Because the special master erred in not allowing proper credits for each and every item appearing upon defendant's passbook, which was in evidence, and uncontradicted and unquestioned,' whereas, he should have held, as contended by plaintiff, that defendant should not have credit in ascertaining the amounts due on the debts sued on, evidenced by the bonds set out in the case, for interest and premium, paid on the loan appearing on his passbook as made in May, 1901, and which was settled before the $600 loan was made, an entirely different and ended transaction, the interest and premium on which said loan of $400 in May, 1901, was $2.50 per month; and was paid from June, 1901, to May, 1903 (inclusive) being for twenty-four (24) months, amounting to $60, and was paid for the use of money, and on a debt entirely distinct from each and all of the debts sued on in this case, and was a finished and ended and settled transaction, in the settlement of which transaction defendant, or the one for whom he got the money, got credit, in the way of allowance of it as interest paid, on the loan.

"(3) In holding and deciding that in this case the defendant should, at the time of the first loan of $200 (on September 10, 1900, on one share of stock redeemed) receive credit ($225) for two hundred and twenty-five dollars, the amount of the stock payments made on the five shares of stock owned by him, which was assigned to the association as collateral at the date of the bond, as the withdrawal value of said five shares of stock, at that time by the rules and by-laws of the association; and in not holding and deciding that the withdrawal value of the shares of stock, so ascertained, should be applied respectively as credits on the loans and bonds evidencing said loans, for and by which the respective shares of stock were redeemed; and in not sustaining the special master in so holding and reporting; and in sustaining defendant's third exception to the report of the special master. This third exception of defendant's to the special master's report also raised the point that the withdrawal value of the stock at the time of its application on the loan should be increased by allowing interest on the amount of the stock payments at the rate of 6 per cent., but this claim and feature in all the exceptions was withdrawn at the trial; and it is therefore considered that his honor in sustaining this exception did not mean to decide that such interest must thus be added in fixing the withdrawal value of the stock. And there was not a scintilla of evidence to support this part of the exception. The error being that his honor erroneously applied the principles and rules settled and laid down in Bird & Co. v. Kendall, 62 S. C. 178, 40 S. E. 142, and Association v. Holland, 65 S. C. 448, 43 S. E. 978, to this case, where the facts and conditions were very different, and required a modification of the general rules laid down in the latter case (supra), under the license given by the Supreme Court so to do, in the following language in said case: 'These rules are not intended to be exhaustive' but are sufficient for the determination of this case. In these cases, the withdrawal value of the shares assigned was less than the loan, and the face of the bonds evidencing the debts, and the application of the same to the debt, still left the borrowing stockholder a debtor to the association, according to the intention of the parties and the tenor of the borrower's written bond, which he signed, sealed, and delivered to the association; while in this case the application of the general rule laid down in that case would overpay the debt, and make the association a debtor to the stockholder, in opposition to and in violation of the tenor of the bond, which the borrowing stockholder solemnly executed and left with the association, wherein both declare that the stockholder is still a debtor to the association (the one by the execution and the other by the acceptance). In these cases, also, there was only one loan, and the borrowing stockholder who had assigned his stock to the association as collateral security did not, at any time afterwards, claim and exercise afterwards the right and privilege of borrowing on other of said assigned shares by way of redemption, and which only a stockholder could do, such privilege being allowed and concurred in by the association; while in this case the borrowing stockholder afterwards on as many as three occasions claimed and exercised such right and privilege as a stockholder, with the assent and concurrence of the association, until he had in succession redeemed each of his said five shares of stock by borrowing on the same by way of redemption, and on two of them exercised this privilege, with assent of the association, twice, which marked difference of facts and relations would seem to require a modification of the general rule laid down in those cases, and a different application of the retiring values of the several shares of stock to the several debts made in the redemption of the same, as was done by the special master.

"Exception 4: In holding and deciding that defendant was entitled to credit on his bond for $600 at its date, June 17, 1903, for the sum of two hundred and thirty-four ($234) dollars, as the amount paid on the said three shares then redeemed, being the withdrawal value of the said shares so redeemed; and in sustaining defendant's fifth exception to the special master's report. The error being that if his honor was correct in sustaining defendant's third exception to the said report, and holding that defendant must have credit for the withdrawal value of the whole five shares of stock ($225) on the bond for the first loan, for ($200) two hundred dollars, at its date of the bond and assignment of the stock as collateral, on September 10, 1900; and, as under the rule of partial payments he would have to be allowed credit for all stock payments as made from that time to the making of the next loan, then to allow him credit at the time of the six hundred dollars loan and bond would be very certainly allowing him credit for the same stock payments (which fixes the withdrawal value of the shares in this case) twice. He certainly should not have credit on this bond for the withdrawal value already credited to him on a prior bond and loan; and it is equally clear that he should not here have credit for intermediate stock payment, which had in any way been credited to him before the ($600) six hundred dollar loan and bond.

"Exception 5. In holding and deciding that defendant was entitled to and must have credit on the ($200) two hundred dollar bond at its date, August 9, 1904, for ninety-two ($92) dollars, the amount of stock payment to that time on and the withdrawal value of the one share of stock then redeemed; and in sustaining defendant's sixth exception to the said report of the special master. The error being that there would be a giving him credit twice for the withdrawal value of this share of stock, just as pointed out under exception 4 above."

Wallace & Barron, of Union, for appellant.
J. Ashby Sawyer, of Union, for respondent.

FRASER, J. This is an action by the plaintiff on three bonds executed by the defendant to the plaintiff, secured by a mortgage. Two of the bonds were for $200 each, and the third was for $600. The case was referred to the master, who made his report. There were exceptions to the master's report. After hearing argument, the presiding judge made the following order: "This matter comes before the court upon exception filed by the defendant, to the report of the special master herein. The special master was correct in saying that 'the legal way to ascertain the amount due would be to consider the bonds according to their faces and dates,' but the special master erred in undertaking to split into two loans the six hundred ($600) dollar bond. He should have simply taken the bonds as they appeared on their faces and dates and calculated the interest on same, giving credits for all payments, as made by the defendant, according to the rules as laid down by our Supreme Court in several recent cases, making the calculations according to the rules of partial payments, and giving credits on the bonds at their respective dates, for the withdrawal value of the stock assigned and surrendered, according to the constitution and by-laws of plaintiff corporation. Without passing on any of the exceptions, except those presenting the above questions, the exceptions raising the above questions are sustained; and the case is hereby referred to the master for Union county to make a calculation of the amounts due, if any, upon the several bonds sued on herein, and in accordance with the above-stated principles. R. W. Memminger, Presiding Judge. February 14, 1913."

There are five exceptions, one of which was abandoned at the hearing. There is a total misapprehension of Judge Memminger's order, and it is unnecessary to consider the exceptions separately. Let the exceptions be reported. The order, in short, holds that it was error to cut up the $600 bond in two loans, and directs the master to make a new finding on the basis of the bonds as executed, allowing credits for payments and cash surrender value according to the law of this state, and the constitution and by-laws of the association. He decided nothing but that the bonds, as executed, should be the basis of calculation. To this there is no exception.

The appeal is dismissed, and the cause remanded for the purpose of carrying out the order of Judge Memminger.

GARY, C. J., and HYDRICK and WATTS, JJ., concur.

HUGGINS et al. v. PRICE.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 29, 1913.)

1. POWERS (§ 32*)—EXECUTION—POWER OF APPOINTMENT.

Where a gift of property in trust gave the beneficiary a power of appointment by her "last will and testament in writing authenticated in due form of law," such power cannot be executed except by will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Powers, Cent. Dig. §§ 104-109, 128-132; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

2. WILLS (§ 740*)—FAMILY SETTLEMENTS—DISTURBANCE.

Where land was granted in trust for a woman and her heirs, the issue of her body, with power to her of appointment by will, and she sold part of the land, giving the proceeds to one of her sons, and distributed the rest of the property by her last will and testament to the other children, the other children, having accepted the benefits of the will, could not set aside the sale; the acts of the beneficiary constituting a family settlement which equity will not disturb.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1888-1895; Dec. Dig. § 740.*]

3. ESTOPPEL (§ 98*)—EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL.

Where property was granted in trust for a woman and her heirs, with a power to her of appointment by will, the heirs of one of her children cannot attack a conveyance of a part of the land where their parent was given the proceeds as his share of the property, the remainder being distributed by the beneficiary to other children, as such heirs could only claim through their ancestor, and are estopped by his acceptance of the proceeds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. § 290; Dec. Dig. § 98.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Horry County; G. W. Ragdale, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by John A. Huggins and others against Georgia Page Price. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Robt. B. Scarborough, of Conway, for appellants. H. H. Woodward, of Conway, for respondent.

PER OURIAM. This action for the recovery of possession of real estate, by agreement of the parties, was tried by the judge, without a jury, and resulted in a decree and judgment in favor of the defendant.

The plaintiffs sued in behalf of themselves and others, too numerous to be made parties, answering to the description of "the heirs of Susan E. Huggins who shall be the children or issue of her body." They claim under a conveyance embracing the land in dispute, made June 29, 1859, by Absalom Powell to James C. Powell, "in trust for and to the only use and benefit of the said Susan E. Huggins, wife of Evan Huggins, aforesaid, and in trust for and to the use and benefit of the heirs of the said Susan E. Huggins, who shall be the issue or children of her body, and to such other use or uses as the said Susan E. Huggins, at any time during her natural life, shall appoint, devise of, dispose of by her last will and testament in writing authenticated in due form of law, and the said Absalom Powell, for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns doth hereby covenant to and with the said James C. Powell, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, that he is lawfully seised in fee of the premises aforesaid, and that he has good right and title to sell the same, and that he will, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns shall warrant and forever defend the same, against the lawful claims of all persons whatsoever."

The defendant claims under a deed of conveyance made on October 30, 1902, by Susan E. Huggins to G. S. Price and C. S. Price.

[1] We cannot doubt that the circuit judge was in error in holding that a power was given to Susan E. Huggins to dispose of the property by deed. The power of appointment, devise, and disposition conferred on Susan E. Huggins was plainly limited by the words "by her last will and testament, authenticated in due form of law," and she could make no disposition of the land except by will. Hence, if nothing more appeared, the plaintiffs would be entitled to recover; but the facts agreed on make it equally clear that the circuit judge was well warranted in holding that the defendant is entitled to hold the land in dispute under a division in the entire tract, made by Susan E. Huggins, with the acquiescence of all her children.

[2, 3] Some time prior to 1902 Mrs. Huggins made a will, devising all the lands embraced in the trust deed; the portion now in dispute being devised to Tellie Huggins. Finding that Tellie Huggins, who was living out of the state, desired money instead of land, she destroyed this will, and on October 20, 1902, made another, by which she divided her lands, except the land in dispute, among her sons, charging each of them with certain sums to be paid to her daughters. On the next day she conveyed to G. S. Price and C. S. Price the land in dispute, which she had previously devised to Tellie Huggins, and sent to her son Tellie the purchase money. We infer from the record, as nothing appears to the contrary, that all the sons and daughters, on the death of their mother, accepted the provisions made for them in her will, which was manifestly intended by her to be setting off to them of a just share of the property embraced in the trust deed. A part of this plan of division and family settlement was given Tellie Huggins the benefit of the land intended for him by selling it and sending him the proceeds, according to his request. We think equity forbids that those who took, and now hold, the benefits of the plan adopted, and provision made, by the mother as a family settlement—a just distribution of the property among her children—should now repudiate it. They cannot take the shares allotted to them by their mother, and claim also that which was allotted to their brother Tellie Huggins. On the other hand, the children of Tellie Huggins have no right, because they can claim only through him, and he elected to have the land sold, and the money paid to him. We think the case comes fully up to the rule laid down in Smith v. Tanner, 32 S. C. 259, 10 S. E. 1008, where the court says: "Courts of equity have uniformly upheld and sustained family arrangements in reference to property, where no fraud, imposition, or overreaching appears, with a 'strong hand.' As is said in the text-writers: 'In family arrangements, an equity is administered in equity which is not applied to agreements generally.' Story's Eq. Jur. 132; Pom. Eq. Jur. 851; Trigg v. Read [5 Humph. (Tenn.) 529], 42 Am. Dec. 461; Bos- sard v. White, 9 Rich. Eq. 483; Stockley v. Stockley, 1 Ves. & B. 30. And such arrangements will be held binding when, in cases between strangers, the like agreements would not be enforced. It is needless to go into the reason of this doctrine. It is sufficient to say that it is well established, and has often been applied, both in England and America."

On the ground that it would be inequitable to allow the plaintiffs to disturb a family settlement, the benefits of which they have enjoyed, the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

Affirmed.

GRESHAM v. ATLANTIC COAST LUMBER CORPORATION.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 24, 1913.)

1. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—TIMBER DEEDS—TIME FOR REMOVAL.

Where a timber deed did not fix any time for removal, the timber must be removed within a reasonable time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Cent. Dig. §§ 6-12; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

2. INJUNCTION (§ 38*)—ISSUANCE OF INJUNCTIONS—RIGHT TO INJUNCTIONS.

In an action involving the right to timber on land, where plaintiff claimed that it had not been removed within a reasonable time, so that defendant had lost its rights thereto, and defendant maintained that it had begun to remove the timber within a reasonable time, a temporary injunction may be granted at the request of plaintiff to preserve the property in statu quo until the determination of their respective rights; it appearing that plaintiff did not desire the timber cut and removed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 86-90; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

3. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—SALES—EXCEPTION—EFFECT.

When timber itself is excepted in a conveyance of land, it remains the property of the grantor, with right in so much of the soil as is necessary to sustain it, and consequently an exception, by a grantor of land, of the timber thereon which had been conveyed by her predecessor does not inure to the benefit of the grantee in the timber deed but to the grantor, who may acquire rights in the timber by the failure of the grantee to remove it within a reasonable time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Cent. Dig. §§ 6-12; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Marion County; T. H. Spain, Judge.

Action by Annie Law Gresham against the Atlantic Coast Lumber Corporation. From an order dissolving a temporary injunction, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

The pleadings and exceptions are as follows:

Complaint.

"The complaint of the above-named plaintiff respectfully shows to the court:

"First. That the plaintiff is a resident of the county of Marion, said state.

"Second. That the defendant, Atlantic Coast Lumber Corporation, is a corporation duly chartered and organized under the laws of the state of South Carolina, with its principal place of business in the city of Georgetown, in the county of Georgetown, said state.

"Third. That heretofore, to wit, on the 16th day of December, A. D. 1898, plaintiff's predecessor in interest, C. C. Law, executed and delivered to one R. L. Montague a certain instrument of writing, styled and known as a 'deed and contract,' and commonly called a 'timber deed,' bearing date on said date, whereby the said C. C. Law purported to sell and convey unto the said R. L. Montague all the timber of every kind and description to 12 inches stump diameter and upwards, 12 inches from the ground at the time of cutting, then standing and being on that certain tract, piece, or parcel of land known as the Manning tract, Smith and Herring tract, Matheson tract, and the Godbold tract. The said lands are bounded and described as follows, to wit: Manning tract: North by T. G. Davis' lands, east by estate D. Leggette, south by C. C. Law, west by estate of Iseman. Smith and Herring tract: North by C. C. Law, east by the lands of D. C. Law, south by J. D. Williams, west by C. C. Law. Matheson tract: North by C. C. Law, J. D. Williams, and estate of D. Leggette, east by estate of D. Leggette, S. W. Altman, and S. P. Shaw, south by estate of D. Leggette, D. J. Atkinson, and S. W. Altman, west by C. C. Law and I. D. Williams. Godbold tract: North by Ebby Atkinson and J. W. Holliday, east by Ebby Atkinson and Jas. Jones, south by J. D. Dzier, west by Great Pee Dee river. Containing 3,119 acres, more or less, situated in the township of Brittons Neck, county of Marion, and state of South Carolina, together with certain timber rights, rights of way, privileges, and easements therein more specifically set forth, all of which will more fully appear by reference to said deed, a copy of which is hereto attached and made a part of this complaint and to which all necessary reference is craved.

"Fourth. That the plaintiff is now, and has been for a number of years, seised in fee and possessed of said described lands.

"Fifth. On information and belief that, by sundry mesne conveyances, all the right, title, and interest of said grantee, R. L. Montague, in and to the said timber, timber rights, rights of way, privileges, and easements mentioned and described in the said deed were acquired and are now held by defendant, Atlantic Coast Lumber Corporation, which, as this plaintiff is informed and believes, claims and asserts its rights to hold the same under and by virtue of a deed of conveyance executed and delivered to it.

"Sixth. That on or about the 16th day of March, A. D. 1912, the defendant herein, against the will and without the consent of the plaintiff, and after notice and warning from her, forbidding the same, and in utter disregard of the rights of plaintiff, willfully and wantonly entered upon the aforesaid lands of the plaintiff with a force of men and teams and prepared and intended to operate and lay out roads and tramroads upon and over the said lands and began to cut, fell, and remove the said timber, both standing and fallen, therefrom; and that, as plaintiff is informed and believes, the said defendant is still continuing and threatens and intends to continue its said logging operations upon the said lands of the plaintiff. That the said defendant, over the protest of this plaintiff, and in utter disregard of plaintiff's rights, as hereinbefore alleged, has already willfully and wantonly cut and removed, or is about to remove, large quantities of timber from said lands to plaintiff's damage $2,000.

"Seventh. That, by a proper construction of said deed and contract, it must be held to have imposed upon the said grantee, his heirs or assigns, the duty and obligation to begin the cutting and removal of the timber therein described within a reasonable time after the date thereof and continue the same without cessation until the said timber should have been cut and removed. That, although a period of more than 13 years has elapsed and expired, neither the said grantee nor his heirs and assigns nor the defendant herein commenced the cutting and removing of the said timber until the date above mentioned. And the plaintiff alleges that a reasonable time for said cutting and removing has long since expired and had expired long before the entry of defendants aforesaid; and the plaintiff alleges that neither the said defendant, Atlantic Coast Lumber Corporation, nor its predecessors or grantors, nor any one for it or them, have paid or tendered to plaintiff any interest on the said original purchase price.

"Eighth. That the value of the said timber constitutes by far the larger part of the value of the plaintiff's said land, and the cutting and the removal thereof would involve irreparable injury upon the plaintiff by wasting and devastating the freehold. That the operations of the said defendant thereon, if continued, would constitute a series of successive and repeated entries upon the land of the plaintiff and would entail upon the plaintiff loss and damage for which she could not obtain adequate redress at law, and same would involve a multiplicity of vexatious, harassing and expensive suits, and the plaintiff can therefore obtain adequate remedy for the same only in a court of equity.

"Ninth. That inter alia the said contract reads as follows: 'It is agreed that the time limit of this conveyance above set forth shall be 10 years from the time the second party begins cutting and removing the said timber from the lands above described, but the first party agrees that the said time limit may be extended from year to year thereafter upon the payment by the said second party, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, of interest on the original purchase price at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum—and this plaintiff alleges that, by a proper construction of said deed and contract, it must be held to have imposed upon the said grantee, his heirs and assigns, the duty and obligation to begin the cutting and removal of the timber therein described within a reasonable time after the date thereof; and the plaintiff alleges that such reasonable time had long since expired prior to any entry by defendants, or by the said grantee, his heirs or assigns, including the defendant herein, and that the said grantee, his heirs and assigns, including the defendant herein, have forfeited and lost all right, title, and interest in and to the said timber, all the timber rights, rights of ways, privileges, and easements, and the same have, by operation of law, reverted and revested in plaintiff, and that the entry upon the said lands by the said defendant should be permitted to continue their logging operations thereon, the same would amount to a series of repeated vexatious and harassing trespasses.

"Wherefore plaintiff demands judgment:

"First. That the said deed be adjudged to have required the grantee and his heirs and assigns, including the defendant, to commence the cutting and removal of the said timber within a reasonable time, and that said time may be decreed to have elapsed and expired prior to entry, and that it may be adjudged that the defendant has forfeited and lost all rights under the said deed by reason of the expiration of such reasonable time, and that the said defendant shall deliver up the same to be canceled.

"Second. That the defendant, its officers, agents, servants, and employes, and all persons claiming or acting for, through, or under it may be perpetually enjoined and restrained from entering upon the said lands of the plaintiff for the purpose of and from cutting or removing any of the timber, either standing or fallen, and from cutting or opening or laying out roadways or cartways thereon, or causing or suffering to be done or committed any other act or things looking to the exercise of any rights claimed under the said deed and contract.

"Third. That in the meantime, and pending the final determination of this action, the said defendant, its officers, agents, servants, and employes, and all other persons acting or claiming by or under it, may be enjoined and restrained from doing or committing, or causing or suffering to be done or committed, any of the acts or things aforesaid.

"Fourth. That plaintiff herein have judgment against said defendant for the sum of $3,000 damages, and that said defendant be required to account for all timber cut by it.

"Fifth. For the costs and disbursements of this action and for such other and further relief as to this honorable court may seem just and equitable."

Answer.

"The defendant, Atlantic Coast Lumber Corporation, not waiving, but specifically reserving, its right to move to strike from the complaint herein certain irrelevant and redundant matter and to move to have such complaint made more definite and certain, and to answer over in case such motions shall be granted, answering the complaint:

"(1) Admits the truth of the allegations contained in paragraphs first, second, third, and fifth thereof.

"(2) Denies the truth of the allegation contained in paragraph fourth thereof, but, on the contrary, alleges, on information and belief, that plaintiff has neither title nor possession nor any right or interest in that portion of the lands described as the Smith and Herring tract, the Godbold tract, or any portion of the Manning tract except the 86.5 acres thereof, shown by a survey heretofore made by J. M. Johnson and by conveyance thereof to her by Mrs. Annie Law Early.

"(3) Admits that on or about the 16th day of March, 1912, this defendant entered upon a portion of the lands described in paragraph sixth of said complaint, which are owned by plaintiff, with men and teams, and prepared to lay out roads and tramroads and began to cut and remove the timber heretofore acquired by it therefrom, and that it intends, unless restrained by this honorable court, to continue logging operations upon said lands until the timber so acquired by it shall have been removed, but denies each and every other allegation in said paragraph sixth.

"(4) Admits that neither it nor its predecessors, nor any one for it or them, has paid or tendered the plaintiff any interest on the original purchase price, but denies each and every other allegation contained in paragraph seventh of said complaint, and, on the contrary, alleges that with the full knowledge of plaintiff it entered upon the lands in question during the early part of the year 1909 and in the exercise of its rights, under the contract set out in the complaint, commenced to cut and remove the timber therefrom in the usual and ordinary course of its business, and continued cutting and removing such timber during the entire year 1909, and for more than half of the year 1910, without objection or interference by plaintiff, and that, in the absence of any notice to the contrary or any intimation from plaintiff, it assumed that the time contemplated by the parties to the original contract in which it was to commence cutting was fixed as in the month of January, 1909, and that it would be required to pay interest on the original purchase price if it had not completed its operations within ten years after that date.

"(5) Denies the allegation contained in paragraph eighth of said complaint.

"(6) Admits that the contract in question contains the language quoted in paragraph ninth of said complaint, but denies the truth of each and every other allegation therein contained.

"Further answering said complaint, this defendant alleges:

"(7) That, at the time of the purchase by R. L. Montague from C. C. Law of the timber in question, the said R. L. Montague was undertaking to acquire sufficient standing timber to warrant the organization of a large lumber manufacturing corporation, the location of which had not been determined upon, and that the said R. L. Montague was not then the owner of a sawmill within the state of South Carolina or elsewhere, and that this fact was then either known to or could have been ascertained by the said C. C. Law.

"(8) That, after the date of the said deed of timber contract, said R. L. Montague, with others, succeeded in interesting outside capital and in procuring the organization of Atlantic Coast Lumber Company, to which company the timber in question was in due time conveyed, and that the said Atlantic Coast Lumber Company, immediately upon its organization, commenced negotiations for acquiring a site for its manufacturing plant and soon thereafter procured and constructed large sawmills at Georgetown, S. C.

"(9) That, at the time of the organization of Atlantic Coast Lumber Company, it acquired timber holdings extending almost continuously from the tracts of timber described in the complaint to and beyond Georgetown, S. C., which fact, as defendant is informed and believes, the said C. C. Law and this plaintiff either knew or had opportunity to know, and that since its organization the said Atlantic Coast Lumber Company and its successors have been engaged, practically without interruption, in cutting and manufacturing its timber into lumber, and that in such operation they have adopted the customary plan of taking first that timber located nearest their mills and gradually advancing its operations into its more distant timber holdings without discrimination and without other consideration than the economical and profitable conduct of its business, and that in the exercise of the discretion of its officers it did not until the year 1909, in the usual conduct of its business, reach the timber of plaintiff.

"(10) That Atlantic Coast Lumber Company continued in business from the year 1899 to the year 1902, when it was placed in charge of receivers, and that, until the sale of the property of said Atlantic Coast

Lumber Company in 1903, such receivers were in charge of the property acquired under the contract described in the complaint, and that at such sale all of said property was acquired by the defendant, Atlantic Lumber Corporation.

"(11) That, when the contract in question was acquired by Atlantic Coast Lumber Company, its officers and directors, having sought legal counsel, were advised by attorneys of the highest legal standing that under the established law in force and effect in South Carolina at that time such contract was good and effective to convey the timber therein described in fee simple, and that the grantee therein, his heirs and assigns, acquired the right to cut the timber therein conveyed at such time in the future as might be most convenient without restriction or limitation of the time allowed for commencing to cut, and that the only limitation of the time for cutting contained therein was that, after once commencing to cut, all operations should be completed within a definite period of time specified in the contract, or such extension thereof as might be acquired by the payment of installments of interest provided for therein, and that, when this defendant acquired the property in question, it was advised to the same effect by counsel selected with due care and diligence and regarded by it as most highly qualified for ascertaining the legal rights of the parties to such contract, and that, acting upon such advice, the operations of Atlantic Coast Lumber Company and Atlantic Coast Lumber Corporation have been influenced by the understanding that timber held under such contract was held in fee simple until the recent opinion of the Supreme Court of this state in the case of A. W. Flagler v. Atlantic Coast Lumber Corporation, 89 S. C. 328, 71 S. E. 849.

"(12) That plaintiff and the said C. C. Law dealt with defendant's predecessor in interest and with defendant with full knowledge, and full opportunity of knowing, their plans in regard to their timber, their opportunities for speedily cutting and removing same, and the views which defendant held as to its rights under the contract in question, and that they must have known from the location of the timber sold that it would be quite a long while before the cutting thereof would be commenced.

"(13) That although this defendant commenced to cut the timber acquired under the contract described in the complaint during the month of January, 1909, and that although its operations were continued for considerably more than a year, plaintiff did not indicate to this defendant in any manner whatsoever that she took the view that defendant had not commenced to cut within such time as was contemplated by the parties to the contract for commencing to cut, or that she construed the contract in question and the conduct of this defendant thereunder as having resulted in the loss by this defendant of any of the rights previously acquired under said contract.

"(14) That since the year 1909 this defendant has, at great expense to the knowledge of the plaintiff, made arrangements for the construction of a railroad from some point in Georgetown county, through the counties of Georgetown and Williamsburg, across Great Pee Dee river and into Marion county, and that, but for its ownership of this and other contracts covering timber in Marion county, such railroad would not have been constructed or this defendant would not have been instrumental in procuring the construction thereof.

"(15) That by reason of plaintiff's acquiescence in defendant's construction of the contract in question and its rights thereunder, and of the position assumed by this defendant and the large amount of money spent by it, relying upon such acquiescence, and by reason of the failure of plaintiff to notify this defendant that it was required within any definite or limited time to commence the cutting and removal of the timber in question, plaintiff is now estopped to take the position that the cutting was not commenced within a reasonable time."

Exceptions.

"First. Because his honor erred, it is respectfully submitted, in dissolving the temporary injunction herein in that said temporary injunction was and is essential to the preservation and protection to the rights of plaintiff pending the determination of the case on its merits.

"Second. Because his honor erred, it is respectfully submitted, in dissolving the temporary injunction herein, as its dissolution makes it possible for the defendant to cut and remove the timber which is the subject of the action pending a final hearing of the case on its merits and thus deprive plaintiff of the benefit of a favorable determination of the case.

"Third. Because his honor erred, it is respectfully submitted, in dissolving the temporary injunction herein in that the answer admitted that defendant intended to continue cutting and removing the timber, and the said dissolution will deprive plaintiff of the subject-matter of the action, to wit, the timber.

"Fourth. Because his honor erred, it is respectfully submitted, in dissolving the temporary injunction in that the dissolution was an abuse of discretion and deprived plaintiff of the right to a trial of the case on its merits and denies her the preservation and protection of her rights pending the trial of the case on its merits.

"Fifth. Because his honor erred, it is respectfully submitted, in dissolving the temporary injunction herein in that it appears from the face of the complaint that no entry was made upon the lands for the purpose of cutting and removing of the timber until March, 1912, more than 13 years after the execution of the contract, which said period of 13 years plaintiff alleges was more than a reasonable time in which to begin cutting and removing the timber; and plaintiff was and is entitled to a temporary restraining order until the court shall determine what was a reasonable time in which the defendant should commence to cut and remove the timber.

"Sixth. Because his honor erred, it is respectfully submitted, in dissolving the temporary injunction herein in that it appears from the affidavits of John Richardson, Jr., produced by defendant, that defendant entered upon the premises in 1907 and laid out a right of way for a main line railroad, which was not a commencement to cut and remove the timber within the meaning of the contract.

"Seventh. Because his honor erred, it is respectfully submitted, in dissolving the temporary injunction herein in that it appears from the affidavit of John Richardson, Jr., produced by defendant, that defendant did not commence to cut and remove the timber until February, 1909, more than ten years after the execution of the contract, which said period was unreasonable.

"Eighth. Because his honor erred, it is respectfully submitted, in dissolving the temporary injunction as to the Manning tract in that it appears that plaintiff owns the timber thereon on the east side of the public road by reason of the exception of the timber in her deed to Annie Law Early; and that, in any view under the showing made to his honor, more than ten years had elapsed since the execution of the contract, which said time was more than a sufficient reasonable time in which to commence to cut and remove the timber.

"Ninth. Because the dissolution of the temporary injunction permits the defendant to utterly destroy the timber on the Matheson tract owned by plaintiff and her entire interest in the Manning tract, to wit, the timber, before the court can hear the case on its merits, and plaintiff will be thereby irreparably injured."

Mullins & Hughes and Henry Buck, all of Marion, for appellant. Willcox & Willcox, of Florence, and M. O. Woods, of Marion, for respondent.

DE VORE, Circuit Judge. This case was commenced by the service of the summons and complaint on the 4th of April, 1913, and, as appears from the complaint, is for the purpose of determining who is the owner of the timber on the lands described in the complaint and also for the purpose of securing an injunction restraining the defendant from cutting and removing the timber from the said lands until the true owner of said timber can be determined on the trial of the case upon its merits.

The complaint alleges in substance that the plaintiff is the owner of the timber and does not wish the defendant to cut and remove the same from the lands.

The answer of the defendant alleges in substance that it is the owner of the timber and wishes to cut and remove the same from the lands and intends to do so, unless restrained by the court. The defendant's claim, as appears from the record, is based on what is known as a "timber deed" or contract, dated December 16, 1898, made by C. C. Law, plaintiff's predecessor, in interest to R. L. Montague, and by sundry mesne conveyances, it is alleged, defendant acquired all the rights of Montague. The "timber deed" does not fix the time as to when the party who has the right to do so, under the "timber deed," shall commence to cut and remove the timber. The complaint alleges the defendant began to do so on the 16th of March, 1912, over protest of and notice from the plaintiff not to cut and remove the timber, as it had not commenced to do so within a reasonable time from the date of the Montague "timber deed," which is alleged to be more than thirteen years.

The record shows, on application of plaintiff, Judge Shipp, on the 30th of March, 1912, granted a temporary injunction restraining defendant from cutting and removing the timber; that on the 25th of January, 1913, on motion of the defendant, Judge Spain passed an order dissolving the temporary injunction of Judge Shipp. The appeal is from the order of Judge Spain, in so far as said order dissolved the injunction as to the timber on the Matheson tract of land, and also as to the timber on the Manning tract, on the east side of the road; it being conceded by plaintiff that the injunction as to the other land and the timber thereon ought to have been dissolved. The appeal is based on nine exceptions, only two of which (fifth and eight) will it be necessary to consider, as they in substance cover all the errors imputed to the circuit judge.

[1] As to the fifth exception: Since the cases of Flagler v. Lumber Corporation, 89 S. C. 328, 71 S. E. 849, and McClary v. A. C. L. Corporation, 90 S. C. 153, 72 S. E. 145, in which this court laid down the doctrine of reasonable time in a "timber deed" similar to the one involved here, there cannot be any doubt as to the application of that doctrine to the case under consideration.

[2] Did the defendant commence to cut and remove the timber within a reasonable time? The complaint alleges it did not. The answer of the defendant alleges that it did. This issue will have to be passed upon when the case is tried on its merits. The plaintiff now claims to be the owner of the timber in question and does not wish the defendant to cut and remove it. The defendant claims to be the owner and wishes to cut and remove the timber.

Under the above statement of facts, as appears from the record, the court would be safe in laying down, once for all, the following as a true and sound proposition, to wit: In a case where the title to standing or growing timber is the issue, and the allegations of the pleadings and the proof submitted at the hearing are such as necessitate a trial on the merits, in order to determine the ownership, either party applying therefor would be entitled to an injunction, restraining the other from cutting and removing the standing or growing timber, for the purpose of preserving same, until the true ownership can be determined by the proper judicial tribunal. This exception is therefore sustained.

[3] As to the eighth exception. The record shows, and about which there is no dispute, at the time of the conveyance from C. C. Law to Montague, there was a mortgage on the undivided five-eighths interest in the Manning tract of land. This mortgage was foreclosed and the master (Lucas) conveyed the land to Annie Law Early May 2, 1903. By agreement of Annie Law Early, owner of the five-eighths interest in the Manning tract, and the defendant, owner of the Montague interest in the timber, the timber was divided between them by arbitration. Annie Law Early got the timber on the Manning tract on the west side of the road, and the defendant got the timber on the east side of the road. Thereafter C. C. Law died, leaving a will, wherein he devised all of his property to his widow, Annie S. Law, now Annie Law Gresham, the plaintiff herein. Thereafter, on May 30, 1903, Annie S. Law conveyed all her interest in the Manning tract to Annie Law Early. The conveyance contains the following clause, to wit: "Saving and excepting from this conveyance, however, my right, title, and interest in that portion of said described land containing eighty-six (86.5) and five-tenths acres, as represented on a plat of J. M. Johnson, Jr., attached to deed to me from Annie L. Early of equal date herewith, and save and excepting also such timber on all of said land as has been heretofore conveyed to Atlantic Coast Lumber Corporation." Under this conveyance the timber did not pass to Annie L. Early. It therefore belongs either to the plaintiff or to the defendant. The very issue raised by the pleadings is: Who is the owner of the timber involved?

It was contended by defendant that the exception in the deed as above set out was for the benefit of the defendant, and not the plaintiff, grantor and had the effect of putting the title to the timber in the defendant. This position or contention cannot be sustained. For, "when timber itself is excepted in a conveyance, the timber remains the property of the grantor, with right in so much of the soil as is necessary to sustain it." Knotts v. Hydrick, 12 Rich. 314; Walt v. Baldwin, 60 Mich. 622, 27 N. W. 697, 1 Am. St. Rep. 551; Steedman v. Weeks, 2 Stroh.

Eq. 145, 49 Am. Dec. 600; Wilson v. Alderman, 80 S. C. 108, 61 S. E. 217, 128 Am. St. Rep. 865; Rivers v. Lumber Corporation, 81 S. C. 494, 62 S. E. 855.

Therefore what has been said in reference to the fifth exception applies with equal force to the eighth exception, which is also sustained.

For the reasons herein stated, it is the judgment of the court that the order of the circuit judge in so far as it dissolved the injunction as to the timber on the Matheson tract of land, and also as to the timber on the Manning tract on the east side of the road, be and the same is hereby reversed. Let the pleadings and exceptions be printed in the report of the case.

GARY, C. J., and HYDRICK, WATTS, and FRASER, JJ., concur.

HOLT et al. v. ZIGLAR et al.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 29, 1913.)

1. WILLS (§ 355*)—WILL CONTEST—VACATION—FRAUD—EFFECT.

Where a judgment in a will contest invalidating the will was set aside for fraud, the caveat filed against the will remained in full force and effect until the issue raised thereby was tried and a valid judgment rendered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 811-819; Dec. Dig. § 355.*]

2. WILLS (§ 424*)—PROBATE BEFORE CLERK—EFFECT.

The probate of a will before the clerk in common form is conclusive evidence of the validity thereof until the will is vacated or declared void by a competent tribunal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 914; Dec. Dig. § 424.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Rockingham County; Cooke, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Holt and others against S. B. Ziglar and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal and defendant J. P. Fairies also appeals. Reversed on plaintiffs' appeal. Appeal of defendant dismissed.

See, also, 159 N. C. 272, 74 S. E. 813.

Plaintiffs' Appeal.

These are the issues submitted:

"(1) Was the judgment setting aside the will of Valentine Allen obtained by collusion and fraud, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Has more than three years elapsed since the decree of the November term, 1885, setting aside the will, and institution of this suit? Answer: Yes.

"(3) Has more than 10 years elapsed since the decree of the November term, 1885, setting aside the will, and institution of this suit? Answer: Yes.

"(4) Was Elizabeth Holt married after she became 21 years of age? Answer: Yes.

"(5) Is Elizabeth Holt's right to attack the decree of 1885, for causes set forth in the complaint, barred by the three-year statute of limitations? Answer: No.

"(6) Was Mary E. Bouldin a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice of the lands described in the deed from S. B. Ziglar and wife, Margaret Ziglar, to Mary E. Bouldin? Answer: No.

"(7) Was J. P. Fairies a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice of the lands conveyed in the deed from Mary E. Bouldin and husband to J. P. Fairies? Answer: No.

"(8) Was John Henry Carter a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, of the land described in the two deeds from Samuel Allen and wife to John Henry Carter? Answer: Yes.

"(9) Was John M. Galloway, trustee, a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice of the land described in the deed of trust from J. Ham Cardwell and wife, Ellen Cardwell? Answer: No.

"(10) Was the 900 acres of land mentioned in Valentine Allen's will divided into three equal shares, and a share each allotted to Samuel A. Allen, Margaret Ziglar and husband, and Ellen Cardwell and husband, and did said parties enter into possession thereof? Answer: Yes.

"(11) At the time of the death of Valentine Allen, what was the number of living children of Ellen Cardwell? Answer: Seven (7).

"(12) At the time of the death of Valentine Allen, what was the number of living children of Margaret Ziglar? Answer: Four (4).

"Did the children of Margaret Ziglar execute and deliver to Mary E. Bouldin a quitclaim deed for all their right, title, and interest in the real estate of Valentine Allen? Answer: Yes."

Upon the coming in of these issues, his honor rendered a decree, from which plaintiffs appeal.

Watson, Buxton & Watson, of Winston-Salem, and C. O. McMichael, of Wentworth, for appellants. Humphreys & Sharp, of Stoneville, and Manly Hendren & Womble, of Winston-Salem, for appellees.

BROWN, J. This case was before us at a former term (159 N. C. 272, 74 S. E. 813), which is referred to for a general statement of the case.

His honor, Judge Cooke, in accordance with that opinion, upon the admitted facts and record evidence in the case, instructed the jury in accordance with our views, and a verdict was rendered accordingly.

[1] The effect of the finding of the jury and the decree of Judge Cooke upon the first issue is to set aside the judgment of the superior court of Rockingham county, November term, 1885, in the case of Samuel A. Allen v. Margaret Ziglar, and others invalidating the will of Valentine Allen, and leaving the caveat to said will in full force and effect (Revisal, § 3137) until the issue thus raised is tried and a bona fide and valid judgment is rendered. This we think should end this case, as there is no exception arising under that first issue.

In our former opinion (159 N. C. 279, 74 S. E. 816) we said: "The only issue raised by the pleadings in this case is one of fraud and collusion in respect to the manner in which that will was set at naught."

In our view of the status of this case, it is not proper that we construe this will now.

All of the issues submitted, except the first, are set aside. So much of the judgment of the superior court as declares that "the decree entered in the suit of Samuel A. Allen, caveator, against Elizabeth A. Allen and others, disposed of at the November term, 1885, of the superior court of Rockingham county, was obtained and entered through fraud and collusion; that the last will and testament of Valentine Allen was properly proven and probated, according to law, before the clerk of the superior court and probate judge of the county of Rockingham on October 6, 1884, and was and is recorded in Book E of the Record of Wills of said county, at pages 289 et seq., and was offered in evidence in this cause," is affirmed. This ends this action, but it leaves the caveat proceedings of Samuel Allen of 1885 still pending for trial in the superior court of Rockingham county.

[2] The probate of the will before the clerk was in common form, but it is conclusive evidence of the validity of the will until it is vacated or declared void by a competent tribunal and may be offered in evidence. Rev. § 3128.

As we have held that the judgment entered in the caveat proceedings is fraudulent and void, it necessarily follows that the caveat proceedings have not terminated. It is still open to Samuel Allen, the caveator, to have the issue thus raised passed on by a jury, and all proper and necessary parties can be brought in that proceeding. Holt v. Ziglar, 159 N. C. 279, 74 S. E. 813.

This cause is remanded to the superior court of Rockingham county with instructions to enter a final judgment in accordance with this opinion. The entire cost of the action, as well as costs of this appeal, will be taxed against the defendants.

The judgment of the superior court, except as hereinbefore stated, is reversed.

Defendant's Appeal.

This is the appeal of the defendant J. P. Fairies in the above cause. It is improvidently taken, and must be dismissed.

As an assignee of Samuel Allen, this defendant may be made a party to the caveat proceedings referred to in the other opinion.

Let costs of this appeal be taxed against defendant Fairies.

Appeal dismissed.

GARDNER v. NORTH STATE MUT LIFE INS. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 29, 1913.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 132*)—BINDING SLIP—EFFECT.

The binding slip issued on an application for insurance is a mere written memorandum of the most important terms of a preliminary contract of insurance, intended to give temporary protection pending the investigation of the risk by the insurer, or until the issue of a formal policy, and is subject to all the conditions of the contemplated policy, even though it may never issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 210; Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 132*)—BINDING SLIP—EFFECT.

When properly issued on an application for insurance, a binding slip protects the applicant against the contingency of sickness between its date and the delivery of the policy, if the application is accepted; but, if not, the binding slip ceases so instantly to have any effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 210; Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 405*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—INSURANCE POLICY—FALSIFICATION.

In a suit on a life policy, the insurer may show that the manual delivery of the policy was conditional, or it may prove fraud or other equitable matter to show that it never took effect as a contract; but, when the policy is once delivered and becomes effective, statements therein which, if falsified, will affect its continued validity cannot be contradicted with a view to avoid the insurance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1818-1824; Dec. Dig. § 405.*]

4. INSURANCE (§ 299*)—LIFE POLICY—FALSE REPRESENTATIONS.

Where an applicant for insurance falsely represented that he had not been intimately associated with any one suffering from any transmissible disease within the past year, such representation being material vitiated the so-called binding receipt, and the policy subsequently issued thereon, unless the insurer waived the same with full knowledge of the facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 678; Dec. Dig. § 299.*]

5. INSURANCE (§ 255*)—FALSE REPRESENTATIONS—MATERIALITY.

Every fact which is untruthfully stated or wrongfully suppressed in an application for insurance must be regarded as material, if the knowledge or ignorance of it would naturally and reasonably influence the judgment of the underwriter in making the contract at all, or in estimating the degree or character of the risk or in fixing the premium.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 548; Dec. Dig. § 255.*]

6. INSURANCE (§ 253*)—APPLICATION—REPRESENTATIONS.

Where, in an application for insurance, a fact is subsequently inquired about, or a question is so framed as to call for a true statement of such fact, or to elicit the information desired, the applicant is required to make a full and fair disclosure thereof, or at least a substantial one.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 538-542; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

7. INSURANCE (§ 258*)—FALSE REPRESENTATIONS—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Revisal 1905, § 4808, declares that all statements in an application for insurance shall be construed as representations merely, and not as warranties, and that no representation, unless material or fraudulent, shall prevent a recovery. Held, that a material misrepresentation under such section will avoid a policy, if it is calculated to influence the insurer in making the contract, or in estimating the degree or character of the risk, or in fixing the premium, if it is without knowledge of the falsity thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 540, 549; Dec. Dig. § 256.*]

8. INSURANCE (§ 377*)—FALSE REPRESENTATIONS—WAIVER—KNOWLEDGE.

Where insured in his application falsely stated that he had not been intimately associated with any one suffering from any transmissible disease within the past year, when in fact he had nursed his wife and child through typhoid fever, of which disease he subsequently died, the insurer could not have waived such misrepresentation in the absence of a showing that it had knowledge thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 942, 966, 967, 975-997; Dec. Dig. § 377.*]

9. INSURANCE (§ 378*)—FRAUD—PARTICIPATION BY AGENT.

Where the agent of an insurance company wrongfully delivers a policy with knowledge of a materially false representation therein on which it was issued, he ceases in that transaction to represent the company, and acts in his individual capacity, participating in the fraud of insured, which vitiates the policy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 968-997; Dec. Dig. § 378.*]

10. INSURANCE (§ 378*)—POLICY—DELIVERY—FAITHLESS AGENT—KNOWLEDGE—IMPUTATION TO INSUREE.

Where an insurance agent, faithless to his trust, delivers a policy to insured with knowledge that insured is then suffering from his last illness, and has made a material misrepresentation in the application, the agent's knowledge will not be imputed to insurer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 968-997; Dec. Dig. § 378.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Edgecombe County; Cline, Judge.

Action by Eula B. Gardner against the North State Mutual Life Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

This is an action to recover the amount of an insurance policy, alleged to have been issued by the defendant in March, 1912, on the life of John B. Gardner, in favor of the plaintiff, who was his wife. John B. Gardner died in March, 1912, shortly after he made his application for insurance, and the policy was delivered to him by defendant's local agent during his last illness; he being then sick with typhoid fever, which caused his death. The application contained a representation by him that he had not been intimately associated with any one suffering from any transmissible disease within the year before his death. At the time of the application, and after the examination of the applicant by a physician, said agent issued what is called in the case a "binding receipt," one of the provisions of which is the following: "In the event this policy shall be approved by the medical director of the company, then the insurance applied for shall be deemed to relate back to and be in force from and after the date of this receipt, but not otherwise." And also the following provision: "That the company shall not incur any liability under this application unless the policy has been issued, delivered, and paid for while I am in good health." The issues and answers thereto by the jury will disclose the nature of the controversy, and sufficiently present the question upon which the opinion of the court rests. They are as follows: "(1) Did John B. Gardner represent in his application for insurance that he had not, at the time of his application, been intimately associated with any one suffering with any transmissible disease within the past year? A. Yes. (2) Had said Gardner, within the year prior to his application, been intimately associated with any one suffering with any transmissible disease? A. Yes. (3) Was said representation material to a contract of insurance between the said Gardner and the defendant? A. Yes. (4) Was the said Gardner sick with typhoid fever at the time that the policy in question was left with him by B. H. Howle? A. Yes. (5) Did the defendant manager at Rocky Mount (V. T. Lamb) ratify the act of Howle in issuing the 'binding receipt' and the delivery of the policy in pursuance thereof? A. Yes. (6) Did the policy in question, at the time it was left with said Gardner by said Howle, become a consummated contract of insurance between the defendant and the insured? A. Yes. (7) In what amount, if anything, is the defendant indebted to the plaintiff? A. $1,000." The court set aside the verdict upon the sixth and seventh issues, and, having given judgment for the defendant upon those which remained, the plaintiff appealed, reserving her exceptions.

H. B. Grantham and F. S. Spruill, both of Rocky Mount, for appellant. Rouse & Land, of Kingston, for appellee.

WALKER, J. [1] This case has not been tried upon the real and decisive issue raised by the pleadings; but we will consider this question presently and in its order. A careful review of the evidence, the course of the trial and development of the case, the charge of the court and the issues, leads us to conclude that the jury disobeyed the instructions upon the sixth issue, and it may be clearly inferred that the trial judge set aside the verdict as to the sixth and seventh issues because of this fact. The jury were charged that, if it was found from the evidence the representation in the application mentioned in the first three issues was material, they should answer the sixth issue, "No," or, if they found that the agent of defendant, V. T. Lamb, did not ratify the "binding receipt" (if it was void), and that John B. Gardner was sick with typhoid fever when he received the policy, they should answer the sixth issue, "No," even though they found that the representation was not material. This instruction was not followed by the jury. The false and material representation has something to do with the "binding receipt" and to the extent herein-after indicated. The effect of the "binding receipt" was correctly stated by Judge Cline, and it is thus defined in Vance on Insurance, p. 160: "The binding slip is merely a written memorandum of the most important terms of a preliminary contract of insurance, intended to give temporary protection pending the investigation of the risk by the insurer, or until the issue of a formal policy. By intendment it is subject to all the conditions in the policy to be issued. These informal writings are but incomplete and temporary contracts—memoranda given in aid of parol agreements. Such memoranda usually fix all the essential provisions that are variable; but they are not ordinarily intended to include all the terms of the agreement, and always look to the formal policy that is expected subsequently to issue for a complete statement of the contract made. Hence, as heretofore stated, the contract evidenced by the binding slip is subject to all the conditions of the contemplated policy, even though it may never issue, and the same is true of other informal written contracts." Lipman v. Insurance Co., 121 N. Y. 454, 24 N. E. 699, 8 L. R. A. 719.

In what has been said or what will hereinafter be said, it must not be understood that we are deciding whether, where a "binding slip" has been delivered to the applicant, the company, in the event of his death or illness occurring subsequently, but before the acceptance of the application, can arbitrarily or even unreasonably reject it or withhold its approval or the approval of the medical director, and thereby avoid its liability, under the clause in the binding slip requiring the approval of the application by the medical director of the company before the insurance shall take effect. This course was taken in Grier v. Insurance Co., 132 N. C. 542, 44 S. E. 28; the policies having been delivered in both cases, the only difference in the two being that in Grier's Case there was no allegation of fraud or a false and material representation, while in this case there is. We are confining ourselves to a consideration of the false representation and its effect upon the later transactions. Nor do we pass upon the question whether the "binding slip" was actually delivered, as the jury have, by clear implication from their answer to the fifth issue, found as a fact that it was, contrary to defendant's contention that it was not delivered.

[2] When properly executed, the "binding slip" protects the applicant for insurance against the contingency of sickness intervening its date and the delivery of the policy, if the application for insurance is accepted. If the application is not accepted in the proper exercise of the company's right, and the insurance, therefore, is refused, the "binding slip" ceases so instantly to have any effect. It does not insure of itself, but is merely a provision against any illness supervening it, if there is afterwards an acceptance of the application, upon which it depends for its vitality. This view, which is the prevailing one, if there is anything to the contrary, is clearly stated by the Chief Justice in Grier v. Insurance Co., 132 N. C. 542, 44 S. E. 28, where it is said that the risk of future illness, that is, after the date of the "binding receipt," is taken by the company, if it afterwards accepts the application, or the insurance becomes effective, and the insurance relates back to the date of the receipt, and, further, that the receipt of the premium acknowledged in the policy, and the recital of the fact that the policy was delivered while the insured was in good health, cannot be contradicted, in the absence of fraud or other sufficient equitable element, as they affect the validity of the contract of insurance, which cannot be impeached in this collateral way. This is sound doctrine, when confined within its proper limits, and not only is it such, but it is also eminently just.

[3] The company can show that the manual delivery of the policy was conditional, for this goes to the execution of the contract, or it may prove fraud or other equitable matter in the same way, for the purpose of showing that it never took effect as a contract, as in Garrison v. Machine Co., 159 N. C. 285, 74 S. E. 821, Pratt v. Chaffin, 136 N. C. 350, 48 S. E. 768, and Powell v. Insurance Co., 153 N. C. 124, 69 S. E. 12; but, when the policy is once delivered, and becomes effective as a contract, statements therein which, if falsified, will affect its continued validity cannot be contradicted with a view to avoid the insurance. The entire subject is fully discussed in Grier's Case, supra, and to some extent in Kendrick v. Insurance Co., 124 N. C. 315, 32 S. E. 728, 70 Am. St. Rep. 592, and Rayburn v. Casualty Co., 138 N. C. 379, 50 S. E. 762, 107 Am. St. Rep. 548. See, also, Joyce on Insurance, § 64.

[4, 5] It became material to inquire whether the company, by its agent with competent authority, had ratified the execution of the binding receipt, as the policy itself was delivered to John B. Gardner while he was ill with typhoid fever, which resulted in his death; the application, which he signed, providing that it should be issued and delivered and the premium paid while he is in good health, in order to be binding upon the company. We will not stop to consider the question whether the evidence was sufficient to warrant the peremptory instruction of the court that V. T. Lamb had the requisite power to ratify, as the evidence may be changed at the next trial, and present the matter in a different aspect, rendering premature and futile any discussion of it at present, and, besides, this decision may cause it to be considered in a different way. Of course, an agent must have authority in order to bind his principal. This is axiomatic. 1 Joyce on Insurance, § 64. But, as we have intimated, the underlying question in this case, which affects both what is called the "binding slip or receipt" and the validity of the policy is whether the company, by itself or its duly authorized agent, has waived the benefit of the false representation made in the application, with full knowledge of the facts. If the representation made in the application was false and material, and the jury so found, and the company was ignorant of its falsity, it vitiates the so-called binding receipt and the policy, unless the company has in some way waived it by its conduct, and with full knowledge of the facts. "A false representation avoids a contract of insurance when material and wholly without reference to the intent with which it is made, unless it is otherwise provided by statute." Vance on Insurance, p. 269. We need not inquire whether this rule is too broadly stated by Mr. Vance, as it applies with the meaning intended by him to the facts of this case, and it has been stated by this court substantially in the same terms. Every fact which is untruly stated or wrongfully suppressed must be regarded as material, if the knowledge or ignorance of it would naturally and reasonably influence the judgment of the underwriter in making the contract at all, or in estimating the degree or character of the risk, or in fixing the rate of premium. 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d Ed.) 933; Vance on Insurance, 284. This definition was adopted by us in Fishplate v. Fidelity Co., 140 N. C. 589, 53 S. E. 354, and has since been approved several times, and is also the definition of other courts. Bryant v. Insurance Co., 147 N. C. 181, 60 S. E. 983; Alexander v. Insurance Co., 150 N. C. 536, 64 S. E. 432; Annuity Co. v. Forrest, 152 N. C. 621, 68 S. E. 139; Aetna L. Ins. Co. v. Conway, 11 Ga. App. 557, 75 S. E. 915; Maddox v. Insurance Co., 6 Ga. App. 681, 65 S. E. 789; Talley v. Insurance Co., 111 Va. 778, 69 S. E. 936; Penn M. Life Insurance Co. v. M. S. & Trust Co., 72 Fed. 413, 19 C. C. A. 286, 73 Fed. 653, 19 C. C. A. 316, 38 L. R. A. 33, 70; Cooley's Briefs on Insurance, p. 1953; Vance on Insurance, pp. 267, 269.

[§, 7] It may be stated as a general rule that where, in an application for insurance, a fact is specifically inquired about, or the question is so framed as to call for a true statement of the fact, or to elicit the information desired, reason and justice alike demand that there should be a fair and full disclosure of the fact, or at least a substantial one. 3 Cooley's Briefs on Insurance, p. 2009 (d). Our case is not essentially different from Alexander v. Insurance Co., supra, in which this court said: "The company was imposed upon (whether fraudulently or not is immaterial) by such representation, and induced to enter into the contract. In such case it has been said by the highest court that: 'Assuming that both parties acted in good faith, justice would require that the contract be canceled, and premiums returned.' Insurance Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519 [6 Sup. Ct. 837, 29 L. Ed. 984]—"citing Bryant v. Insurance Co., supra, as decisive of the question. Our statute (Revisal of 1905, § 4808) affirms this view, for, while it declares that all statements in an application for insurance shall be construed as representations merely, and not as warranties, it further provides that no representation, unless material or fraudulent, shall prevent a recovery, the meaning of which plainly is that a material representation shall avoid the policy, if it is also false and calculated to influence the company, if without notice of its falsity, in making the contract at all, or in estimating the degree and character of the risk, or in fixing the premium. Bryant v. Insurance Co., supra. Our case is well within this rule. It is not necessary, as said in Fishplate's Case, that the act or conduct of the insured, which was represented by him in the application, should have contributed in some way or degree to the loss or damage for which the indemnity is claimed. Whether it was material depends upon how, if at all, it would have influenced the company in the respect we have just stated. The determining factor, therefore, in such case is whether the answer would have influenced the company in deciding for itself, and in its own interest, the important question of accepting the risk, and what rate of premium should be charged. The questions generally are framed with a view to estimating upon the longevity of the applicant, and any answer calculated to mislead the company in regard thereto should be considered as material. There are some contingencies that cannot be provided against; but the company is entitled to have a fair and honest answer to every question, which will enable it to exercise its judgment intelligently, and to have the necessary information as a basis upon which to make its calculations, although its best deduction therefrom may only approximate the actual result in the particular case. 3 Cooley's Briefs in Law of Insurance, p. 1952, 1953; Aetna L. Ins. Co. v. Conway, 11 Ga. App. 557, 75 S. E. 915. The applicant is required to act in the utmost faith in giving the information. Aetna L. Ins. Co. v. Conway, supra.

In life insurance, it is important for the company to know the individual history and characteristics of the applicant, his idiosyncretisms, or the peculiarities of his mental and physical constitution or temperament, and his environment at the time of his application. In no other way could the risk or hazard be well determined, or the premium fixed. Is he weak in body or mind, and, if so, to what extent, and in what particular way, and what are his inherited traits or the mental and physical characteristics of his progenitors? The inquiry must be not only individual, but ancestral, and the investigation searching as to his past life and future intentions, as experience has shown, in order to make anything like a reliable estimate of the risk to be incurred. And his habits and surroundings are also to be known, considered, and weighed. Has he been exposed to any contagious, infectious, or transmissible disease, is a perfectly legitimate inquiry. Does he propose to change his residence, so that his exposure to climatic or other diseases will be greater, and the hazard correspondingly increased? These and many other questions of like kind any prudent man engaged in the business of life insurance would be more than likely to ask, and the answers to them would surely tend to shape the judgment of the underwriter and influence his decision in regard to the risk. Any insurance company that would issue a policy or contract for insurance upon any other basis and without proper inquiry would be so reckless as to forfeit the confidence of the public.

However it may be generally, in our case it appears that the applicant had been intimately associated with his wife, who was afflicted with typhoid fever, requiring 17 medical visits for treatment. He nursed his wife and a child in the same house afflicted with the same disease throughout their illness, and shortly afterwards was himself attacked by it, and died. There was ample evidence to show that typhoid fever is transmissible from one person to another in various ways—by flies and other insects, drinking water, milk, and other substances of a like kind, when infected by flies, which carry the fatal germs from the stools or excreta of the typhoid patient. It was testified that, when there is typhoid fever in a house or on the premises, it presents a very dangerous situation for those who occupy them or who visit there, as they are thereby brought in close contact with the germ-laden substances, and are more exposed to infection. A person physically able to resist or throw off the disease may escape, or he may be so fortunate as not to become the victim of the germ-bearers; but he is nevertheless in dangerous surroundings, where the chances of infection are greater than if he were more remote from the premises of the patient. There was also evidence that the application for insurance would have been rejected had the question been correctly answered. John B. Gardner knew, or rather must have known, at the time he answered the question, that he had very recently been intimately associated with his sick wife as her nurse during her severe illness, and the company, if ignorant of the fact, was misled by his answer as to the truth of the matter. Under the charge of the court, which is sustained by our decisions, and was in accordance with the established doctrine, the jury found that the representation was false, and was also material, and there was evidence to support the finding. This being so, the question is, Did the defendant, with knowledge of the facts by itself or its agent, waive its right to insist upon this false statement, and thereby ratify the "binding slip"? If it did, then, the slip being valid, the company took the risk of the illness of the assured occurring subsequent to its date, and the policy was rightfully delivered by defendant's agent to Gardner, although he was sick at the time. Grier v. Insurance Co., supra. If it did not thus waive its right, the next question will be, Did the agent deliver the policy, not knowing that the statement in the application was false, and being led thereby to believe that the slip was valid, and of itself bound him to deliver the policy, and was he influenced by this fact to deliver the policy? This all relates to the valid execution of the policy, and does not contradict or vary its terms.

[8] It will not be denied, we should think, that there can be no legal waiver of a right without a knowledge of the right which is claimed to have been relinquished. The doctrine is well stated in 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law at p. 1093: "There can be no waiver, unless the person against whom it is claimed had full knowledge of his rights and of facts which will enable him to take effectual action for their enforcement. No one can acquiesce in a wrong while ignorant that it has been committed, and that the effect of his action will be to confirm it."

[9, 10] If there was any fraudulent or collusive agreement between the agent and Gardner for the delivery of the policy in disregard of the company's rights, it would avoid the entire transaction, and defeat plaintiff's recovery, for fraud vitiates everything. In such case, the agent would be representing himself, and not his principal, and his authority to speak or act for him would cease, as the party claiming the insurance, and who assisted in the fraud, or was particeps criminis, cannot take advantage of his own or the agent's wrong. "A contract made by an agent under the influence of bribery (or fraud or collusion), or one made to the knowledge of the other party, in fraud of the principal, is voidable by the latter." Tiffany on Agency, pp. 229-328; Sprinkle v. Indemnity Co., 124 N. C. 405, 32 S. E. 734. But the other party (here Gardner) must have had knowledge of the principal's right, and that the agent was defrauding his principal, or was disobeying instructions, or acting without the scope of his employment, or he must have colluded with him, and thereby obtained something belonging to the principal without being legally entitled thereto. "An agent cannot be allowed to put himself into a position in which his interest and his duty will be in conflict, and, if a person who contracts with an agent so deals with him as to give the agent an interest against the principal, the latter, on discovering the fact, may rescind the contract, notwithstanding that it was within the scope of the agent's authority. Thus, a gratuity given, or promise of commission or reward made to an agent for the purpose of influencing the execution of the agency, vitiates a contract subsequently made by him, as being presumptively made under that influence." Tiffany on Agency, p. 229. Under such circumstances of fraud or collusion, notice to the faithless agent of Gardner's illness or any other vital fact would not be imputed to the company, his defrauded principal. Tiffany on Agency, pp. 262, 263; Sprinkle v. Indemnity Co., 124 N. C. 405, 32 S. E. 734; Bank v. Burgwyn, 110 N. C. 267, 14 S. E. 623; Stanford v. Grocery Co., 143 N. C. 419, 55 S. E. 815. The Sprinkle decision is very much in point, both as to the fraud of the agent and its effect upon the question of notice to the principal of his faithless conduct. The case, in this aspect, may be submitted to the jury, if the defendant so desires, and tenders a proper issue for the purpose.

We can now see how important it is to have additional issues or a modification of the present ones, except the first four of them, for in the light of the entire case—pleadings, evidence, charge, and verdict—neither the plaintiff nor the defendant was entitled to a judgment; the verdict having fallen short of presenting all the essential facts, and the court, therefore, being unable to determine the rights of the parties and pronounce judgment. As some confusion may arise if we retain any part of the verdict, for instance, as to the first four issues, we will set aside the entire finding, and let the parties begin anew, which will be in the nature of a repleader, though not technically so, and it is so ordered.

New trial.

WILSON v. SCARBORO et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 29, 1913.)

1. TRIAL (§ 330*)—INSTRUCTIONS—SUBMISSION OF ISSUES.

In a suit on a contract for the sale of timber, defendants alleged that a stipulation as to the manner of cutting was omitted from the contract by mutual mistake or by fraud of plaintiff inducing the mistake on defendants' part. There was no evidence of fraud, but the court submitted that question to the jury, over objection by plaintiff. The jury found that there was "fraud or mutual mistake," without designating which of the two, and rendered a verdict for defendants. Held, that the verdict could not be sustained, since the jury might have found that there was fraud, and no mistake and still have made the same answer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 777-781½; Dec. Dig. § 330; **Sales*, Cent. Dig. § 706.]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 441*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—WRITTEN CONTRACT.

Where a written contract for the sale of timber contained no provision requiring plaintiff to deposit a certain sum or give his note as security for the faithful performance of the contract, it was error to permit parol proof of such an agreement as tending to materially vary and contradict it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1765-1845; Dec. Dig. § 441.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 442*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—WRITTEN CONTRACT.

Where a contract is not required to be in writing, and it is not intended that the written instrument shall state the whole of the agreement, the part resting in parol may be proved, provided it does not materially vary or contradict that which is written.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1874-1897; Dec. Dig. § 442.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 252*)—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE.

Where a contract for the sale of timber as claimed by defendant entitled plaintiff to suspend cutting if the market price of lumber so declined as to make further cutting unprofitable, an instruction on the issue whether plaintiff did suspend cutting and paying for defendant's timber after plaintiff had begun to cut the same in violation of the agreement, omitting all consideration of plaintiff's right to suspend in case the market price declined, was erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 505, 506-612; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

5. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—TIMBER CONTRACT—EFFECT.

A contract for the sale of timber with the right to enter the land and remove the same is in effect a conveyance of real property passing a present interest in the timber, defeasible as to all timber not cut within the time fixed by the parties, and hence after delivery is an executed and not merely an executory contract during the time the grantee is entitled to remove the timber.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Cent. Dig. §§ 6-12; Dec. Dig. § 3; **Contracts*, Cent. Dig. § 890.]

6. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 19*)—GROUNDS—MUTUAL MISTAKE—FRAUD.

Where there was a mutual mistake in the execution of a written contract or a mistake of one of the parties brought about by the fraud of the other, equity, in an otherwise proper case, will reform the contract but not on the ground of ignorance or misapprehension of one of the parties as to any facts inhering in such contract, though such misapprehension might be ground for rescission.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Reformation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 74-78; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Ferguson, Judge.

Action by W. S. Wilson against S. H. Scarboro and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. New trial granted.

This action was brought to recover damages of the defendants for entering upon land and unlawfully taking possession of and detaining certain timber thereon. The defendants "bargained and sold and conveyed" to the plaintiff certain timber described in the contract of conveyance, with the right and privilege to cut and remove the same within five years from April 5, 1909. While the contract does not so state, the defendants in their answer allege that plaintiff was required "to cut the timber continuously, after once beginning to cut, until the cutting of the same should be completed, unless while cutting the timber the price of lumber should decline, so that he could not cut the timber at a profit," and that said agreement was omitted from the contract by the mutual mistake of the parties or by the mistake of defendants and the fraud of the plaintiff, and that plaintiff further promised to put up a guaranty fund of $1,000 or give a note for that amount to one James Moore, who held a mortgage on the land, to insure the full and faithful performance of the contract. This statement of facts, with the issues and answers thereto, will sufficiently explain the matters in controversy. The following verdict was rendered by the jury:

"(1) Did the defendants execute a contract with plaintiff to sell him the timber described in the complaint, as alleged therein? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Was there an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendants, before the execution of the written contract, that the plaintiff would cut the timber described in the complaint continuously, after once beginning to cut, until the cutting of the same was completed, unless while cutting the same the price of lumber should decline so that he could not cut the said timber at a profit, as alleged in the amendment to the answer? Answer: Yes.

"(3) If so, was such agreement to continuously cut such timber omitted from the contract by fraud of the plaintiff, or by the mutual mistake of the plaintiff and the defendants? Answer: Yes.

"(4) Did plaintiff, at the time of the verbal contract, agree to pay to the defendants the sum of $1,000 as security or guaranty for the proper cutting of the timber described in the complaint and for the full performance of the contract between the plaintiff and defendants? Answer: Yes.

"(5) Did plaintiff, at the time of and contemporaneously with the execution of the written contract, agree with defendants that he would give to Mr. James Moore a note for $1,000, which would be as satisfactory to the said Moore as a deposit of $1,000 in money, as a guaranty for the performance of the terms of the contract between plaintiff and defendants, and that, failing to give such note to the said Mr. Moore, he would desist from cutting defendants' timber and remove his mills from their lands? Answer: Yes.

"(6) Did plaintiff give such note to the said James Moore? Answer: No.

"(7) Did defendants waive the giving of such note? Answer: No.

"(8) Did plaintiff suspend cutting and paying for defendants' timber after he had begun to cut the same, in violation of his agreement with defendants? Answer: Yes.

"(9) Did plaintiff remove from defendants' lands timber cut thereon before paying defendants for the same? Answer: No.

"(10) Did plaintiff cut stumps higher than 24 inches, or did he leave logs lying in the woods, or timber in the tops of trees, or leave timber standing scattered over places partly cut over, in violation of the contract with defendants? Answer: Yes.

"(11) If plaintiff violated the contract in any or all of the respects mentioned in the preceding issue, what amount of damages in money did the defendants sustain thereby? Answer: $6.75.

"(12) Did plaintiff negligently permit fire to be communicated to defendants' lands and thereby cause damage to defendants' timber, wood, undergrowth, etc.? Answer: No.

"(13) If your answer to the preceding issue shall be 'Yes,' what amount of damages did defendants sustain thereby? No answer.

"(14) Did defendants wrongfully and unlawfully refuse to allow plaintiff to re-enter upon their lands and to resume the cutting of their timber under said contract, after he had suspended the cutting of the same? Answer: No.

"(15) If your answer to the preceding issue shall be 'Yes,' what damage did plaintiff sustain thereby? No answer."

Judgment on the verdict for the defendants, and plaintiff appealed.

Armistead Jones & Son, Douglass & Douglass, R. N. Simms, and W. H. Lyon, Jr., all of Raleigh, for appellant. Jones & Bailey, of Raleigh, for appellees.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] The defendants allege that there was a stipulation as to the manner of cutting the timber which was omitted from the contract by mutual mistake or by the fraud of the plaintiff inducing a mistake on the part of the defendants. But we do not find in the record any evidence of fraud; and as the jury, in answer to the third issue, have found that there was fraud or mutual mistake, without designating which of the two, we are unable to tell whether their answer was based upon the fraud or the mistake. The court submitted the question of fraud to the jury against an express prayer of the plaintiff that there was no evidence of fraud, and consequently we have an erroneous finding upon the third issue. The jury might have found that there was fraud and no mistake and yet, misled by the erroneous ruling and instructions of the court, have given the answer, which is fully responsive to the issue. This error so permeates the entire case that it is sufficient of itself to require a new trial. It makes no difference that the alleged agreement was made, unless there was fraud or mutual mistake, for which the contract will be corrected and made to record the truth.

[2] There was also error in the rulings upon the fifth issue, as evidence was admitted, over plaintiff's objection, of the agreement as to the deposit of $1,000 or the giving of a note of like amount to James Moore as a security for the faithful performance of the contract. It evidently tended to vary the contract materially and even to contradict it. It was proposed by it to show an oral agreement, not inserted in the contract, which, if broken by the plaintiff, would terminate the timber contract and divest the plaintiff of all rights thereunder.

[3] Where the law does not require the contract to be in writing and it was not intended that the written instrument should state the whole of the agreement between the parties thereto, but that a part thereof should rest in parol, the latter part may be proved, if it does not materially vary or contradict that which has been written but is consistent therewith. The rule is thus stated in Clark on Contracts (2d Ed.) at page 85: "Where a contract does not fall within the statute, the parties may, at their option, put their agreement in writing or may contract orally or put some of the terms in writing and arrange others orally. In the latter case, although that which is written cannot be aided by parol evidence, yet the terms arranged orally may be proved by parol, in which case they supplement the writing and the whole constitutes one entire contract." Commenting on this passage in Evans v. Freeman, 142 N. C. 61, 54 S. E. 847, we said: "In such a case there is no violation of the familiar and elementary rule we have before mentioned (against varying or contradicting a written agreement), because in the sense of that rule the written contract is neither contradicted, added to, nor varied; but, leaving it in full force and operation as it has been expressed by the parties in the writing, the other part of the contract is permitted to be shown in order to round it out and present it in its completeness the same as if all of it had been committed to writing." Numerous cases in this court sustain this rule. Cobb v. Clegg, 137 N. C. 153, 49 S. E. 80; Walker v. Cooper, 150 N. C. 129, 63 S. E. 681; Type-writer Co. v. Hardware Co., 143 N. C. 97, 55 S. E. 417; Evans v. Freeman, 142 N. C. 61, 54 S. E. 847; Walker v. Venters, 148 N. C. 388, 62 S. E. 510; Basnight v. Jobbing Co., 148 N. C. 350, 62 S. E. 420; Woodson v. Beck, 151 N. C. 144, 65 S. E. 751, 81 L. R. A. (N. S.) 235. But the evidence admitted in our case does not fall within the well-settled rule, as it essentially varies and directly contravenes the written contract, incorporating in it a clause which, in a certain contingency, would nullify or destroy it. This cannot be done. When parties reduce their agreement to writing, parol evidence is not admissible to contradict, add to, or vary it; and this is so although the particular agreement is not required to be in writing, the reason being that the written memorial is considered to be the best and therefore is declared to be the only evidence of what the parties have agreed, as they are presumed to have inserted in it all the provisions by which they intended or are willing to be bound. Evans v. Freeman, supra; Terry v. Railroad, 91 N. C. 236. In Evans v. Freeman, supra, it was further said: "Numerous other cases have been decided by this court in which the application of the same principle has been made to various combinations of facts, all tending, though, to the same general conclusion that such evidence is competent where it does not conflict with the written part of the agreement and tends to supply its complement or to prove some collateral agreement made at the same time. The other terms of the contract may generally thus be shown where it appears that the writing embraces some, but not all, of the terms. Twidy v. Saunderson, 31 N. C. 5; Manning v. Jones, 44 N. C. 368; Daughtry v. Boothe, 49 N. C. 87; Perry v. Hill, 68 N. C. 417; Willis v. White, 73 N. C. 484; Terry v. Railroad, supra; Cumming v. Barber, 99 N. C. 332 [5 S. E. 903]." This court, in Ray v. Blackwell, 94 N. C. 10, and Moffitt v. Maness, 102 N. C. 457, 9 S. E. 399, refused to apply the principle allowing the unwritten part of the contract to be shown because the oral evidence tended to contradict or vary the written part of the contract and not merely to add other consistent terms to it. In Moffitt v. Maness, supra, we were admonished that the rule against the admissibility of parol testimony to vary the terms of a written instrument has perhaps been relaxed too much, and that the farthest limit has been reached in admitting such testimony, beyond which it will not be safe to go. The court sounds the alarm and warns us against the dangers ahead. It is safer to trust in the writing (the memorial selected by the parties for preserving the integrity of their treaty) than to confide in human memory for the exact reproduction of the facts, for, says Taylor, J., "time wears away the distinct image and clear impression of the fact and leaves in the mind uncertain opinions, imperfect notions, and vague surmises." Smith v. Williams, 5 N. C. 426, 4 Am. Dec. 564. There was no attempt to reform the contract for fraud or mistake in this respect, and the fourth and fifth issues are not so framed.

[4] The instruction upon the eighth issue

left out of consideration that by the terms of the oral agreement, as it is stated by defendant, the plaintiff had the right to suspend the cutting if the market price of lumber had so declined as to make it unprofitable, and the jury were told instead that they should answer that issue affirmatively, if they found that there was a stipulation for continuous cutting, and it was omitted from the agreement by fraud of plaintiff or mutual mistake. If it was made and left out of the written agreement by fraud or mistake, the real inquiry then was whether the plaintiff had violated it by failing to cut continuously when in the then state of the lumber market it was profitable to continue the cutting.

[6] It will be well to notice one position taken by the defendant, which is that the contract is executory and not an executed contract of sale—a mere agreement to convey the timber and not a perfected conveyance of it. But we understand that the same rule applies to both executory and executed written contracts with regard to the competency of parol evidence to vary or contradict them. If the plaintiff has violated the contract as written by the parties, or as it should have been written, if there was fraud or mistake, he may not be able to recover, depending, of course, upon the nature of the breach and the particular terms of the contract. Looking at the verdict and eliminating the first eight issues, as to which there was error, we do not see that the plaintiff has committed any breach from which a forfeiture of his contract results. The jury have said that he did not remove any cut timber without paying for it. Apart from this alleged breach, which the jury have negatived, the important and dominating issues in the case are the first eight.

Our opinion, though, is that the contract is an executed one and not merely executory. We have so repeatedly held as to similar contracts in recent years. In Lumber Co. v. Corey, 140 N. C. 462, 53 S. E. 300, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 468, it was said: "This court has so recently and so fully considered the question as to the true construction of contracts substantially like the one now under review (which is substantially like the Wilson-Scarboro deed) that it would seem almost useless for us to add anything to what has already been said. We have decided that such a contract, which could be treated as in effect a conveyance, passes a present estate in the timber, defeasible as to all timber not cut within the limit of time fixed by the parties in their agreement. This is the true construction." And again in Hawkins v. Lumber Co., 139 N. C. 160, 51 S. E. 852: "The true construction of this instrument (a contract for cutting timber within a fixed period) * * * is that the same conveys a present estate of absolute ownership in the timber, defeasible as to all timber not removed within the time required by the terms of the deed"—and this statement of the law is approved in Lumber Co. v. Corey, 140 N. C. 467 [53 S. E. 300, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 468]. In Bunch v. Lumber Co., 134 N. C. 116, 46 S. E. 24, it is said that the form of the instrument counts for little. "It is more a difference in form than in substance. In no event should we give a construction to the instrument which will confer any greater right or estate than is commensurate with the object and purpose of the parties as expressed in it. The spirit and letter of the contract exclude the idea that, when the time fixed by it expired, the defendant's assignor was to have any right, interest, or estate in the timber then standing on the land." And approving Strasson v. Montgomery, 32 Wis. 52, the principle is thus stated: "The former conveyance was of all the trees and timber on the premises, with the proviso that the vendee should take the same off the land within four years. * * * It is well settled, on principle and by authority, that the legal effect of the instrument is that the vendor thereby conveyed to the vendee all of the trees and timber on the premises which the vendee should remove therefrom within the prescribed time, and that such as remained thereon after that time should belong to the vendor or to his grantee of the premises." See, also, Hornthal v. Howcott, 154 N. C. 230, 70 S. E. 171, where the same doctrine was recognized and applied by this court, speaking by Justice Allen. It has also been held that growing trees are a part of the realty, and deeds and contracts concerning them are governed by the law applicable to that species of property. Drake v. Howell, 133 N. C. 163, 45 S. E. 539; Hawkins v. Lumber Co., supra. We see, therefore, that this is an executed contract operating as a conveyance of the timber and a defeasible estate therein and of course is required to be in writing. It cannot be contradicted or varied, nor can it be proved by parol, but only by the writing duly executed.

We should perhaps notice another matter. A careful reading of the testimony has not convinced us that there is any evidence of a mutual mistake by the parties in writing their contract. A contract is the agreement of both parties and not merely the intention of one. Their minds must meet and be in accord upon one and the same thing at the same time. Rodgers v. Bell, 156 N. C. 378, 72 S. E. 817; Elks v. Insurance Co., 150 N. C. 619, 75 S. E. 808. "Even if the defendant had clearly shown that it so understood the agreement, it will not do, as the court proceeds not upon the understanding of one of the parties but upon the agreement of both. No principle is better settled." Lumber Co. v. Lumber Co., 137 N. C. 431, 49 S. E. 946, citing Brunhild v. Freeman, 77 N. C. 128, Prince v. McRae, 84 N. C. 674, Bailey v. Rutjes, 86 N. C. 520, and other cases. It follows from this doctrine that no contract can be altered or amended in any substantial respect, except by consent of both parties or by what may be equivalent thereto.

[8] If a court finds that there has been a mutual mistake, or its equivalent, viz., that there has been a mistake of one of the parties brought about by the fraud of the other, it will, in an otherwise proper case, reform the contract, but not otherwise. The undisclosed intention or understanding of one will not answer the purpose. "The mistake, to be relieved against in equity, must be one that is mutual, material, and not induced by negligence. It must be mutual, if the complainant wishes to have the instrument reformed and not simply set aside, because equity cannot undertake to reform on the ground of ignorance or misapprehension of one of the parties as to any facts, though it may rescind. It is essential that the mistake, to be relieved against in equity, must be an error on both sides. If, however, such ignorance or misapprehension was induced or fraudulently taken advantage of by the other party, relief will be administered, but obviously on different grounds." Bispham on Equity, § 191. "Equity will reform a written contract or other instrument inter vivos where, through mutual mistake or the mistake of one of the parties, induced or accompanied by the fraud of the other, it does not, as written, truly express the agreement of the parties." Eaton on Equity, § 618; Warehouse Co. v. Ozment, 132 N. C. 839, 44 S. E. 681; Pelletier v. Cooperage Co., 158 N. C. 403, 74 S. E. 112; Dameron v. Lumber Co., 161 N. C. 498, 77 S. E. 694; and same case at this term, 79 S. E. 607. The defendant's evidence in this case hardly conforms to the standard of proof required for a correction of written instruments. It tends to show a mistake in his own mind rather than one common to the parties—his own understanding rather than the agreement of the parties. It must have been the intention of both to write the contract as he now claims it should be and to insert in it the clause alleged to have been left out.

The judgment and verdict will be set aside, and a new trial granted.

New trial.

WILLIAM JAMES' SONS CO. v. CROUCH et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Oct. 7, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 342*) — COPY OF RECORDED GRANT—ADMISSIBILITY.

A copy of a grant of land by the commonwealth of Virginia, certified by the auditor of this state or the register of the land office of Virginia, showing no seal of the commonwealth thereon, nor anything indicating that it had borne such seal, when recorded, is admissible as evidence of title to the land, upon the presumption that the original is under seal, arising from the recordation thereof and the recital in the testimonium clause that the Governor had affixed the seal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1302-1314; Dec. Dig. § 342.*]

2. WILLS (§ 246*)—PROBATE—ADMISSION TO RECORD—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

Admission to record, by the clerk of a county court of this state, of a copy of a will probated in another state amounts to probate thereof, which cannot be collaterally drawn in question, nor set aside otherwise than in the manner prescribed by statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 582, 583; Dec. Dig. § 246.*]

3. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 186*)—ENTRY OF INDEFINITE DESCRIPTION — EFFECT — SUBSEQUENT GRANT.

An entry of land, general and indefinite in its description of the land claimed under it, and afterwards carried into survey and grant, relied upon as proof of an exception, from another grant, of land susceptible of inclusion by the description of the entry, but lying entirely outside of the lines of the survey and patent founded on the entry, may be treated by a jury as calling only for the land surveyed and granted, and as having been deemed by the surveyor to be identical with the survey and merged therein, and the land lying beyond the lines of the survey as not having been excepted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. § 599; Dec. Dig. § 186.*]

4. GRANT OF PUBLIC LAND—SURVEY.

Quere, whether, to except an entry not specifically excluded by a grant with reservations, authorized by the act of June 22, 1788 (12 Henning's St. at Large, p. 646) the survey designating the entry must be produced.

Error to Circuit Court, Raleigh County.

Action by the William James' Sons Company against E. P. Crouch and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

Dillon & Nuckolls, of Fayetteville, for plaintiffs in error. McCreery & Patterson, of Beckley, and T. N. Read, of Hinton, for defendant in error.

POFFENBARGER, P. Having introduced no evidence except certified copies of a certain grant, the defendants in this action of ejectment demurred to the plaintiff's evidence, and the court, being of the opinion that the evidence was sufficient in law to sustain a verdict for the plaintiff, overruled the demurrer, and rendered judgment for it upon the conditional verdict, fixing the location and boundaries of the land.

In support of their demurrer, the plaintiffs in error charge defects in the paper title of the plaintiff and insufficiency of the evidence to prove the land in controversy lies within the territory the title papers purport to cover.

[1] The title claimed by the plaintiff goes back to the De Witt Clinton grant, dated February 17, 1796. To establish this grant, the plaintiff produced a copy of the patent to De Witt Clinton, certified by the auditor of the state. As so certified, the patent appeared to bear the seal of the commonwealth of Virginia, but, in making the copy, a printed form was used on which the word "Seal" appeared, and it was not erased so as to make the copy conform to the record. The fact is, as shown by agreement, that the record of this patent shows no seal. To prove this, the defendants produced another copy certified by the auditor, and also two others of different dates from the land office at Richmond, Va., showing none.

Construing the statute as not having required it, the Virginia registers of the land office did not record the seals as parts of the grants, and this custom having prevailed for more than 200 years, during which thousands of grants were made and recorded, the courts of Virginia and Kentucky, once a part of Virginia, have given effect to this practical construction, and admitted copies of patents from the Virginia land office as evidence of valid title, notwithstanding the failure thereof to show the seals. The two constructions of the statute which it is supposed the officers considered, and the reasons which impelled them to accept the grammatical rather than the legal construction, are fully set forth in Hedden v. Overton, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 408, and Coal & Iron Co. v. Coal & Iron Co., 101 Va. 723, 45 S. E. 291. The decision in Hedden v. Overton was approved and followed in Sneed v. Ward, 5 Dana (Ky.) 187, and by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in Robinson v. Dewhurst, 68 Fed. 336, 15 C. C. A. 466, an action of ejectment originating in the United States Circuit Court for the District of West Virginia, and involving lands in this state. Although the statute seems to have required all grants by the commonwealth to be "entered of record at full length" by the register of the land office (Code of 1819, vol. I, c. 86, § 55, p. 334), the registers, deeming the seal to be no part of the grant, omitted it. Legally it is undoubtedly a part of the grant or patent and essential to its completion, the statute requiring such papers to be signed by the Governor and sealed with the seal of the commonwealth, but in a narrow, grammatical sense it is not a part of the patent, but only an appendage thereof. At least it was so regarded and treated, and, for that reason, it was not recorded. The adoption of this view was no doubt superinduced or impelled by the impossibility of producing upon the record books a facsimile of the state seal. The conclusion of the Virginia and Kentucky courts finds some support in the presumption in favor of the regularity of the acts of public officials. As certified, the patent itself declares the Governor had caused the seal of the commonwealth to be affixed. The statutory provisions, regulating the acquisition of land by grant from the commonwealth, were specific and positive as to the requisite steps. The patents were prepared by the register of the land office. On them he indorsed that the party in whose favor the patent was made out had title to the land, and this indorsement was founded on the records of his office. The paper thus prepared and indorsed was delivered by him to the Governor, whose duty it was to sign it and affix to it the seal of the commonwealth. After this, it became the duty of the register to record it, and he had no authority to record it without the signature of the Governor and the seal of the commonwealth. The certified copy shows the patent in question was recorded, and presumptively the record thereof was made after the Governor had subscribed his name to it and affixed the seal, for the register had no authority to record it until it was so signed and sealed. Certain copies of grants certified by the auditor of this state, put in evidence, show seals, as if they had been copied from the original patents, and are relied upon as contradicting the statement that the register did not record the seals, but these copies were no doubt made on the printed forms used by the auditor, bearing seals, and so carry on their faces the error found in the copy of the Clinton patent. The statement of fact is taken from the Virginia and Kentucky cases, and is no doubt founded upon the result of actual investigation. The reasoning and conclusion of the Virginia and Kentucky courts are approved and adopted, and the certified copy held to be admissible as evidence of title, notwithstanding its omission of the seal. The presumption upon which this ruling stands is recognized in most jurisdictions, and generally applied under the circumstances disclosed here. 1 Taylor, Ev. § 149; 25 A. & E. Enc. L. 78; 11 Ency. of Ev. 656.

[3] The will of Oliver L. Phelps, probated in the surrogate's office of Ontario county, N. Y., on the 17th day of May, 1814, as constituting a link in the plaintiff's chain of title, was not proved in Raleigh county as an original will, but a copy thereof was admitted to record as an authenticated copy of the will as probated in Ontario county, N. Y., by the clerk of the county court of Raleigh county February 18, 1861. The copy was not authenticated in the manner prescribed by the state and federal statutes. The certificate of probate in Ontario county was not under seal, nor was the official character of the surrogate shown in the manner prescribed. Although the evidence of the probate of the will in New York was not sufficient to authorize probate of the copy in this state, it was admitted to record. Such admission was a judicial act. It was a sentence of probate, notwithstanding the error committed by the clerk in the acceptance of insufficient evidence. However erroneous and irregular, this probate cannot be ignored nor called in question otherwise than by direct attack upon it in the manner provided by law. Norvell v. Lessueur, 33 Grat. (Va.) 222; Kirby v. Kirby, 84 Va. 627, 5 S. E. 539; Robinson v. Allen et al., 11 Grat. (Va.) 783; Taylor v. Burnside, 1 Grat. (Va.) 165; Wood- ter v. Matz, 76 S. E. 131, 134; West v. West, 3 Rand. (Va.) 378; Vaughan v. Doe, 1 Leigh (Va.) 287; Wills v. Spraggins, 3 Grat. (Va.) 555; Parker v. Brown, 6 Grat. (Va.) 554. "After a will has been admitted to record, it cannot, with us, be controverted incidentally; as it frequently is in the English common-law courts, and sometimes (through the intervention of a jury) in their court of chancery, in consequence of the want of a court of probate in relation to wills of real estate. The sentence of our courts of probate cannot be drawn in question, unless in an appellate forum, except in the mode prescribed by our statute of wills." Malone v. Hobbs, 1 Rob. (Va.) 346, 39 Am. Dec. 263. The action of the clerk in admitting to record a will or an authenticated copy of one probated in another state has the same effect as if admitted by the county court. Code c. 77, § 26. To set aside the probate of a copy, the mode prescribed by section 25 of chapter 77 of the Code must be followed. McVey v. Butcher, 78 S. E. 891.

[3] De Witt Clinton conveyed his grant to one Oliver Phelps. The devisees of Phelps conveyed it to Andrew Kingsbury, as treasurer of the state of Connecticut, and his successors in office, for the use and benefit of the schools. On May 12, 1818, Kingsbury, as such treasurer, sold and conveyed it to Gideon Granger. The title of Granger was afterwards confirmed by a deed from Zechariah Seymour and James Smedley, trustees under the will of Oliver Phelps. Afterwards, Gideon Granger disposed of it to his descendants by his will. Later it was passed on to more remote descendants by the will of Francis Granger. There were also conveyances of undivided interests among the Grangers, and perhaps strangers were interested at various times, but all interests seem to have gotten back into the hands of Granger descendants. By a deed dated January 23, 1888, numerous persons by the name of Winthrop, Granger, Irving, and Pierson conveyed the land to Azel Ford. The introduction of this deed was objected to on account of a lack of evidence to establish the pedigrees or interests of some of the grantors. The objection did not specify the extent of this alleged defect, and the brief limits it to two persons, Charlotte R. Pierson and Bessie C. Pierson. Presumptively they are the Charlotte Ross Pierson and Bessie Chapin Rochester mentioned in the will of John A. Granger. The latter is described in the deed as having lately borne the name "Rochester," and a deposition taken for the purposes of another case and read in this one by agreement shows she was a granddaughter of John A. Granger. In view of the record of the title and this testimony, the objection is obviously untenable.

The Clinton grant is what is often called an "inclusive" one, or, more accurately, one reserving from its operation prior claims within its boundaries. It granted by metes and bounds 180,000 acres, but excepted in general terms prior claims amounting to 128,000 acres. Many of these were specifically located by the plaintiff in its proof, but there are two old entries, claiming in the aggregate 86,356.5 acres, both antedating the Clinton grant, as to which there is controversy. One of these was made by Andrew Reid and John Stuart, November 1, 1794, for 81,356.5 acres, and the other by Andrew Reid, March 20, 1795, for 5,000 acres. Upon these two entries a survey was made and completed on the 7th day of April, 1796, calling for a combined acreage of 86,356.5 acres, the aggregate of the entries. On the 27th day of March, 1797, the land so surveyed was granted to Andrew Reid. The entries were very general in their description of the land, and, according to the testimony of two surveyors, are susceptible of an interpretation making them include about three times the quantity of land called for by them. As so construed, two surveyors were of the opinion that they included the land in controversy in this action, but they are positive the survey and patent made under entries do not include any portion thereof.

The entries were made prior to the date of the Clinton grant, which contains this provision: "But it is always to be understood that the survey upon which this grant is founded includes 128,000 acres of prior claims which have a preference by law to the warrants and rights upon which this grant is founded, liberty is reserved that the same shall be firm and valid and may be carried into grant or grants, and this grant shall be no bar in either law or equity to the confirmation of the title or titles to the same as before mentioned and reserved, with its appurtenances." Part of these entries was never carried into grant, but, if they were excepted as prior claims from the Clinton grant, that grant conferred no title to them. The title thereto remained in the commonwealth. Bryan v. Willard, 21 W. Va. 65; Patrick v. Dryden, 10 W. Va. 387, 416; Nichols v. Covey, 4 Rand. (Va.) 365. Under the statutory system of disposition of public lands, the entries were lodged with the surveyors as applications for the surveys, and were never transmitted to the register of the land office, nor recorded therein. Surveys made upon entries and plats thereof were required to be transmitted to the register of the land office and recorded. Thereupon it became the duty of the register to prepare the patents for execution by the governor. The entry was the basis for the survey, and the survey the basis of the patent. As the register of the land office did not make the survey, there was no occasion for recordation of the entries in his office. The entry was merged in the survey, and the survey in the patent. Both were mere preliminary steps to the execution of the patent, but they conferred rights in the nature of equities, determina-ble by the courts of equity, when the statutory proceeding in the courts of law by caveat was not adopted. The caveat was a remedy provided by statute for determination of controversies between claimants for patents to the same land, or concerning conflicts of boundaries of entries and surveys. After the issuance of the patent, the remedy by caveat was not available, but fraudulent patentees of land in equity and conscience belonging to others were held to be trustees of the legal title for the benefit of the latter. These observations show the nature and office of the entry. It gave a claim upon the land, but it was an indefinite one. It was a mere memorandum to the surveyor, calling upon him for definite designation of the desired land by a survey. Not being a survey, it was necessarily indefinite and general, notwithstanding the requirement of the statute that the location should be made "so specially and precisely" as that others might be enabled, "with certainty, to locate other warrants from the adjacent residuum." In Harper & Weston v. Baugh, 9 Grat. (Va.) 508, the validity of entries was a subject of inquiry, and the substance of that decision is that the entry may be indefinite, but is void if unreasonably so. It was observed that a surplus of a few acres ought not to vitiate the whole entry, but if the whole of the boundaries were described by sensible objects, so that there could be no reason for one to yield to or control the other, the entry could only be good for so much as would be covered in common by surveys for the proper quantity made upon each of the boundaries. But if the boundaries were so extensive that surveys might be made on different parts of the boundary without covering any land in common, the entry would be good for none. Obviously, therefore, notwithstanding what is said as to the requirement of definiteness, the entries were nothing more than mere general indications of the location of the desired land, and were afterwards defined by the surveys. In this instance, the John Stuart entry was so defined in less than 18 months after it was made, the Reid entry in about 13 months. The date of the survey combining them was April 27, 1793. In February of the same year, the Clinton grant was issued, upon a survey made in May, 1793, less than a year prior thereto, about six months after the Stuart and Reid entry, about two months after the Reid entry, and nearly a year before the Reid survey. The men who made these surveys and entries, or their agents, were upon the ground in the wilderness in which the lands were at the time, and they embodied in the surveys their knowledge thereof and their understanding as to the descriptions of the two entries in question. Their work merged the entries in the survey, wherefore the jury could well have said the indefinite entries were intended to conform to the survey, and therefore extended only to the limits thereof which are shown not to include the land in controversy.

[4] As this grant is founded upon entries made after June 2, 1788, it is suggested, but not decided, that, to claim the benefit of an entry, or show an exception thereof from a grant, under a general reservation, the survey on which the grant was made should be produced, showing designation of the entry thereon, for the act authorized grants only upon surveys, showing reservations of prior claims. It took no notice of entries merely lodged with surveyors, and was passed primarily, if not solely, to validate unauthorized surveys, then found in the land office, and confer rights to patents founded on them.

The act reads as follows: "Whereas, sundry surveys have been made in different parts of this commonwealth, which include in the general courses thereof, sundry smaller tracts of prior claimants, and which in the certificate granted by the surveyors of the respective counties are reserved to such claimants; and the Governor or chief magistrate is not authorized by law to issue grants upon such certificates of surveys; for remedy whereof, 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly, that it shall and may be lawful for the Governor to issue grants with reservations of claims to lands included within such surveys, anything in any law to the contrary notwithstanding." (12 Henning's St. at Large, p. 646).

At the date of the Winthrop deed, some of the land originally conveyed to Clinton had been conveyed away to strangers. Accordingly the Winthrop deed granted to Azel Ford only such as remained, describing it as follows: "All the rest and residue of the De Witt Clinton grant of 130,000, which now belongs to the parties of the first part, or to which they have any title, legal or equitable." Asserting duty on the part of the plaintiff to show the location of the land sold, as a means of identifying and locating that remaining unsold, under the well-settled rule requiring a claimant, under a deed containing exceptions, to locate the exceptions, the briefs for the plaintiffs in error charge failure of the plaintiff below in this respect. The lands sold from the grant are not specifically located by the evidence, as were the prior claims excepted from the grant itself, but the testimony of a witness was introduced, showing his entire familiarity with the land and intimate knowledge thereof. He had been attorney and agent for the Grangers from the year 1870 to 1888, the date of their deed to Ford, and was thoroughly acquainted with the De Witt Clinton grant. As attorney for the Grangers, he had knowledge of all their transfers, and kept a list of the lands they had sold, and testified that he knew the tracts in controversy had never been conveyed by the Grangers. He had not only been their agent and attorney and kept a record of their sales of land, but had also abstracted their title, bringing it down to their deed to Ford. Thus qualified, he said he knew the tract of land in controversy had never been conveyed away by the Grangers. Under the ruling on this question made in the recent case of Winding Gulf Colliery Co. v. Campbell, 78 S. E. 384, not yet officially reported, this evidence was admissible and sufficient to show prima facie that the land in controversy is no part of that previously sold and conveyed.

Having thus examined all the criticisms of the plaintiff's title and proof, and found them untenable, and seeing no defects therein, we think the ruling upon the demurrer to the evidence was proper, and accordingly affirm the judgment.

Affirmed.

CARPENTER v. HAYHURST et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 7, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

WILLS (§ 302*)—ACTION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

On the trial of an issue devisavit vel non, the only evidence in relation to the due execution of the will is the testimony of the two subscribing witnesses, both of whom prove the competency of the testator, and one of whom testifies that he wrote the will at testator's request and read it to him; that the other subscribing witness, who lived near by, was then sent for and came; that the three were present together in the room when testator and the two witnesses signed the paper. The other witness admits that he was called in to witness the will; that all three of them were together in the room; that a portion of the will was read to him; and that he signed it as a witness in the presence of the testator and the other witness; but he denies that he saw the testator or the other witness sign it or that he saw their names on the paper at the time he signed it. Held, that the verdict of the jury, which was against the validity of the will, was not supported by the evidence, and the court properly set it aside.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 575, 581, 700-710; Dec. Dig. § 302.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Marion County.

Suit in equity by Sarah Jane Carpenter against David Hayhurst and others. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Harry Shaw, of Fairmont, for appellant. Showalter & Frame and M. W. Ogden, all of Fairmont, for appellees.

WILLIAMS, J. Sarah Jane Carpenter brought a suit in equity against Rebecca Hayhurst and David Hayhurst, in his own right and as executor of William Hayhurst, deceased, attacking the will of said William Hayhurst, deceased. The chancellor directed an issue devisavit vel non to be tried by a jury. The trial of that issue resulted in a finding by the jury that the paper writing offered as the will of William Hayhurst, deceased, was not his will. On motion of David Hayhurst the court set aside the verdict of the jury and awarded a new trial. To that order Mrs. Carpenter obtained this writ of error.

Testator left a widow, Rebecca Hayhurst, and two children, David Hayhurst and the plaintiff, Sarah Jane Carpenter. The will in question gives the wife the household goods absolutely and a life estate in all of testator's other personal property and in his lands and at her death the remainder in the lands to his son David Hayhurst, who is named as his executor, and the remainder in the personal property, subject to the payment of debts, to his daughter, Sarah Jane Carpenter.

The only question presented is: Did the court err in setting aside the verdict? The decision of this question calls for a consideration of the evidence.

The only witnesses who testified concerning the capacity of the testator and the facts and circumstances attending the execution of the will were T. H. Devault and R. B. Travis, whose names appear as subscribing witnesses thereto. Notwithstanding the bill attacks the will on the ground of testator's alleged incapacity and of undue influence exerted upon him by his son, David Hayhurst, there is no attempt to prove either of these allegations. On the contrary, both of the attesting witnesses say that on the day the will purports to have been executed he was of sound mind. The testimony of the two witnesses conflicts in many particulars, and counsel for Mrs. Carpenter insists that Travis contradicts Devault, and that his testimony proves that the requisite formalities for the due execution of the will were not observed; that the jury were the sole judges of the credibility of the witnesses and had the right to disbelieve Devault and believe Travis. But we do not understand the testimony of Travis to be a denial of the material facts testified to by Devault. True it does not corroborate Devault in the most important particulars and contradicts him on some immaterial matters; still it does not disprove that the testator signed the will in the presence of the two subscribing witnesses and that they signed it in his presence and in the presence of each other. Giving Travis' testimony full force and value, it only proves that he did not know, or does not remember, whether it was so signed and witnessed or not. Witness Devault is very clear and positive in his statements. He says he went to testator's house at his request, made some days or weeks before, and wrote the will as the testator had directed him and then read it over to him; that, before testator signed it, Mr. Travis was sent for and came to the house; that they were all three present in the room when he, at testator's request, signed his name for him, he never having learned to write, and then assisted him to make his mark; that he then signed his name as a subscribing witness, and Mr. Travis immediately signed his name also as a subscribing witness; that they were all three present in the room at the signing and witnessing of the paper. The foregoing summary of Devault's testimony proves that all the legal requirements were observed in the making of the will and calls for a verdict in favor of its validity, unless those material facts are contradicted by Travis. Travis lived about a quarter of a mile from testator's house and admits that he was sent for and came to witness his will; that when he arrived testator and witness Devault were in the room; and that Devault had already written the paper. He also admits signing the paper as a witness, in the presence of Devault and the testator. He first says that Devault asked him to witness the will but on further questioning says he does not remember whether it was testator or Devault who asked him to witness it, but it is not material who made the request. Freeman v. Freeman, 76 S. E. 657; 40 Cyc. 1115. Being asked, "Who all signed the will?" he replied, "I do not know." He was then asked, "Who all did you see sign?" and replied, "I saw myself sign." He says he did not see Devault sign and did not see his name on the paper when he signed it himself; but, in answer to the very next question, he says he does not know whether he signed it first or last. He was asked whether he was looking out of the window when Devault assisted Hayhurst to make his mark, and replied, "I don't remember which way I was looking." He does not know whether he was in the room at the time it was done, but he does not say that it was not done in his presence. He may have been willfully unobservant, but his failure to see, when he was present and could have seen, does not amount to a contradiction of Devault, who says the act was done in the presence of the three. It being proven that all three were in the room together and that witness could have seen what was done by testator and the other subscribing witness, it is immaterial that he did not avail himself of the opportunity to see. 40 Cyc. 1123, and numerous cases cited in note. Moreover, this court has held that the testimony of a subscribing witness who seeks to impeach a will should be viewed with a great deal of suspicion. Webb v. Dye, 18 W. Va. 376, and Ward v. Brown, 53 W. Va. 227, 44 S. E. 488.

In view of the uncertain testimony of Travis, which does not deny the material facts proven by Devault, and which evinces both his lack of knowledge and memory as to what took place, and of the direct and positive testimony of witness Devault, who proves the due execution of the will, the jury had no right to find that the will had not been duly executed. Their verdict was clearly against the evidence, and the court very properly set it aside.

The judgment will be affirmed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

GORE v. VINES.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.

Oct. 7, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. PARTNERSHIP (§ 303*)—CONTRACT—ACCOUNTING.

Under a contract of partnership for a mercantile business one partner furnished the capital and the other his services as manager and a building for the business, the profits and losses to be shared equally; the capital was invested in goods and the partner furnishing the same was credited therefor on the books of the firm; each partner was charged on the books with what he took for his own use from the stock; goods were sold, and the stock was replenished by money and profits of the firm:

Held, in a suit to settle the partnership affairs after the stock and building were destroyed by fire and the business thereby discontinued, that,

The capital furnished became partnership property and the loss of the goods fell not alone on the partner furnishing the capital, but it was proper to repay him the capital furnished, to the extent of the firm's assets remaining after a payment of the firm's debts, and to charge the other partner with half the loss of capital remaining, though the latter lost his services and building.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 700; Dec. Dig. § 303.*]

2. PARTNERSHIP (§ 329*)—CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION AND EFFECT—ACCOUNTING.

Where a written contract of partnership either from its terms or by the acts and conduct of the parties is made to relate to a partnership business already existing at the time of the execution of the writing, transactions of the firm prior to the date of the contract as well as those subsequent to its date are properly cognizable in a suit for a settlement of the partnership affairs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 782-786; Dec. Dig. § 329.*]

3. PARTNERSHIP (§ 344*)—ACCOUNTING—DEGREE—SUFFICIENCY.

In a suit for the settlement of a partnership in which a partial loss of the capital furnished wholly by one partner is found but the amount thereof not definitely shown by reason of the uncertainty of the collectability of notes and accounts going to make up the assets applicable to a repayment of the capital furnished, a decree settling principles of the cause whereby the amount is to be ascertained and one-half thereof paid to the partner furnishing the capital by the other partner, on which future decree may follow, is not erroneous on the ground of indefiniteness as to the amount.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 813-818; Dec. Dig. § 344.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Mercer County.

Action by L. W. Gore against O. P. Vines, administrator, etc. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hale & Pendleton, of Princeton, for appellant. Woods & Martin, of Princeton, for appellee.

ROBINSON, J. On the 15th day of September, 1908, Vines and Gore entered into a written agreement of partnership for the purpose of conducting a general retail mercantile business, whereby it was stipulated that the former was to furnish the sum of $4,000, or goods to the value of that sum, and the latter was to furnish his services as general manager of the business, and also the building in which the business was to be conducted. The contract expressly provided that the parties were to share equally in all profits and losses arising from the business.

For many months prior to the execution of the written contract the parties had actually been conducting the business. The contract was indeed for the continuation of a partnership already existing. The ledger of the firm and the acts and conduct of both of the parties prove this clearly. The old business was not settled and a new one begun. Not even was an inventory made at the time of the execution of the written contract. But the business that had been done prior to the written contract was distinctly carried over into that done after the contract was made. Moreover, the writing itself in one particular evidences that it was to apply to a continuation of the business already existing between the parties. It says that Gore is to furnish the building "in which said mercantile business is now being conducted for the continuation of said business under the firm name aforesaid." And, pretty clearly from the record does it appear that the capital which had gone into the business prior to the date of the written contract had been furnished by Vines, and at that date the firm owed him on this account a sum which was so nearly $4,000 that the parties in drawing up the writing could well estimate it at that amount as the capital to be furnished.

On the 13th day of December, 1908, the store was destroyed by fire. Thereafter the parties did not resume business. Each collected in money due the firm and paid out money on the indebtedness. All outside indebtedness of the partnership has been paid. In March, 1909, Gore brought this suit against Vines for a settlement of the partnership accounts. Vines died soon after the suit was instituted, and the cause was revived in the name of his administrator, who answered the bill. The court, rightly viewing the pleadings as making a case for reference, referred the cause to a commissioner to ascertain and report the status of the partnership affairs as between the parties. On the incoming of the report plaintiff's exceptions thereto were overruled, the report confirmed, and a decree in accordance therewith entered.

The decree finds that the firm is indebted to the estate of Vines, by reason of capital furnished by him, in the sum of $3,417.90, and adjudges that his administrator recover the same from the firm. It further finds that the total assets of the firm is $2,712.14, and adjudges that such of the same as is in money in the hands of Gore be paid in satisfaction of the costs of the suit and the balance as far as collectable to the administrator of Vines on the debt decreed to his estate. The decree then provides that uncollected notes and accounts going to make up the assets of $2,712.14 shall be collected and applied to the further payment of the debt decreed Vines' estate. As to this part of the assets the commissioner had reported that he had not ascertained how much was good and collectable. The decree in the end directs, that of whatever remains unpaid after the application of all the assets collected and collectable, one-half shall be paid by Gore to the estate of Vines, thus putting the loss of the partnership equally on the partners.

[1] From the decree plaintiff, Gore, has appealed. First, he insists that the firm should not have been charged with the capital which Vines put into the business. He contends that the loss of the stock of goods by fire must fall on Vines alone—that since Vines contributed the capital, the loss of the goods was his and not that of the firm. The record will not support this contention. Vines it is true contributed the capital for the goods, but the goods were purchased and dealt with as firm property. The written contract did not specifically provide that Vines should contribute simply the use of the goods to the firm. It meant that he should contribute to the firm the goods themselves. Naturally they would become partnership property, especially so since by the contract the partners were to share equally losses as well as profits. For if the goods were the absolute property of Vines, then when any of them were sold to a customer the money received for them, or the note or account made, would be the property of Vines and not that of the firm, except as to the mere profit represented therein. In this view, there could be no loss to Gore, as far as capital was concerned, for any bad debt made by him as manager. Yet the contract plainly meant that there might be. On the other hand the contract provided that plaintiff should contribute his services and the building, meaning in the very nature of things merely the use of the same, not absolute property therein. The parties themselves understood the contract as we interpret it. The goods were sold and replenished as partnership property. Profits from the business belonging equally to the partners were put into the stock. Why did plaintiff allow his share of the profits indiscriminately to go into a replenishing of the stock if Vines owned the stock? Each partner was charged on the books of the firm with what he took therefrom for the personal use of himself and family. The ledger of the firm shows that Vines was given credit for each item of capital furnished by him. Plaintiff was in charge of that book. It was made under his guidance at least. He is responsible for its makeup. Why did he allow credit therein to Vines for money advanced for goods if the goods were not considered partnership property? Plaintiff seems to think that because he loses his services and the building Vines should lose the capital. Yet, though the books were under control of plaintiff, he made no charge thereon in his favor for either salary or rent. He construed the contract, while the business was continuing, just as the law interprets it. It is true that plaintiff introduced witnesses who testified that they heard Vines say while the business was going on that the goods were his. But the testimony along this line is so meager and uncertain that it can not properly prevail as against the legal import of the writing, and the acts and conduct of the parties themselves. The stock of goods was plainly partnership property. Any creditor of the firm could have subjected it to his debt. Snyder v. Lunsford, 9 W. Va. 223. We are by no means disposed to disturb the finding of the commissioner and the decree thereon in this behalf.

The written contract contains no terms or restrictions as to the ownership of the capital stock inconsistent with the construction which we approve. It simply says that Vines is to furnish the sum of $4,000, or goods to the value of that sum, for the purpose of conducting the business. It does not stipulate that he is individually to retain the ownership of the capital furnished by him. The legal significance of the terms of the contract in this behalf is that Vines' contribution to the capital ceases to be his individually and becomes partnership property. "The capital, in whatever shape contributed, becomes at once the property of the firm and is no longer individual property. The phrase capital, or capital stock, conclusively excludes the idea of continued individual proprietorship." 1 Bates on Partnership, sec. 258.

Though plaintiff lost his services and his building, still he rightly owes to the estate of his former partner one-half of the loss on the capital contributed by the latter. "If there are no profits and the capital has been impaired or wholly lost, in dividing losses the deficit must be repaid like any other loss, for impairment of capital is a loss the same as any other, and is not to be reimbursed out of profits merely. That the capital has been contributed unequally and losses are to be equal makes no difference, or if the capital has been wholly paid by one partner, the other contributing services and skill, the latter who has lost his time owes to the former the same proportion of a loss of capital that he would be chargeable with had the losses not reached the capital, but had simply diminished the profits." 2 Bates on Partnership, sec. 813.

[2] Another contention of plaintiff is that a settlement of the partnership accounts should not embrace the business done prior to the date of the written contract. But, as we have seen, the contract was made in relation to a business already existing. Clearly Vines had already furnished what the contract called on him to furnish as capital. All that he put in as capital was contributed long before the writing was made. Though to an extent indicating relation to future action, the writing in fact covered that already done, as well as that to be done. The settlement that has been made and upon which the decree is based properly embraces the whole of the transactions between the parties as partners. Plaintiff himself has recognized the business done before the date of the writing as belonging to the same partnership as that existing after the writing. In his collecting of accounts due the firm and his paying of debts due from it, he has handled all such business as belonging to one continuous partnership between him and Vines, without regard to the date of the written contract. In settling the business he has not undertaken to settle a partnership only beginning on the date of the writing. Then why should the court below have done so?

[3] Plaintiff further submits that the decree is so vague and indefinite that it should be reversed. He complains that it charges him with one-half the loss on the capital furnished by Vines before the value of the assets necessary to a computing of the amount of the loss has been definitely ascertained. The decree is that plaintiff shall pay one-half of that loss, the amount of which is contingent on the collectability of certain notes and accounts among the assets of the firm. True, the decree adjudges no specific amount to be paid on the score of loss by plaintiff to the estate of Vines. It does no more than to settle principles of the cause whereby plaintiff must pay to Vines' estate one-half of the loss on the capital. In this it is not indefinite and erroneous. When the amount is definitely ascertained and reported to the court, a further decree adjudging the amount against plaintiff may follow.

There is no error disclosed by the record, and the decree will be affirmed.

DAWKINS v. DAWKINS.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 7, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SUFFICIENCY OF PLEADING—DIVORCE.
Quære: In a suit for divorce does good pleading require that the bill should set forth the specific facts relied on as showing the grounds for divorce?
2. DIVORCE (§ 37*)—DESEDITION—JUSTIFICATION.
The conduct of one spouse which will justify the other in leaving and breaking off the matrimonial relations must be of such a nature as to be inconsistent with such matrimonial relations or render cohabitation unsafe.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 27, 107-184, 136-138; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

3. DIVORCE (§ 133*)—PROOF REQUIRED.

To justify a divorce from the bonds of matrimony the evidence of the facts showing grounds of divorce must be clear and convincing, else divorce should be denied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 446-448; Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wood County. Action by J. W. Dawkins against Lucy N. Dawkins for divorce. From decree for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. E. Bills, of Parkersburg, for appellant.

MILLER, J. Plaintiff, a man then about thirty-five years of age, who had never been married, and defendant, a widow, about fifty-five years old, with three children, were married in June, 1902, and managed to live together until October, 1907, when separation took place by his leaving the home. This suit by him for divorce followed quite promptly after the expiration of three years from the day of separation.

Wilful desertion, adultery and cruel and inhuman treatment are charged in the bill, as grounds for divorce a vinculo, and there is some evidence tending in some slight degree to support these charges.

The offending spouse notwithstanding the grave charges against her graciously refrained from answering or making any defense to the bill, and allowed her complaining husband to have everything to his own liking, in both pleadings and proof, until on final hearing, he met foul weather, so to speak, by an adverse decision, the court below denying him any relief and dismissing his bill, wherefore his appeal.

There is no sufficient evidence to support the charge of adultery, only suspicious circumstances are shown, not amounting to proof of the fact. According to the testimony of plaintiff and his other witnesses, including two house servants, Mrs. Dawkins liked her beer, which she ordered freely on Saturday nights, and during the other days of the week is said to have "rushed the growler" frequently. The suspicious circumstances given in evidence are that she was seen drinking beer behind closed doors with several of her boarders, and to have been in a sitting room with one of them, on one occasion, with the door closed; and on one or two occasions when joyous and happy in her cups was seen to exhibit one of her absent husband's neckties, and to ask one of her favorite boarders, how he would like to stand up with her and wear that. But nothing criminal is shown nor any facts from which, under the circumstances, criminal conduct could legally be inferred.

[1] Desertion and cruelty are charged in the bill in the most general terms. No facts are pleaded constituting desertion or cruel and inhuman treatment. The grounds for divorce specified in the statute are stated rather as conclusions of law, than specifications of the facts. There is contrariety of judicial decisions as to whether good pleading does not require that the bill or complaint should set forth the specific acts and conduct constituting the ground of divorce specified in the statute, and relied on. In some states the statutes control; in others the subject of the pleadings is uncontrolled, except by general rules applicable in all cases. In 14 Cyc. 669, the text is: "The complaint should aver the existence of the facts essential to constitute desertion or abandonment, as those offenses are defined in the particular state." Citing the cases in notes. In 7 Ency. Pl. & Prac. 76, it is said: "Desertion or abandonment is usually alleged in the terms of the statute. Under the codes, however, the practice is objectionable as alleging conclusions of law, and the safest course is to allege the separation of the parties and the facts which caused it with sufficient minuteness to show that the defendant abandoned the plaintiff without reasonable cause, and remained absent for the statutory period." Citing the cases. In Virginia one recent case, Miller v. Miller, 92 Va. 196, 23 S. E. 232, a suit based on alleged adultery, the Virginia court held a bill bad on demurrer which simply charged adultery without stating time, place and circumstances.

But we think it unnecessary to decide this question of pleading, for treating the bill as good and justifying relief, if proven, we do not think the evidence makes out a clear and certain case for divorce on any ground.

[2] Plaintiff, not defendant, left the matrimonial habitation. Plaintiff in his evidence would justify his going and convert his absence into desertion by her because of conduct justifying his going. "But," says Keezer on Marriage and Divorce, section 142, "the conduct of one party to justify the other in leaving must be of such a nature as to be inconsistent with the marital relation, or to render cohabitation unsafe." In Reynolds v. Reynolds, 68 W. Va. 15, 19, 69 S. E. 381, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 899, denying the husband cross relief based on absence because of alleged cruel and inhuman treatment, the evidence not clearly supporting his contention, we applied this rule. And as there said, justifiable cause which will excuse a husband or wife from leaving the other must be such as could be made the foundation of a judicial proceeding for divorce a mensa et thoro. Citing Alkire v. Alkire, 33 W. Va. 517, 11 S. E. 11; Martin v. Martin, 33 W. Va. 695, 11 S. E. 12; Carr v. Carr, 22 Grat. (Va.) 168, and Harris v. Harris, 31 Grat. (Va.) 13. By section 6, chapter 64, Code 1906, divorce a mensa is authorized for cruel and inhuman treatment or reasonable apprehension of bodily hurt. True abandonment and desertion are also grounds for such separation. But to convert the separation of one spouse for cause into desertion by the other, because of cruel and inhuman treatment or reasonable apprehension of bodily hurt, the evidence must clearly show conduct of the offending party of such a nature as to be inconsistent with marital relations, or to render cohabitation unsafe.

[3] Outside of some alleged intemperate language towards plaintiff, the only evidence of cruel and inhuman treatment is that of the plaintiff himself, and as was said under the same circumstances, in Tillis v. Tillis, 55 W. Va. 198, 199, 46 S. E. 928, we think "that is too short."

Referring to the time of the separation, plaintiff says, "she ordered me out of the house and told me not to come back any more, and she was so quarrelsome that I could not live with her." Asked what lead up to this separation he answered: "Every time I would go into the house or around where she was at she was all the time calling me names and quarreling with me, and hit me with a spittoon and broke that over me, and hit me with a chair, and in fact the last few years we lived together she did not speak a pleasant word to me, and would not let me sleep in the same bed that she slept in, in fact she deserted me long before the month of October three years ago, on the day that we separated I went into the kitchen and found her standing in the pantry drinking beer with a man by the name of Ed Shaw and another man they called Joe I do not know his real name, when I went to the pantry door she ordered me out and called me a big bull, and told me to get out of the house and told me never to come back in it, I told her there was a man sitting at the table that wanted something to eat, and that somebody ought to wait on him, and that it was not right for her to drink beer with other men and neglect the home, she then went and got my clothing and threw it out into the front yard." In the next answer he professes to have done nothing to cause defendant "to do as you say she did on the day you separated." Witness had not said that defendant had hit him with the spittoon and chair on the day of the separation. His previous answer was intended as a statement of what had led up to the separation. No time, place or circumstance is given for the alleged assaults. Nor does it appear how long before the separation this all occurred, nor, does it appear, if made, that these assaults were not subsequently condoned or forgiven. Plaintiff is wholly uncorroborated by any witness, from a house of thirty boarders, regarding these assaults. One witness, who had been a servant in the house, swears, without reference to the particular time of the separation, that defendant was very quarrelsome and would try to pick a fuss out of him, that in 1906, while she worked there, defendant said she wished plaintiff would leave and never come back, and apparently did everything possible to annoy plaintiff and make his life miserable, and that while she was there he had to prepare his own meals. The latter fact is not mentioned by plaintiff. What was witness there for, if not to prepare meals? Witness nowhere particularizes as to what the other things were which defendant did to make plaintiff miserable and his life unbearable.

Mrs. Besale Hill, a next door neighbor, who claims to have witnessed the final separation in October, 1907, and the only witness sworn, besides plaintiff, to that transaction, says: "Q. Did you hear what was said by these parties just before they separated? A. I heard what was said out on the porch, Mrs. Dawkins gathered up Mr. Dawkins' clothing set them out on the porch, and cursed Mr. Dawkins, and told him to take them, leave, and never come back again, she cursed him very violently and used very bad language towards him, I did not hear much that Mr. Dawkins said, but that he was reasoning with her and told her that he had no place else to go, but she made him leave." Dawkins, himself, does not mention Mrs. Hill as a witness to the separation. He does not mention the fact that his wife swore at or cursed him on that occasion. According to his evidence quoted he really began any quarrel that ensued, and he differs from Mrs. Hill, as to what was done with his clothes. He said his wife threw his clothing into the front yard. According to Mrs. Hill she set them out on the porch.

Upon the whole record we are disposed to affirm the decree below, the evidence not being of that clear and convincing character justifying a court in dissolving the marriage bonds.

FREEMAN v. EGNOR et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 14, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. TENANCY IN COMMON (§ 49*)—OIL AND GAS LEASE—VALIDITY.

An oil and gas lease executed by one or more of several cotenants, while not binding on the others, is valid between the parties thereto, and binding on the interest of the lessor, even while the premises remain undivided.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Tenancy in Common, Cent. Dig. § 123; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

2. EQUITY (§§ 196, 208*)—PLEADING—RELIEF AMONG CODEFENDANTS.

The general rule of chancery practice is that an answer to a bill can only pray for dismissal of the bill, and not for affirmative relief on new matter presented by it, that being a proper subject for a cross-bill; but, under our practice, there are certain exceptions to this, outside of answers under section 35, c. 125, Code 1906, and in such cases no special reply to such ordinary answer is necessary, and its matter is not taken for true under general replication. In such cases, relief may be given to the defendant on such ordinary answer against the plaintiff, but not against a codefendant. To affect him, resort must be had to a cross-bill, or an answer, under section 35, c. 125, in lieu of a cross-bill.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep't Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. §§ 450-454, 479, 480; Dec. Dig. §§ 196, 208.*]

3. EQUITY (§ 114*)—ADDING NEW PARTIES.

A petition filed by a stranger to a cause, asking relief against a defendant therein on new matter contained in such petition, must be filed by leave of court, and must make such defendant a party to it by proper allegation and process, unless waived by appearance or otherwise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. §§ 275-279; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

4. EQUITY (§ 114*)—ADDING NEW PARTIES—AMENDMENT TO BILLS.

Where a person files his petition, asking to be admitted as a party defendant in a pending suit in equity, in which no allegation is made naming or referring to him in any way, and no relief is prayed against him, and he is admitted as a party defendant, he does not in fact become a party to the cause until he has been made a party by some allegation in the bill as amended.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. §§ 275-279; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

5. EQUITY (§ 427*)—PLEADING—RELIEF AGAINST CODEFENDANT.

To authorize granting one defendant relief against a codefendant, it is not enough that the latter be named as defendant in the bill; but the bill and the answer seeking relief, considered together, must sufficiently raise the issue between such defendants.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. §§ 1001-1014; Dec. Dig. § 427.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Logan County.

Action by Charles H. Freeman against Martin Egnor and others. From a decree for plaintiff, defendant South Penn Oil Company appeals. Reversed and remanded.

A. B. Fleming, of Fairmont, Payne & Payne, of Charleston, and Charles Powell and Kemble White, both of Fairmont, for appellant. George M. McDermit, of Madison, and F. C. Leftwich, of Huntington, for appellee.

LYNCH, J. The plaintiff sued for partition of lands, claiming fee-simple interests therein. He and the defendant South Penn Oil Company also hold oil and gas leases on undivided interests of some of the numerous defendants, who derive title through John W. Egnor, their ancestor. The bill, though averring the existence of the leases, does not assail any of them or assert their invalidity in any respect. But defendants Morris and Adkins by answers, and S. J. Hyman and F. L. Doolittle by petitions, do assail the leases, and seek their cancellation as inoperative and void, because on undivided interests in the lands sought to be partitioned.

By their petitions, Hyman and Doolittle asked to be admitted as parties defendant to the bill, not having theretofore been parties thereto. By the order filing the petitions, the court nominally admitted them as defendants; but they did not become parties by any amendment of the bill. Nor did the bill, or any other pleading except their petitions, name either of them as parties, or by averments show any interest whatever claimed by them in the lands. Nor did the Morris and Adkins answers or the Hyman and Doolittle petitions pretend to name any person against whom they claimed relief, or pray for process, or that the answers and petitions be remanded to rules for proceedings thereat, nor were they so remanded, nor did any person appear thereto for any purpose, except the plaintiff, who objected only to the filing of the petitions.

Nevertheless, the court entered an order canceling all the leases, without further pleading, assigning as the reason for its action the fact, not appearing otherwise than by the leases, that the leases were on undivided interests in the lands, and its conclusion that they were inoperative and therefore void. From this decree, final in all respects, because thereby the court ascertained and fixed the rights and interests of the parties in the lands, the South Penn Oil Company obtained this appeal.

Numerous errors are assigned by appellant, some of which we do not discuss, because, as we remand the case for other reasons, these will necessarily be corrected.

[2, 3] Were the pleadings such as to warrant cancellation of the leases? It will be readily conceded that, before a court can by its order or decree strike down property rights, it must first have jurisdiction, by proper process and pleadings, of the persons whose interests are affected. Did it in this instance have such jurisdiction? Of course, the appellant was named as defendant to the bill, to which it filed an answer, setting up and relying on the leases held by it. But, as stated, the bill in effect admitted the integrity of all the leases. At least, it challenged none of them for invalidity in any respect. It was to the bill, and to it only, that appellant was required, by the court's process, to appear and answer. Upon appearing thereto, and ascertaining that by no averments was its right questioned or prejudiced, it might properly have permitted a decree pro confesso against it, with the confident assurance that its rights could in no wise injuriously be affected thereby. It could with safety content itself with this course, with the further reasonable confidence that, if any one or more of the defendants should by answer or otherwise challenge the validity of its leases, the court, before granting relief by cancellation, would at least require notice thereof for appearance and answer. Besides, the plaintiff did not, nor does he now, by any pleading, claim any interest adverse to appellant's interests, or set up any interest now claimed by Morris and Adkins adverse to appellant's, and did not in any manner amend his bill by averments necessary to make Hyman and Doolittle parties thereto. These four defendants, therefore, by their answers and petitions alone, for the first time in this suit, set up such adverse claims.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[3] In order to grant one defendant relief against a codefendant, it is not enough that the latter is named as defendant to the bill, unless the bill and the answer seeking relief, considered together, sufficiently raise the issues between such defendants. Goff v. Price, 42 W. Va. 384, 26 S. E. 287; Dudley v. Buckley, 68 W. Va. 630, 70 S. E. 376. See, also, Hansford v. Coal Co., 22 W. Va. 70; Peters v. Case, 62 W. Va. 33, 57 S. E. 733, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 408. The first two cases hold that, where the bill and answer do not raise such issue between codefendants, relief cannot properly be granted one defendant on an adverse claim against a codefendant except upon an answer plainly stating the grounds therefor, naming such defendant as a party to it, and praying process against him. The Dudley-Buckley Case says: "Notwithstanding the rights of a codefendant are clearly established by the proof taken on the pleadings between plaintiff and defendant, still no relief can be granted such codefendant unless relief for him is included in the prayer of plaintiff's bill, or unless he has himself answered and prayed for relief." Here, there was no such charge, prayer, or process.

[4] The petitions are also ineffectual for any purpose, for another reason. The plaintiff's bill makes no allegation naming or referring to Hyman or Doolittle, or showing in what respect either of them has any interest in the lands, and the bill contains no prayer for any relief against either of them. Such right or interest, if any, appears only from their petitions. They could not become parties, therefore, except by amendment of the bill. Shinn v. Board of Education, 39 W. Va. 498, 20 S. E. 604; Shaffer v. Fetty, 30 W. Va. 249, 4 S. E. 278. See, also, Fowler v. Lewis, 36 W. Va. 114, 14 S. E. 447; Morgan v. Morgan, 42 W. Va. 542, 26 S. E. 204.

Under the rulings of this court in Foutty v. Poar, 35 W. Va. 70, 12 S. E. 1086, and Miller v. Mitchell, 58 W. Va. 431, 52 S. E. 478, the circuit court should have refused leave to file the second Adkins answer if objected to, or on motion should have stricken it from the file. But no such objection or motion appears in the record. However, as the answer was defective for reasons heretofore discussed, its presence now is not important. The court should, when the case is remanded, as it must be, grant leave to amend the said answers and petitions, upon request, to conform to the views herein expressed.

[1] The leases should not have been canceled upon the state of the pleadings. But are they void or voidable, solely because executed by some cotenants on their undivided interests in lands held in common with others not joining therein? We do not think they are. Of course, to be effectual in the sense that the lessee may enter on and operate the premises for the production of oil and gas, all the cotenants must join. A lease by one only does not warrant such entry and production. Those not joining may restrain the lessee from entering for the purpose of operating thereunder without their consent. Numerous cases so hold. One cotenant cannot authorize another to do what he himself cannot do; but he may authorize him to do, under any lease or other contract, what he may legally do in his own behalf. Trees v. Eclipse Oil Co., 47 W. Va. 107, 34 S. E. 933. Notwithstanding the cotenancy, each tenant has the same interest and property rights in common as his associates have, and may therefore lawfully grant, lease, and otherwise incur his individual interests. "An oil and gas lease executed by one or more joint tenants or tenants in common, while not binding on other joint tenants or tenants in common, is good between the parties, and is binding on their interests." This terse statement comprehends the law on this subject, and is approved and sustained, directly or indirectly, by the following cases: Trees v. Eclipse Oil Co., supra; Headley v. Hoopengartner, 60 W. Va. 628, 55 S. E. 744; Pyle v. Henderson, 65 W. Va. 39, 63 S. E. 762; McNeely v. South Penn Oil Co., 58 W. Va. 438, 52 S. E. 480; Stewart v. Tennant, 52 W. Va. 559, 44 S. E. 223; Sommers v. Bennett, 68 W. Va. 157, 69 S. E. 690; Garratt v. South Penn Oil Co., 66 W. Va. 587, 66 S. E. 741; Ziegler v. Brennenman, 237 Ill. 15, 86 N. E. 597; Compton v. People's Gas Co., 75 Kan. 572, 89 Pac. 1039, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 787. The circuit court, therefore, erred in canceling the leases, for the reasons assigned by it, even had such action been warranted by proper pleading and competent proof.

Hence the decree complained of will be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the principles herein announced.

FLEMING v. FAIRMONT & M. R. CO. et al.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 14, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 479*)—BONDS—PAST-DUE COUPONS—RIGHT OF HOLDER.

An action at law may be maintained and prosecuted to final judgment, by the owner, on past-due coupons, parts of corporate bonds, secured by mortgage, nothing therein expressly restricting such right, notwithstanding the provisions in the mortgage for sale, suit, or entry upon and management of the mortgaged property by the trustee on the request of one-third of the bondholders after default by the company in payment of the coupons.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1869, 1872-1874; Dec. Dig. § 479.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 479*)—CORPORATE BONDS—RIGHT OF ACTION.

The common-law right to sue upon a bond is not affected by the remedies provided in the mortgage given for its security unless the provisions of the mortgage exclude such right in express terms or by necessary implication.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1869, 1872-1874; Dec. Dig. § 479.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 479*)—CORPORATE BONDS—RIGHT OF ACTION.

But execution on a judgment obtained in such action is not leviable on property covered by the mortgage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1869, 1872-1879; Dec. Dig. § 479.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

4. ACTION (§ 12*)—DEFENSE.

That a prospective judgment against a defendant in an action at law will be worthless is no defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Action, Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Marion County.

Action by A. S. Fleming against the Fairmont & Mannington Railroad Company and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed and rendered.

A. S. Fleming, of Fairmont, for plaintiff in error. Showalter & Frame, of Fairmont, for defendants in error.

LYNCH, J. The plaintiff brought his action before a justice and recovered judgment on overdue coupons detached from defendant's bonds, secured by mortgage on all its property then owned and thereafter acquired by it. On appeal the intermediate court dismissed the action; and upon further appeal the circuit court affirmed the latter judgment. Hence this writ of error.

It is agreed that, before action, the coupons were due and, although properly presented for payment, were unpaid. The plaintiff was therefore entitled to judgment and execution thereon, unless inhibited by some provision of the mortgage securing the bonds and coupons. The defendant cites sections 1 and 2 of article 5 of the mortgage as authority denying plaintiff's right to recover on the coupons.

[1, 2] But from these sections no intention appears, expressly or by implication, to preclude plaintiff from relief by the form of action adopted by him. To have this effect, the restriction must be clear and reasonably free from doubt. "The common-law right to sue upon a bond is not affected by the remedies provided in the mortgage given simultaneously and for the better securing of the bond unless the provisions of the mortgage exclude this right in express terms or by necessary implication." For "the right to sue upon a written obligation admitted to be valid is of too high a character to be taken away by implication, especially if drawn from an instrument other than that which is given in direct and positive acknowledgment of the debt." Manning v. Railroad Co. (C. C.) 29 Fed. 838; Nute v. Insurance Co., 72 Mass. (6 Gray) 174, 181; Kimber v. Gunnell, 128 Fed. 137, 61 C. C. A. 208; Jones on Corp. Bonds, § 340.

The purport of the whole article relied upon by defendant is to define the rights, duties, and remedies of the trustee and bondholders, should the mortgagor default in the payment of the bonds or interest. It provides what course each shall pursue, for enforcement of the lien, when such default occurs. It provides: First, that, should the mortgagor refuse or fail after demand to perform any of the covenants and stipulations in the mortgage or the bonds secured thereby, the trustee shall, upon the request of the holders of one-third in amount of the bonds and adequate security against costs, expenses, and liabilities, enter upon the mortgaged property, manage and operate it, collect the receipts, and apply the income, after deducting current expenses and costs, to the principal and interest of the bonds as the same become due; or, second, upon like default, request, and security, he shall sell the property and make application of the proceeds in the manner stated; or, third, upon like default, request, and security, he shall proceed to protect and enforce the rights of the bondholders under the mortgage by suits in law or equity. The instrument fully states the manner in which the trustee shall perform the duties so prescribed and then concludes immediately thereafter with the general statement: "It being understood, and it is hereby expressly declared, that the rights of entry and sale hereinbefore granted are intended as cumulative remedies allowed by law, and that the same shall not be deemed in any manner whatever to deprive the trustee or the beneficiaries under this trust of any legal or equitable remedy, by judicial proceedings, consistent with the provisions of these presents, according to the true intent and meaning thereof." The sole and manifest purpose of these provisions is to secure the subject-matter of the lien against illegal invasion, the effect of which would be its impairment as ample security for payment of the mortgagor's bonded indebtedness; and, in order to remove any possible excuse for misunderstanding of its terms and to afford reasonable assurance of the proper interpretation, the concluding clause in express terms declares the absence of any intent to deprive the bondholders of any existing legal or equitable remedies not inconsistent with the purposes, the subservance of which the section in its entirety comprehends.

The right of the plaintiff to maintain his action is sustained by many authorities. In fact, none are found upon this investigation denying it. Railroad Co. v. Johnson, 54 Pa. 127; Montgomery v. Francis, 103 Pa. 378; Widener v. Railroad Co., 1 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 472; Batchelder v. Water Co., 131 N. Y. 42, 29 N. E. 801; Manning v. Railroad Co. (C. C.) 29 Fed. 838; Kimber v. Gunnell, 126 Fed. 137, 61 C. C. A. 203; Dow v. Railroad Co. (C. C.) 20 Fed. 260; 1 Elliott on Railroads, §§ 509, 514; 3 Cook on Corp. (8th Ed.) § 770; 5 Thomp. on Corp. (1st Ed.) §§ 6121-6125, 6210-6218; Jones on Corp. Bonds, §§ 55, 338-340a. See, also, Welsh v. Railroad Co., 25 Minn. 314; Guaranty Co. v. Railroad Co., 139 U. S. 137, 11 Sup. Ct. 512, 35 L. Ed. 116; Buel v. Railway Co., 24 Misc. Rep. 646, 53 N. Y. Supp. 749. Mr. Jones, in the section of the work cited, says: "The fact that a railroad mortgage empowers the trustees, on the written request of the holders of bonds of a specified amount, after breach of the condition, to sell the property is no defense to a suit upon the bonds or coupons after they are payable. The bonds are the principal debt, and the mortgage is only an incidental security. The remedies at law and in equity do not clash and destroy each other but exist together. The mortgage might positively, or perhaps impliedly, take away from the bondholder his right of action at law upon the bonds or coupons; but the common-law right to enforce these obligations remains if not so taken away." In Kimber v. Gunnell, supra, it is held that a mortgage similar to that under consideration does not, "in the absence of an express stipulation or a statute to that effect, constitute any defense to any action at law against the mortgagor by each of the creditors upon the bonds or primary obligations thus secured." The court, in its opinion, observes: "The general rule is that, for a default in the payment of money at the time and place agreed upon, or for any other breach of a contract, an action at law may be maintained, and a judgment for damages may be recovered against the obligor. Of course the payee or obligee may stipulate away or agree not to exercise this right. But there is no such stipulation or agreement in the provisions of the trust deed to which counsel has challenged our attention or in any of the other numerous terms which this instrument contains. A statute may provide that the remedy at law upon the primary obligation shall be postponed until the security for the debt has been exhausted. But no such statute conditions the rights or remedies of the parties to this action. In the absence of any such agreement or any such statute, the ordinary right of action upon the unconditional promise of the defendant to pay the money loaned upon its bonds remained unimpaired, and it must prevail." Again it was said of such a mortgage in Guaranty Trust Co. v. Railroad Co., 139 U. S. 137, 11 Sup. Ct. 512, 35 L. Ed. 116: "There is a subsequent provision in the deed of trust to the effect that neither the whole nor any part of the premises mortgaged shall be sold, under proceedings either at law or equity, for the recovery of the principal or interest of the bonds; it being the intention and agreement of the parties that the mode of sale provided by the mortgage 'shall be exclusive of all others.' This clause, however, is open to the objection of attempting to provide against a remedy in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings and oust the jurisdiction of the courts, which, as is settled by the uniform current of authority, cannot be done."

Nor does the clause of the mortgage following those above set forth contain any express or implied denial, by limitation or restriction, of plaintiff's right to maintain this action. It states that the intention of the instrument is "that no one or more holders of bonds or coupons shall have the right, in any manner whatever, to affect, disturb, or prejudice the lien of this mortgage by his or their action, except in the manner herein provided." The purpose of the clause, as gathered from its true intent and meaning, is to provide against any judicial proceedings by one or more bondholders owning less than one-third of the bonds, or by those holding such amount except upon notice to the trustee and the giving of adequate security, for either of two purposes—the appointment of a receiver or the foreclosure of the mortgage. Of course every provision of a mortgage must be construed in the light of its intentment. What the object to be attained is, is always a pertinent inquiry upon the construction of a written instrument. The apparent purpose sought, by the language quoted, is the prevention of petty interference by a few bondholders with the management of defendant's property and the conduct of its business, except in the manner authorized by the mortgage. The denial of the right in any manner whatever to affect, disturb, or prejudice the lien of the mortgage manifests such intention. If so, it is not within the province of the court, by construction, to enlarge the terms employed as a restriction for one purpose, so as to authorize other restrictions not impliedly within their plain intent and meaning.

[3] The termination of plaintiff's action in a judgment, even when followed by execution, cannot "affect, disturb, or prejudice" the lien of the mortgage. The property therein embraced is immune from levy. It cannot be disturbed. Nor can the operation of defendant's railroad be impeded as a result of any judgment obtained in this action, or any proceeding thereafter to enforce payment of the judgment, except in the manner permitted by the mortgage. 1 Elliott on Railroads, §§ 486, 509; 3 Cook on Corp. (6th Ed.) §§ 770, 772; 5 Thomp. on Corp. (1st Ed.) § 6124; Jones on Corp. Bonds, § 340; Hospital v. Library Co., 189 Pa. 269, 42 Atl. 183; Com. v. Railroad Co., 122 Pa. 306, 15 Atl. 448, 1 L. R. A. 225; Trust Co. v. Steel Co., 33 Misc.

ep. 484, 68 N. Y. Supp. 915; Kimber v. Gunnell, 126 Fed. 137, 61 C. C. A. 203. The creditor does not thereby acquire a lien on defendant's property prior to the mortgage. When suing at law upon an overdue coupon and proceeding against the railroad company, the bondholder, as shown by the authorities cited, stands upon the same plane as any other creditor; and execution on a judgment in his favor can be levied only on property actually owned by the company and not upon that which has been conveyed to trustees by a mortgage or deed of trust duly executed and recorded. When it becomes necessary for him to reach the property held by the trustee, he must proceed against him not for his own benefit but as a bondholder and on behalf of all the bondholders as a class. What may be realized by such proceeding belongs to the whole class and must be distributed among its members pro rata. 5 Thomp. on Corp. (1st Ed.) § 6124; Com. v. Railroad Co., supra. Nevertheless, nothing otherwise prohibiting, he is entitled to judgment and execution hereon. If property belonging to the defendant other than that already bound by the lien of the mortgage is available for levy under execution, he may levy upon it, but not otherwise. Carr v. Le Fevre, 27 Pa. 413; Railroad Co. v. Johnson, supra; Com. v. Railroad Co., supra; Bradley v. Railroad Co., 86 Pa. 141; Trust Co. v. Steel Co., supra; Thomp. on Corp. (1st Ed.) §§ 6124, 6125; Jones on Corp. Bonds, § 340.

[4] The fact that a prospective judgment against a defendant in an action at law will be worthless is no defense to the action. Kimber v. Gunnell, supra.

Being therefore of the opinion that the judgment of the intermediate court of Marion county is erroneous, and that the action may be properly terminated here by judgment based upon the agreed state of facts, such judgment will be so entered for the amount of the coupons sued on, with interest thereon, and costs.

STATE, for Use of HUDSON, v. NASH et al.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 14, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INJUNCTION (§ 239*)—ACTION ON BOND—EXPENSES ON TEMPORARY INJUNCTION.

Counsel fees paid for services in a suit in which a temporary injunction is awarded only as ancillary and incidental to the main relief sought, no effort being made to secure its dissolution until final hearing of the cause upon the merits, and other expenses not incurred on account of the injunction, are not recoverable in an action on the injunction bond.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 542, 543; Dec. Dig. § 239.*]

2. INJUNCTION (§ 239*)—ACTION ON BOND—EXPENSES ON TEMPORARY INJUNCTION.

In a suit to remove cloud upon plaintiff's title to land, and to enjoin defendant from trespassing thereon, and from taking steps to redeem his title from forfeiture to the state, a temporary injunction was awarded. Held, that injunction was only ancillary to the main purpose of the suit, which was to quiet title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 542, 543; Dec. Dig. § 239.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Putnam County.

Action by the State for use of Mary Patton Hudson, against J. H. Nash and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Reversed and remanded.

Brown, Jackson & Knight and J. H. Nash, all of Charleston, for plaintiffs in error. Enslow, Fitzpatrick, Alderson & Baker, of Huntington, for defendant in error.

WILLIAMS, J. Plaintiff recovered judgment in the circuit court of Putnam county for $500, in an action upon an injunction bond executed by J. H. Nash and Lewis Barnhart for the Iguano Land & Mining Company, in a suit brought by it in the circuit court of Putnam county against Mrs. Mary Patton Hudson and others, for the purpose of canceling her claim of title to certain land, as constituting a cloud upon said company's title thereto, and to enjoin her from trespassing on the land, and from taking any steps to redeem the title claimed by her, which had been forfeited to the state. The injunction, as prayed for, was awarded in vacation, and the bond sued on was given. No effort was made to get rid of the injunction until the final hearing of the cause on its merits, at which time the chancellor granted the prayer of the bill, and canceled Mrs. Hudson's claim to the land, as constituting a cloud upon the plaintiff's title, and perpetuated the injunction. Mrs. Hudson appealed from that decree to this court, and procured a reversal of it, and a dismissal of the plaintiff's bill, and hence this action upon the injunction bond.

[1] The judgment recovered is on account of fees paid by Mrs. Hudson to her counsel for services rendered in that cause. But she fails to distinguish how much, if any, she paid for services rendered in getting rid of the injunction. No effort was made to have it dissolved until the final hearing of the cause upon its merits. It was not a pure injunction suit, but a suit brought to remove cloud upon title, and the injunction was only ancillary or incidental thereto. Had it been a pure injunction suit, no doubt the whole of counsel fees would have been recoverable on the bond; the penalty of the bond being sufficient. It is well-settled law in this state that fees paid to counsel for services rendered in getting rid of an injunction are properly recoverable as damages in an action on the injunction bond. Levy v. Medford, 34 W. Va. 633, 12 S. E. 864; Kloak Bros. v. Corvin, 51 W. Va. 19, 41 S. E. 211; Bank v. Graham, 68 W. Va. 1, 60 S. E. 301; Tully v. Taylor, 67 W. Va. 585, 68 S. E. 379. But when injunction is not the sole relief sought, but is only ancillary and incidental to the main object of the suit, and no effort is made to procure a dissolution of the injunction until a final hearing of the cause upon its merits, and counsel fees are paid for entire services in the suit, they are not recoverable upon the bond. Tully v. Taylor, supra; 2 High on Injunctions (4th Ed.) § 1686; Riddle v. Cheadle, 25 Ohio St. 278; Curry v. Amer. Freehold, etc., Co., 124 Ala. 614, 27 South. 454; Lambert v. Alcorn, 144 Ill. 313, 33 N. E. 53, 21 L. R. A. 611.

[2] The chief purpose of the suit in which Mrs. Hudson was enjoined was to clear the Iguano Company's title to land of a cloud, and the prayer of the company's bill that she be restrained from committing trespass, and from taking further steps to perfect her claim by redeeming from the state a forfeited title, was only incidental. 2 High on Injunctions (4th Ed.) § 1686; Tully v. Taylor, supra; Allport v. Kelley, 2 Mont. 343; Disbrow v. Garcia, 52 N. Y. 654; Moriarity v. Galt, 125 Ill. 417, 17 N. E. 714. It does not appear that counsel rendered any services specially to get rid of the injunction, or that the same services which were rendered would not have been necessary, if no injunction had been awarded. The appeal to this court in that case was not to get rid of the injunction, which was only an incident in the case depending upon the question of title to the land, but was to procure a reversal of the decree which had adjudicated title to the land against Mrs. Hudson, and the injunction was dissolved as a matter of course when it was decided that plaintiff's title failed.

Counsel for defendants say that the fees were paid for services in this court, and they insist that fees paid counsel for services in the appellate court, after a temporary injunction has become merged in a final decree on the merits, are not recoverable on the injunction bond, that the conditions of the bond do not cover damages sustained after the court has pronounced its final decree, and 22 Cyc. 1050, and Webber v. Wilcox, 45 Cal. 301, are cited to support this proposition. The California case seems to support the text in Cyc.; but the court apparently rested its decision on the terms of the California statute fixing the conditions of the bond. It read: "Such damages * * * as such parties may sustain by reason of such injunction, if said court finally decides that said plaintiff was not entitled thereto." This language would seem to limit the conditions of the bond to the action of the court granting the injunction. The terms of our statute are broader, and do not so limit the conditions. Hence, if the suit were a pure injunction suit, and it became necessary for the defendant to appeal to this court in order to get rid of the injunction, we see no reason why he should not be allowed to recover counsel fees for services in this court as well as in the court below, as damages in an action on the bond. Bank v. Graham, supra. The same would be true of fees paid in this court upon an appeal from an order dissolving, or refusing to dissolve, an injunction, even where injunction is only incidental to the main object of the suit.

Under the ruling of this court in Tully v. Taylor, supra, it was Mrs. Hudson's duty to prove that the fees were paid solely for services in procuring a dissolution of the injunction, as distinguished from fees paid for services in defending the principal issue, before she can recover them. Even granting that it is possible to make such distinction in this case, she has not attempted it. The cause was submitted to the court in lieu of a jury by agreement of counsel, and it appears from the court's judgment that it was rendered wholly on account of the $500 attorney fees. But, notwithstanding this showing of the record, counsel for plaintiff insist that the judgment is sustainable on the ground that plaintiff has proven other items of damages equal to, if not exceeding, the amount of counsel fees. She proved that she paid out large sums of money for transcripts and printing of records on appeal, for surveying and platting the land in controversy, and for other things which, counsel say, she is entitled to recover. But these items of expense are not shown to have been paid on account of the injunction. Two suits were pending against Mrs. Hudson and others in the circuit court of Putnam county at the same time, both of which were appealed to this court. One suit was styled Whitehouse v. Jones et al., 60 W. Va. 680, 55 S. E. 730, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49, and the other, Iguano Land & Mining Company v. Jones et al., 65 W. Va. 59, 64 S. E. 640, and the items of expense, which she proves aggregate $629.70, relate to one or the other of these suits. But it appears that at least $300.75 of that amount was paid on account of the Whitehouse v. Jones case, and that no part of the remaining expenses are shown to have been incurred in getting rid of the injunction.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

MONROE, Special Commissioner, v. HURRY et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Oct. 14, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. JUDICIAL SALES (§ 7*)—COMMISSIONER TO SELL LANDS—RIGHT TO SUE.

Without authority of the court appointing him, a special commissioner to sell land has no authority to institute and prosecute suits.

Such authority must be specifically conferred, or necessarily implied from some other power specifically given by decree.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Cent. Dig. § 20; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

2. JUDICIAL SALES (§ 7*)—COMMISSIONER TO SELL LANDS—RIGHT TO SUB-APPOINTMENT—CONSTRUCTION.

A decree or order in such suit substituting a special commissioner in place of one previously appointed, and who has defaulted in the performance of his duties, with direction "to do and perform all acts, duties and matters and things in and about said causes, required by the decrees and orders therein respectively, not already done and performed by said commissioner," constitutes no authority in the substituted commissioner to institute and prosecute a suit in equity against such former commissioner and the sureties on his official bond, where the only authority conferred on such former commissioner, after confirming his report of sale, was, out of the cash money in his hands, to pay the costs, and the residue to the parties entitled thereto, and as the purchase money notes fell due to withdraw the same from the papers, leaving certified copies, and to collect and pay over the same to the parties entitled thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Cent. Dig. § 20; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Preston County.

Bill by Robert W. Monroe, Special Commissioner, against James H. Hurry and others. Decree for plaintiff, and certain defendants appeal. Reversed, and bill dismissed as to such defendants.

William G. Conley, of Charleston, for appellants. J. Ben Brady, of Kingwood, for appellee.

MILLER, J. [1] The proposition contained in the first point of the syllabus we think fully supported by Blair v. Core, 20 W. Va. 265; Clarke v. Shanklin, 24 W. Va. 30; Crockett v. Sexton, 29 Gr. (Va.) 46; Runk v. Higginbotham, 54 W. Va. 187, 144, 46 S. E. 128; 8 Va. & W. Va. Enc. Dig. 700; Anthony v. Kasey, 83 Va. 338, 5 S. E. 176, 5 Am. St. Rep. 277. The reason for this rule is obvious, and the principles sustaining it are fully covered in the cases cited, and need not be repeated.

[2] The second point we think equally patent. While authority to sue the purchaser on his purchase money notes may be reasonably implied from authority to withdraw and collect the same, certainly no right to sue the former commissioner and the sureties on his bond can be deduced from that authority. Nor is there any general authority given in the language of the decree referred to from which such authority can reasonably be implied. In support of the proposition covered by this point of the syllabus it is argued that the bond of a special commissioner is required and given solely for the benefit of the parties entitled to the money distributable under the decree of the court, and that only such persons have right of action on such bonds. The authorities cited and relied on by counsel for this contention are Brooks v. Miller, 29 W. Va. 499, 2 S. E. 219; Lee v. Swepson, 76 Va. 173; Lloyd v. Erwin's Adm'r, 29 Gr. (Va.) 598; Hess v. Rader, 26 Gr. (Va.) 746, 751. This proposition we need not and do not decide. State v. Abbott, 63 W. Va. 189, 61 S. E. 369, can hardly be regarded as opposed, for the question was not raised or distinctly decided in that case. It will be time enough for us to decide that question when it comes to us in a case fairly presenting it.

The many other points presented and argued in the briefs do not require consideration.

Because the bill improperly impleads Dawson and Fortney, sureties on the former commissioner's bond, and the decree appealed from includes a money decree against them in favor of plaintiff, for the amount in which their principal was adjudged to be in default, that decree must be reversed, and as to them, the only parties appealing, the bill will be dismissed, but without prejudice.

LEWIS v. YATES et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 14, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. BOUNDARIES (§ 37*)—SURVEYS—MONUMENTS.

A subsequent survey calling for lines of the older one is not a monument thereof, and the call therefor is only a circumstance, admissible under some conditions, as evidence of the location of the lines of the older survey.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 184-194; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

2. BOUNDARIES (§ 3*)—ESTABLISHMENT.

One or more monuments of a tract of land having been ascertained, the courses and distances are entitled to controlling effect in the location of others as to the identity of which the evidence is slight, circumstantial, and conflicting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 8-41; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Greenbrier County.

Action by Cornelia A. Lewis against W. O. & James A. Yates. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed and remanded.

John Osborne, of Union, for plaintiff in error. Henry Gilmer, of Lewisburg, for defendants in error.

POFFENBARGER, P. The report of the decision on a former writ of error in this case, found in 62 W. Va. 575, 59 S. E. 1073, fully discloses its nature and character and the main features of the evidence, and settles the principles involved. On the new trial then awarded, there was another verdict for the defendants, on which judgment was rendered.

The argument submitted in support of the action of the court in refusing to set aside the verdict does not question the soundness of the principles enunciated and applied in the former decision. It abandons the argument in the former case founded upon conflict between the Patterson survey and the Banks survey lying to the northeast thereof, and the location of the Hamilton survey, as contended for on the former writ of error. It impliedly, if not expressly, admits the necessity, in the event of the adoption of the theory of the defendants, of either shortening lines of the Powell 470-acre survey, thereby reducing its quantity about one-half, or removing the Frogg and Wolfenbarger surveys a great distance to the southeast, contrary to the location thereof, as shown by monuments that are practically unquestioned.

The location of the irregular southern boundary line of the Patterson survey in accordance with the claim of the defendants, as controlling the location of the Powell 470-acre survey, is vigorously insisted upon. The Patterson survey lies east of the Powell survey, and is one of its monuments, or, at any rate, its northwest corner and southwest corner are called for as corners of the 470-acre Powell survey. The beginning point of the Patterson survey is its southeastern corner, where two hickories and poplars on a hillside are called for. The line runs thence S. 80 W. 52 poles to a black oak, white oak, and hickory, N. 54 W. 34 poles to a black oak, S. 80 W. 18 poles to a double maple, and S. 30 W. 30 poles to two white oaks, the southwest corner. The survey was made April 29, 1791. The two Powell surveys were made March 23, 1798. The 400-acre one is described as running with lines of the Patterson survey, above set forth, and calls for their courses, distances, and timber. On February 7, 1799, what is evidently a part of the Powell 400-acre survey was again surveyed for Harrison and Dixon. Their survey was estimated to contain 106 acres, and purports to run with this irregular southern boundary of the Patterson survey, calling for the same courses, distances, and timber. Though made about one year later than the two Powell surveys, it does not call for the Powell 470-acre survey, which corners on the Patterson 200-acre survey at the same point at which it claims to do so. Another Harrison and Dixon survey, calling for 205 acres, bears the same date as the one just described. According to its description, it adjoins the Patterson survey and the other Harrison and Dixon survey on the east, and comes out of the Powell 400-acre survey. These two Harrison and Dixon surveys, having a combined acreage of 311 acres, taken out of the Powell survey of 400 acres, have been located, and their location harmonizes with the contention of the defendants, if the northern line of the smaller one is identical with the southern boundary line of the Patterson survey. To make them coincide, however, it is necessary to shift the Powell 470-acre tract nearly 100 poles west of the location given it by its southeastern line run from the corner of the Wolfenbarger tract, and nearly or quite 50 poles south, and thus shift the location of the Frogg and Wolfenbarger land to the south and west equal distances. Otherwise it would shorten some of the lines of the Powell 470-acre tract, one of them nearly 100 poles, and greatly reduce its quantity. The line called for between the northeastern corner of the small Wolfenbarger tract and the southwest corner of the Patterson, in the surveys of the 470-acre and 400-acre Powell tracts, is described therein as being 120 poles long. In the Harrison and Dixon survey, the distance from the small Wolfenbarger tract to what is therein called the corner of the Patterson survey is given as 26 poles. All of these inconsistencies and conflicts argue very strongly a mistake in the call of the Harrison and Dixon survey for the southern boundary of the Patterson survey, or a subsequent wrong location of the Harrison and Dixon survey.

The last-named survey was shown to have subsequently passed into the ownership of one Hayes, and in a deed from Nathan Henning to Chas. A. Stuart, purporting to convey the Powell 470-acre tract, it is described as beginning at two white oaks, corner to the Hayes land. This is one of the circumstances strongly relied upon in the brief for the defendants in error. In addition to this, it was shown in evidence that a small white oak was found at the point claimed by the defendants as the location of the southwest corner of the Patterson survey, bearing ancient marks on one side thereof, the side toward the corner as claimed by the plaintiff, and counting more than 100 years. One or more of the surveyors said the annulations indicated an age greater than that of the Patterson survey. There is no proof that this tree was marked as a corner tree, and it stands only 15 or 20 feet from the 120 pole line of the Powell survey, and may have been a tree marked for that line. Two witnesses testify that two trees stood at that point at one time, but no ancient marks on them are shown other than the one just mentioned. At another place at which a double maple is called for in the Patterson survey, and also in the Harrison and Dixon survey, some maple sprouts and an old rotten fallen maple tree were found, but, whether it was a double maple, or, whether a double maple ever stood at that point, is not shown, nor does it appear that the old fallen tree bore any marks. At the southwest corner of the Patterson survey, as located by the plaintiff, no tree was found which answers the description given in the survey. Near the southeast corner of the Patterson survey, as located by her, an old marked tree was found, and the ground corresponded well with that called for in the description. At the northwest corner of that survey, as she locates it, there was found an old hollow Spanish oak or black oak, bearing an ancient mark, the age of which could not be ascertained on account of the decayed condition of the trees. The grant calls for a Spanish oak as that corner. South of that point, nearly on a line between it and the southwest corner as claimed by the plaintiff, another tree was found bearing an ancient mark. For the southeastern, northeastern, and northwestern corners of the location of the Patterson survey, as claimed by the defendants, nothing whatever was found indicative of the existence of monuments.

[1] The erroneous description, if it was such, in the deed from Nathan Henning and wife to Chas. Stuart, relating to the beginning corner, is not conclusive. In other words, if the Hayes corner was not the corner of the 470-acre Powell survey, granted to Wm. Donaldson, its erroneous designation as such in the Henning deed does not estop the plaintiff from showing the true location thereof. The deed purports to convey the whole of the Powell survey, and, with the single exception noted, calls for its courses, distances, and monuments. The distance called for in it from the northeast corner of the small Wolfenbarger tract to the southwest corner of the Patterson survey is 120 poles as in the original survey, and the deed described the land generally as being the land granted to Wm. Donaldson and containing 470 acres. As between the parties to that deed, the general description would prevail over a particular one, if it comported with the intention of the parties and the particular one did not, as is the case here. Mylius v. Lumber Co., 60 W. Va. 346, 71 S. E. 404; Baxter v. Tanner, 35 W. Va. 60, 12 S. E. 1094; Smith v. Chapman, 10 Grat. (Va.) 445; Andrews v. Pearson, 68 Me. 19; Marshall v. McLean, 3 G. Greene (Iowa) 363. Not being conclusive between the parties to the deed themselves, such mistake would certainly not conclude the grantee in favor of strangers. Manifestly this recital is nothing more than a circumstance bearing on the question of location, and entitled to only such weight as it may have under the rules of law governing the trial of issues of fact. It is supplemented by similar evidence found in the survey of the smaller Harrison and Dixon tract. The Patterson survey does not call for the Harrison and Dixon survey. The latter, being later, calls for the former. If, under some misapprehension, a tree was taken as the corner of the Patterson survey which was not in fact such corner, but only a tree in the line of the prior survey, such erroneous adoption of a line believed to be, and designated as, the line of the Patterson survey is not conclusive. In other words, the Harrison and Dixey survey is not a monument or call of the Patterson survey, and the adoption of a line for the former as a line of the latter, which in fact is not such line, amounts to no more than the conduct of strangers which, in the absence of ascertainment of the true line of the Patterson survey, is a circumstance bearing on the issue and nothing more. Surveys of coterminous or neighboring tracts, made by the same surveyor, about the same time, or recently thereafter, are admissible in evidence in such a controversy as this. McMullin v. Lewis, 5 W. Va. 144; Clements v. Kyles, 13 Grat. (Va.) 468; Overton v. Davison, 1 Grat. (Va.) 211, 42 Am. Dec. 544. But such evidence does not reach the dignity, nor have the probative force of established monuments. It is merely circumstantial, and its admissibility has been denied when the coterminous or neighboring surveys were not made by the same surveyor and are many years subsequent in date. Clements v. Kyles, cited; McMullin v. Lewis, cited.

[2] Our analysis of the evidence and definition of its character show lack or failure of certain identification of any of the lines or corners of the Patterson survey, the location of which is relied upon by the defendants as the vital question in the case. Plaintiff's evidence as to identity of monuments is also inconclusive. The evidence submitted by the parties to sustain their respective contentions is about the same in character and quantity, in so far as it relates to the identification of monuments called for in the Patterson survey. That submitted by the defendant is supplemented by conduct of strangers and a recital in the Henning deed as mere circumstances, not in any sense conclusive nor strongly probative. If nothing else appeared, the verdict of a jury founded upon this evidence would be unimpeachable and beyond the power of disturbance by the trial court. But, to allow a verdict for the defendants to stand on such evidence, under the circumstances disclosed here, would permit the jury to disregard and ignore practically the only evidence indicating the true location with any degree of certainty. As has been shown, the location of the Patterson survey, as contended for by the defendant, disarranges the entire system of surveys and does violence to the calls of the Powell surveys. It would reduce the quantities of both, and shorten specific calls and distances. The location of the Wolfenbarger tract is well established. Its northeast corner is a fixed and certain monument of the Powell surveys. Giving effect to the call for course and distance from that corner, as the law requires, in the absence of an ascertained controlling monument, it fixes the southwest corner of the Patterson survey at about the point contended for by the plaintiff, and sustains the declared relation of that survey to the other Powell survey, the Frogg tract and Wolfenbarger tract, and its specification of quantity. An overwhelming preponderance of evidence in favor of the plaintiff is thus clearly shown, making it the duty of the trial court to set aside the verdict, on the request for such action.

For the most part, the court's rulings on instructions were correct. It erred, however, in refusing one instruction asked for by the plaintiff, and designated as No. 2. In effect, it would have been a direction to find for the plaintiff, for it would have required the jury to find the plaintiff entitled to so much of the 57-acre tract of land as lies within certain designated lines, run by course and distance from the northwest corner of the Patterson survey, as located by the plaintiff. As the evidence for the defendants was insufficient to sustain a verdict in their favor, for reasons already stated, it was the duty of the court to direct a verdict for the plaintiff, if asked to do so, or to give the jury a peremptory instruction to find for the plaintiff. Such is the character of the instruction the court refused. As there was some evidence tending to sustain the theories of instructions Nos. 2, 3, and 4, given for the defendant, the court properly overruled the objections to them. Evidence insufficient to sustain a verdict may, nevertheless, justify the court in giving instructions embodying the hypotheses it tends to establish. State v. Clifford, 59 W. Va. 1, 52 S. E. 981.

For the errors noted, the judgment will be reversed, the verdict set aside, and the case remanded for a new trial.

WILLIAMS and LYNCH, JJ., absent.

STATE ex rel. FORTNEY LUMBER & HARDWARE CO. v. BALTIMORE & O. R. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 14, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CONTEMPT (§ 66*)—REVIEW.

A judgment for contempt of a trial court, consisting of disobedience of its judgment, decree, or order, is not reviewable in the appellate court, if the trial court had jurisdiction of the cause in which it rendered, pronounced, or entered the violated judgment, decree, or order, and did not exceed its jurisdiction in doing so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contempt, Cent. Dig. §§ 213-215, 223-237; Dec. Dig. § 66.*]

2. CONTEMPT (§ 66*)—REVIEW.

But, if such court had not such jurisdiction, or, having it, exceeded its powers in entering the judgment, decree, or order, its lack of jurisdiction affords ground for appellate jurisdiction to annul the judgment of contempt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contempt, Cent. Dig. §§ 213-215, 223-237; Dec. Dig. § 66.*]

3. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 274*)—TAKING PRIVATE PROPERTY—INJUNCTION.

Equity has jurisdiction to enjoin the taking of private personal property for public use without payment of just compensation therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 753, 765-768; Dec. Dig. § 274.*]

4. CONTEMPT (§ 29*)—PARTIES TO OFFENSE—CORPORATIONS.

A corporation may be a contemnor, and punishable as such by fine.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contempt, Cent. Dig. §§ 88-90; Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

5. CONTEMPT (§ 63*)—CONDITIONAL JUDGMENT.

Conditional judgments of imprisonment may be rendered in contempt cases.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contempt, Cent. Dig. §§ 195, 197-201; Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Taylor County.

Action by the State on the relation of the Fortney Lumber & Hardware Company, against the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, a corporation. Defendant was found guilty of contempt, and adjudged to pay a fine, and brings error. Writ of error dismissed as having been improvidently awarded.

B. F. Bailey, of Grafton, for plaintiff in error.

POFFENBARGER, P. Having been found guilty of a contempt of court, and adjudged to pay a fine of $500, the defendant obtained this writ of error to the judgment.

The alleged contempt, disobedience of an injunction order, was one the court could punish summarily. Code, c. 147, § 27, cl. 4.

[1, 2] If the court had jurisdiction of the cause in the general sense of the term, and did not exceed its authority in awarding the injunction or rendering the judgment complained of, the writ of error to this court does not lie, for the statute giving power here to review judgments in contempt cases excepts those consisting of disobedience of judgments, decrees, and orders. Code, c. 160, § 4. While this section purports to except all cases of that kind, it must be read in connection with a general principle, authorizing appellate courts to entertain writs of error and appeals for the annulment of judgments rendered and decrees entered without jurisdiction. Want of jurisdiction in the trial court confers appellate jurisdiction. Freer v. Davis, 52 W. Va. 1, 43 S. E. 164, 59 L. R. A. 558, 94 Am. St. Rep. 895; Clark v. County Court, 55 W. Va. 278, 47 S. E. 162. Agreeably to the general rule observed in most, if not all, jurisdictions, the Legislature seems clearly to have intended not to give a right of review of judgments for contempt by disobedience to judgments, decrees, and orders, and there is good reason for withholding appellate jurisdiction in such cases. Interlocutory orders and decrees, such as preliminary injunction orders, are always correctible by the courts in which they are made, and in all important instances the law affords an appellate remedy for refusal to make such corrections. There may be an appeal from an order refusing to dissolve an injunction or from an order appointing a receiver. In these instances, and some others, the aggrieved parties are not bound to await the final decree, and in others, not deemed to be of sufficient importance to warrant an appeal therefrom, the errors of the trial court are correctible by an appeal from the final decree. Having these remedies for the correction of interlocutory orders and final decrees, a party ought not to be permitted to attack such decrees by collateral or indirect methods, such as disobedience thereof, with a right of review of the judgments imposing the penalties inflicted by the court for disobedience. In requiring him to respect and obey the orders and decrees of the court, the law thus inflicts no hardship. It affords him a remedy for every abuse of authority, and there is no reason why he should attempt to take the law into his own hands and redress his own grievances. But this power of the court to compel obedience to its orders and decrees is subject to an important limitation. It must be within its own jurisdiction and powers. This does not mean that its decrees and judgments must be free from error, for a court having power to decree at all in a given cause may pronounce an erroneous decree without exceeding its powers. Error is not want of jurisdiction. Coal Co. v. Ritz, 60 W. Va. 395, 56 S. E. 257, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1225. A judgment for contempt of a void order or decree is a void judgment, and cannot be enforced. Coal Co. v. Ritz, cited. A contempt proceeding for violation of such an order may be prohibited. Coal Co. v. Ritz, cited. The existence of this remedy does not deny appellate jurisdiction, for there may be an appeal from a void decree or a writ of error to a void judgment. Clark v. County Court, cited; McCoy v. Allen, 16 W. Va. 724; Monroe v. Bartlett, 6 W. Va. 441; Johnson v. Young, 11 W. Va. 673.

Some of the decisions of this court may seem to be at variance with the views here expressed. Writs of error have been entertained in several cases similar to this, but the question of appellate jurisdiction, or rather the extent to which the appellate court has jurisdiction and the grounds thereof, seems not to have been discussed. In State v. Fredlock, 52 W. Va. 232, 43 S. E. 153, 94 Am. St. Rep. 932, the jurisdictional question was not raised, and the court seems to have reviewed the judgment generally. However, the main questions discussed in that case pertained to the jurisdiction of the trial court. In Ruhl v. Ruhl, 24 W. Va. 279, this court seems to have based its appellate jurisdiction on proper grounds, and to have observed the distinction here made. In State v. Irwin, 30 W. Va. 404, 4 S. E. 413, the court seems to have proceeded upon the theory of a want of jurisdiction, holding there was no authority in the court below to punish for contempt an act intended to be prohibited by an injunction which had not yet taken effect, because the condition requiring bond had not been complied with. The distinction is somewhat nice and obscure, and both parties and the court at times may have failed to observe it, but it is obviously sound and embodies a wholesome principle.

[3] The relator in the contempt proceeding, the Fortney Lumber & Hardware Company, was the lessee of a certain lot in the city of Grafton, bordering on a certain street over which the plaintiff in error was about to construct its track, making a deep excavation. The bill for the injunction alleges purpose and intent on the part of the railway company, with the permission of the city, to widen the street so as to take a part of the leased lot and a portion of one of the buildings thereon. The purpose of the bill was to prevent this alleged taking of its property, to the extent of the threatened invasion of the leased premises and the buildings, as well as to prevent damages likely to result from the deep excavation to be made in the street. The railway company had not paid the lumber company any compensation for the desired portion of its lease and buildings, nor taken any steps whatever to have the same ascertained, secured, or paid. The injunction awarded upon the bill was served upon an agent of the company late in the evening. On the same night, after the service thereof, it entered upon the portion of the street in question, made the excavation, and laid its track. Thereupon, at the instance of the plaintiff in the suit, the court awarded a rule against the railway company, reciting the alleged contempt, and commanding it to appear and show cause, if any it could, why it should not be punished for disobedience of the order. It tendered an answer, denying knowledge of the injunction, and also its validity, on the ground of a defect in the affidavit to the bill. This the court rejected, deeming it insufficient, found the respondent guilty, and imposed the fine.

The allegations of the bill obviously made a case within the jurisdiction of the court. It set forth purpose and intent on the part of the railway company to take a part of the plaintiff's property without having first paid, or secured to be paid, compensation therefor. Ordinarily, private property proposed to be taken for public use is real estate, but personal property is as much within the constitutional guaranty as real estate. Teter v. Railroad Co., 35 W. Va. 433, 14 S. E. 146; Cooley's Cons. Lim. 756 to 759; Lewis, Em. Dom. §§ 62, 413, 728. The building on the property which the bill alleged would be partially taken had been constructed by the lessee at its own expense, and with right of removal. In the brief lack of interest on the part of the plaintiff is charged and insisted upon, because there was a privilege of surrender in the lease. This position is untenable, for there had been no surrender, nor any forfeiture or termination in any manner of the plaintiff's interest therein.

Whether there is lack of jurisdiction in the case of violation of an injunction by a person who had no notice of its existence, it is unnecessary to say, and we enter upon no inquiry as to that. The evidence adduced upon the subject of notice amply justified the finding of the court. The railway company had carried its work up to that portion of the street on which the plaintiff's property abutted at the time of the injunction order. Immediately thereafter, and in the nighttime, a large force of men was put to work on that section of the street, and the excavation and track laying completed. An agent of the plaintiff, on discovery of this procedure, accompanied by his attorney, sought the principal officers and agents of the company, as well as the foreman of the men engaged in the work, but was unable to find any of them. All the circumstances clearly indicate purpose and intent on the part of the company to complete the construction that night, regardless of the injunction, as well as knowledge of its existence. The manner in which the work was executed indicated anticipation of legal obstruction thereto and preparation for avoiding it. The agent to whom the copy of the order was delivered by the sheriff intimated his knowledge of the character and purpose of the paper, and he must have had knowledge of the extensive preparations for night work and the purpose thereof. Nevertheless, he failed to deliver the paper to the superintendent or any other officer or agent in charge of the work of construction. All the circumstances indicate purpose to rely upon lack of formal notice, notwithstanding the possession of actual notice.

[4] Lack of power and jurisdiction in any court to adjudge a corporation guilty of a contempt and punish it by fine is urged as ground for reversal. This position is clearly untenable. A corporation through its agents and officers has physical power to violate or disobey the orders of the court, notwithstanding its intangibility. Though the officers and agents are punishable for the act of disobedience, their liability does not preclude liability on the part of the corporation itself. Of course the corporation cannot be imprisoned. This is a physical impossibility, but it is possible and practicable to impose a fine upon it and enforce payment thereof. Accordingly, it has been held, consistently with reason and legal principles, that a corporation may be held guilty of contempt and punished therefor by fine. Sercomb v. Catlin, 128 Ill. 556, 21 N. E. 606, 15 Am. St. Rep. 147; People v. Pendleton, 64 N. Y. 622; United States v. Railroad Co. (C. C.) 6 Fed. 237; Cook, Corp. § 755; 9 Cyc. 23.

[5] A charge of invalidity in the judgment on account of its conditional character is made in argument, but this is unavailing on a writ of error for two reasons: If the judgment is void on account of its form, it is unenforceable, and there is no occasion for its reversal. In the second place, as the object of punishment in contempt cases is to compel obedience to the violated order, and to vindicate the dignity of the court, the court may forego the latter, and use its power to effectuate the former, and a conditional judgment is very well calculated to produce such result. If the condition is not performed, the judgment necessarily becomes absolute. If, on the other hand, it is performed, the judgment is satisfied. Punishment by fine is much milder than by imprisonment. What can be done in the latter case can certainly be accomplished in the former, and it is well settled that conditional judgments of imprisonment may be rendered in contempt cases. 9 Cyc. 62. At any rate, the court did not exceed its powers in rendering the judgment, and the question of jurisdiction is the only one open to us on this writ.

As the court had jurisdiction, the writ of error will be dismissed as having been improvidently awarded.

ELK COTTON MILLS v. GRANT.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 95*)—INJURY TO MINOR EMPLOYÉ—CHILD LABOR LAW.

The employment of a minor under the prescribed age in a factory, in disobedience of the statute prohibiting such employment, is negligence per se, and, if injury to such child proximately results from the employment, a right of action in its favor arises.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 141, 160; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 204*)—INJURY TO MINOR EMPLOYÉ—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

The statutory prohibition against employing children under a prescribed age in a factory excludes the defense of the assumption by them of risks incident to such employment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 544-546; Dec. Dig. § 204.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 96*)—INJURY TO MINOR EMPLOYÉ—RIGHT OF ACTION.

In a suit by a child alleging injury as the result of his employment in a factory in violation of a statute prohibiting the employment in factories of children under a prescribed age, if the injury was not the result of the employment, but of some wholly independent cause disconnected from his employment, there can be no recovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 157, 158, 162; Dec. Dig. § 96.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 228*)—NEGLIGENCE (§ 101*)—INJURY TO MINOR EMPLOYÉ—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—DIMINUTION OF DAMAGES.

In such a case the defense that the child was guilty of such negligence as to prevent a recovery is also open to the defendant.

(a) Under the statute of this state, if the plaintiff is not guilty of such negligence as will prevent a recovery, but is guilty of some negligence, the doctrine of diminution of damages may also be invoked.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 670, 671; Dec. Dig. § 228; * Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 85, 163, 164; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

5. NEGLIGENCE (§ 85*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—INFANTS—"DUE CARE."

The diligence required of a child of tender years is not to be measured by the ordinary care required of an adult; but due care in such a child is such care as its capacity, mental and physical, fits it for exercising in the actual circumstances of the occasion and situation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 121-128; Dec. Dig. § 85.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 2221, 2222; vol. 8, p. 7648.]

6. DAMAGES (§ 216*)—PERSONAL INJURY—INSTRUCTIONS—EVIDENCE.

Where suit was brought for a personal injury to a child and on the trial, about 2½ years after its occurrence, the plaintiff testified in substance that by reason of the injury he lost his thumb and forefinger and about half of his right hand, that he could do a little work with that hand, that he was confined to the house for more than a week after he was hurt, and could do no work for two or three months, and that his injury still caused him pain at night, there was enough evidence to authorize a charge on the subject of pain and suffering, mental and physical, which he might have suffered in the past, and which he might suffer in the future.

(a) 'This is true although the witness added to the testimony above mentioned: "My hand does not hurt me now unless I hurt it in some way; my hand is not so easy to hurt."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 548-555; Dec. Dig. § 216.*]

7. GROUNDS FOR NEW TRIAL—No ERROR.

None of the grounds of the motion for a new trial which are not specially mentioned required a reversal.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

8. NEGLIGENCE (§ 101*)—"CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE"—COMPARATIVE NEGLIGENCE.

The words "contributory negligence" are generally employed to express a degree of negligence which will preclude a recovery. In this state the words are commonly used to express negligence which will diminish, but not defeat, a recovery, under the doctrine of comparative negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 85, 163, 164; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1540-1547; vol. 8, p. 7617.]

Error from Superior Court, Whitfield County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Action by Charlie Grant, etc., against the Elk Cotton Mills. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

On January 18, 1912, Charlie Grant, by his next friend, brought an action to recover damages against the Elk Cotton Mills. After being amended, and after the sustaining of a demurrer to a portion of the petition, it alleged in substance as follows: The plaintiff, who was 11 years of age, was employed by the defendant in violation of the second section of the child labor law of 1906 (Civil Code 1910, § 8144), prohibiting the employment in any factory or manufacturing establishment of any child under 12 years of age, except under certain specified circumstances not involved in this case. On May 10, 1910, he was employed to carry waste from the spinning room of the mill, and the duties of his employment required him to go among the machines. While going through another room, he passed a machine called a finisher. He was a child of tender years, small for his age, and with less mental and physical capacity than the ordinary child of his years. He had been employed in the mill for only a short time; he had never been employed in a cotton mill before, and was unacquainted with the dangers of the machinery. In passing the finisher, he laid his hand on a rod to which a cog was attached, as he had seen other employes do, and as he had previously done with the knowledge of the defendant and its officers, agents, and employes. There were no proper safeguards to prevent injury from the machine. In some way his hand was drawn into the machine, and crushed, so that he lost his thumb and forefinger and part of his hand, causing pain and suffering, and decreased capacity to labor and earn money. These results are permanent. The defendant admitted the employment of the plaintiff, and alleged that it was at the special solicitation of his father, who was the boss of the spinning room, and had immediate control of the plaintiff; that there was no danger in a proper performance of the duties for which the plaintiff was employed; that it was unnecessary in carrying out waste to go through the room where the finisher was; and that the plaintiff had been warned to keep out of it. The other substantial allegations of the petition were denied. The jury found for the plaintiff $2,000. The defendant moved for a new trial, which was denied, and it excepted.

Maddox, McCamy & Shumate, of Dalton, for plaintiff in error. M. C. Tarver, of Dalton, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] 1. By the Civil Code of 1910, § 3143, it is declared that no child under 10 years of age shall be employed or allowed to labor in any factory or manufacturing establishment in this state under any circumstances. By section 3144 it is declared that no child under 12 years of age shall be so employed, or allowed so to labor, unless it is an orphan, and has no other means of support, or unless a widowed mother or an aged or disabled father is dependent upon the labor of such child. In the latter event the father is required to file in the office of the company or establishment a prescribed certificate from the ordinary. A disobedience of the act is made a misdemeanor. Section 3149. Here the plaintiff was 11 years old. He was not an orphan, and there is no claim that he had a widowed mother or an aged or disabled father dependent upon him. On the contrary, the defendant set up that his father was employed in the defendant's factory. Under these circumstances, the employment of the plaintiff was a violation of the law.

The child labor law was enacted for a useful purpose. It was intended to be obeyed. A violation of the statute by hiring the plaintiff, a boy of 11 years of age (and not within the excepted class), to work in the defendant's factory constituted negligence per se as to him, and authorized a recovery for a personal injury sustained by him as a proximate result of such employment. Where a statute prescribes an absolute duty for the benefit of a class of persons, the violation of the statutory duty resulting in injury to one of such persons authorizes a recovery without other negligence, and the expression "negligence per se" has quite generally been used to characterize such a breach of duty. It has often been so employed in this state. In 1 Thompson on Negligence, § 10, it is said that: "Where the Legislature of the state, or the council of a municipal corporation, having in view the promotion of the safety of the public, or of individual members of the public, commands or forbids the doing of a particular act, * * * the general conception of the courts, and the only one that is reconcilable with reason, is that the failure to do the act commanded, or the doing of the act prohibited, is negligence as mere matter of law, otherwise called negligence per se, and this, irrespective of all questions of the exercise of prudence, diligence, care, or skill, so that, if it is the proximate cause of hurt or damage to another, and if that other is without contributory fault, the case is decided in his favor, and all that remains to be done is to assess the damages." While a few cases have held that the violation of a statutory duty is only "evidence" of negligence, and not negligence per se, such decisions, though rendered by courts of high standing, will not bear the test of reason, and this court has frequently held to the contrary. Atlanta & West Point Railroad v. Wyly, 65 Ga. 120; Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Hames, 135 Ga. 67 (4), 68 S. E. 805; 1 Hopkins' Pers. Inj. (2d Ed.) §§ 18, 125.

[2] 2. The statutory inhibition under consideration necessarily excludes the doctrine of the assumption of risks of the employment, which might otherwise apply. To hold differently would be substantially to destroy the efficacy of the statute.

[3, 4] 3, 4. There remain the questions whether the violation of the statutory duty was the proximate cause of the injury, and whether the plaintiff was guilty of such negligence as to debar him from a recovery, or to lessen the recovery, under our statute. If the breach of a statutory duty in no way proximately causes an injury, its violation will not authorize a recovery. To illustrate by reference to suits against railroad companies for personal injuries at road crossings: The law requires a railroad company to erect blow posts at a certain distance from public road crossings over its tracks, and requires the engineer to blow the whistle and slacken the speed in approaching such crossings. It has been held that a violation of these duties constitutes negligence per se as to one passing over such a crossing. If, however, an injury is not the result of the operation of the train at all, but results from some entirely different and disconnected cause, the violation of the duty would not authorize a recovery. It may be said that the mere failure to erect a blow post or to blow the whistle does not, along and of itself, injure one who may be on a crossing; but, if he be injured by reason of the company's failure to obey the law enacted for his protection, it is enough. Or suppose the company was negligent, but the injured person himself was guilty of such negligence as to debar him from recovery although the defendant was negligent, then he could not recover. This has often been recognized in suits against railroad companies, and it is generally true in other cases. The violation of the statutory duty is negligence per se. But if negligence, whether per se or otherwise, does not proximately cause the injury, there can be no recovery on account of it. Or if the injured person is guilty of such negligence as to preclude a recovery, there can be none.

[8] As has been more than once noticed in opinions of this court, the words "contributory negligence" are generally employed to express a degree of negligence which will preclude a recovery. In this state, unfortunately perhaps, those words are commonly used to express negligence which will diminish, but not defeat, a recovery, under the doctrine of comparative negligence, which is recognized here. But if the injured person causes the injury by his own negligence, or if the plaintiff by the use of ordinary care could have avoided the consequences to himself caused by the defendant's negligence, he is not entitled to recover. Civil Code 1910, § 4426.

In applying these principles to the child labor law now under consideration, and in considering the subject of proximate cause, the great objects of the statute should not be overlooked. It must be borne in mind that a leading purpose of the Legislature was to protect the children of the state of tender years, and to prevent the employment in mills, manufacturing establishments, and factories, with certain exceptions, of those under the prescribed age, whom the lawmakers regarded as so immature and indiscreet as to make it wrong to expose them to the dangers incident to such a place. The Legislature must have known that little children might not have the caution and prudence of older persons, and might yield to childish impulses in dangerous places, and, no doubt for this and other reasons, that body sought to prevent their being employed in places which it so considered.

Of course, it may be argued that the contract of employment did not crush the boy's hand, that the waste which he was employed to remove did not injure him, but that he was injured by a machine which he was not employed to operate. But such arguments do not conclusively show that the unlawful employment in the factory was not the proximate cause of the injury. The real question is whether the employment at that place, which was in itself negligence in law, was the cause of which the injury was the consequence. And in determining this, as well as whether the boy's own negligence was such as to preclude a recovery, his age is a matter to be considered. If the statute had been obeyed, would this have prevented the injury? Was there any causal connection between the disobedience of the law and the injury? Was there any intervening cause? Was his conduct such as to prevent, or, if not, then to diminish, a recovery? These are practical questions. If the plaintiff should frame a count upon this statutory negligence, and also one upon negligence under the general law apart from the statute, as to the latter count the general law would prevail.

In Queen v. Dayton & Iron Co., 95 Tenn. 464, 32 S. W. 460, 30 L. R. A. 82, 83, 49 Am. St. Rep. 935, where it was claimed that a boy employed in a mine in violation of the statute jumped from a moving car, under the command of another employé whom he had been instructed to obey, and was injured, the Supreme Court of Tennessee held that such employment was negligence per se, and a recovery was sustained. It was said: "Of course, we do not hold that, if the boy had died of organic disease of the heart, or from a stroke of paralysis, or from some cause wholly disconnected with the employment, the company would have been liable in damages simply on account of the employment in violation of the statute. But we do hold that the breach of the statute is actionable negligence whenever it is shown that the injuries were sustained in consequence of the employment." In Nickey v. Steuder, 164 Ind. 189, 73 N. E. 117, though a child was wrongfully employed, the injury resulted from the act of a third person who had come upon the premises to obtain wood, and who carelessly threw a stick of wood against the child, and it was held that the employment was not the proximate cause of the injury. These are illustrative cases. In the latter it was held that there was an independent intervening cause. There are other cases, cited below, in which it was held that the negligence or childish pranks of others in the same employment would not necessarily prevent the unlawful employment from being the proximate cause of the injury. When there is evidence tending to show that the injury results from the employment, though the child may have also been guilty of negligence in yielding to childish impulses, the questions of proximate cause and of whether the negligence of the child is such as to prevent a recovery are generally for the jury. One or two courts have declared that, if the child employed in violation of the statute was injured by a machine which it had been hired to operate, proximate cause could be declared as matter of law. We will not consider at length the various cases on this subject. There is some conflict. A few of the decisions have confused the question of the existence of negligence on the part of the defendant or that of the plaintiff with the question of proximate cause, and there are some which are not satisfactory to us. But we believe we have followed the current of authority, and have based our decision on sound principles. See Leathers v. Blackwell's Durham Tobacco Co., 144 N. C. 330, 57 S. E. 711, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 349, 364, et seq., and note, where Holin v. R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 141 N. C. 300, 53 S. E. 891, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 335, 8 Ann. Cas. 638, is discussed; Starnes v. Albion Mfg. Co., 147 N. C. 556, 61 S. E. 525, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 602, 15 Ann. Cas. 470; Marquette Third Vein Coal Co. v. Dielle, 208 Ill. 116, 70 N. E. 17; Morris v. Stanfield, 81 Ill. App. 264; Sterling v. Union Carbide Co., 142 Mich. 284, 105 N. W. 755; 4 Labatt on Master and Servant (2d Ed.) § 1571, and notes. The decision of the Court of Appeals in Platt v. Southern Photo Material Co., 4 Ga. App. 159, 60 S. E. 1068, is in general harmony with what is said above. We are not here called on to deal with the question whether proof that the child is in fact above the designated age will prevent the employment without filing the prescribed affidavit from being negligence per se.

[5] 5. The diligence required of a child of tender years is not to be measured by the ordinary care required of an adult; but due care in such a child is such care as its capacity, mental and physical, fits it for exercising in the actual circumstances of the occasion and situation. Western & Atlantic Railroad Co. v. Young, 81 Ga. 397, 7 S. E. 912, 12 Am. St. Rep. 320; Civil Code 1910, § 3474.

[6] 6. The evidence authorized a charge on the subject of recovery for pain and suffering, mental and physical, which the injured boy had endured, and such as he might endure in the future. At the trial, nearly 2½ years after the injury, the plaintiff testified that, by reason of it, he lost his thumb and forefinger and about half of his right hand; that he could do a little work with that hand; and that he was confined to the house for more than a week after the injury, and thought it was two or three months later before he could do any work. He added: "My injuries hurt of a night; but my hand does not hurt now unless I hurt it in some way. My hand is not so easy to hurt." Central Railroad, etc., Co. v. Lauier, 83 Ga. 587, 10 S. E. 279; Macon Railway, etc., Co. v. Streyer, 123 Ga. 279, 51 S. E. 342.

[7] 7. The verdict was supported by the evidence. If there were any inaccuracies in the charge, they were not such as to require a new trial. It might have been fuller and more explicit; but there seems to have been no request to charge more fully, and, under the facts of the case, we do not think there should be a new trial.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

LANG v. MONTGOMERY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 627*)—RECORD—DELAY IN PERFECTING APPEAL—DISMISSAL.

"Where it appears that the clerk of a trial court has failed to transmit to the Supreme Court, within the time prescribed by law, a bill of exceptions and transcript, and that the plaintiff in error or his attorney 'has been the cause of the delay, * * * by consent, direction, or procurement of any kind,' the writ of error will be dismissed." Wheeler v. Crawford, 135 Ga. 148, 69 S. E. 22; Wilson v. State, 124 Ga. 80, 52 S. E. 81; Budden v. Brooks, 123 Ga. 882, 51 S. E. 727; Civ. Code 1910, §§ 6185, 6186.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2744-2749, 8128; Dec. Dig. § 627.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 627*)—DELAY IN PERFECTING APPEAL—DISMISSAL.

Accordingly, where a bill of exceptions was filed with the clerk of the trial court on October 11, 1912, but the bill of exceptions and transcript were not transmitted to the Supreme Court until November 18, 1912, because the plaintiff in error (who is also an attorney) held the papers in his office, as appears by the certificate of the clerk of the trial court, the bill of exceptions will be dismissed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2744-2749, 8128; Dec. Dig. § 627.*]

Error from Superior Court, Gordon County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Action between J. M. Lang and K. W. Montgomery. From the judgment, Lang brings error. Writ of error dismissed.

Harris, Harris & Harris, of Rome, for plaintiff in error. J. G. B. Erwin, of Calhoun, for defendant in error.

HILL, J. Writ of error dismissed. All the Justices concur.

BURNEY v. JONES.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CONTRACTS (§ 9*)—CERTAINTY—RIGHT TO ENFORCE.

Under the evidence there was no error in directing a verdict for the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 10-20; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

Error from Superior Court, Wilkinson County; K. J. Hawkins, Judge.

Action by J. S. Burney against W. A. Jones. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

F. Chambers & Son, of Macon, for plaintiff in error. Lindsey & Carswell, of Irwinton, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. This suit was for money had and received. A trade was made by the defendant to sell to the plaintiff a tract of land for $1,500. Five hundred dollars was paid in cash, and notes for $1,000 were given. Later a second sale was made by the defendant to the plaintiff of another tract containing 10 acres, for $1,100. The plaintiff conveyed in part payment land owned by him at a valuation of $600 (or, according to the defendant, $400), and gave a note for the balance. Later he and the defendant agreed on a termination of the trade. According to the plaintiff's evidence, he gave up his bond for title and surrendered the land which he had conveyed to the defendant, while the defendant destroyed the plaintiff's notes and promised to give him "part of the money" which he had paid. Later the defendant conveyed the land which he had received from the plaintiff to a third party, who appears to have been an innocent purchaser, and who placed improvements on it. Hence there could be no recovery of it, and an agreement to pay plaintiff part of the money was too vague to be enforced. The facts did not authorize a recovery on the basis of money had and received, and, under the evidence most favorable to the plaintiff, there was no error in directing a verdict for the defendant.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

TENNESSEE VALLEY FERTILIZER CO. v. STEVENS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ARREST (§ 49*)—BAIL PROCESS—DISCHARGE—ISSUES—EVIDENCE.

Where an action for the recovery of personality has been brought, and the defendant has been imprisoned under bail process, upon an application by him to be discharged under Civil Code 1910, § 5154, the questions of fact raised for determination are whether the defendant can neither give security nor produce the property, and whether the reasons for its nonproduction are satisfactory.

(a) To allege and prove that guano, which was the subject-matter of the action, could not be produced because it had been bought and placed in the ground as a fertilizer, is legitimate as showing a satisfactory reason for the nonproduction.

(b) Allegations and evidence for the purpose of showing that the action was maliciously brought by the plaintiff, and not bona fide to recover the property, were not relevant to the issue in such a proceeding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Arrest, Cent. Dig. §§ 115-122; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1052*)—HARMLESS ERROR—BAIL.

The uncontradicted evidence fully authorized, if it did not demand, the order discharging the defendant on his own recognizance; and the judgment will not be reversed because the ruling in the respect indicated in the last subdivision of the preceding headnote may not have been accurate.

(a) In order that the order of discharge, based upon a petition containing allegations of malice and want of probable cause on the part of the plaintiff, may not be taken as adjudicating those facts, direction is given that the judgment be so amended as to strike from the petition for discharge such averment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4171-4177; Dec. Dig. § 1052.*]

Error from Superior Court, Warren County; B. F. Walker, Judge.

Action by the Tennessee Valley Fertilizer Company against W. W. Stevens. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

M. E. Evans, of Warrenton, for plaintiff in error. E. P. Davis and M. L. Felts, both of Warrenton, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. Judgment affirmed, with direction. All the Justices concur.

HARRIS v. JONES.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)*1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 32*)—PROMISE TO ANSWER FOR ANOTHER—SUBSTITUTION.

An agreement between a creditor, his debtor, and a third person, whereby such third person, in consideration of the creditor's releasing the debtor, agrees to pay the amount of the debt to the creditor, and as part of the agreement the creditor releases his debtor and agrees that such third person shall be substituted for the debtor, is not within the statute of frauds. The debt is extinguished as to the debtor, and the third person becomes, by substitution, the debtor in his place. Palmetto Manufacturing Co. v. Parker, 128 Ga. 798, 51 S. E. 714.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. § 49; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

2. INSTRUCTIONS APPROVED—VERDICT SUSTAINED.

The charges complained of were in substantial accord with the foregoing principle, and the verdict was supported by the evidence.

Error from Superior Court, Taliaferro County; B. F. Walker, Judge.

Action between W. I. Harris and R. T. Jones. From the judgment, Harris brings error. Affirmed.

J. A. Beazley, of Crawfordville, for plaintiff in error. J. W. Hixon and Colley & Colley, all of Washington, Ga., for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

EDWARDS et al. v. SAVANNAH & S. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)*EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 238*)—CONDEMNATION—APPEAL.

An appeal from the award of assessors in a condemnation case must be entered in writing, and filed in the office of the clerk of the superior court where the award is filed, within 10 days from the time the award is filed. Civil Code 1910, § 5228. An appeal entered after 10 days from the filing of the award was not in time, and was properly dismissed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 614, 619, 658-660, 666, 668, 669, 671, 673, 674, 687; Dec. Dig. § 238.*]

Error from Superior Court, Bryan County; W. W. Sheppard, Judge.

Condemnation proceedings by the Savannah & Statesboro Railway Company against Sylvester Edwards and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

J. H. Smith, of Eden, for plaintiffs in error. Johnston & Cone, of Statesboro, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

DURRENCE v. WATERS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)*1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§§ 11, 70*)—JUDGMENT ON DEMURRER—EXCEPTIONS.

The losing party to a judgment on general demurrer is given the option to sue out a direct bill of exceptions, assigning error on the judgment, or to have certified and filed exceptions pendente lite. If the latter course be followed, the ruling on demurrer becomes a pendente lite ruling, which is reviewable only after the termination of the case, on exceptions taken to the final judgment rendered therein. Civil Code 1910, § 6138.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 39-48, 367-378, 386, 411; Dec. Dig. §§ 11, 70.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 13*)—WRIT OF ERROR—RIGHT PENDING MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

Where a plaintiff against whom a verdict has been rendered makes a motion for new trial, he cannot properly, while the same is pending and still undisposed of, bring to this court for review any ruling, order, or decision made by the judge during the progress of the case, or the judgment entered upon the verdict. Kelly & Jones Co. v. Moore, 125 Ga. 382, 54 S. E. 118.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 47, 1895; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

Error from Superior Court, Tattnall County; W. W. Sheppard, Judge.

Action by Mrs. M. L. Durrence against J. W. Waters, administrator. Judgment for de-defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Writ of error dismissed.

H. H. Elders, of Beldsville, and Hines & Jordan, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error. Way & Burkhalter, of Beldsville, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. Writ of error dismissed. All the Justices concur.

STANLEY v. STEMBRIDGE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 308*)—ACTION FOR DISPOSSESSION—EVIDENCE—RENT NOTE.

On the trial of an issue arising under a statutory proceeding to dispossess a tenant and a counter affidavit denying that the defendant held under the plaintiff (Civil Code 1910, § 5385 et seq.), where the evidence showed that the plaintiff had purchased the land and taken a conveyance from the former owner, and that another as his agent had entered into a contract of rental with the tenant who had not taken possession under the former owner, but the agent took a note for the rental in his own name and then assigned it to his principal "for value," such note and assignment were admissible in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1314-1316; Dec. Dig. § 308.*]

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 308*)—ACTION FOR DISPOSSESSION—EVIDENCE—DEED.

Where an owner of land contracted with a tenant for a term of one year, and after the tenant took possession the owner conveyed the land to another, who, through an agent, made a new contract of rental with the tenants for the same term, on the trial of an issue arising under a statutory proceeding begun by the purchaser, after the end of the term, to dispossess the tenant, who refused to pay the rent or to surrender possession, and who in his counter affidavit denied holding under the plaintiff, the deed from the original landlord to the plaintiff was admissible in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1314-1316; Dec. Dig. § 308.*]

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 298*)—ACTION FOR DISPOSSESSION—DEFENSE.

Under the facts indicated in the preceding headnotes, it would not prevent a recovery by the plaintiff for the defendant to testify merely that he had heard that his original landlord had sold the property, that he had thereupon given the note for rental to another, and that thereafter his original landlord had told him that she had not sold the place and would not do so, whereupon he paid the rent for that year to her and agreed with her to rent from her another year and remained in possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1276-1280; Dec. Dig. § 298.*]

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§§ 216, 217*)—ACTION FOR DISPOSSESSION—RECOVERY OF RENT—DEMAND.

Under the statutory proceeding for the removal of a tenant failing or refusing to pay rent or holding over beyond his term, there cannot be a recovery of double rent except after a demand for possession.

(a) Such a proceeding is not a proper method of collecting single rent due by contract, prior to demand for possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 861-865, 866-868; Dec. Dig. §§ 216, 217.*]

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§§ 119, 216*)—"TENANT AT SUFFERANCE."

If a tenant for a year continues in possession after the expiration of his term, without any right so to do, he is a tenant at sufferance.

(a) If after the expiration of the term a demand for possession is made by the landlord and is refused, upon the trial of an issue arising in a proceeding under the statute for his summary dispossession, with a counter affidavit denying that the defendant holds under the plaintiff, the double rent recoverable for the time elapsing after the end of the term is double the value of the property for rent, not double the contract price applicable to the term.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 428-431, 861-865; Dec. Dig. §§ 119, 216.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 6905, 6906.]

6. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 231*)—ACTION FOR DISPOSSESSION—EVIDENCE OF RENTAL VALUE—SUFFICIENCY.

Where the rental to be paid by contract during the term was a specific amount of cotton, and the only evidence as to the value of the place for rent after the expiration of the term was that it was worth a stated number of pounds of cotton per annum, with no evidence as to the value in money of the cotton, a verdict finding a stated sum of money as rent for the year covered by the term, and another sum as rent for the time elapsing after the expiration of the term, was not supported by the evidence, nor were charges of the court authorizing such a finding authorized by the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 928-934; Dec. Dig. § 231.*]

Error from Superior Court, Baldwin County; Jas. B. Park, Judge.

Action by G. M. Stembridge against H. E. Stanley. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

On January 20, 1912, G. M. Stembridge made an affidavit, under the statute, alleging that H. E. Stanley was in possession as tenant of a described tract of land, the property of the affiant; that the tenant failed to pay the rent; that he rented the premises for the year 1911, the term expiring on December 31st; that the affiant had made demand for possession and it had been refused; and that he made the affidavit in order that a warrant might be issued to remove Stanley from the premises. A warrant was issued. Stanley filed a counter affidavit, alleging that he did not hold the premises either by lease, rent, or otherwise from the plaintiff. The case was returned to the superior court for trial. The evidence showed in brief as follows: Mrs. Stanley was in possession of the property and rented it for the year 1911 to Stanley for 1,000 lbs. of lint cotton. He went into possession about the 1st of January. In February Mrs. Stanley made a deed conveying the place to Stembridge, the plaintiff. J. E. Stembridge, his brother, acting as his agent, agreed to rent the property to Stanley for the year for 400 pounds of lint cotton and took a note therefor, payable to J. E. Stemberge or order. The payee entered on this a written assignment to G. M. Stemberge "for value" and delivered it to the latter. Stanley remained in possession. When the note became due, he refused to pay it or to deliver possession at the end of the year. The only defense made by him was that he testified that after he had been in possession under his contract of rental from Mrs. Stanley about a month he heard that J. E. Stemberge had bought the place. He said: "I then went to see Mr. Gene [J. E.] Stemberge and told him that I heard that he had bought the place upon which I was living, and that I would like to rent it from him. He then agreed to rent me the place for 400 pounds of cotton, and I executed and delivered to him the rent note introduced by the plaintiff. A few days after this trade with Mr. Gene Stemberge, I saw Mrs. Stanley and told her about the transaction between Mr. Stemberge and myself. Mrs. Stanley then told me that she had not sold the place and did not intend to sell it. Mrs. Stanley demanded the rent from me in the fall of 1911, and I paid her the thousand pounds that I had agreed to. I went into possession of the place on or about January 1, 1911, as tenant of Mrs. Stanley, and did not turn the possession back to her before I rented from Mr. Stemberge. I am now in possession of the land, as I rented the place again from Mrs. Stanley for the year 1912." The jury found for the plaintiff $72 as rent for 1911 and $139.92 as rent for 1912. The defendant moved for a new trial, which was refused, and he excepted.

Sibley & Sibley, of Milledgeville, for plaintiff in error. Allen & Pottle, of Milledgeville, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts as above.) G. M. Stemberge instituted a proceeding under the Civil Code of 1910, § 5386 et seq., to have Stanley removed from possession of certain premises. He alleged two grounds therefor: (1) That the defendant had rented the place for the year 1911 and failed and refused to pay the rent. (2) That the defendant held over beyond his term and refused to deliver possession. Demand for possession was alleged. The defendant filed a counter affidavit denying that he held by lease, rent, or otherwise under the plaintiff, after a verdict in favor of the plaintiff and the refusal of a new trial, the case was brought to this court.

[1] 1. In renting the place, Stanley dealt with J. E. Stemberge, a brother of the plaintiff, and gave to J. E. Stemberge a note payable to his order. The evidence showed that the land had belonged to Mrs. Stanley, who conveyed it to G. M. Stemberge, and that his brother was acting as his agent in making the contract of rental with Stanley. After taking the note in his own name, the agent assigned it to his principal. Objection was made to the admission in evidence of the note on the ground that it was not made to G. M. Stemberge as landlord, but that he appeared to be the assignee thereof, which did not authorize him to proceed to dispossess Stanley by summary proceedings under the statute. The plaintiff contended that he was the landlord and that the defendant had failed to pay the rent. The rent note was admissible to show that the rent was unpaid, and that it was held by the plaintiff and was not outstanding in the hands of another. If there were no other evidence on the subject, it might not show a right of dispossession by summary process, though it would carry the right to collect the rent. But when accompanied by evidence that the plaintiff was the grantee of the title, and that the payee of the note was merely his agent, the note and assignment were admissible.

[2] 2. While the issue in such a proceeding is not one involving the validity of the landlord's title, where it appeared that the defendant had first rented the property from another and shortly afterward had made a contract of rental with the agent of the plaintiff, it was competent to show that in the meantime the original landlord had made a deed to the plaintiff, who thereupon assumed control, and through his agent made a new contract of rental with the defendant. The deed was properly admitted in evidence.

[3] 3. It was argued that, as Stanley first went into possession as tenant of Mrs. Stanley, he was estopped from denying her title or from attorning to another. This rule is generally correct as between landlord and tenant; but here Mrs. Stanley is not asserting any right or setting up any estoppel against Stanley. He seems to be trying to set up an alleged estoppel as between him and her in order to defeat the action of another from whom he later rented and to whom he failed to pay rent. In Hodges v. Waters, 124 Ga. 229, 52 S. E. 161, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1811, 110 Am. St. Rep. 166, 4 Ann. Cas. 106, it was recognized that, where a person was in possession as tenant of one, he might nevertheless estop himself by contracting also with another claimant as his landlord, at least so far as to compel him to pay rent during the agreed term, though he might set up after its expiration that he held under the original landlord and that the person with whom he later contracted was not his landlord or entitled to the rent. See, also, in this connection, Bullard v. Hudson, 125 Ga. 893, 54 S. E. 132. But it has also been held, on a proceeding begun after the end of the term of rental, to dispossess one as a tenant holding beyond his term, or for failure to pay rent, that the latter may show that, pending the term, the landlord conveyed the property to another and thus destroyed his right to possession after the term had ended. Raines v. Hindman, 136 Ga. 450, 71 S. E. 738, 88 L. R. A. (N.

S.) 863, 24 Ann. Cas. 347; Beall v. Davenport, 48 Ga. 165, 15 Am. Rep. 656. Stanley seems to have been somewhat anxious to set up an estoppel against himself in favor of Mrs. Stanley, without showing any actual right on her part, in order to defeat the payment of rent to Mrs. Stanley's grantee, who, so far as this record shows, succeeded to her rights as landlord. Morrow v. Sawyer, 82 Ga. 226, 8 S. E. 51. A warranty deed from Mrs. Stanley to Stembridge was in evidence. There was no denial of its execution. Stanley merely swore that, after his trade with J. E. Stembridge in regard to the rental of the place, Mrs. Stanley told him that she had not sold the place and did not intend to do so. This bit of hearsay was not enough to relieve him from his obligation to pay the rent due to the grantee in the deed or surrender possession to him.

The decision in Grizzard v. Roberts, 110 Ga. 41, 35 S. E. 291, was cited as controlling the present case. There, however, on a proceeding to dispossess a tenant, he sought to set up against his landlord that there had been a conveyance of title before he rented the land, and that his landlord therefore had no title when the tenant made the contract of rental and entered into possession. There was a conflict in the evidence as to whether the landlord had ever parted with the title. The tenant was held to be estopped.

[4, 5] 4, 5. If the jury found in favor of the landlord, what was the measure of the recovery as to double rent? The rental was payable in cotton. For the year 1911 the agreed rental was 400 pounds of lint cotton, classed "good middling." The plaintiff testified that for the year 1912 he rented the place to another for 1,100 pounds of lint cotton but could not give possession because the defendant would not yield it, and that he thought the place was worth for rent 1,200 pounds of lint cotton. The presiding judge charged in effect that, if the plaintiff should recover, he could recover double the value of the agreed amount of cotton to be paid as rent for that year, and that for the part of the year 1912 which had elapsed before the trial the measure would be double the value of the place for rent for such fractional part of the year. It does not appear exactly when the demand for possession was made. It has been held that double rent only begins to run from the date of such demand, and that this form of procedure is not appropriate for the collection of single rent due under a contract. Talley v. Mitchell, 138 Ga. 392 (4), 397, 75 S. E. 405.

If the demand for possession was made after the term of rental had expired, from the date of such demand double rent could be collected. What would be its measure? On this subject it must be frankly confessed that some confusion has arisen in the decisions of this court. As early an authority as Lord Coke declared: "There is a great diversity between a tenant at will and a tenant at sufferance, for tenant at will is always by right, and tenant at sufferance entereth by a lawful lease and holdeth over by wrong. A tenant at sufferance is he that at the first came in by lawful demise and after his estate ended continueth in possession and wrongfully holdeth over." Co. Litt. 57b. Other common-law authorities have followed this definition. Thus Blackstone says that: "An estate at sufferance is where one comes into possession of land by lawful title but keeps it afterwards without any title at all. As, if a man takes a lease for a year and, after a year is expired, continues to hold the premises without any fresh leave from the owner of the estate." 2 Bl. Com. *150. In 1 Taylor's Landlord and Tenant (9th Ed.) § 64, it is said that: "A tenancy at sufferance arises when a man comes into possession lawfully but holds over wrongfully after the determination of his interest, differing in this respect from a tenancy at will, where the holding is by the landlord's permission." It is immaterial here to notice a distinction which has been made as to whether the occupant has come into the estate by act of the law or by act of another party. See, also, 1 Underhill on Landlord and Tenant, 226 (§ 162) et seq.; 1 Tiffany on Landlord and Tenant, § 15 et seq. The definition of Blackstone, quoted above, has been adopted by this court, and it has been held that after the termination of the term of a tenant, if he holds over, he becomes a tenant at sufferance, unless something is done to change that status to some other, as, for instance, to turn it into a tenancy at will or for another period or term. Godfrey v. Walker, 42 Ga. 562, 574; Smith v. Singleton, 71 Ga. 68, 70; Crawford v. Crawford, 139 Ga. 394, 398, 77 S. E. 557, and citations; Civil Code, §§ 3697, 3700. In Willis v. Harrell, 118 Ga. 906, 45 S. E. 794, it was held, in a decision concurred in by the entire bench, that: "A tenant by the month whose term ends with the calendar year is, after the expiration of his term, a tenant at sufferance and continues as such until there has been some affirmative action by the landlord which has the effect of converting the tenancy into some other form."

What action will change a tenancy at sufferance into a tenancy at will, or whether under some circumstances nonaction might suffice, is not now before us. The expression sometimes used that a tenant at sufferance is in possession as a result of the laches or neglect of the landlord can properly mean no more than that, at the end of the tenant's rightful holding, the landlord has an immediate right to possession. If he obtains possession at once, there is of course no holding over or tenancy at sufferance. If he does not do so at once but allows some interval, though short, to elapse between the end of the term and taking steps to acquire possession sion, and the tenant continues to hold without right, this constitutes a tenancy at sufferance. We do not mean to say that the relation of landlord and tenant must have previously existed by contract in order that a tenancy at sufferance may arise; but we are now dealing with a case of that character.

Some statutes and some decisions have employed the expression "at (or by) sufferance" loosely, without an apparent appreciation of its legal significance, and sometimes as if it meant by permission. Where a statute has made use of the expression in an inexact sense, it is not surprising that the courts of the jurisdiction have at times fallen into a like careless or inapt method when dealing with such a statute. This class of statutes and decisions is illustrated by the law enacted in California and the decision in Moore v. Morrow, 28 Cal. 551. Moreover, an expression of Lord Coke to the effect that there could be no tenancy at sufferance against the King, but he that holdeth over in such a case is an intruder, as there is no laches to be imputed to the King, has apparently misled some judges.

If courts held that to create a tenancy at will there must be some laches or negligence of the landlord in a sense different from that mentioned above, they must inevitably fall into confusion. What sort of laches or negligence is requisite, and for what time, before a tenancy at sufferance commences? And, from the end of the tenant's term until this laches has ripened, what is the relation between the parties? It is not one of tenancy by contract, for the contract term has ended. It is not a tenancy at will, for that involves rightful possession, until the tenancy is terminated. It cannot be dealt with as a trespass, at least until after re-entry. The tenant has not the right to retain possession after the end of his term. Upon such termination, if he remains in possession without more, what is his status, if not that of a tenant at sufferance? The truth is that statutes and decisions which use the words "at sufferance" as if they involved some permission or recognition of a continued tenancy lose sight of the fundamental distinction between a tenancy at will and a tenancy at sufferance, namely, that in one the possession is rightful, in the other wrongful. Our own statute does not define a tenancy at sufferance or require any notice to make it a wrongful possession. It recognizes the distinction between such a tenancy and one at will and leaves the common-law definition of a tenancy at sufferance to stand.

In Purtell v. Farris, 137 Ga. 318, 73 S. E. 634, this court fell into the inadvertence of declaring that upon the termination of a tenant's term, if he failed or refused to deliver possession on demand, where there had been no laches by the landlord in making the demand, the tenant did not, by reason of his occupancy, become a tenant at sufferance. From what has been said above it will appear that this was contrary to the weight of authority and to previous decisions of this court and must yield to them. In the opinion in the Purtell Case it was said that in Willis v. Harrell, supra, there had been a delay of some years in instituting a proceeding to oust the tenant. In Willis Case, however, it was not held that this delay was necessary to create a tenancy at sufferance, but that such a relation arose after the expiration of the tenant's contractual term, and that the delay had not changed it, in the absence of anything further. It would be anomalous to hold that a landlord would be entitled to a summary remedy against a tenant wrongfully holding over, provided the landlord himself had been guilty of laches, but that he would be denied the remedy if he were diligent in seeking it.

In Talley v. Mitchell, supra, by the contract, as it appears in the record, the term of the tenancy was three years, expiring April 30, 1911. In 1909 the tenant refused to pay the agreed rent or to resign possession, claiming a reduction on account of a partial destruction of the premises by fire. The trial began on May 1, 1911, and ended the next day. It was held that the landlord was entitled, under the statute, to recover double the contract rate from the time of the demand for possession until the trial. It was not a case of holding after the expiration of the contractual term. Where the double rent recoverable is within the term, it is measured by double the contract rental. If it is wholly after the expiration of the term and based on the existence of a tenancy at sufferance, double the rental value is recoverable.

[8] 6. The evidence as to the value of the place for rent was stated in pounds of lint cotton. The court in his charge stated what was contended by the plaintiff as to its value in money. But there is not a word of evidence in the record on this subject. The jury found an amount in money. How they arrived at the amount, or on what the judge based his charge on that subject, is not apparent.

From what has been said it appears that a new trial must be granted. In some respects the charge of the court did not accord with the foregoing discussion. It would not be beneficial to take up separately each ground of the motion for a new trial. Except as indicated, the criticisms upon the charge and the objection to evidence were without merit.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

GREER et al. v. POPE et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 73*)—CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE.

Courts of equity (or, in this state, a court exercising equitable jurisdiction) will not generally undertake to enforce the specific performance of a contract for personal services which are material or mechanical in character.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 206-208; Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 73*)—CONTRACT ENFORCEABLE.

Courts of equity will not decree specific performance of contracts for personal services involving the exercise of skill, judgment, and discretion, continuous in their character, and running through a period of 99 years, thus requiring the protracted supervision of the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 206-208; Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

3. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 16*)—LEASES—OPERATION AND EFFECT.

Where the owners of a telephone exchange and certain lines of poles and wires sold or leased for a term of 99 years a particular line, with ten telephones, and the wires, poles, etc., connected therewith, and agreed that for the period mentioned the parties to whom the agreement was made and their heirs and assigns should be accorded without fee or charge, full connection with the exchange, and upon all lines in the county then owned and operated by the parties making the covenant, and this privilege and right was declared to be binding upon the assigns and heirs of such covenantors, so that it should be operative against all purchasers holding under them, such agreement was not one in the nature of an easement, or one running with land, and did not bind a company which purchased the exchange and its connecting lines and property appurtenant thereto from a corporation to which they had been transferred by the covenantors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 10; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

4. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 16*)—LEASE—ACTION ON COVENANT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

As to the corporation which was alleged to have been formed by the covenantors, and in which they "incorporated their telephone interests," there was sufficient evidence to submit to the jury the question of whether such corporation assumed or became bound by the covenant, and liable in damages for its breach.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 10; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

5. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 123*)—QUESTION FOR JURY—BREACH OF COVENANT—DAMAGES.

There being evidence to show that the covenantors conveyed the telephone exchange and property connected therewith and placed it beyond their power to carry out the covenant above recited, and that those holding by purchase under them refused to do so, there was enough to submit the case to the jury for the purpose of determining whether the covenantors were liable in damages in lieu of specific performance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 397-399; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

Error from Superior Court, Jasper County; Jas. B. Park, Judge.

Action by R. J. J. Greer and others against C. H. Pope and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part.

Greer and others filed their petition against C. H. Pope and C. H. Ballard, Jr., the Monticello Telephone Company, and the Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company. It was alleged that on April 4, 1906, Pope and Ballard entered into a contract with Greer and others, by which, in consideration of $275, the former transferred and conveyed to the latter, their heirs and assigns, a certain telephone line known as the "Winfred Line," extending from Monticello to Pittman's Ferry, together with ten telephones, wires, poles, franchises, permits, etc., "to have and to hold the same for and during the period of 99 years from the date of this indenture." The contract contained the following covenant: "It is further agreed that for the period aforesaid parties of the second part, their heirs and assigns, shall have and be accorded, without fee or charge, full connection with the Monticello Exchange, and upon all lines of the county of Jasper now owned and operated by the said C. H. Ballard, Jr., and C. H. Pope; and this privilege and right is hereby declared as binding upon the assigns and heirs of the parties of the first part, so that the same shall be operated against all persons holding under them; and the parties of the first part, their heirs and assigns, shall have the same privileges and rights for the same period upon the line hereby conveyed and transferred, which shall also be binding upon all persons holding under said parties of the second part." There were other terms which it is unnecessary to state. The plaintiffs, some of whom were the original purchasers, and some of whom claimed under original purchasers, sought to obtain specific performance, or in the alternative to recover damages from the defendants for an alleged breach of the contract. It was alleged that Pope and Ballard "incorporated their telephone interests" into the Monticello Telephone Company, and that subsequently that company sold and transferred its property to the Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company, which took with notice of the contract between Pope and Ballard and the plaintiffs or their predecessors. The other material facts are stated in the opinion.

On the trial, at the close of the plaintiffs' evidence, the court granted a nonsuit, and the plaintiffs excepted.

W. S. Florence, of Monticello, for plaintiffs in error. Greene F. Johnson and A. S. Thurman, both of Monticello, for defendants in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1, 2] 1, 2. The rule that specific performance of a contract (if within the power of a party) will be generally decreed, whenever the damages recoverable at law will not be an adequate compensation for the nonperformance (Civil Code 1910, § 4633), is a statement of a general rule, but is not absolute and without exception. The codification of the general rule does not change this fact. Indeed, the expression that under such circumstances specific performance will "be decreed, generally," recognizes the existence of circumstances under which it will not be decreed. In 6 Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence (3d Ed.) § 757, is quoted a rule established by courts as to certain cases in which specific performance will not be decreed, as follows: "Although the contract is valid, and the defendant is able to do what he has undertaken to do, if, through the want of appropriate means and instrumentalities, the court is unable, while pursuing its ordinary modes of administering justice, either to render a decree or to enforce the decree when made, then the remedy will be refused." Among the illustrations given by the author of the second class of cases mentioned are contracts for personal services, and those the performance of which would be continuous, and would require protracted supervision and direction. Sections 759, 760.

In Roquemore & Hall v. Mitchell, 187 Ala. 475, 52 South. 423, 140 Am. St. Rep. 52, Mayfield, J., states the rule thus: "Courts of equity will not undertake to enforce the specific performance of a contract for personal services which are material or mechanical, and not peculiar or individual; but where the contract stipulates for special, unique, or extraordinary services, or where the services to be rendered are purely intellectual and individual in their character, the courts will grant an injunction in aid of specific performance. * * * Courts of equity will decline jurisdiction to decree specific performance of contracts for personal services involving the exercise of special skill, judgment, and discretion, continuous in their nature, and running through an indefinite period of time." We will not enter into a discussion of the various contracts which have been held to be or not to be appropriate subjects for specific performance, or the modern exception which has been made in regard to railroad operating contracts, or the granting of an injunction to restrain the breach of negative provisions in a contract, or the like. The present case does not involve any of such matters. In regard to the general rule and the exceptions, see Standard Fashion Co. v. Slegel-Cooper Co., 157 N. Y. 60, 51 N. E. 408, 43 L. R. A. 854, 68 Am. St. Rep. 749, 753, and the full note thereto; Electric Lighting Co. v. Mobile, etc., Ry. Co., 109 Ala. 190, 19 South. 721, 55 Am. St. Rep. 927, and note; Roquemore & Hall v. Mitchell, supra; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Pennsylvania

Co., 129 Fed. 849, 64 C. C. A. 285, 68 L. R. A. 968; Philadelphia Ball Club v. Lajoie, 202 Pa. 210, 51 Atl. 973, 58 L. R. A. 227, 90 Am. St. Rep. 627; Pomeroy on Contracts, § 303 et seq.

The general equitable rules on this subject have been recognized by this court. Atlanta & West Point R. Co. v. Speer, 32 Ga. 550, 79 Am. Dec. 305; Willingham v. Hooven, 74 Ga. 233, 58 Am. Rep. 435; Civil Code 1910, § 5496. Such cases differ widely from those in which a decree is granted to compel specific performance of a contract to convey property, which can be carried out by one decree, and requires no extended supervision by the court, and no compulsory performance of personal services.

Tested by these rules, the remedy by specific performance could not be granted to the plaintiff, for at least two reasons: (1) Because the remedy could not be given by one decree, but would require supervision over the conduct of the defendants during the whole continuance of the lease or grant, which was for 99 years. The provision in the contract that certain parties (including some of the plaintiffs and certain persons under whom other plaintiffs claimed) should "have and be accorded, without fee or charge, full connection with the Monticello exchange, and all lines of the county of Jasper now owned and operated by the said C. H. Ballard, Jr., and C. H. Pope," evidently does not mean to grant a mere right to physically connect wires with poles, but contemplates that the parties granting such privilege will, through themselves or their employes, and by means of appropriate electrical appliances, make connections when required for the use of the telephones of the other contracting parties. It was not the grant of an easement, and cases in which injunctions have been issued to restrain the destruction of an easement, or of a right in the nature of an easement, have no application. The contract contemplated the rendition of services. It was to continue for 99 years. To hold that a court of equity would decree specific performance, and would continue to supervise the rendition of the services for the remainder of the term mentioned, and from time to time determine whether parties complaining were the parties entitled to the services under the contract, whether such services had been accorded without fee or charge, and whether, if connection was made, it was "full connection" with the exchange and upon all the lines owned by the parties named, would impose upon a court undertaking to administer equitable relief an impossible and intolerable burden.

Hitherto the case of Jarndyce v. Jarndyce, as reported by Dickens in Bleak House, has been considered as the typical illustration of the protracted exercise of jurisdiction over a case by a court of chancery. But if the superior court, in the exercise of its equitable power, should undertake to decree the specific performance, for nearly a century, of the contract under consideration, and to supervise its proper execution during that time, the celebrated case mentioned would cease to occupy its bad pre-eminence.

(2) The contract provides for the performance of certain personal services which are material, and mechanical, and not peculiar or individual in character, and it is sought to compel specific performance of such services.

[3] 3. This was not the sale of property with an easement appurtenant or in gross. The agreement on the part of Ballard and Pope was that the other parties to the contract, their heirs and assigns, should have and be accorded, without fee or charge, full connection with the exchange mentioned and with other telephone lines owned and operated by them. As above indicated, this did not mean a mere physical connection, but contemplated the rendition of services and the use of electrical appliances customary for making what is known as a telephone connection. This was a personal covenant, and not a covenant running with the physical property, or following its ownership into the hands of others, even though the purchasers may have taken with notice of the contract. The Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company purchased the exchange and other property from the Monticello Telephone Company. It does not appear that there was any merger of the companies. The evidence does not show that the purchasing company became obligated to the plaintiffs to perform the contract, though there was some evidence to the effect that for two months after the sale to that company it continued to do so, and that it had notice of the contract when it purchased. Unless the Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company assumed to carry out the contract, or became legally bound to do so, it would not be liable. The mere agreement of Pope and Ballard that their personal covenant for services should be binding upon their heirs and assigns would not alone bind a purchaser from them, unless such purchaser bound itself. The Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company neither having been a party to the original agreement nor having become bound thereby, a nonsuit was properly granted as to it. Wallace v. Ann Arbor, etc., Ry. Co., 121 Mich. 588, 80 N. W. 572.

[4] 4. As to the Monticello Telephone Company the evidence is very meager. It was alleged by the plaintiffs that, after Pope and Ballard had made the contract with the plaintiffs, or those under whom they claimed, they "incorporated their telephone interests in the county of Jasper, and, after incorporating said interests as aforesaid, accepted and transacted business according to the stipulations of said deed chargeable to said C. H. Pope, and C. H. Ballard, Jr., on the reservations in said deed to petitioners or their assigns." This allegation is admitted in the answer of the defendants. The charter of the company was not introduced in evidence, nor was the contract by which the corporation took over from Pope and Ballard "their telephone interests" shown. There was evidence to the effect that this company continued to perform the stipulations of the original contract until the sale to the Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company, about September 2, 1909. While it is not very clear whether Pope and Ballard sold their property to the new company, or what were the terms of the contract by which the latter took possession, we think there was enough to authorize the jury to infer that the company assumed the obligations of Pope and Ballard to the plaintiff, and there is no evidence to negative this possible inference. Wallace v. Ann Arbor, etc., Ry. Co., supra.

[5] 5. The evidence tended to show that Pope and Ballard had agreed that the parties with whom they contracted, and their heirs and assigns, should have and be accorded, free of charge, full connection with the exchange and certain other lines; that the plaintiffs had not been accorded such connection; and that Pope and Ballard and the company which they organized had put it beyond their power to furnish such services by selling their property to the Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company. Damages were prayed in case for any reason specific performance could not be granted. We think there was enough in the evidence to require a submission of the case to the jury in so far as it sought to recover damages against Pope and Ballard and the Monticello Telephone Company. Civil Code 1910, § 4630. It was contended that the allegata and probata did not agree, and that the evidence showed a substantial compliance with the contract. We think there was enough for the jury to pass upon as to whether there was a breach of contract, with damages arising therefrom. It does not follow, in this equitable proceeding, that, if all of the plaintiffs may not show the same damage, there can be no recovery, if there has been a breach of the contract. By reason of the court's announcement that it was useless to go further in the introduction of evidence, the plaintiffs' counsel did not fully develop his case as to damages.

In accordance with what is said above, the judgment granting a nonsuit is affirmed so far as the Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company is concerned, and is reversed as to Pope and Ballard and the Monticello Telephone Company in so far as it is sought to recover damages from them for a breach of the contract.

Judgment affirmed in part and reversed in part. All the Justices concur.

NEAL et al. v. NEAL et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)PARTITION (§ 114*)—ATTORNEY'S FEES—ALLOWANCE—EXPENSES.

Where certain tenants in common file a petition for partition against their cotenants, who do not desire partition, but make no resistance, and the property, being incapable of division by metes and bounds, is sold under order of court, and the proceeds are brought into court for distribution, the applicants for partition are not entitled, in the absence of a statutory provision to that effect, to have fees awarded to their attorneys from the fund, thus requiring their cotenants to contribute to the payment of such fees.

(a) Civil Code 1910, §§ 5365, 5366, which provide that, if land is incapable of division by metes and bounds, it shall be sold by commissioners, under order of the court, and the proceeds shall be divided, "after deducting the expenses of the proceeding," do not authorize the award from the fund of fees for the attorneys representing the applicants for partition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partition, Cent. Dig. §§ 440-449; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2590-2593; vol. 8, p. 7657.]

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; John W. Maddox, Judge.

Application for partition by John M. Neal and others against James Neal and others. From a judgment denying the application, plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Copeland, Hamilton & Hutchens, of Rome, for plaintiffs in error. Denny & Wright, of Rome, for defendants in error.

LUMPKIN, J. Certain tenants in common filed a petition for partition against their cotenants. The latter were opposed to a partition, and employed counsel to resist it if possible. No objections were filed, because the counsel employed concluded that there was no legal ground for so doing. The land was sold, and the proceeds amounting to $9,100 were brought into court for distribution. The applicants for partition filed a petition to have fees awarded from the fund to the attorneys who represented them, alleging that such attorneys directed the proceedings, including the advertisement, report of the commissioners, and other work necessary to make the action legal. The matter was submitted to the presiding judge without a jury. He denied the application, and the applicants excepted. It has been said: "In the United States, attorney's fees are not ordinarily recoverable as costs. Therefore in suits for partition they cannot be recovered unless their recovery is specially and clearly authorized. General expressions in statutes authorizing the allowance of costs, or of costs and expenses, are not sufficient to support an allowance to any of the parties on account of necessary disbursements to obtain the services of attorneys." 30 Cyc. 298 (7); Jordan v. Farrow, 130 Ala. 428, 30 South.

338; Hutts v. Martin, 124 Ind. 587, 33 N. E. 676; Coles v. Coles, 13 N. J. Eq. 365; Butler v. Butler, 73 S. C. 402, 53 S. E. 646; Legg v. Legg, 34 Wash. 132, 75 Pac. 130; Lang v. Constance, 46 S. W. 693, 20 Ky. Law Rep. 502. There are authorities to the contrary; but we think these contain the sounder ruling. The statute of this state makes no provision in terms for the payment of fees of counsel in such cases. It declares that, if division of lands by metes and bounds cannot be made, the court shall order a sale by three commissioners. After the sale the commissioners are required to make a return, and the court shall order the proceeds to be divided, "after deducting the expenses of the proceedings." In several of the cases above cited, there were statutes providing for the payment of expenses; but this was held not to include attorney's fees. That the words "costs and expenses" do not necessarily include attorney's fees will be seen from the decision in Ball v. Vason, 56 Ga. 264, where that expression, used in a direction given by this court to a trial court in regard to distributing a fund, was held not to do so. The analogy sought to be drawn between this case and those in which diligent creditors, by equitable proceedings against a debtor bring a fund into court, in which others seek to share, is not sound. The allowance of fees provided by the statute (Civil Code 1910, § 5290) in cases where a fund is raised by process of garnishment rests on the same basis of reason as the equitable cases last mentioned, as will appear from the language of the code section cited, that the fund shall be paid over to creditors of the defendant according to priorities; "the expenses of the moving creditor being first paid pro rata by the judgment creditors receiving the benefit of his diligence." To require tenants in common who do not wish a partition to pay a part of the attorney's fees of those who do so desire is quite another proposition.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

BELL v. VERDEL

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. PROCESS (§ 67*)—ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF SERVICE—EFFECT.

On September 25, 1884, D. B. Verdel filed suit in the superior court on a promissory note against J. B. Bell, returnable to the March term, 1885. No service of the petition and process was made on the defendant, but three days after the adjournment of the March term the defendant signed the following: "Due and legal service of the within writ acknowledged. Copy, copy process, and all other further notice waived." At the next September term (no defense having been filed) judgment was rendered for plaintiff by default. Execution was issued on October 13, 1885, and thereafter in 1890, 1896, and 1901, the sheriff entered returns of nulla bona on the execution. In 1911 the administrator of Verdel, with the will annexed, filed suit in the superior court to revise the judgment, alleged to have become dormant. The defendant having died, his administrator instituted separate suit to enjoin the scire facias proceeding, on the ground that the judgment was void ab initio, because it was rendered at the appearance term of the court, and the defendant was not afforded his day in court, and, if revived, the judgment would operate as a cloud on title. No demurrer was filed, but the answer set up that the plaintiff had a complete remedy at law. The hearing was had on the petition and answer, and certain evidence, whereby the case was presented as stated above. The judge dissolved the restraining order previously granted, and refused an ad interim injunction. The exception is to this judgment. Held, the acknowledgment of service by the defendant entered after the appearance term is not to be construed as an acknowledgment that the petition and process had been legally served on the defendant the requisite time before the appearance term.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Process, Cent. Dig. §§ 54, 161; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 17*)—RENDITION—VALIDITY.

The judgment rendered at the next ensuing term after the acknowledgment was void. Harris v. Davis Wagon Co., 140 Ga. 127, 78 S. E. 713.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 25-33, 157, 422; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

3. JUDGMENT (§ 861*)—REVIVAL.

Being void, the judgment will not be revived under Civil Code 1910, § 5973 et seq.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1593; Dec. Dig. § 861.*]

4. INJUNCTION (§ 27*)—REVIVAL OF VOID JUDGMENT—DEFENSES.

Invalidity of the judgment could be set up by way of defense in the scire facias proceeding to revive the judgment (Thomas v. Towns, 68 Ga. 78), and there was no error in refusing the injunction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 50, 51, 53; Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

Error from Superior Court, Elbert County; D. W. Meadow, Judge.

Action by O. F. Bell, administrator, against T. H. Verdel, administrator. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Geo. C. Grogan, of Elberton, for plaintiff in error. Worley & Nall, of Elberton, for defendant in error.

ATKINSON, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

WILLIAMS v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. NUISANCE (§ 3*)—DEFINITION.

A nuisance is anything which worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage to another.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Nuisance, Cent. Dig. §§ 4, 5, 9-25; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4855-4864; vol. 8, p. 7734.]

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 126*) — SURFACE WATER—OBSTRUCTION—NUISANCE.

The petition in this case, properly construed, is an action for the recovery of damages resulting from the maintenance of a continuing nuisance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 139, 141, 142; Dec. Dig. § 126.*]

3. NUISANCE (§§ 10, 11, 42, 54*)—WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 126*)—ACTION FOR DAMAGES—INSTRUCTIONS—DAMAGES RECOVERABLE—NOTICE PRELIMINARY TO SUIT—PRESCRIPTION.

In such a case prescription does not run in favor of its maintenance, though damages for the maintenance cannot be recovered further back than four years from the bringing of the suit.

(a) It is error for the trial judge to charge the law applicable to an action for damages arising from the creation of a nuisance, where it appears that the action brought is one for the recovery of damages arising from a continuing nuisance, alleged to be maintained by the alienee of the one creating the nuisance.

(b) In the trial of an action to recover damages to land resulting from the maintenance of a continuing nuisance by the alienee of a railroad company, it was error for the court to instruct the jury that "if there has been any great overflow within the last four years prior to the bringing of this suit, and the plaintiff has been injured and damaged in consequence of increased overflow or diversion of the water, and this was done by any act of the railroad company, then the company would be liable for whatever damages he has sustained in consequence thereof." This charge restricted the finding of damages solely to those elements resulting from an increased overflow of water within a period of four years prior to the filing of the suit.

(c) In such a case the jury are not restricted to finding damages accruing on account of the "increased overflow" within four years from the bringing of the suit, but they may, if the evidence authorizes it, find whatever damages the plaintiff has sustained from the maintenance of the nuisance within the four-year period, whether it be from "increased overflow" or otherwise.

(d) If the action be against the alienee of the person creating the nuisance, it can only be maintained against such person after giving notice to abate the nuisance, and is for damages resulting from its maintenance, and not for its creation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Nuisance, Cent. Dig. §§ 41, 42, 101-103, 130; Dec. Dig. §§ 10, 11, 42, 54.* Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 139, 141, 142; Dec. Dig. § 126.*]

Error from Superior Court, Whitfield County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Action by W. L. Williams against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

W. E. Mann and W. C. Martin, both of Dalton, for plaintiff in error. Maddox, McCamy & Shumate, of Dalton, for defendant in error.

HILL, J. Williams brought suit against the Southern Railway Company, to recover damages to certain described farm lands belonging to the plaintiff, and alleged to have been caused by the embankments of the railway company ponding the water on the land and causing the soil and sediment to accumulate in the ponds, and the resulting expanse of water to seep into the adjoining land of the plaintiff, so as to damage and render it unfit for cultivation. The evidence tended to show that the embankment and culvert had been constructed, by the predecessor in title of the defendant, about 25 years previous to the filing of the suit, and that the defendant had maintained the embankment and culvert in practically the same condition they were in when constructed. The defendant in its answer averred, among other things, that it had the right by prescription to maintain its embankment and culvert as it now exists, with the consequent ponding of the water and the seepage caused thereby. The plaintiff's insistence was that the culvert and embankments had been constructed by the defendant's predecessor in title in such a way as not to drain, but to cause the water to pond and overflow the plaintiff's land, that the gradual filling in of the ponds by the soil and sediment caused the ponds to increase in size, and to damage a larger area of lands from year to year, and that the nuisance thus created by the defendant's predecessor in title was maintained by the defendant after it had become the owner of the railroad, and was in possession of it, and after being notified by the plaintiff to abate the nuisance. After the evidence was submitted to the jury, and the court had instructed them, a verdict was rendered for the defendant. A motion for a new trial was overruled, and the plaintiff excepted. In addition to the usual grounds of the motion for a new trial, the only assignments of error are as to the charge of the court. We will not consider each assignment separately, as, in the view we take of this case, the charge was not applicable to the case as made by the record. This suit was not brought to recover damages as in cases where a railroad company is liable on account of some affirmative or overt act of its own, but for maintaining a nuisance already created by its predecessor in title, to the damage and injury of the plaintiff. It is a suit for maintaining a nuisance after notice given to abate it, and to recover damages caused by reason of maintaining it.

[1] Our Civil Code, § 4458, declares that: "The alienee of a person owning the property injured may sue for a continuance of the nuisance; so the alienee of the property causing the nuisance is responsible for a continuance of the same. In the latter case there must be a request to abate, before action brought." A nuisance is anything that worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage to another. Civil Code, § 4457.

[3] One who creates a nuisance to the hurt, inconvenience, or damage of another is liable in damages therefor, or his alienee on notice to abate the nuisance, and, upon his failure to do so, is liable to one who suffers damages caused by the maintenance of the nuisance. The building of a railroad embankment which has the effect of causing water to pond on one's land and to seep into his adjoining land, so that the owner cannot cultivate or use it, is a nuisance, and the alienee of the person creating it, who after notice to abate fails to do so, is liable in damages to the person injured, and against the maintenance of such nuisance the statute of limitations does not run so as to bar a suit for its continuance or maintenance, if the suit is brought within four years. The court charged the jury that: "If there has been any greater overflow within the last four years prior to the bringing of this suit, and the plaintiff has been injured and damaged in consequence of increased overflow or diversion of the water, and this was done by any act of the railroad company, then the company would be liable for whatever damages he has sustained in consequence thereof." This charge restricted the jury to the finding of damages, if any, occurring within four years from the date of bringing the suit, and caused only from "increased overflow" or diversion of the water. The evidence for the plaintiff tended to show that the building of the embankment had occurred more than 20 years prior to the bringing of the suit to recover damages, and that practically no change had occurred in the condition of the embankment, culvert, and the quantity of water in the ponds within the four years from the time of bringing the suit. Under the charge objected to, there could be no recovery, although the evidence tended to show that the maintenance of the nuisance caused damage other than by "increased overflow" of water within the four years prior to the bringing of the action. The charge restricted the jury to a finding, if the evidence authorized it, of the damages accruing, if any, only for the "increased overflow" within the four-year period. Any damage caused by the maintenance of the nuisance within the four years was recoverable.

[2] We think that the petition in this case, properly construed, was an action for damages alleged to have accrued on account of the maintenance of a continuing nuisance, and not an action for damages arising from the creation of a nuisance. If the nuisance be continuing in character, and could and should be abated, a suit may be brought to recover damages for its maintenance. Bonner v. Welborn, 7 Ga. 296; Phinizy v. Augusta, 47 Ga. 266; Gabbett v. Atlanta, 137 Ga. 180, 73 S. E. 372; Nalley v. Carroll County, 135 Ga. 835, 70 S. E. 788. See Ga. Ry., etc., Co. v. Tompkins, 138 Ga. 596, 75 S. E. 664; Central Ry. Co. v. English, 73 Ga. 366 (2). In Joyce on the Law of Nuisances, § 57, p. 95, it is said: "And where, in the case of an alleged nuisance by a railroad by the maintenance of a culvert, the acts complained of, from which the nuisance resulted, were not a complete and permanent injury at the time the railway and culvert were erected, but became so by reason of the occurrence of future events, it was decided that, the nuisance being a constantly increasing one, the remedy of the party injured was not lost by prescription." A person never can, by prescription or otherwise, acquire a right to maintain a nuisance. Bonner v. Welborn, 7 Ga. 296; City Council of Augusta v. Lombard, 101 Ga. 728, 28 S. E. 994.

Having held that the action in this case is one to recover damages for maintaining a continuing nuisance, and not one for creating a nuisance, and no question of easement being involved, the charge of the court was inapplicable under the pleadings and evidence, and it was error to instruct the jury as set out in the foregoing excerpt from the charge. On another hearing the charge of the court can be adapted to the rulings here made.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

HALL v. EDWARDS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 10*)—MUTUALITY—CONSIDERATION.

An oral agreement between A. and B. to purchase a tract of land, whereby A. is to pay for the land from the proceeds of a loan to be secured by him upon the joint security of a tract of land owned by him and the purchased tract, and take title to the purchased tract in his own name, and convey to B. a half interest when he is reimbursed for the purchase money from the rents, issues, and profits of the purchased tract, is deficient in mutuality and a nude pact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 19-22; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 44*)—CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE—REALTY.

If mutuality of contract and a consideration be supplied by a subsequent partial payment by B. to A., the former, never having been in possession of the land, is not entitled to specific performance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. § 126; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

3. TRUSTS (§ 77*)—RESULTING TRUST—CREATION.

A resulting trust, which arises solely from the payment of the purchase price, is not created, unless the purchase money is paid either before or at the time of the purchase.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 109; Dec. Dig. § 77.*]

Error from Superior Court, Warren County; B. F. Walker, Judge.

Action by W. W. Edwards against S. M. Hall. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

John T. West, of Thomson, and E. P. Davis, of Warrenton, for plaintiff in error. Hawes Cloud, of Crawfordville, P. B. Johnson, of Thomson, and M. L. Felts, of Warrenton, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. Plaintiff and defendant orally agreed to buy a tract of land. Both being without funds it was further agreed that the defendant was to take title to the land in his own name, and, upon the security of the land purchased and another tract of land, which belonged individually to the defendant, to borrow a sufficient sum to pay the purchase price. The plaintiff was to move his sawmill on the land and manufacture lumber from the timber thereon for an agreed compensation, the net proceeds of which lumber was to be applied on the purchase price of the land; and the defendant was to look after the farm on the land, and, after deducting the expenses, the net proceeds of the farm was also to be applied to the purchase price. It was agreed that, when the rents, issues, and profits amounted to the purchase price, the land was to be divided between the parties, and the defendant was to make to the plaintiff a deed to a half interest. In pursuance of the agreement the defendant took the title to the land in his own name, and paid the entire purchase money from the proceeds of a loan procured by him on the joint security of this tract and another tract owned by him. After the deed was made to the defendant the plaintiff moved his sawmill on the land and sawed 167,000 feet of lumber, which was turned over to the defendant to be used in payment of the sum borrowed, except about one-fourth of the same, which was consumed in the expenses of operating the sawmill. The plaintiff also did certain repairing and building at a total cost of $75, and paid to the defendant the sum of $21.89 in cotton seed and $5 in cash. About nine years after the original transaction the plaintiff filed a petition against the defendant, alleging the foregoing facts, and that the rents, issues, and profits of the land had been sufficient to reimburse the defendant for the purchase money, and praying an accounting from the defendant for all rents, issues, and profits of the land which may have come into his hands, for partition, and for other relief. The court overruled a demurrer to the petition, and the defendant excepted.

[1] The contract between the plaintiff and the defendant was a nudum pactum. It amounted to no more than that the defendant was to secure the money from the hypothecation of his own land, together with the tract to be purchased, and, after the rents, issues, and profits amounted to the purchase money, that the defendant was to make the plaintiff a deed to a half interest. The defendant did not advance any part of the purchase money. He was to be compensated for manufacturing the timber into lumber, the proceeds of which were to be applied to the purchase price of the land. He furnished absolutely no part of the consideration. Such a contract is deficient in mutuality, and is a nude pact. Beall v. Clark, 71 Ga. 818. The plaintiff's case is no better than if he had alleged that the defendant promised to convey to him a half interest in a certain plantation belonging to the latter as soon as the rents, issues, and profits thereof should amount to a sum agreed to be the value of the plantation. A promise like this is a pure gratuity.

[2] If it be considered that mutuality and a consideration were supplied by the subsequent payments, then the contract will not be decreed to be specifically performed, because it rests in parol. The statute declares that specific performance of a parol contract as to land will not be decreed on account of partial payments, unless such partial payment is accompanied with possession of the land by the party making it, or there be possession of the land with valuable improvements. Civil Code 1910, § 4634. The plaintiff does not contend that he is in possession of the land.

[3] It is contended, however, inasmuch as the plaintiff paid to the defendant certain sums of money and did certain work upon the land after the title became vested in the defendant, under an agreement that the balance of the purchase money was to be received from the rents, issues, and profits, that upon an accumulation of an amount sufficient to reimburse the defendant a resulting trust arose. We do not think so. The Code declares that whenever the legal title is in one person, but the beneficial interest, either from the payment of the purchase money or other circumstances, is either wholly or partly in another, a trust will be implied. Civil Code 1910, § 3739. A resulting trust which arises solely from the payment of the purchase price is not created, unless the purchase money is paid either before or at the time of the purchase. Trusts implied from the payment of the purchase money or a part thereof must result, if at all, at the time of the execution of the conveyance. Long v. King, 117 Ala. 423, 23 South. 534; Butterfield v. Butterfield, 79 Ark. 164, 95 S. W. 146, 9 Ann. Cas. 248; Keith v. Miller, 174 Ill. 64, 51 N. E. 151; Harris v. Elliott, 45 W. Va. 245, 32 S. E. 176.

The invalidity of the contract and the insufficiency of the petition were set up by demurrer, and the court erred in refusing to dismiss the petition.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

CALDWELL v. CALDWELL.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

DEEDS (§ 36*)—ESSENTIALS—EXPRESSED INTENTION—PRESENT ESTATE.

To constitute a conveyance of land there must be sufficient words showing an intention to grant a present estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 55, 56; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; Jno. W. Maddox, Judge.

Action by N. M. Caldwell, as administrator, etc., against Mrs. Nanny Caldwell. Judgment for defendant on a directed verdict, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

M. B. Eubanks, of Rome, for plaintiff in error. J. M. Hunt and Barry Wright, both of Rome, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. The action was complaint for land by N. M. Caldwell, as administrator of J. W. Caldwell, against Mrs. Nanny Caldwell. It appears from the record that the locus in quo belonged to John W. Caldwell, and the plaintiff, as his administrator, was entitled to recover it, unless his intestate had conveyed it to the defendant. The paper relied upon as a conveyance of the property is as follows: "State of Georgia, Floyd County. This indenture, made this 16th day of August 1904, between J. W. Caldwell, of the one part, and Mrs. Nannie E. Caldwell, his wife, of the other part, for the consideration of love and affection [af] does will all the tract or parcel of land as follows: Twenty acres of land in the southwest corner of lot No. 52 in 22d. and third district of Georgia. I will that Mrs. Nannie E. Caldwell hold the pond and ginnery on said lot of land. Also twenty acres off of lot 21 in the southeast corner of said lot. I will the line of Mrs. Nannie E. Caldwell go to the railroad. In testimony whereof the said party of the first part has hereunto set his hand and seal the day and year above written. [Signed] John W. Caldwell. Witnesses: B. C. Hucks. S. G. N. Cates, J. P." The court was of the opinion that such paper was an effective conveyance of the land therein described, which embraced the locus in quo, and directed a verdict for the defendant. Exception is taken by the administrator, on the ground that the paper under which the defendant claims title is not a deed, and is ineffective as a conveyance of title to the premises in dispute.

It may be that the maker intended to execute a deed of the land to his wife, but he signally failed in selecting apt words of conveyance. The office of a deed is to convey title in present, and this cannot be accomplished without the use of language indicating an intention to transfer title. The provision of Civil Code, § 4182, that no prescribed form is essential to the validity of a deed, does not dispense with the necessity of using language indicating an intention of the maker to convey a present estate in specific land to a named grantee. Horton v. Murden, 117 Ga. 72, 43 S. E. 786. The maker of this paper did not use any word indicating an intention to convey a present estate to his wife. The words that he "does will" the land to his wife mean that he gives it to her at his death; it is the expression of a testamentary act. There is nothing in this paper which can make it effectual as a conveyance of property; and as the defendant's title was dependent on this paper as a deed conveying title from her husband to herself, it follows that the direction of a verdict in her favor was erroneous.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

GUPTILL v. MACON STONE SUPPLY CO.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT (§§ 112, 216*)—FORFEITURE OF LEASE—WAIVER.

A lease for ten years of a stone quarry contained a covenant that the lessee should pay a stated sum for each car of stone quarried, and that monthly settlements should be had. The landlord sued out a warrant to summarily dispossess the tenant, under the Civil Code, § 5385, on the ground of the tenant's failure to pay rent. The tenant filed the statutory counter affidavit. Thereafter the landlord accepted from the tenant rent that accrued, under the lease, subsequently to the institution of the summary process. Such acceptance operated as a waiver of the landlord's right to claim a forfeiture of the lease because of the tenant's arrears prior to the issuance of the summary process.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 343-349, 861-865; Dec. Dig. §§ 112, 216.*]

Error from Superior Court, Monroe County; R. T. Daniel, Judge.

Action by O. F. Guptill against the Macon Stone Supply Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

R. L. Williams, Jr., of Macon, Elmer Burnham, of Kittery, Me., and Charles Cram, of Boston, Mass., for plaintiff in error. Persons & Persons, of Forsyth, and Hall & Hall, of Macon, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. O. F. Guptill leased a stone quarry to the Macon Stone Supply Company for the term of ten years from August 19, 1911; the lessee agreeing to pay for the first 2,000 cars of stone shipped from the quarry the sum of $1.25 per car, and for the stone thereafter shipped the sum of $1 per car. The lease contained the following covenants: "Statements of the cars shipped and the amount due the lessor herein to be rendered by the lessee to the lessor on the first day of each month during the term of this lease, and monthly settlements to be made by the lessee with said lessor covering such amounts as may be due under the terms of this lease." "In the event the lessee herein shall, during the term of this lease, for any four consecutive months, fail to operate said quarry and to make payments specified herein within sixty days from the time same becomes due, then this lease, at the option of the lessor herein, may be declared null and void." On February 20, 1912, the landlord sued out a dispossessory warrant against his tenant, on the ground of his failure to pay the rent on the premises as per agreement in the lease contract. The tenant made a counter affidavit, denying that the lease had expired, or that he had failed to pay the rents due the landlord under the terms of the lease. The proceedings were duly returned to the superior court for trial, which resulted in favor of the defendant. The court overruled the landlord's motion for new trial, and he excepts.

We do not find it necessary to discuss the various assignments of error contained in the motion for new trial, for the reason that the verdict was demanded by the evidence. The only material difference between the testimony of the contending parties related to the payment of four cars of stone quarried in September and October, 1911, amounting under the contract to $5; the landlord contending that the tenant had failed to pay this amount, and the tenant contending that it had paid for all the stone quarried. The landlord testified that about the 14th or 15th of February, 1912, he demanded possession of the premises, on account of the failure to pay the $5 claimed to be due for the preceding months of September and October; that on February 17th, and three days before the suing out of the warrant to dispossess, he accepted from his tenant amounts due for the months of November and December, 1911; that after the suing out of the dispossessory proceeding he had received all royalties on stone shipped from the quarry, due at the time of the trial, which occurred several months thereafter. The defendant introduced in evidence the letters in which these various remittances by it were made subsequently to the suing out of the dispossessory warrant, in each of which the remittances were stated to be in payment of royalties due on stone shipped during the various months for which the remittance was made, according to the lease contract. There was therefore no dispute that the landlord, notwithstanding his claim of a forfeiture resulting from a failure to pay a portion of the September and October rent, had received, since the institution of the summary proceeding to evict the tenant, rent subsequently accruing under the lease contract. Under such circumstances the landlord will be held to have waived his right to claim a forfeiture of the lease contract.

It is immaterial whether the landlord was undertaking to give effect to a contractual forfeiture, or was proceeding solely under the Civil Code, § 5385, which authorizes, at the instance of the landlord, the issuance of a warrant to dispossess his tenant who fails to pay rent when due. Under this Code section the landlord, after demand for the possession of the rented premises, may proceed to dispossess his tenant who has failed to pay rent when due. In either instance after the institution of the statutory summary proceeding, the attitude of the landlord is that the tenant is no longer entitled to the possession of the premises by virtue of the lease contract. His action is voluntary. Instead of undertaking to collect the rent by distress, he proposes to evict the tenant as being no longer entitled to possession, on account of his failure to pay rent when due. Having voluntarily elected to treat his tenant as no longer entitled to the possession, his course must be consistent with this claim in the further progress of the proceeding which he has instituted. If he receives rent accruing subsequently to the issuance of the dispossessory warrant, and accepts it as being a payment under the original lease contract, he affirms that the lease contract is still in existence. By his own acts he admits the continuance of the lease, and waives any prior forfeiture. A landlord who recognizes a lease as a subsisting, operative contract should not, in equity or in good morals, be permitted to insist upon a past forfeiture, if there has been one. And it has been held, both in England and in this country, that a landlord by acceptance from his tenant of rent accruing after a breach of the condition in the lease, with knowledge that the breach had been committed, waives the right to declare the lease forfeited on account of the breach. Dendy v. Nicholl, 27 L. J. C. P. 220, 15 Eng. Rul. Cas. 783; Kenny v. Seu Si Lun, 101 Minn. 253, 112 N. W. 220, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 831, 11 Ann. Cas. 60, and cases cited in notes.

There is another substantial reason why the landlord should be deemed to have waived any forfeiture resulting from the tenant's failure to pay rent by accepting rents subsequently to his institution of his dispossessory process. By the Civil Code, § 5389, it is provided that, if the judgment goes against the tenant, it shall be for double the rent reserved or stipulated to be paid. It has been held that under this Code section the landlord, if entitled to recover possession of the premises, is also entitled to recover double the rent contracted to be paid accruing since the demand. If, after the institution of his proceeding, the landlord accepts subsequently accrued rent, if he be entitled to the premises, he would also be entitled to double the rent accruing since his demand, notwithstanding he may have received a part of the same from the tenant on the rent contract. The statute for the summary removal of tenants who fail to pay rent is for the benefit of landlords, and in derogation of common law, but should never be permitted as an agency to collect double rent against the tenant as a wrongdoer, after the landlord has received subsequently accruing rent under the contract.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

WEST v. LOCKLEAR.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. OVERRULING OF DEMURRER.

The demurrer was without merit, and was properly overruled.

2. INSTRUCTIONS — PAYMENT TO HUSBAND'S CREDITOR.

The controlling question in this case was whether a wife had paid money to the creditor of her husband with knowledge on the part of the creditor that it was her money. The charges on this subject, of which complaints were made, were not subject to the criticisms presented, nor do they furnish ground for reversal.

3. TRIAL (§ 256*)—INSTRUCTIONS—DUTY TO REQUEST.

If fuller instructions had been desired, they should have been requested. Under the pleadings and evidence, the contention that the court failed or omitted to give certain charges does not require a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 628-641; Dec. Dig. § 256.*]

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; J. W. Maddox, Judge.

Action between A. S. West and Dora Locklear. From the judgment, West brings error. Affirmed.

Maddox & Doyal, of Rome, for plaintiff in error. Denny & Wright, of Rome, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

DAVISON v. SIBLEY et al.

SIBLEY et al. v. DAVISON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 111*)—PROBATE OF WILL—ALLOWANCE FOR COUNSEL FEES.

An executor under a will probated in common form, who is called upon by heirs at law to probate it in solemn form, is entitled to an allowance of reasonable counsel fees out of the estate for such service, notwithstanding the will may be refused probate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 448-462; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 111*)—PROBATE OF WILL — ALLOWANCE FOR EXPENSES.

But if the executor in bad faith and in fraud of the rights of heirs attempts to probate a pretended will, he is not entitled to reimbursement from the estate for expenses incurred in his effort to defraud the heirs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 448-462; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 111*)—PROBATE OF WILL — ALLOWANCE FOR EXPENSES.

The good faith of the counsel of the executor is immaterial, as his right to compensation out of the estate is dependent upon the right of the executor to have an allowance from the estate for reasonable and necessary expenses, incurred upon compliance with the demand of the heirs to probate the will in solemn form.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 448-462; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

Error from Superior Court, Greene County; B. F. Walker, Judge.

Bill by James Davison, administrator, praying for instructions. From the decree, the administrator brings error, and S. H. Sibley and others file a cross-bill. Reversed on both bills of exception.

Geo. A. Merritt and James Davison, both of Greensboro, for plaintiff in error. Noel P. Park, of Greensboro, and Saml. H. Sibley, of Union Point, for defendants in error.

EVANS, P. J. A paper purporting to be the last will and testament of Reuben A. Credille was admitted to record as having been proved in common form, and letters testamentary issued to Florence Credille, the person nominated therein as executor. Certain children of Reuben A. Credille filed a proceeding requiring probate of the will in solemn form, and entered their caveat thereto. The executor employed counsel to probate the will per testes, and a long litigation ensued. The result of the first trial was in favor of the caveators, and the verdict was set aside by the Supreme Court. 123 Ga. 673, 51 S. E. 628. A second trial was had, which again resulted in a verdict for the caveators; and this verdict was upheld. 131 Ga. 40, 61 S. E. 1042. Administration was then had upon the estate of Reuben A. Credille, and the administrator brought a bill for direction, praying instructions, among other things, whether he should pay from the assets of the estate the fee of certain attorneys for services rendered to the executor in the litigation over the probate of the will in solemn form. The case was referred to an auditor, who reported, on this issue, that the services rendered by the attorneys were reasonably worth the sum demanded, and that the employment was in behalf of the estate, and not by the executor as an individual, though he was personally interested in the probate of the will. The auditor further reported that the executor had not acted in good faith in pressing the will for probate, and on this account he adjudged that the attorneys could not recover their fees from the estate. Exceptions of law and fact were filed to the auditor's report; and the court sustained the exceptions of law, disregarding as immaterial the exceptions of fact to the auditor's finding that the attorneys acted in good faith in representing the executor, but that the executor acted in bad faith in attempting to probate the will of Reuben A. Credille. The ruling of the court was that, independently of the good faith of the attorneys in representing the executor and of the bad faith of the executor in attempting to probate the will, the attorneys were entitled to reasonable compensation for their services in the attempt to probate the will in solemn form, payable from the assets of the estate of Reuben A. Credille. A decree was taken in accordance with this ruling. The administrator excepts to so much of the judgment as sustains the exceptions of law, and the attorneys by cross-bill except to the dismissal of their exceptions of fact as immaterial.

[1] 1. We think that the executor's right to be compensated out of the estate for necessary expenses, incurred in an unsuccessful attempt to probate a will in solemn form, at the instance of an heir at law, after the will has been probated in common form, depends upon the duty of the executor in this respect towards the estate he represents. According to the English ecclesiastical law a will was proved in common form on the oath of the executor and without notice, but after it had been proved in common form the executor could be compelled to prove it in solemn form. This is spoken of as calling in the probate. This could be done at any time, unless there was unreasonable delay in making the application. Our statute, however, limits the time to seven years, and with this modification our statutes concerning the probate of wills in common and solemn form do not substantially differ from the old English ecclesiastical law. Vance v. Crawford, 4 Ga. 445; Brown v. Anderson, 13 Ga. 171; Hoyle v. Hasted & Pearson, 6 Eng. Ecc. Rep. 313.

Where an executor proves a will in common form on the oath of one of the witnesses, and heirs at law call upon him by an application in writing, duly served, to appear before the ordinary and show cause why the probate should not be set aside on the ground that the testator at the time of making the pretended will was not of sound mind or was under undue influence, etc., it is the duty of the executor to see that all persons interested are notified. Evans v. Arnold, 52 Ga. 169, 179. If the executor appears in obedience to the notice to prove the will in solemn form, the burden is upon him to make a prima facie case. Peale v. Ware, 131 Ga. 828, 63 S. E. 581. The practice in this regard is mentioned for the purpose of showing that the relation of the executor to the estate in the matter of the probate of a will in solemn form is different where the will has never been probated, and where it has been previously proved in common. In the former case he may be required to file the will, if in his possession, with the ordinary (Civil Code of 1910, § 3862), but he is not compelled to offer it for probate; while, in the latter case, having elected to probate it, and having qualified as executor, he is under a duty to prove it in solemn form when required by an heir within the statutory period. A probate in common form means something. An executor qualifying under such probate is empowered to collect the assets and pay the debts of the testator. Purchasers under sales from him legally made will be protected, if bona fide and without notice. Such probate is conclusive upon all persons, not under disability, after the expiration of seven years. Civil Code (1910) §§ 3855, 3857. It would therefore seem to be the executor's duty to offer the will for probate in solemn form when called upon to do so by heirs, and to press the probate in good faith, and to make the necessary preparation for trial. The employment of counsel is a necessary incident to the duty imposed on the executor to probate the will in solemn form upon the demand of an heir; and it would be inconsistent with every principle of reason, law, and justice not to allow to the executor, out of the estate of the deceased, the expenses necessarily incurred by him in the faithful discharge of his duty. Compton v. Barnes, 4 Gill (Md.) 55, 45 Am. Dec. 115; Phillips v. Phillips, 81 Ky. 828. And see Varner v. Goldsby, 22 Ga. 302 and Francis v. Holbrook, 68 Ga. 829. If the will previously had not been admitted to probate in common form, and letters testamentary had not been granted thereon, a strong argument might be made against an allowance of counsel fees to the executor for an unsuccessful attempt to probate. See Dodd v. Anderson, 197 N. Y. 466, 90 N. E. 1137, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 336, 18 Ann. Cas. 738.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[2] 2. However, if the executor in bad faith undertakes to probate a paper which, because it is a forgery or was fraudulently procured, or the like, is not the last will of the deceased, he will not be allowed to charge the estate with the expense of counsel in his unsuccessful effort to set up a pretended will, notwithstanding it may have been previously probated in common form. That is to say, if the executor fraudulently undertakes to probate a pretended will, the expenses incident to his effort to defraud the heirs will not be charged against those whom he is endeavoring to defraud.

[3] 3. The good faith of the counsel employed, or their ignorance of the executor's fraudulent intent or purpose, is immaterial. Their right to be paid from funds of the estate of the deceased is not primary, but secondary. It is only when the executor may create a lawful charge against the estate that counsel may be compensated out of the assets of the estate.

Judgment reversed on both bills of exceptions. All the Justices concur.

BIGGS v. SILVEY et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 35*)—PARTIES.

A husband made a voluntary deed to his wife. Subsequently the wife and husband jointly conveyed by deed the same land to certain persons, who were children and descendants of children of the husband by a former marriage, reserving a life estate to the grantors. This deed recited a valuable consideration and contained a covenant of warranty of title. The husband died, and the wife brought an action against the grantees to cancel the deed as being obtained by the fraud and coercion of her husband. She alleged that her husband's estate was without representation. Pending the suit and before the appearance term, an administrator was appointed on the estate of her husband, and the defendants pleaded his non-joinder in abatement of the suit. Held, that the representative of the deceased husband was a necessary party, and, upon refusal of the plaintiff to make him a party, the suit will be abated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 55-64; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

Error from Superior Court, Wilkes County; B. K. Walker, Judge.

Action by S. A. Biggs against H. W. Silvey and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Sam L. Olive, of Augusta, and W. D. Tutt, of Elberton, for plaintiff in error. Saml. H. Sibley, of Union Point, for defendants in error.

EVANS, P. J. The plaintiff in her petition alleged that she intermarried with Terry P. Sherrer on March 11, 1877; that on June 15, 1892, her husband conveyed to her a certain tract of land containing 172 acres; that thereafter her husband became dissatisfied with the making of the deed and on the 14th of March, 1908, influenced and persuaded her to execute a deed to W. H. Silvey, Sarah K. Silvey, John W. Sherrer, William Francis Sherrer, James W. Sherrer, Mary Susan Sherrer, and Rebecca Jane Echols, children and descendants of her husband by a former marriage, upon an alleged consideration of love and affection to her husband and to the grantees as relatives by blood of her husband and affinity to her, and also in consideration that one of the grantees had been most attentive in serving and waiting upon her husband and herself for a number of years, and in further consideration of $10 conveying 50 acres of the land, described by metes and bounds, to W. H. Silvey, and the remainder to the other named grantees, reserving a life estate to petitioner as long as she lives upon the property. Her husband joined with her in warranty of the title, and the deed was signed by both. Subsequently, on June 8, 1908, petitioner was further influenced and persuaded and coerced by her husband to sign a deed to W. H. Silvey to 50 acres of land conveyed to her by her husband. This deed recited that it was made by the husband and the petitioner of the first part and Hillary W. Silvey of the second part, and that for and in consideration of the sum of $10 the party of the first part conveyed 50 acres of described land to the grantee in fee simple, with a reservation that "both the parties of the first part hold the within 50 acres until after their death; then it goes to Hillary W. Silvey and his heirs." This deed contained a warranty of title and was signed by petitioner and her husband. Petitioner and her husband continued to live upon the land until his death in May, 1909. After the death of her husband, Terry P. Sherrer, she married again and has continued to live upon the land. She alleged that there was no administration upon her first husband's estate, and the grantees in the deeds from herself and husband were made parties defendant. She prayed for the cancellation of her deeds to the defendants. The defendants filed a plea in abatement on the ground that W. F. Sherrer, the duly constituted administrator of the estate of Terry P. Sherrer, was a necessary party defendant, praying that the suit abate because of his nonjoinder. The issue made by the plea was submitted to the court, without the intervention of a jury; and upon the hearing it appeared that letters of administration had been granted on the estate of Terry P. Sherrer to W. F. Sherrer, pending the suit, but prior to the appearance term. The court entered judgment sustaining the plea in abatement and dismissing the petition, "provided that, if the plaintiff shall within ten days file an amendment praying that" the representative of Terry P. Sherrer "be made a party defendant in said case, the plea shall stand overruled." Exception is taken to this judgment.

The single question presented by this record is whether the personal representative of Terry P. Sherrer is a necessary and indispensable party to the cancellation of the deeds jointly executed by petitioner and her husband, Terry P. Sherrer, to the defendant. The general rule is that a grantor is a necessary party to a proceeding to cancel his deed. Kehoe v. Rourke, 131 Ga. 269, 62 S. E. 185. It rests upon the fundamental doctrine that the law hears before it decides, and that before the rights of a party can be passed upon he must have his day in court. The plaintiff seeks to cancel the joint deed of herself and a deceased husband, and the latter's representative must be made a party, unless the special facts of the case prove an exception to the general rule. As reason for such an exception it is insisted that Terry P. Sherrer was not interested in the title, and that his joinder in the deed was a purely superfluous act. We do not think so. So far as the deed is concerned, it purports to be the joint act of herself and husband, and she will not be heard to deny that it is their joint act unless her comaker or his representative is given an opportunity to contest this issue. Besides, her husband warranted the title, and each of the deeds recites a valuable consideration, and his estate is directly interested in upholding them.

Much reliance is placed by the plaintiff on the case of Ellesworth v. McCoy, 95 Ga.

44, 49 (2), 22 S. E. 39, as sustaining the opposite view. An analysis of that case will show that nothing therein ruled contravenes our holding in this case. In that case a bill in equity was filed by the maker of a deed against two of the children of a deceased grantee; it was alleged that the deed had been procured by fraud and undue influence, and that these two children were in possession of and claiming the property conveyed; and the prayer was for an injunction against their conveyance of the property or otherwise interfering with it, for a cancellation of the deed, and for a recovery of the property. It was held that the plaintiff could proceed against these two defendants without making a party defendant a third child of the deceased grantee, alleged to have been in life three years before the bill was filed, but conceded, if still alive, to be a nonresident of the state. The ruling was put on two grounds: (1) That a conveyance to a deceased grantee, who leaves three heirs at law, may be set aside at the instance of the maker, as far as it affects two of them, without disturbing the rights of the third; and (2) that nonresidence and doubt as to the existence of the other child were sufficient to excuse the failure to make the third child a party. In that case the maker only prayed to cancel the deed in so far as it affected the two defendants. If she had a right to cancel the whole, she could waive that right in so far as it affected one of the claimants under the deed. But that is not this case. Here one joint maker is attempting to cancel the deed of her comaker; and, before she can do this, she must make the representative of such comaker a party to her action.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

ODUM v. STATE. (No. 4,762.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 29, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 207*) — EVIDENCE — DYING DECLARATION.

The fact that a dying statement, not reduced to writing, was made by one in articulo mortis previous to a statement which was thereafter reduced to writing, does not render the prior oral statement inadmissible, provided it otherwise so complies with the requirements of law as to be competent testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 489; Dec. Dig. § 207.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 215*) — EVIDENCE — DYING DECLARATION.

An objection to testimony as to an alleged dying declaration, upon the ground that the declarant had said, "I know the man, but I cannot call his name," and that therefore the declarant did not know the person who killed him, is not supported, when there is other evidence which clearly discloses the identity of the individual referred to by the declarant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 451-456; Dec. Dig. § 215.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

8. INSTRUCTIONS ON DRUNKENNESS.

The charge of the court upon the subject of drunkenness is in accord with the provisions of section 39 of the Penal Code, and does not contain any expression of opinion by the court as to whether the defendant was in fact drunk or not. Marshall v. State, 59 Ga. 156.

4. VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.

The evidence authorized the charge upon the subject of voluntary manslaughter.

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 922*) — NEW TRIAL — HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

The instruction of the court, in answer to a request of the jury, that the jury might recommend the defendant to mercy, although they found the accused guilty of a felony, does not require the grant of a new trial, especially since the jury were distinctly informed that, if they returned a verdict of "guilty of voluntary manslaughter" with a recommendation of mercy, such recommendation would not have the effect of reducing the crime from a felony to a misdemeanor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2210-2218; Dec. Dig. § 922.*]

6. REFUSAL OF INSTRUCTIONS.

There was no error in refusing a request for instructions to the jury.

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; H. A. Mathews, Judge.

Edward Odum was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, and brings error. Affirmed.

Jno. R. Cooper, of Macon, for plaintiff in error. John P. Ross, Sol. Gen., of Macon, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

BRITT v. STATE. (No. 5,192.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia, Oct. 29, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 594*)—CONTINUANCE—ABSENT WITNESS.

A motion for a continuance because of the absence of a witness for the defendant in a criminal case should not be overruled, though there be other witnesses who will testify to the same effect as would the absent witness, when it is uncontradicted that his testimony is not only material but vitally important to the disproof of the defendant's guilt, and it is made to appear that all due diligence has been used to procure the presence of the witness, and that he is accessible to the processes of the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1321, 1322, 1332; Dec. Dig. § 594.*]

Error from Superior Court, Liberty County; W. W. Sheppard, Judge.

Jesse Britt was convicted of larceny, and brings error. Reversed.

Ben Way, of Hinesville, and Thomas & Gibbs, of Jesup, for plaintiff in error. N. J. Norman, Sol. Gen., of Savannah, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The evidence as to the identity of the hog is in conflict but the jury refused to accept the plea as to the mistaken identity of his hogship. We cannot say that the jury erred as to this, though it does not appear from the record that they, any more than we, saw the hog; this for the reason that the jury must judge as to the credibility of the witnesses, and the law will not permit us to do so. However, the case turned on whether the hog which the accused was charged with stealing was or was not Gabe Quarterman's hog, and, in view of the seriousness of the offense, we think the court should have postponed the trial of the case, so as to have enabled the defendant to produce witnesses as to his ownership, whose testimony was material to his defense. It is uncontradicted that subpoenas had been taken out for the witnesses several days before the trial and delivered to the deputy sheriff, whose duty it was to serve them. The defendant showed due diligence in endeavoring to procure the testimony, and his showing rebutted any conclusion that the postponement was sought merely for delay. It is true that the defendant had other witnesses who testified substantially to the same facts that he desired to prove by the absent witnesses, but, as we have several times held, the mere fact that the defendant has present a witness who will testify in substance the same thing as would a witness who is absent does not deprive the defendant of the right to have the absent witness present, if it plainly appears that he is accessible, and that the court can procure his attendance. The question is largely controlled by the materiality of the testimony of the absent witness. Continuances are always addressed to the sound, legal discretion of the court. If the fact which it is sought to prove by the absent witness is only collaterally involved, the discretion of the court in overruling the motion is broader than where the testimony proposed to be elicited from the absent witness goes to the very vitals of the case. In such a case the testimony of five witnesses who are present and who would testify to the same effect as the absent witness might not be a substitute for the sworn evidence of the single absent witness. The witnesses present might not be credible; they might even be subject to be impeached by proof of general bad character, while the witness who was absent might be one whose statement would be accepted without question by a jury. Again, though the witnesses present could not be impeached in any of the modes specifically prescribed by law for that purpose, they might be discredited by their interest; while the fact that the absent witness was wholly disinterested would go to his credit. In the present case the defendant's main witness among those who were present was his father, and in the conflict between the testimony of this witness and those who testified for the state, the jury would naturally minimize the testimony of the witness, by reason of this relationship.

There is no merit in the other assignments of error; and, solely upon the ground that the defendant had shown such diligence as entitled him to the presence of the witness he had subpoenaed, to establish a point vital to his defense, the case should have been continued.

Judgment reversed.

RAINES v. STATE. (No. 5,108.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 29, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. OBSTRUCTING JUSTICE (§ 16*)—RESISTING AN OFFICER—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence not disclosing that the accused forcibly resisted an officer while attempting to execute a lawful process, his conviction under section 311 of the Penal Code was not authorized.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Obstructing Justice, Cent. Dig. § 32; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

2. OBSTRUCTING JUSTICE (§ 3*) — RESISTING AN OFFICER—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

Neither threats alone, unaccompanied by any fear or apparent intention to execute them, nor the doing of an act which impedes, delays, or defeats the execution of the process with which the officer is armed, but without resisting him, is sufficient to constitute the offense of forcibly resisting an officer, in violation of Pen. Code, § 311.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Obstructing Justice, Cent. Dig. §§ 3-12; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

Error from City Court of Houston County;
A. C. Riley, Judge.

Walter Raines was convicted of willfully obstructing an officer, and brings error. Reversed.

J. C. Smith, of Ft. Valley, and W. J. Wallace, of Knoxville, for plaintiff in error. R. E. Brown, Sol., of Ft. Valley, for the State.

POTTLE, J. [1] The accused was convicted under an accusation charging that he did knowingly and willfully obstruct and oppose one Sheats, a deputy sheriff, in serving and attempting to serve and execute a criminal warrant against Will Raines. The evidence shows that Sheats and one Rowell, a city marshal, went to the home of Will Raines for the purpose of arresting him under a criminal warrant. When they reached the house they informed two sisters of Will Raines that they had a warrant for his arrest, and received permission from the sisters to go in and search the house. Sheats went into the house, and Rowell remained outside. Sheats heard quarreling outside of the house, and immediately went out and found Rowell scuffling with the accused, who was a brother of Will Raines. The sisters were also attacking Rowell, and Sheats interposed and stopped the difficulty. The officers then arrested the accused and started around to the front of the house. The accused said he had done nothing to go to jail for, and that he was not going to jail, and began to push and shove Sheats. When this occurred the officers had not found Will Raines and were still looking for him. The accused had said he would not allow the house searched, and started toward the house where Sheats was. Rowell grabbed him and pulled him back, whereupon both his sisters began to attack Rowell, and Sheats came out of the house to the assistance of Rowell. The officers did not find Will Raines, and did not go back into the house for any further search.

[2] It is well settled that proof of forcible resistance is necessary to sustain an indictment under section 311 of the Penal Code. "Neither threats alone, unaccompanied by any fear or apparent intention to execute them, nor even the doing of an act which impedes, delays, or defeats the execution of the process with which the officer is armed, but without resisting him, is sufficient to constitute the offense of obstructing legal process." Hutchinson v. State, 9 Ga. App. 62, 70 S. E. 352. See, also, Davis v. State, 76 Ga. 721. It is apparent from the evidence in the present case that whatever force was used by the accused in resisting Deputy Sheriff Sheats was either to prevent what the accused deemed an illegal arrest of his person, or to prevent him from being taken to jail after the arrest was made. In fact, the arrest of the accused was illegal. He had committed no offense. He objected to the house being searched for his brother, and started toward the house, saying that he would not permit the search to be made. This conduct on his part was not a violation of any criminal law, and therefore did not justify his arrest by Rowell. This being so, the accused had a right to resist the attempted detention of his person by Rowell. Nor did Sheats have any more authority to arrest the accused than did Rowell, and the accused had an equal right to resist him. There is nothing in the evidence to justify the inference that the force used toward Sheats by the accused was to prevent Sheats from continuing his search for Will Raines. On the contrary, the evidence demanded a finding that whatever force was used by the accused toward Sheats was for the purpose of preventing an illegal arrest of his own person by the officer. The officer was prevented from continuing his search, not so much by the conduct of the accused, as by his own conduct in making an illegal arrest of the accused, and he discontinued the search for Will Raines in order to incarcerate the accused in pursuance of the illegal arrest. The evidence did not authorize the conviction, and the motion for a new trial should have been granted.

Judgment reversed.

DUKE v. STATE. (No. 5,221.)

Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 29, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 400*)—JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 125*)—JUDGMENT—EVIDENCE—PAROL.

It not appearing that the original records had been lost or destroyed, or were otherwise inaccessible, it was error to permit parol proof of the contents of the defendant's plea in a civil case, and likewise error to permit a witness to state the judgment rendered in the proceedings. A plea of minority on the part of a defendant must necessarily have been in writing, and the announcement of a justice of the peace, in open court, that he will render judgment in a particular way, is brutum fulmen until the judgment is actually entered upon the docket. Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis R. Co. v. Brown, 3 Ga. App. 561 (1b), 60 S. E. 819.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 879-886, 1208-1210; Dec. Dig. § 400;* Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 551-554; Dec. Dig. § 125.*]

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1129*)—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—REVIEW ON APPEAL.

Objections to the form of a criminal accusation cannot be considered upon assignments of error presented as grounds of a motion for a new trial. Dublin v. Dudley, 2 Ga. App. 763, 59 S. E. 84.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2964-2964; Dec. Dig. § 1129.*]

Error from City Court of Jackson; H. M. Fletcher, Judge.

Barney Duke was convicted of crime, and brings error. Reversed.

J. T. Moore, of Jackson, for plaintiff in error. C. L. Redman, Sol., of Jackson, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment reversed.

NOBLES v. STATE. (No. 5,224.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 29, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 918*) — NEW TRIAL — GROUNDS—CONDUCT OF JUDGE.

Although the trial judge has the right to examine witnesses, the utmost caution should be used to avoid impressing the jury by the examination; and when in a criminal case it appears that there is a probability that the circumstances, or the form of the examination, conveyed to the jury an intimation of the court's belief in the guilt of the accused, a new trial should be granted. When the questions as asked by the trial judge tend to discredit the witness or his testimony, or to suggest to the jury the inference that the court entertains an opinion unfavorable to the innocence of the accused, the effect may be as prejudicial to the defendant as the direct expression of an opinion, and places the case within the provisions of section 1068 of the Penal Code. Extreme anxiety to develop the truth as to facts which, if proved, will be peculiarly beneficial to one of the parties in the case and correspondingly detrimental to the other, can easily be mistaken by the jury for a manifestation of the judge's conviction that one party rather than the other should prevail. Sharpton v. State, 1

Ga. App. 542, 57 S. E. 929; Brown v. State, 11 Ga. App. 164, 74 S. E. 1002; Murphy v. State, 18 Ga. App. —, 79 S. E. 228.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2163-2192, 2195, 2196, 2219-2224; Dec. Dig. § 918.*]

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1166½*)—PREJUDICIAL ERROR—CONDUCT OF JUDGE—QUESTIONS.

The questions asked the state's witness by the trial judge, after the solicitor general and the defendant's counsel had both completed their examination of the witness, naturally tended to impress, unfavorably to the accused (though the trial judge did not intend that effect), those circumstances which indicated guilt, and perhaps further prejudiced the defendant by conveying the impression that the court believed much more could perhaps be proved against him if the witness could be induced to make the disclosure.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3114-3123; Dec. Dig. § 1166½.*]

SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Except as above stated, there was no error in the trial. The evidence was sufficient to convict the accused on both counts, or to warrant a verdict of not guilty. Flahive v. State, 10 Ga. App. 401, 78 S. E. 536.

Error from Superior Court, Laurens County; K. J. Hawkins, Judge.

Bob Nobles was convicted of a crime, and brings error. Reversed.

J. S. Adams, of Dublin, for plaintiff in error. E. L. Stephens, Sol. Gen., of Wrightsville, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment reversed.

JENKINS v. STATE. (No. 5,171.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 29, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 75*)—SUFFICIENCY—OMISSION OF WORDS—LARCENY.

This case, on the demurrer, is controlled by the decision of the Supreme Court in Kimbrough v. State, 101 Ga. 583, 29 S. E. 39.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 202-204; Dec. Dig. § 75.*]

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1205*) — SENTENCE — STATUTE.

Section 175 of the Penal Code of 1910 defines larceny from the house, but fails to prescribe a punishment for that offense; and where one indicted under that section is convicted, he can object to the imposition of any sentence upon him, on the ground that this section of the Code prescribes no punishment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3268, 3270; Dec. Dig. § 1205.*]

Error from City Court of Elberton; Geo. C. Grogan, Judge.

Will Jenkins was convicted of larceny from the house, and brings error. Reversed.

Pulliam Proffitt, of Elberton, for plaintiff in error. Boozer Payne and R. J. Ward, both of Elberton, for the State.

HILL, C. J. The accusation in this case was of the offense of larceny from the house, and a demurrer was filed thereto, on the ground that it omitted to allege that the property stolen from the house was taken therefrom "privately" by the accused. The demurrer was overruled by the trial judge, he holding that the accusation was good under section 175 of the Penal Code. This judgment is the subject of the first assignment of error.

The accused was convicted, and, when called upon by the court to know if he had any reason to offer why sentence should not be pronounced upon him, objected to being sentenced, on the ground that no penalty was prescribed by law for the offense set out and defined in the accusation under which he was tried and convicted. The court overruled this objection, and imposed a misdemeanor sentence. To this judgment the defendant excepted, and this exception constitutes the second assignment of error.

[1] 1. In Kimbrough v. State, 101 Ga. 583, 29 S. E. 39, it is held that "an indictment which charges the accused with entering a dwelling house and stealing therefrom valuable goods is, though the word 'privately' be omitted, a good indictment under section 178 [now 175] of the Penal Code." It is probably this decision which induced the trial judge's ruling. In the body of the opinion in that case it is said that if the indictment were framed under section 179 (now 176) of the Penal Code, and the word "privately" were omitted therefrom, it would seem to be subject to special demurrer on the ground that "the definition of the offense [in that section] makes privacy a necessary ingredient." The Supreme Court seems to have been of the opinion that in these two sections there are two different definitions of larceny from the house. The writer does not concur in this view. In his opinion there is one definition of the offense of larceny from the house, that contained in section 178 (now 175) of the Penal Code, and the following section prescribes a punishment. Indeed, the codifiers seem to have so construed it; the first section being headed "Larceny from the House," and the second section being headed "Punishment." In my opinion, an allegation in an indictment for larceny from the house that the property was taken and carried away from the house with intent to steal the same is equivalent to the allegation that the defendant took the property privately and with intent to steal. However this may be, this court is bound by the decision of the Supreme Court in Kimbrough v. State, and under that authority the trial judge properly overruled the demurrer to the indictment, which he held was based on the former of these two sections. Penal Code of 1910, § 175.

[2] 2. The objection made to the imposition of the sentence, that the section of the Code under which the accusation was framed did not prescribe any punishment for the offense, in view of the ruling in Kimbrough v. State, supra, seems to be meritorious. Technically speaking, the objection should have been made by motion in arrest of judgment, but any method by which the question raised is clearly presented to the court should be sufficient, and certainly if no punishment was prescribed by the statute on which the accusation was framed, and under which the accused was convicted, this was a legal reason why sentence could not be imposed upon him. Punishment for criminal offenses is prescribed by statute in this state, and if the statute fails to prescribe a penalty, the statute is ineffective because of that omission. In the Kimbrough Case, supra, while it was not expressly held (because the question was not presented), it is strongly intimated in the opinion, that section 178 of the Penal Code (now section 175) does not prescribe any punishment for the offense of larceny from the house. There can be no question as to this, if, as held by the Supreme Court in the Kimbrough Case, the two sections referred to contain different definitions of larceny from the house. It follows that the court had no authority to impose any sentence for a conviction under section 175.

We suggest, in view of the decision in Kimbrough v. State, supra, that either section 175 of the Penal Code should be repealed or amended, or that the word "privately" in section 176 should be stricken out; and until this is done, indictments or accusations for the offense of larceny from the house, in order that conviction can be followed by punishment, should allege that the property stolen was "privately" taken by the accused from the house.

Judgment reversed.

TAYLOR v. STATE. (No. 5,069.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 29, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 945*)—NEW TRIAL—
GROUND.

The discretion of the trial judge in refusing to grant a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence will not be controlled, unless it plainly appears that the evidence alleged to have been newly discovered would probably change the result. This rule is peculiarly applicable where the alleged newly discovered testimony in a criminal case relates to facts which are not vitally material to the issue of the defendant's guilt or innocence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2324-2327, 2336; Dec. Dig. § 945.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1152*)—APPEAL—FINDINGS ON MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

In passing upon a ground of a motion for a new trial in a criminal case, based upon alleged bias and prejudice of a juror against the movant, evidenced in part by expressions of opinion previous to the trial as to the guilt of the accused, the judge of the trial court occupies the place of a trier, and his finding that the juror was competent will not be reversed, unless it is manifest that his discretion was abused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3053-3057; Dec. Dig. § 1152.*]

3. VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—NEW TRIAL.

The evidence authorized the conviction of the accused of the offense of voluntary manslaughter, and there was no error in refusing a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Heard County; R. W. Freeman, Judge.

Dawson Taylor was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, and brings error. Affirmed.

S. Holderness, Willis Smith, and J. L. Smith, all of Carrollton, M. U. Moaty, of La Grange, W. O. Hodnett, of Franklin, and W. C. Wright, of Newnan, for plaintiff in error. J. R. Terrell, Sol. Gen., of Greenville, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Dawson Taylor was convicted of the offense of voluntary manslaughter, and he excepts to the judgment overruling his motion for a new trial. We have carefully examined the voluminous record and the various assignments of error, and we find no reason for a reversal of the judgment of the learned trial judge who presided in the case. The tragedy which resulted in a homicide had many circumstances which rendered it more than usually deplorable, but the evidence authorized the verdict, which has been stamped with the approval of the presiding judge. There is no ground for complaint in the conduct of the trial.

One of the defenses of which the accused seeks to avail himself, the conceded right of mutual defense as between brothers (Mattox v. State, 9 Ga. App. 293, 70 S. E. 1120), is inapplicable to the facts of this case because the evidence shows that if any attack was made upon Lee Taylor with metal "knucks," or other weapon, such assault was made not by Frank McWaters, who was shot and killed, but by Glenn McWaters, his son. If Lee Taylor was being assaulted with metal knucks, the defendant, his brother, would have had the right to intervene and use any necessary force in protecting him from injury, but there is no evidence that Frank McWaters was assaulting the defendant's brother with any weapon. The defendant may have been justified in shooting Glenn McWaters, but even if Frank McWaters was making an assault upon the defendant's brother (but not using any weapon), and the defendant shot and killed him, he cannot complain if he was only convicted of voluntary manslaughter.

The merits of the defendant's contention that he should have a new trial rests upon two grounds: That of newly discovered evidence, and alleged bias on the part of certain members of the jury who tried the case.

[1] 1. Upon the hearing of the motion for a new trial, the movant tendered the affidavit of a niece of the deceased, who testified that she had refused to disclose the facts on account of her relationship. The young lady does not claim to have been a witness to the homicide. Her testimony relates merely to certain facts which would tend to discredit the testimony of witnesses who were introduced upon the trial and to a circumstance which would show that the deceased was perhaps very drunk at the time that he received the mortal blow. For this reason we think the trial judge could have disregarded the alleged newly discovered testimony as merely cumulative and impeaching. We do not say, however, that he did reject it solely upon this ground, for cases can be imagined where evidence might be so absolutely impeaching and directed to points of such vital importance in the case as that, with this evidence in the record, an entirely different result might be anticipated upon another investigation of the case, and the most important criterion in regard to newly discovered evidence we apprehend to be the reasonable probability of a different result being reached from that which has already been attained.

There seems to be some conflict as to whether Miss McNaughton's statement was that the deceased vomited a half gallon or more and as to how heavily laden this discharge was with whisky. We fail to see how this testimony could materially affect the result, or even why the result should be different if it should be conceded that the deceased was thoroughly intoxicated. Miss McNaughton's testimony as to the witness Lunsford is purely impeaching. It does appear from the alleged newly discovered testimony that the deceased, after vomiting, said that he wanted nothing done with the Taylor boys, as he and his son were to blame. We have no doubt the trial judge considered the statement of the deceased that he and his son were to blame, as well as a similar statement made to the witness Mobley, as merely the opinion of the deceased and a mere conclusion, without a statement of any fact from which it could be determined whether the right conclusion, in fact and in law, was reached. The deceased told Mobley that whisky and his temper overcame him and he became crazy. At best this would indicate only mutuality of intent to fight, and the accused was not convicted of murder, but only of voluntary manslaughter; and, certainly if the defendant violated the law, the fact that the particular party who was injured did not wish to see the law enforced against his assailant would be no reason why the law should not be vindicated. The fact that this witness would testify on another trial that the ground was torn up as if there had been a scuffle might tend to discredit some of the testimony introduced at the trial now under review; but, since it is undisputed that there was a homicide, it would support the inference that the offense committed was that of voluntary manslaughter, rather than that of murder. There was other newly discovered testimony, but it tended merely to impeach various witnesses of the state who testified at the trial. The character of the deceased for violence could not be available, because it does not appear, even from the defendant's own statement, that the deceased was doing enough for that defense to be employed.

Nothing in support of the ground of the motion for new trial based upon newly discovered testimony is offered that will warrant even a suggestion that the trial judge abused his discretion in overruling this ground, and it does not appear that the newly discovered testimony would or should produce a different result. This being true, this court is controlled by the numerous decisions of the Supreme Court in which it is held that the discretion of the trial judge will not be controlled, in passing upon the ground of a motion for a new trial based upon newly discovered testimony, unless it appears that a different result would probably be reached upon another investigation, and that the trial judge abused his discretion in not granting a new trial.

[2, 3] 2. On the motion for a new trial the defendant introduced affidavits of numerous witnesses for the purpose of showing that two of the jurors were prejudiced and biased against the accused. According to this testimony one of these jurors said, previous to the trial, that the defendant ought to be convicted, and that if he (the juror) was on the jury he would be convicted; and the statement attributed to the other juror by a number of witnesses was practically to the same effect. In fact, the juror Crockett was alleged to have gone so far as to say that the defendant "ought to be hung," and he did not see any other chance for him. The witnesses attacking these jurors were properly vouched for, and it appears that the defendant and his counsel were in ignorance of the existence of any bias in the minds of the jurors and had no reason to suspect that they had expressed themselves against the accused. However, each of the attacked jurors denied on oath the statements attributed to him and asserted that he was controlled solely by the evidence delivered upon the stand in the rendition of the verdict. In this conflict it was for the judge passing upon the motion to determine who swore truly, the witness who attacked the jurors or the jurors themselves. The credibility of the witnesses on the one hand and of the jurors on the other is a matter solely for his determination, and his conclusion is not reviewable.

In the attainment of justice nothing is more indispensable than that the minds of the jurors who are to pass upon the issue be perfectly impartial, but the law places upon the trial judge, and, we think, wisely, the responsibility of determining the competency of the jurors and clothes him with a discretion which will not be controlled, unless it is manifest that it has been abused. The decisions are uniform upon this point. We cannot say that in the present case the learned judge who presided at the trial erred. See, in this connection, Costly v. State, 19 Ga. 614, and the cases cited in Vann v. State, 33 Ga. 60, 9 S. E. 945; Buchanan v. State, 24 Ga. 286 (2); Brinkley v. State, 58 Ga. 296 (3); Durham v. State, 70 Ga. 265 (12); Huff v. State, 104 Ga. 521 (7), 30 S. E. 808; Allen v. State, 102 Ga. 619, 29 S. E. 470; King v. State, 119 Ga. 426, 46 S. E. 633; Jones v. State, 117 Ga. 710 (4), 44 S. E. 877; Perry v. State, 117 Ga. 719, 45 S. E. 77; Hall v. State, 124 Ga. 649, 52 S. E. 891; Moore v. State, 1 Ga. App. 728, 57 S. E. 956; De Vane v. Atlanta, B. & A. R. Co., 4 Ga. App. 141 (5), 60 S. E. 1079; Daniel v. State, 11 Ga. App. 800 (4), 76 S. E. 162.

The finding of a trial judge that a juror who has been attacked for bias or prejudice is competent will not be reversed, unless it is apparent that he has abused the discretion which the law vests in him in such cases.

Judgment affirmed.

LATHAM v. FIELD et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 5, 1913.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 927*)—REVIEW—NONSUIT.

In reviewing a judgment of nonsuit the appellate court must consider the evidence in the most favorable view for the plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2912, 2917, 3143, 3758, 4024; Dec. Dig. § 927.*]

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 92*)—POWER OF AGENT.

The acts of an agent within his authority, either express or implied, and those within the scope of his apparent authority, are binding upon the principal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 245, 246, 250-253, 592; Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 131*)—LIABILITY OF PRINCIPAL.

A principal is as liable for damages from acts performed through an agent as if he had done them himself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 458-464; Dec. Dig. § 131.*]

4. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 193*)—LIABILITY OF PRINCIPAL—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE—JURY QUESTION.

In an action for breach of a contract for the sale of cotton, made through a third person, evidence on the question of the defendant's liability as principal held sufficient to go to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 721½-726; Dec. Dig. § 193.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by J. E. Latham against J. E. Field and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

This case was before us at Fall term, 1912, and is reported in 160 N. C. 335, 76 S. E. 251. The facts, as they now appear, are somewhat different from those there stated. Plaintiff testified: That W. H. Field, one of the defendants, called at his place of business in April, 1908, and showed him some samples of cotton, stating that J. D. Turner would thereafter represent his firm in that territory as their broker, and he hoped defendants would send them some business through Mr. Turner. That about three weeks after the conversation, plaintiff ordered some cotton from the defendants through Turner, buying 100 bales of strict low middling from defendants through Turner, at 10½ cents per pound. Plaintiff paid for the cotton at that price, although it proved to be of a very low and inferior quality, below any known grade, and what is called in the trade "junk." The difference in value of the two kinds is 2 cents per pound, and the quantity 46,493 pounds. That he had no further communication with defendants, personally or by letter, after the time of the conversation until the cotton had been shipped and received. He ordered the cotton through Turner, and at first wanted 200 bales, but Turner told him that he could only get 100 bales of the required grade, and that he had secured it from defendants. The cotton was shipped to defendants, Greensboro, N. C., "order notify J. D. Turner," and the bill of lading showed that the cotton was shipped by defendants to their own order, and indorsed by them. J. D. Turner drew the draft for the price, and plaintiff paid it at bank and took up the bill of lading. Draft was signed by Turner and drawn at Greensboro, N. C., and not by Field & Co. at their home in Cartersville, Ga., as if it had originated there. Cotton is very often shipped through the South to the order of a bank cashier or some clerk in a merchant's office. "As to whose name is on a bill of lading, that is a thing we don't look at. It is who is the shipper of the cotton and whose name is indorsed on the back that makes it negotiable." That he never found out what disposition was made of the proceeds of his payment for the cotton. That he paid the draft, and took the bill of lading to the railway company and got the cotton. He received the following letter confirming the trade:

"Our order No. ———, Greensboro, N. C., 5-11-1908. Messrs. J. E. Latham, Greensboro, N. C.—Dear Sirs: We hereby confirm the following sale made you this day: 100 bales cotton, grade, strict low middling, at 10½ c. per lb., landed at Group A, for shipment prompt, for the account of J. E. Field & Son. Remarks: Shipped by J. E. Field & Son, Cartersville, Ga. Yours truly, Jno. D. Turner, Jr.

"N. B. In any case of reference to this order, please give our order number, subject to Carolina mill rules."

On the cross and re-examination, plaintiff testified: "Mr. Latham, in June 19, 1908, you addressed a letter to Field & Co., which I have just shown you, and you told them about this offer you had received from the Riverside Cotton Mills of 10 cents? Answer: Yes, sir." Plaintiff did not address this communication to the defendants for the purpose of connecting them with the original sale, or for the purpose of getting some reply from defendants in order to connect them with the original sale. Plaintiff's reason for so writing the defendant was that cotton is sold in this territory, including Danville and all the territory around Greensboro, under what is known as the Carolina mill rules. These rules provide that when a shipment of cotton is received, if it is below grade as originally contracted for, it may be rejected by the buyer. Our position on this cotton all the time was that Field & Co. had not performed their contract; that they had shipped something we did not buy, and, so far as we were concerned, we rejected it. We were holding the cotton, waiting for them to replace the contract with the proper grade of cotton which we had bought and which we had paid for. When he paid the draft drawn by Turner, for some $4,600, he knew that the draft had been drawn in Greensboro. He knew that a draft drawn by Field & Co. on him would have originated in Cartersville, Ga. In the former trial he testified that the cotton shipped was very difficult to grade, but in his opinion it would average about strict low middling. Cotton that is full of dust and sand is not merchantable, and for that reason is not gradable cotton. When cotton is bought, it is customary to confirm it. In this instance no confirmation was sent to the defendants, for the reason that plaintiff received a confirmation from J. D. Turner. Plaintiff confirmed the purchase to Turner. It is customary in the cotton trade to confirm either to the vendor or his agent. The sample exhibited to witness is a sample of strict low middling cotton. The sale in controversy was confirmed to plaintiff by J. D. Turner for the account of the defendants. Cotton arrives several days later than drafts, and in this instance the draft was presented and paid by plaintiff probably seven days before the arrival of the cotton. Plaintiff had no opportunity to examine the cotton before he paid the draft. That is the usual custom in the trade. He paid the draft upon the faith of the contract he had with Mr. Turner as broker for J. E. Field & Son, and upon the fact that it was attached to the bill of lading showing J. E. Field & Son, of Cartersville, Ga., were the shippers of the cotton, and that J. E. Field & Son, in order to make the bill of lading negotiable, had indorsed it on the back. He would not have paid the draft unless the bill of lading had been attached. The paper shown him is the confirmation he received at the time he bought the 100 bales of cotton in controversy.

The bill of lading was introduced. It was of the standard form, issued at Cartersville, Ga., by the railroad company to J. E. Field & Son, and contained the following: "Shippers' order notify. Consignee, J. D. Turner, Jr."—and was indorsed by J. E. Field & Son and J. D. Turner, Jr. There was more evidence as to the damages, not necessary to be stated. At the close of the plaintiff's testimony, the judge ordered a nonsuit, upon defendants' motion, and plaintiff appealed.

Thos. S. Beall and King & Kimball, all of Greensboro, for appellant. Douglass & Douglass, of Raleigh, J. T. Norris, of Cartersville, and R. C. Strudwick, of Greensboro, for appellees.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1, 2] The nonsuit requires us to consider the evidence in the most favorable view for the plaintiff. Plaintiff contends that he acted upon the representation of W. H. Field that J. D. Turner was the broker of defendants, and therefore fully authorized to make contracts for the sale of cotton in their behalf, and that he was dealing with Turner as agent, and not in his individual capacity, and relied upon the statement of W. H. Field that he could so deal in the future. The rule in regard to agency may be thus stated: A principal is bound by the acts of his agent within the authority he has actually given him, which includes not only the precise act which he expressly authorizes him to do, but also whatever usually belongs to the doing of it, or is necessary to its performance. Beyond that he is liable for the acts of the agent within the appearance of authority which the principal himself knowingly permits the agent to assume, or which he holds the agent out to the public as possessing. For the acts of his agent, within his express authority, the principal is liable because the act of the agent is the act of the principal. For the acts of the agent, within the scope of his authority he holds the agent out as having, or knowingly permits him to assume, the principal is made responsible because to permit him to dispute the authority of the agent in such cases would be to enable him to commit a fraud upon innocent persons. Bank v. Hay, 143 N. C. 326, 55 S. E. 811; Law v. Stokes, 32 N. J. Law, 249, 90 Am. Dec. 655; Mechem on Agency, § 84. "The principal is bound by all the acts of his agent within the scope of the authority which he holds him out to the world to possess, although he may have given him more limited private instructions, unknown to the persons dealing with him; and this is founded on the doctrine that where one of two persons must suffer by the act of a third person, he who has held that person out as worthy of trust and confidence, and as having authority in the matter, shall be bound by it. Carmichael v. Buck, 10 Rich. (S. C.) 332, 70 Am. Dec. 226; Story on Agency, § 127. "Where a person by words or conduct represents or permits it to be represented that another person is his agent, he will be estopped to deny the agency, as against third persons who have dealt, on the faith of such representation, with the person so held out as agent, even if no agency existed in fact." Trollinger v. Fleer, 157 N. C. 81, 72 S. E. 795; Metzger v. Whitehurst, 147 N. C. 171, 60 S. E. 907. These cases fairly illustrate this doctrine and define its limits. As to the liability of a principal acting through a broker, see 19 Cyc. 292. The court, in this case, when formerly here (160 N. C. 335, 76 S. E. 251), stated the duties of a broker and the nature of his agency.

[3, 4] The case may be considered in two aspects: (1) Was Turner in fact acting as defendant's broker in the transaction? (2) Did defendants, by W. H. Field, induce the plaintiff to believe that Turner had authority to represent them in selling their cotton, and thereby lead him to make the order for the 100 bales, he believing, and having reason to believe, under the circumstances, that they were selling, not to Turner for himself, but through him to the plaintiff? If the jury should find that Turner was really acting as agent or broker for the defendants, they would be liable for the damages sustained by the plaintiffs, for the defendants would, in such case, be the principals, and the acts of Turner, though in his own name, would be imputable to them as much so as if they had acted for themselves, instead of by representation. The form of the transaction is not material. Holt v. Wellons, 79 S. E. 450 at this term. We think there was evidence to support either of these theories. In the first place, the plaintiff testifies, without qualification, that "he got the cotton from the defendants through Turner," and thus he did precisely what W. H. Field told him to do. It also appears that Turner told the plaintiff that he had succeeded in getting the cotton for them from defendants. In the letter of confirmation it is stated that "the sale was made for the account of J. E. Field & Son," and Turner opens his letter by saying: "We hereby confirm the sale, and request plaintiff, in case of any reference to the order, to give our order number." Plaintiff might well argue, and the jury be authorized to find, that Turner, by the use of this language, was not referring merely to himself, but to Field & Co., or to them, and to himself as their agent. Turner knew of the conversation that W. H. Field had with the plaintiff, for he was present, and it might reasonably be inferred by the jury that, as he had not disavowed his agency, or notified plaintiff to the contrary, up to the time of the purchase, he was acting for them in accordance with the understanding at the April meeting. The plaintiff testified that cotton is very often shipped to the order of a bank cashier or some clerk in a merchant's office. The name on the bill of lading is disregarded—they look for the shipper of the cotton and the indorsement on the bill. This was an explanation of the form of the bill of lading, and a reason why the request to notify J. D. Turner of the shipment did not necessarily disprove his agency, or establish the fact that defendants were dealing with him as a principal in the transaction and as a purchaser of the cotton, and its consignee, on his own account. If by the conduct of W. H. Field, or the defendants the plaintiff was reasonably led to believe that Turner was acting as their broker, and by reason thereof he dealt with him as such, relying upon such conduct and believing in good faith that Turner was acting as broker and not for himself, it would be the same as if he was, in fact, the broker of defendants in selling the cotton. The jury may consider whether Turner was in fact defendants' broker, and in the bill of lading they requested that he be notified individually of the shipment, merely for their convenience or in accordance with the custom, or whether they thereby intended to deal with him individually, and not as their broker, or whether they used his name, meaning that he should be their broker, without regard to the fact that he was not addressed as such, and knowing that he had been so represented to the plaintiff. These are merely suggestions as to the different views of the evidence, and must not be taken as an intimation upon the weight or sufficiency of the same to establish either side of the case.

It would serve no practical purpose to further consider the evidence as bearing upon the question of an agency in fact or in law. It is sufficient to say that, as the case is now presented to us, there is evidence fit to be submitted to the jury and to warrant a finding thereon in favor of the plaintiff, under proper instructions from the court as to the law.

There was error in granting the nonsuit. It will be set aside, and a new trial is ordered.

New trial.

MOTT v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 5, 1913.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 381*)—PASSENGERS—ACTION FOR EJECTION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in a railroad passenger's action for wrongful ejection, held to show that plaintiff was ejected at a place forbidden by statute, and after the conductor had accepted and retained his ticket.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1473-1476, 1479-1482; Dec. Dig. § 381.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 363*)—PASSENGERS—WRONGFUL EJECTION—RIGHT OF ACTION.

A railroad passenger who is ejected at a place forbidden by statute, at a point  $3\frac{1}{2}$  miles from a station, and where no one lived, on the ground of nonpayment of his fare, may recover damages as for wrongful ejection.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1445, 1446; Dec. Dig. § 363.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 355*)—PASSENGERS—WRONGFUL EJECTION.

A railroad passenger may recover damages for wrongful ejection where he was ejected for not paying his fare after the conductor had accepted and retained his ticket.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1416-1422; Dec. Dig. § 355.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Columbus County; Ferguson, Judge.

Action by W. T. Mott against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This is an action to recover damages for the wrongful ejection of the plaintiff from the defendant's train.

According to the plaintiff's evidence, he bought a ticket from the defendant's agent at Wilmington, N. C., on the 20th of April, 1905, for his passage from Wilmington to Farmers, N. C., on defendant's road. That he boarded the train at Wilmington on that date, and before he reached Farmers he went to sleep, and did not get off the train there because he was asleep. That he had on that day been discharged from the hospital, and took the train to go to his father's, who lived at Farmers. After the train passed Farmers, the conductor came to him about the time the train reached Hallsboro station, and said: "Your ticket read Farmers. Why didn't you get off there?" That he told the conductor he was asleep, and did not know when he reached Farmers. Conductor told plaintiff that he would have to pay his fare or get off the train. The plaintiff told the conductor, "He guessed he would have to carry him until he met the next train, and bring him back to Farmers." When the train reached Whiteville, plaintiff got off, and bought a ticket from Whiteville to Cerro Gordo; got back on train to go to Cerro Gordo, where he lived. After the plaintiff boarded the train, the conductor came through to take up tickets. Plaintiff gave conductor his ticket bought at Whiteville; conductor punched it, and put it in his pocket. Conductor came back, and said, "Now, if you don't pay your fare from Farmers to Whiteville, I will put you off the train." The plaintiff refused to pay fare from Farmers to Whiteville. Conductor then said he would keep ticket for a part of fare from Farmers to Whiteville. Conductor had train stopped, and put plaintiff off train about  $3\frac{1}{2}$  miles from Whiteville, where there were no houses, and no people living, and no depot or station. Plaintiff asked conductor to let him go in the baggage car and get his bicycle, in order that he might not be forced to walk to the next station, which the conductor refused to do. Plaintiff had to walk from where he was put off the train to Chadbourn, a distance of  $3\frac{1}{2}$  miles. The plaintiff came to Whiteville the next day, and went to the railroad agent, and asked him if he had record of the ticket he bought the day before. It is 14 miles from Whiteville to Cerro Gordo. Plaintiff was not drunk, but had taken a drink. Plaintiff was the only witness offered in his own behalf. At the close of the plaintiff's evidence the defendant moved, under section 539 of the Revisal of 1905, for judgment as in case of nonsuit. Motion overruled. Defendant excepted.

His honor charged the jury, among other things: "If the jury find from the greater weight of the evidence that the plaintiff, after purchasing this ticket at Whiteville, got back on the same train at Whiteville, and gave the conductor this ticket for his passage on from Whiteville to Cerro Gordo, and the conductor took the ticket, and then demanded of the plaintiff his fare from Farmers to Whiteville, and the conductor stopped the train and put plaintiff off because he refused to pay his fare from Farmers to Whiteville, then the defendant wrongfully ejected the plaintiff from his train, and you should answer the first issue, 'Yes.'" Defendant excepted. There was a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed.

Geo. B. Elliott, A. C. Chalmers, and Davis & Davis, all of Wilmington, and Schulken, Toon & Schulken, of Whiteville, for appellant. Jackson Greer and Lewis & Lyon, all of Whiteville, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. There is ample evidence to sustain the plaintiff's cause of action, and we find no error in the trial.

[1-3] The verdict establishes the fact that the plaintiff was ejected from the train at a place forbidden by statute, and after the conductor had accepted and retained his ticket, and upon either ground the judgment should be affirmed.

No error.

CLARK, C. J. (concurring). The complaint alleges that on April 20, 1905, the plaintiff bought a ticket at Whiteville for Cerro Gordo, and was put off the train halfway between Whiteville and Chadbourn at a place where there were no houses or people living near by, and which was not a usual stopping place; that he had a bicycle in the baggage coach, which he asked to get, that he might ride to the next station,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  miles off; that this was refused, and he had to walk to said station, where he got a conveyance to take him home to Cerro Gordo. These allegations were not contradicted by any evidence. The defendant relied on the defense set up in the answer that the plaintiff had bought a ticket that day at Wilmington on the same train to Farmers, 14 miles from Wilmington; that he did not get off at Farmers, and the conductor permitted him to go on 32 miles further to Whiteville, where he got off, and purchased the ticket to Cerro Gordo; that after the train left Whiteville the conductor demanded the fare from Farmers to Whiteville, and, being refused, he put the plaintiff off, stopping the train to do so.

The plaintiff's evidence is that when he got to Farmers he was asleep; but he admits that he was drinking some, and left a quart of liquor on the train when he was put off. He says that the conductor carried him on to Whiteville, because he insisted he should be carried on to meet the next train going back to Farmers. He further testified that the conductor took up his ticket from Whiteville to Cerro Gordo, punched it, and put it in his pocket, and then, after going a few feet, returned and told him that he must pay the fare from Farmers to Whiteville or he would put him off; that he had no money to do this, and the conductor put him off. The conductor says that he did not take up the ticket, but that he demanded full pay from Farmers to Cerro Gordo, and put him off because it was not paid. The conductor says that he first discovered that the plaintiff had overpassed his station at Hallsboro, which was seven miles west of Farmers, but that he carried him on to Whiteville, and told him to get off there.

The court charged the jury that, if "the plaintiff got off the train and bought a ticket of defendant's agent at Whiteville for passage to Cerro Gordo, that this was a new contract, which entitled the plaintiff to travel on defendant's train to Cerro Gordo, and that, if the jury should find from the greater weight of evidence that the conductor took up this ticket, and then afterwards demanded of the plaintiff his fare from Farmers to Whiteville, and, on his failure to pay the same, the conductor stopped the train, and ejected the plaintiff, the jury should answer the first issue, 'Yes.'" This seems to be the only controverted fact, and the jury responded, "Yes."

The defendant requires payment of fare in advance. Whether the plaintiff passed the station at Farmers because he was asleep, as he says, or because he was drunk or shamming, as the defendant contends, when the conductor ascertained at Hallsboro, the next station, as he says he did, that the plaintiff was still on the train, it was his duty then and there to require him to leave, and this controversy would not have arisen. That he permitted the plaintiff to ride to Whiteville, 32 miles beyond Farmers, constituted a debt from plaintiff to the company, unless, as the plaintiff seems to contend, this was done because proper notice was not given at Farmers, and the conductor allowed him to come on to meet the train going back to Farmers.

The defendant relies upon Pickens v. Railroad, 104 N. C. 312, 10 S. E. 556. In that case the court held that, when a passenger refuses to pay his fare, and the conductor is forced to stop the train at a station where it would otherwise not have stopped regularly, thus causing delay, the conductor may refuse the tender of the fare, unless it is made before the passenger puts him to the trouble of stopping. The court then adds: "When the passenger gets off at a regular depot, and gets a ticket, this constitutes a new contract, and will entitle him to passage—certainly if he tenders the money due for a passage up to that point, and according to some authorities without such tender." The defendant quotes Manning v. Railroad, 95 Ala. 392, 11 South. 8, 16 L. R. A. 55, 36 Am. St. Rep. 225, where the court held that the conductor was not required to accept the ticket unless the passenger tendered the back fare. On the contrary, in Railroad v. Bryan, 90 Ill. 126, the court held: "If the company could debar appellee from traveling on that trip for such reason, it could do so on any subsequent trip." But we do not need to pass on this point in this case, for the jury find that the conductor accepted the ticket.

The train was not stopped at Whiteville to put the plaintiff off as in the Pickens Case. On the contrary, he got off when the train stopped at the regular station, and bought the ticket which entitled him to be carried to Cerro Gordo, and the jury find that the conductor accepted the ticket. He was rightfully on the train, and hence his ejection was wrongful. The ejection was also wrongful, if it had otherwise been rightful, because the plaintiff was put off (his bicycle, which was in the baggage car, being also refused him) at a place which was not a "usual stopping place, nor near any dwelling house." This is forbidden by Rev. 2629. These facts are alleged in the complaint, and the testimony of the plaintiff to that effect is not controverted.

The Constitution, art. 4, § 8, gives this court "general supervision and control over the proceedings of the inferior courts." We should not, therefore, pass over without notice the fact that it appears in this record that the occurrence, which is the foundation of this action, took place April 20, 1905, and, though the summons was issued August 9, 1905, this appeal comes up from a trial in April, 1913, a delay of eight years. Such delays bring reproach upon the administration of justice, costs accumulate, and the memory of witnesses becomes dim. We recently had an appeal from that section of the state which had been pending 15 years; but in that instance there had been four trials. So far as the record shows, this case has remained on docket without action and accumulating costs for eight years. Judges of the trial courts should not permit causes to remain on docket, unacted on, for an inexcusable length of time. They should require causes to be tried or dismissed, unless there is good cause which cannot exist for such an unreasonable length of time.

No error.

STATE v. SPEAR.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 5, 1913.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 191*)—CONVICTION OF LESSER OFFENSES.

A person indicted for the capital offense of burglary may be convicted of an offense under Revisal 1906, § 3333, providing that any person breaking or entering a dwelling house of another otherwise than by a burglarious breaking, or breaking and entering a storehouse or other building where personal property shall be, or breaking and entering any uninhabited house, with intent to commit a felony or other infamous crime, shall be guilty of a felony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 265, 604-621; Dec. Dig. § 191.*]

2. BURGLARY (§ 3*)—OFFENSES—INTENT.

Under Revisal 1906, § 3333, providing that, "if any person shall break or enter a dwelling house of another otherwise than by a burglarious breaking; or shall break and enter a storehouse * * * or other building where any * * * personal property shall be; or shall break and enter any uninhabited house, with intent to commit a felony," he shall be guilty of a felony, the criminal purpose specified is not confined to the last substantive clause of the statute, but attaches to all of the clauses thereof, in view of the comma following the words "uninhabited house."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Burglary, Cent. Dig. §§ 24-27; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

3. BURGLARY (§ 47*) — VERDICT — CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

A verdict finding accused guilty of house-breaking with no intent to commit a felony amounted to a verdict of acquittal, and accused should therefore have been discharged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Burglary, Cent. Dig. § 121; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

Clark, C. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; Lane, Judge.

Walter Spear was found guilty of house-breaking without intent to commit a felony, and from a judgment of conviction entered on the verdict, he appeals. Reversed.

This was indictment for capital offense of burglary, tried before his honor, H. P. Lane, judge, and a jury at July term, 1913, of the superior court of Forsyth county. There was evidence on the part of the state tending to support the charge as made. Evidence contra on part of defendant. The court, among other things, charged the jury that on the bill of indictment and testimony they could render either of three verdicts: (1) Guilty of burglary in the first degree; (2) guilty of breaking and entering the dwelling house of another otherwise than by burglarious breaking (Revisal, § 3333); (3) not guilty. The jury rendered the following verdict: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of housebreaking, with no intent to commit a felony. The jury especially asks the mercy of the court." On the verdict there was motion to discharge prisoner as on verdict of acquittal. Motion overruled, and defendant excepted. His honor being of opinion that the verdict as rendered amounted to a conviction of the second offense under section 3333, Revisal, sentenced the prisoner to 12 months on the public roads, and defendant excepted and appealed.

Watson, Buxton & Watson, of Winston-Salem, for appellant. The Attorney General and T. H. Calvert, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1, 2] Section 3333 of the Revisal is in the following words, etc.: "If any person shall break or enter a dwelling house of another otherwise than by a burglarious breaking; or shall break and enter a storehouse, shop, warehouse, banking house, counting house, or other building, where any merchandise, chattel, money, valuable security, or other personal property shall be; or shall break and enter any uninhabited house, with intent to commit a felony or other infamous crime therein; every such person shall be guilty of a felony, and imprisoned in the state's prison or county jail not less than four months, nor more than ten years." So far as the form is concerned, it has been held that under an indictment charging the capital crime of burglary a conviction may be had of the offense constituted and described in this section of the Revisal, and the question presented by this appeal is on the proper significance of the verdict rendered by the jury. This same law is in the Code of 1883, § 996, except that in the clause in section 996, "Or shall break and enter any uninhabited house; with intent to commit a felony or other infamous crime therein"—there is a semicolon between the words "uninhabited house" and the words "with intent to commit a felony," instead of a comma, the divisional pause in the present law. Construing the law as it appeared in section 996 of the Code, the court has expressly held that the "intent to commit a felony or other infamous crime" was an essential ingredient of the offense (State v. Christmas, 101 N. C. 749, 8 S. E. 361; State v. McBryde, 97 N. C. 393, 1 S. E. 925), and we are of opinion that a like construction should prevail in reference to the present statute. If the Legislature had intended that the criminal purpose specified should be confined to the last substantive clause of the statute, to wit, the "breaking into an uninhabited house," there was no occasion for a pause of any kind between these words and the criminal intent which follows; as a matter of strict interpretation a comma as well as a semicolon would serve to prevent such a meaning, and to attach the intent to all of the former clauses of the section. And if there were doubt about this as a mere matter of punctuation, the character of the offense and serious nature of the punishment would impel the court to its present conclusion. This section of the Revisal is grouped with the crime of burglary and other kindred offenses in which the technical "breaking" may be effected by lifting a latch or the turning of a knob, the house being otherwise closed (Clark's Criminal Law [2d Ed.] p. 262), and it cannot be that the Legislature had any purpose to make it a felony where a wayfarer or a neighbor had so entered an unlocked shop or warehouse, seeking shelter from a storm or other hindrance.

Again the first portion of this section is in the disjunctive, "If any one shall break or enter the dwelling house of another," the design evidently being to afford greater protection to the dwelling, and to hold such an entry a crime in itself, detached from the felonious intent in the later clause of the law, would make it a criminal offense to enter the dwelling of another for the most innocent purpose, even to make a social call. It is clear, therefore, that the present statute should receive the same construction as the former; that the crime is only committed when the houses designated are entered or broken into "with intent to commit a felony or other infamous crime therein," and the verdict of the jury, having negatived this, an essential feature of the crime, amounts to a verdict of not guilty.

[3] It was not controverted on the argument for the state that this was the proper construction of the statute, but it was insisted that the verdict of the jury was irresponsible and insensate, and, this being true, that the prisoner should be held for further trial on the present bill.

In Clark's Criminal Procedure, p. 486, it is said: "A verdict is not bad for informality or clerical errors in the language of it, if it is such that it can be clearly seen what is intended. It is to have a reasonable intentment, and it is to receive a reasonable construction, and must not be avoided except from necessity."

As far back as 7 N. C. 571, State v. Jno. Arrington, this principle was applied to a case where a defendant was indicted for horse stealing, and "the jury returned a verdict that the prisoner was not guilty of the felony and horse stealing, but guilty of a trespass. The trial court desired them to reconsider their verdict and say guilty or not guilty, and no more, and the jury thereupon retired and returned a verdict of guilty generally," and the Supreme Court on appeal ordered that the first finding of the jury be recorded as their verdict and the prisoner discharged, and in that case it was held, further, "that whenever a prisoner in term or effect, is acquitted by the jury the verdict as returned by them should be recorded." This decision was referred to in terms of approval in State v. Godwin, 138 N. C. 586, 50 S. E. 277, and was again directly applied in the subsequent case of State v. Whisenant, 149 N. C. 515, 63 S. E. 91. In the present case, the jury having expressly negatived the existence of any criminal intent on the part of the prisoner, and this, as we have seen, being an essential constituent of the offense charged, it must be held as the correct deduction from these decisions that the verdict is one of acquittal, and the motion of the prisoner for his discharge should have been allowed.

We have been referred to State v. Hooker, 145 N. C. 582, 59 S. E. 866, as an authority directly opposed to our present position, but an examination of that case will disclose that this is not necessarily true. In Hooker's Case, the defendant had been acquitted on an indictment for larceny of certain goods, and he was then tried on a bill for breaking into a store with intent to steal the goods, and was convicted. On appeal the question chiefly presented was whether the defendant's plea of former acquittal should be allowed by reason of the first verdict. The plea was held bad on the ground that these were two entirely separate and distinct offenses, and the acquittal of one was therefore no bar to the prosecution of the other. Having rested the decision on that ground, there was no cause to further construe the statute, and the portion of the opinion saying that the words of the present statute "with intent to commit a felony or other infamous crime therein" should only apply to a breaking into an uninhabited house may "well be considered as obiter dictum." As an authoritative construction of the statute the position is not approved.

Reversed.

CLARK, C. J. (dissenting). Revisal, § 3269, provides: "Upon the trial of any indictment the prisoner may be convicted of the crime charged therein, or of a less degree of the same kind, or of an attempt to commit the crime so charged or of an attempt to commit a less degree of the same kind."

Revisal, § 3333 under the subtitle "Burglary" provides: "If any person shall break or enter a dwelling house of another otherwise than by a burglarious breaking; or shall break and enter a storehouse, shop, warehouse, banking house, counting house, or other building, where any merchandise, chattel, money, valuable security, or other personal property shall be; or shall break and enter any uninhabitable house, with intent to commit a felony or other infamous crime therein; every such person shall be guilty of a felony." It will thus be seen that this section denounces three distinct classes of offenses, which classes are separated appropriately by a semicolon. Each of these offenses is a lesser degree of the offense of burglary being found, as stated in the subtitle appropriated to that offense. Clark, Cr. Law, 269.

The jury for their verdict found the defendant "guilty of housebreaking, with no intent to commit a felony." This brings the offense exactly under the second class of offenses marked out in section 3333, in which no intent to commit a felony is required. State v. Hooker, 145 N. C. 581, 59 S. E. 866. The verdict distinguishes this offense from the first class of offenses in Revisal, § 3333, by its not being termed a "dwelling house," and distinguishes it from the third class of offenses, which embrace only breaking into "an uninhabited house with intent to commit a felony." The verdict is therefore clearly a conviction of the offense of breaking into a house without such intent, which constitutes the second class of offenses, above set out.

Under section 3269 this being a less degree of the crime, the defendant was properly convicted upon the evidence, under the charge for burglary. State v. Fleming, 107 N. C. 909, 12 S. E. 131. So it has been held that under an indictment for murder the conviction can be of murder in the first degree, of murder in the second degree, of manslaughter, of an assault and battery, or even of a simple assault. State v. Fleming, supra. Indeed under an indictment for burglary the prisoner can be convicted of larceny. State v. Grisham, 2 N. C. 13; State v. Allen, 11 N. C. 356. These decisions were at common law, and before the passage of our present statute. Revisal, § 3269.

Indeed this very case has already been decided in State v. Hooker, 145 N. C. 581, 59 S. E. 866, where the court held that the offenses charged in the second class of section 3333, under which this verdict comes, if the words "with intent to commit larceny" were inserted, they were "surplusage" because "unnecessary to be proven," and any proof offered of such intent was merely "irrelevant and harmless." It follows, therefore, that the jury, finding "no intent to commit a felony," cannot vitiate the verdict when the verdict would be good on a charge for this offense even if the indictment had contained those words and insufficient proof of intent was offered. This for the very simple reason that the offense of "breaking and entering a house" is complete without any felonious intent. It follows, therefore, that a verdict of "guilty of housebreaking," adding "with no intent to commit a felony," is simply finding every element that the subsection charges to constitute the crime. This addition to the verdict is the merest surplusage, and neither the judge below nor jury are chargeable with a miscarriage of justice in turning loose a man found "guilty of housebreaking." As construed by the court, it is no offense in this state to unlawfully and willfully "break and enter the dwelling of another otherwise than by burglarious breaking," or to "break and enter any other house where there is valuable property," without showing further that there was an intent to commit a felony therein, which is not easy to show, and which the law does not require to be shown. The statute as written, Revisal, § 3333, requires such intent only when there is the otherwise comparatively harmless act of breaking and entering an uninhabited house.

POWELL v. STRICKLAND.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 6, 1913.)

1. WITNESSES (§ 58*)—COMPETENCY—EVIDENCE BY HUSBAND—ALIENATION OF AFFECTIONS.

Revisal 1906, § 1628, requires every person offered as a witness to be admitted to give evidence, though he has an interest in the matter or event of the trial. Section 1629 prohibits the exclusion of a witness on account of interest in the event of the action. Section 1630 provides that the parties themselves and persons for whom the suit is brought or defended shall be competent to give evidence, provided that this section shall not apply to any action instituted because of adultery, or in any action for criminal conversation. Section 1636 makes a husband and wife of a party competent to testify, provided that husband or wife shall not be rendered competent to give evidence "for or against each other in any criminal action," or in any proceeding brought in consequence of adultery, or for divorce on account of adultery, or any action of criminal conversation. Held, that the husband was competent to testify, in an action by him for alienation of affections, as to his wife's adultery with defendant, she not being a party; the policy of the statutes being to make the husband and wife incompetent when the evidence of either will, in a legal sense only, prejudice the other.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 159½-162, 164; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

2. STATUTES (§ 225*)—CONSTRUCTION—RELATED STATUTES.

Statutes which relate to the same subject should be construed together.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 302, 303; Dec. Dig. § 225.*]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 70*)—JUDICIAL FUNCTIONS—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES.

The Supreme Court cannot make the law, but can only construe statutes as they are enacted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 129-132, 137; Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

4. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 333*)—ALIENATION OF AFFECTIONS—PROOF.

Adultery need not be shown by direct proof, in an action for alienation of affections, but may be shown by circumstances from which a jury may reasonably infer it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 1124; Dec. Dig. § 333.*]

5. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 333*)—ALIENATION OF AFFECTIONS—ACTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in an action for the alienation of the affections of plaintiff's wife, held to sustain a finding of adultery committed by defendant and plaintiff's wife.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 1124; Dec. Dig. § 333.*]

6. TRIAL (§ 123*)—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL—COMMENT ON WITNESSES—FAILURE TO TESTIFY.

Where, in an action for alienation of affections, the defendant's conduct with plaintiff's wife tended to point to improper relations, defendant's failure to testify in explanation thereof was a proper subject of comment by counsel and consideration by the jury on the question of improper relations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 801; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

7. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 326*)—ALIENATION OF AFFECTIONS—DEFENSES.

The consent of plaintiff's wife to her own defilement by defendant is not a defense to an action by the husband for alienation of affections.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 1120; Dec. Dig. § 326.*]

8. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 334*)—ALIENATION OF AFFECTIONS—DAMAGES.

In an action by a husband for alienation of his wife's affections, the jury should consider, in awarding compensatory damages therefor, plaintiff's dishonor, the alienation of his wife's affections, and destruction of his domestic comfort, the suspicion cast on the offspring, humiliation, loss of consortium, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 1125; Dec. Dig. § 334.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Index

9. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 834*)—ALIENATION OF AFFECTIONS—PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

The jury in their sound discretion may award punitive damages, in an action for alienation of affections, if defendant's conduct be willful and wanton.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 1125; Dec. Dig. § 834.*]

10. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 334*)—ALIENATION OF AFFECTIONS—EVIDENCE—PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

Evidence, in an action for alienation of the affections of plaintiff's wife, held to sustain an award of punitive damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 1125; Dec. Dig. § 334.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Franklin County; Cline, Judge.

Action by N. P. Powell against A. T. Strickland. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The action was to recover damages for criminal conversation with plaintiff's wife and the alienation of her affections.

W. H. Yarborough and Spruill & Holden, all of Louisburg, for appellant. Bickett, White & Malone and W. M. Person, all of Louisburg, for appellee.

WALKER, J. [1] This appeal, in one aspect of it, involves the competency of a husband to testify as a witness in his own behalf to the adultery of his wife with the defendant; she, of course, not being a party to the record. It is well known that, at common law, parties to and persons interested in the event of an action were not permitted to testify, nor could the husband or wife testify for or against each other, except in certain cases not necessary to be mentioned. But this has been changed radically by modern legislation, under the wise and skillful leadership of Pitt Taylor, Lord Denman, and Lord Brougham, the law reformers of the last century, and the results of their work (14 and 15 Vict. c. 99; 16 and 17 Vict. c. 83) have become a part of the statute law of this country in one form or another. It would be vain and unprofitable to attempt any discussion of the authorities in other jurisdictions in regard to the true meaning and extent of this sweeping change in the law of evidence as it existed at the common law, because the statutes are so variant in their terms and phraseology that each must be considered and weighed according to its own peculiar tenor. Close examination of the cases elsewhere has led us, therefore, to conclude that little aid in the construction of our law can be derived from them. We therefore turn to our statutes, and former decisions construing them, for a solution of the question raised by the objection of defendant to the testimony of his adversary. By Revisal, § 1628, "incapacity" or disqualification to testify by reason of interest or crime is removed, and every person who is offered as a witness shall be "admitted to give evidence, notwithstanding such person may or shall have an interest in the matter in question, or in the event of the trial of the issue, or of the suit or other proceeding in which he is offered as a witness. This section shall not be construed to apply to witnesses to wills." Section 1629 provides that no person shall be excluded as a witness on account of interest in the event of the action. By section 1630 parties themselves, and persons in whose behalf the suit or proceeding is brought or defended, shall be competent and compellable to give evidence, according to the practice of the court, in behalf of either or any of the parties to said suit or proceeding, provided, that the section shall not be considered to apply to any action or other proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery, or to any action for criminal conversation. Section 1636 makes husband and wife of any party to an action or proceeding competent and compellable to testify on behalf of any party to such action or proceeding; but nothing therein contained shall render husband or wife competent or compellable to give evidence for or against each other in any criminal action or proceeding or in any action or proceeding brought in consequence of adultery, or for divorce on account of adultery, nor in any action or proceeding for or on account of criminal conversation. We have omitted so much of the sections as are irrelevant to the case.

It was early held, in Sumner v. Candler, 92 N. C. 634 (opinion by Justice Ashe), that by section 342 of the Code of Civil Procedure, section 589 of the Code (being sections 1628 and 1629 of the Revisal of 1905), that a party to an action has become competent to testify in the courts because of those sections, the disqualification by reason of interest in the suit or its event having been abolished, and this, too, without any aid from the other two sections, and the question is whether, by the succeeding sections, this capacity to testify has, in any way, been qualified. Section 1630 was intended to provide that parties to actions should be competent and compellable to testify "for and against each other," and the proviso was inserted to prevent husband and wife from testifying "for or against each other" in suits to which they are parties, and which are based upon charges of adultery, or where the party for or against whom the testimony is given has a legal interest in the cause or its event, as will hereafter appear.

[2] We rest our decision upon the broad and practical view hitherto taken by this court with reference to the true meaning of these statutes, so as to execute the manifest intention of the Legislature, and open the doors to a certain class of evidence heretofore excluded or barred out, and relax the rigorous rules of the common law, which often worked injustice, if not oppression, by excluding the truth in deference to a mere sentiment. These sections should be construed together, as they relate to the same subject—the competency of witnesses. The trend of our decisions has been to admit the husband and wife as witnesses, unless, in a legal sense, they testified “for or against each other” within the meaning of the provisions to the sections, and it has been expressly held that a husband does not testify for or against his wife if she is not a party to the record, and has no legal interest in the action or its event, that is, no interest that can, by the rules of law, be affected thereby. A sentimental interest is not sufficient for the exclusion of the testimony of one of the spouses; but it must be a legal interest, and it has been further held that, where one is accused of adultery with the wife, who is not a party to the record, the husband is a competent witness to prove the adultery, as neither the evidence nor the judgment can thereafter be used against her. State v. Wiseman, 130 N. C. 728, 41 S. E. 884 (opinion by Clark, J.); State v. Guest, 100 N. C. 410, 6 S. E. 253; State v. Parrott, 79 N. C. 613; State v. McDowell, 101 N. C. 734, 7 S. E. 785. It is true that in those cases neither the husband nor the wife was a party to the record; but why is it any less against public policy, or any other reason which condemned this kind of evidence at common law, to admit it when the spouses are not parties than when only one of them is, and the other is not, legally affected by the evidence? The one tends just as much to cause dissension and discord between them as the other, and the mere fact that one of them is a party to the record, and the other is not, does not lessen the danger of an unhappy breach. If they are not testifying “for or against each other,” there is no reason grounded in public policy, as declared now by the statute, why they should not be heard. Suppression of the truth and exclusion of the light would be far more impolitic and dangerous to society and the public than the admission of such testimony. The Legislature seems to have thought so, and hence the radical change from the antiquated rule of the common law. The law was seeking after the truth, and at the same time retaining the real and essential principle of public policy, so far as necessary for the good of society in preserving peace and harmony in the family and the sacred confidences of the marriage state. But it was not deemed wise for the accomplishment of this purpose to exclude either spouse when the other is not a party to the record, and therefore not legally affected by it, or when neither is such a party.

[3] Examining the cases we have cited a little more closely, we find that in State v. Wiseman, supra, the wife and her paramour were indicted for fornication and adultery; a nol. pros. was entered as to the wife, and the husband permitted to testify against the remaining defendant, and reference is made to Code, § 588 (Revisal, § 1636), as qualifying the husband and wife to testify, provided neither is allowed to be a witness “for or against the other” in the cases enumerated in the final clause of that section. In State v. Guest, supra, the wife pleaded guilty, and was then permitted to testify against the other defendant as to her adultery with him. In McDowell's Case, supra, the defendant was charged with bastardy, and the court held that, while the wife could not prove nonaccess, or formerly, impotency (Barringer v. Barringer, 69 N. C. 179), “she could testify to the criminal intercourse with defendant of which the child was the offspring, and now (since the enabling statutes), as she is not testifying for or against” her husband, she is a competent witness under section 588 of Code (Revisal, § 1636) to testify in any “suit, action, or proceeding, except as stated in the said section.” In Parrott's Case, supra, two were indicted for an affray, or a mutual assault and battery, in separate bills of indictment, and it was held that the wife of one of them was a competent witness for or against the other on his trial, as “the husband was in no legal sense interested in the result”; Chief Justice Smith, for the court, stating that they knew of no rule of law which excluded the husband, the conviction of White not being, in legal effect, the conviction of Parrott—and the same was decided in State v. Mooney, 64 N. C. 54 (opinion by Justice Settle), and for the same reason. See, also, State v. Phipps, 76 N. C. 203, cited with approval in State v. Guest, supra, as establishing the same general rule. In the Phipps Case, the court says: “The policy of legislation leading to this result is a matter for the (exclusive) consideration of the Legislature. The court can only declare the law as it finds it.” It cannot legislate or make the law. The policy as thus fixed by the only competent body may be very unwise and unsalutary; but our only duty is to submit to it.

We see, then, very clearly what this policy is, viz.: To exclude husband and wife when the evidence of either will, in a legal sense, prejudice the other, and that is not the case here. Neither the testimony of plaintiff nor the judgment in this action can possibly be used against the wife in a prosecution for the adultery. We believe that this single reason for the exclusion of husband and wife, only where the testimony of one will legally affect the other injuriously, permeates the entire body of law on the competency of witnesses, so far as the matrimonial relation is involved. But it has been expressly held, in Barringer v. Barringer, 69 N. C. 179, that the conclusion is irresistible from the language of the statutes, that husbands and wives are incompetent to give evidence only where they testify “for or against each other” in the class of cases specified in the proviso to Code of Civil Procedure, § 841 (Revisal, § 1866), and that, construing that section so as to give full effect to the enacting clause and the proviso, it applies to suits where they alone are parties, as well as to those where a third party is concerned, as in our case, with the restriction imposed by the proviso. And, to the same effect, is Rice v. Keith, 63 N. C. 319. The wife was excluded there because the case was governed by the law which existed before 1868; the court saying: "It is proper to call attention to section 341 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which establishes by express enactment the construction which the defendant contends should be placed upon the act of 1866. And from this we deduce an argument in favor of the conclusion at which we have arrived. The Legislature, in the act of 1868, has used language that leaves no room for doubt, and has introduced a new principle into the law of evidence. But, under the law as it existed before the passage of this act, the evidence of Mrs. Keith was properly rejected." See Bradsher v. Brooks, 71 N. C. 322. We need not assign reasons for the rule of exclusion at the common law, whether it was upon the ground of interest alone, when the testimony is in favor of the spouse, or marital bias, or public policy when it is against, or whether it was because they were considered as two souls in a single body (quis sunt duse animae in carne una), as Sir Edward Coke says (Coke on Littleton, 6 b), for which he has been accused of striking the first false note; nor need we combat the theory that it should be rendered impossible for husband and wife to speculate upon the other's dishonor, relying upon their own testimony to make or support a case. The full, final, and conclusive answer to all of this argument is, "Ita lex scripta est." In Johnson v. Allen, 100 N. C. 131, 5 S. E. 666, evidence of this same character was admitted in a case for criminal conversation, and the court said "it was competent because it tended to show the relations between the plaintiff's wife and the defendant." The objection to the evidence was a general one, and the court overruled it, though incidentally remarking that, while the question was leading, it was, in this aspect, a matter addressed to the judge's discretion, and not reviewable here, as there was no abuse in its exercise. The court took it for granted that the evidence was otherwise competent, for there was not even any discussion of the question as to its competency under the statute, which was clearly involved in the case, and presented by the objection. If the judges had thought there was any doubt about it, they would not have passed it without some discussion.

But Broom v. Broom, 130 N. C. 562, 41 S. E. 673, is very much in point, and even goes beyond the necessities of this case. There, in a divorce suit, the wife was allowed to contradict two witnesses for the plaintiff (her husband), who had testified to her adultery; the court holding that she was not thereby testifying "for or against her husband." It was also held that the prohibition as to the testimony of husband or wife in such cases is not absolute, but restricted to such testimony of the one which is "for or against the other," and this is said by the court to be a wise provision. We cite that case only to show that the testimony must be "for or against" the other spouse. In Grant v. Mitchell, 156 N. C. 15, 71 S. E. 1087, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1119, a criminal conversation case, the wife was excluded because she proposed to testify against her husband, and the court (opinion by Justice Allen) laid stress upon the fact that the test is whether the testimony of the one spouse would be "for or against" the other, as this is the language of the statute. So it was held, in McCall v. Galloway, 162 N. C. —, 78 S. E. 429, that the competency of the spouses depended upon whether they were offered to testify "for or against" each other; Justice Brown saying: "The statute (Revisal, § 1036) removes this disability in certain actions, but specifies those actions in which she cannot testify, and as to the one under consideration 'on account of criminal conversation,' says: 'Nothing herein shall render any husband or wife competent or compellable to give evidence for or against the other, in any action or proceeding on account of criminal conversation.'" It was therefore held that declarations of the wife introduced "as against the husband" were incompetent. Her husband was a party, and for that reason her declarations as to his conduct were, in the sense of the statute, incompetent, as he had a legal interest in the action and its event. We, therefore, hold that plaintiff's testimony was competent. His counsel contended that it was harmless; but we do not think so, though it is not necessary to decide this question, having ruled with him upon the other view of the matter. It may, however, be said that his testimony was material, as he was forging the first link in the chain of circumstances. Perkins v. Perkins, 88 N. C. 40, and especially State v. Baby, 121 N. C. 682, 28 S. E. 490.

[4-6] The defendant contends that there is not sufficient evidence of the alienation of the wife's affections or of the adultery with defendant; but the jury must decide as to its sufficiency to establish the essential facts. If it is meant that there was no evidence to support the allegations, we think that there was some. It is not necessary to show the adultery by direct proof; but circumstances are sufficient for that purpose, if therefrom the jury can reasonably infer the guilt of the parties. State v. Ellason, 91 N. C. 564; State v. Rinehart, 106 N. C. 790, 11 S. E. 512; State v. Chancy, 110 N. C. 507, 14 S. E. 780; State v. Poteet, 30 N. C. 23; State v. Waller and Holfer, 80 N. C. 401; State v. Dukes, 119 N. C. 782, 25 S. E. 786; Burroughs v. Burroughs, 160 N. C. 515, 76 S. E. 478. In this case, it appears by the evidence, that defendant, a married man with a bad character, had been seen at the home of the woman, in the absence of her husband, with his hand familiarly on her person; that he went there several times, in the absence of her husband, and remained there for some hours during his visit; that the woman had gone to his store, after the hands had quit their work for the day, to see him, and left the store with him, on one occasion going out the back door; that the woman had declared that she no longer loved her husband, abandoned him and her children, and refused to live with him, and there were other facts of more or less weight tending to show their close intimacy and her infatuation. The jury have the right to conclude that the conduct of this married man and this married woman, under the circumstances, was not only very suspicious, but had all the earmarks of a guilty intercourse, when taken with the fact that the defendant refused to go upon the stand in his own behalf and explain them, for there was something requiring explanation. His failure to do so was the subject of fair comment (Goodman v. Sapp, 102 N. C. 477, 9 S. E. 483), subject to the judge's control, and this fact could be considered just as in any case where there is a failure to produce a witness shown to be cognizant of the facts. The mere failure to testify, standing alone and without reference to the circumstances, counts for nothing against a party, and the jury should presume nothing against him; but, when he is called upon to explain, the case is different. Hudson v. Jordan, 108 N. C. 10, 12 S. E. 1029, where the party's failure to testify was regarded as a "pregnant circumstance" against him. See, also, notes to above cases in the Anno. Edition.

[7-10] The consent of the wife to her own defilement is no defense to the action (21 Cyc. 1628; Yundt v. Hartunft, 41 Ill. 9; Moore v. Hammons, 119 Ind. 510, 21 N. E. 1111; Sieber v. Pettit, 200 Pa. 58, 49 Atl. 763), since the wrong relates to the injury which the husband sustains by the dishonor of his marriage bed, the alienation of his wife's affections, the destruction of his domestic comfort, the suspicion cast upon the legitimacy of her offspring, the loss of consortium, or the right to conjugal fellowship of his wife, to her company, co-operation, and aid in every conjugal relation, the invasion and deprivation of his exclusive marital rights and privileges, his mental suffering, injured feelings, humiliation, shame, and mortification, caused by the loss of her affections and the disgrace which the tortious acts of defendant have brought or heaped upon him, and which are proximately caused by said wrong (Hale on Damages, p. 99, and note; Johnson v. Allen, 100 N. C. 131, 5 S. E. 666; 21 Cyc. 1628, 1629), and for these results the plaintiff is entitled to recover compensatory damages, as the authorities cited will show. He may also have added by the jury, in their sound discretion, a reasonable sum as punitive, vindictive, or exemplary damages, or smart money, for the willful and wanton conduct of defendant towards him, and these damages though not susceptible of proof at a money standard, may be fixed by the jury in view of all the facts and circumstances. Authorities supra, and Johnston v. Disbrow, 47 Mich. 59, 10 N. W. 79; Mathels v. Mazet, 164 Pa. 580, 30 Atl. 434; Cross v. Grant, 62 N. H. 675, 13 Am. St. Rep. 607. There can scarcely remain a doubt as to the right of the plaintiff to have his compensatory damages, as to the right of the jury, in their discretion, to award punitive damages, under the aggravated circumstances disclosed by the evidence in this case.

The rulings and charge of the court were therefore correct, and no error in the trial has been discovered by us.

No error.

HERRING v. WALLACE LUMBER CO. et al. (Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 5, 1913.)

1. COVENANTS (§ 7*)—EXPRESS COVENANTS—ACCEPTANCE OF DEED CONTAINING COVENANTS BY GRANTEE.

The grantee in a deed poll, containing covenants and stipulations purporting to bind him, becomes bound for their performance, though he does not execute the deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Covenants, Cent. Dig. § 6; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

2. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—COVENANT BY GRANTEE—PERSONS BOUND—ASSIGNEES.

Where a deed conveying standing timber contained a stipulation that the grantee would build a railroad over the grantor's lands, or, in case of failure to do so, pay a specified penalty, an assignee of the grantee's rights under the contract, with full notice and knowledge of its terms, was bound by the covenants therein, since, having received the benefits, it took them subject to the burdens incident thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Cent. Dig. §§ 6-12; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 487*)—ULTRA VIRES CONTRACTS—RELIEF.

Where standing timber was conveyed to a corporation at a reduced price in consideration of its covenant to build a railroad, which it repudiated on the ground that it was ultra vires, the grantor could recover the difference between the contract price and the actual value of the timber.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1898-1899; Dec. Dig. § 487.*]

4. JUDGMENT (§ 252*)—CONFORMITY TO PRAYER FOR RELIEF.

Where a corporation to which standing timber was conveyed at a reduced price in consideration of its agreement to build a railroad repudiated the agreement on the ground that it was ultra vires, the difference between the contract price and the actual value of the timber could be recovered, in an action where all the issuable and relevant facts appeared by the allegations and proof, though the prayer for relief was for judgment for the stipulated penalty for failure to build the railroad, since the prayer for relief was not of the substance, and relief might be awarded according to the facts established.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 441, 442; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sampson County; Allen, Judge.

Action by A. R. Herring against the Wallace Lumber Company and the Cumberland Lumber Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, the Cumberland Company appeals. Affirmed.

The action was instituted to recover a stipulated penalty for failure to build a standard gauge railroad over lands of plaintiff and others from Wallace, N. C., to Delway, N. C.

On a former trial, and, again, on the present trial, there was allegation, with proof, to the effect that on July 8, 1908, plaintiff and other landowners in his neighborhood had bargained the lumber growing on their land to the defendant, the Wallace Lumber Company, and that the said company, in addition to the specified contract prices, had agreed to build over the lands of the grantors a standard gauge railroad to Delway, N. C., and had stipulated, further, that the road should be completed and ready for transportation by March, 1908; that the timber should be hauled out only on said railroad, and, on default in building said railroad, the company should forfeit and pay a sum equal to 10 per cent. of the value of the timber for the first year and 2½ per cent. for the second year, etc.; that subsequently the plaintiff, A. R. Herring, and wife executed their formal deed, conveying the timber to the Wallace Company, with privilege of removing the same within ten years, etc., with the right and privilege of ingress and egress, etc., and of constructing all roads and railroads and tramroads, etc., necessary and required for the proper cutting and removal of the timber, and, with the further intent to express the agreement between the parties, the deed in question contained the following provision: "That the said party of the second part shall construct and build a standard gauge railroad from Wallace, N. C., or a point thereabout, to Delway, N. C., the same to be completed and ready for use and transportation on or before March 15, 1908, and that the trees sold in this deed are not to be removed from the land except by said railroad. In case of failure to construct said railroad within the time specified above, then and in that case the said parties of the second part shall forfeit and pay to the said parties of the first part a sum equal to 10 per cent. of the purchase price of said trees, and for each year thereafter 2½ per cent. additional for five years, or until the ten years expire." It was further proved that the timber had been sold to the company at a reduced price and below its actual value by reason of this provision as to constructing the railroad, and there was evidence tending to show the difference in amount. It further appeared that soon after the execution of this deed the Wallace Company conveyed and assigned to its codefendant, the Cumberland Lumber Company, the timber in question, together with "all the rights, title, and interest to all the standing timber and timber rights, together with all rights of way owned or controlled by the said party of the first part within the counties of Duplin, Sampson, and Pender, and all other rights, privileges, and easements conveyed and contained in the deeds hereinafter set forth, made, and executed to the said party of the first part, and a full description of said rights, easements, rights of way, timber, and timber rights, reference is hereby made to said deeds in the register's office in the said counties of Sampson, Duplin, and Pender"; the deed of plaintiff to the Wallace Company being one of those referred to in the latter instrument.

In their answers, filed separately, both companies deny any and all liability for the stipulated penalty, claiming that the building of a standard gauge railroad is not with the powers conferred by their charters, and also by reason of the inhibitive provisions of section 2598 of the Revisal.

At a former trial of the cause, the superior court judge having intimated an opinion against the right of plaintiff to make recovery, the plaintiff submitted to a nonsuit, and appealed. On such appeal, the ruling of the lower court was reversed, and it was held that, although the stipulation as to building a standard gauge railroad might be ultra vires, and this the court did not decide, when it was made to appear that the purchaser had by reason of such stipulation obtained the timber at a reduced price, if he took advantage of such a position, and the stipulation was availed on that account, the vendor should be allowed to recover for the actual value of the timber sold; the proper measure of damages being the difference between the price paid and such actual value. See opinion of Associate Justice Walker, for the court, 159 N. C. 382,† to which reference is also made for a very full and clear statement of the facts relevant to the questions then presented. This opinion having been certified down, and it having been made to appear that the Wallace Company was no longer existent, having been dissolved in accordance with the provisions of law, the questions at issue occurred on the liability of the Cumberland Company, and in addition the facts admitted of record, the issues were submitted, and verdict rendered thereon as follows:

"(1) What, if any, is the difference between the actual value of the timber conveyed by the plaintiff and the price paid as set out in the deed? Answer: $900.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes
†74 S. E. 1011, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 64.

"(2) Did the Cumberland Lumber Company purchase from the Wallace Manufacturing Company the timber of the plaintiff, with notice of the railroad clause and forfeiture clause set out in the original contract and deed with the Wallace Manufacturing Company? Answer: Yes.

"(3) What amount, if any, are the defendants indebted to the plaintiff? Answer: $900, with interest.

"(4) Is the plaintiff's cause of action set forth in his amended complaint barred by the statute of limitations? Answer: No."

There was judgment on the verdict, and the defendant, the Cumberland Lumber Company, excepted and appealed, assigning for error, chiefly, that, on the facts in evidence, the said company could not be in any way held for failure to construct the railroad.

H. L. Stevens, of Warsaw, for appellant. Geo. E. Butler, of Clinton, and R. L. Herling, of Delway, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] It is very generally held here and elsewhere that the "grantee in a deed poll, containing covenants and stipulations purporting to bind him, becomes bound for their performance, though he does not execute the deed." Maynard v. Moore, 76 N. C. 158, approved in Long v. Swindell, 77 N. C. 181; Fort v. Allen, 110 N. C. 191, 14 S. E. 635; Bank v. Loughran, 122 N. C. 673, 30 S. E. 17; Burbank v. Pillsbury, 48 N. H. 475, 97 Am. Dec. 633; Bowen v. Beck, 94 N. Y. 86, 46 Am. Rep. 124; Easter v. Railway, 14 Ohio St. 48; Ga. So. Ry. v. Reeves, 64 Ga. 492; Spencer's Case, 1 Smith's Lead. Cases (9th Amer. Ed.) pp. 222, 223.

[2] This deed, therefore, from plaintiff and wife to the Wallace Lumber Company, in section VII, contains affirmative stipulation that the grantee shall construct and build a standard gauge railroad to be completed, etc.; that the trees sold in this deed are not to be removed from the land except by said railroad, and, in case of failure, a pecuniary penalty of specified amount is collectible by the grantor, the plaintiff, and the defendant, the Cumberland Lumber Company, having taken an assignment of the entire contract, to wit, "All the rights, title, and interest to all the standing timber and timber, together with all rights of way, etc., and all other rights, privileges, and easements conveyed and contained in said deed," and, being in the present ownership and enjoyment of these rights, etc., must come under the obligations of the covenant, and be held responsible for the liabilities legally and necessarily incident to it. In Norfleet v. Cromwell, 70 N. C. 634, 16 Am. Rep. 787, reported also on a former appeal, 64 N. C. 1, defendant, the grantee of lands draining into a canal, was sued for his pro rata of necessary repairs thereto on a covenant made by defendant's grantor. After holding defendant liable by reason of the covenant being one running with the land, the court, on page 641 of the second appeal, proceeded as follows: "Independently of this, however, there are two arguments which might be out of place in a mere court of law, but which a court of equity is entitled to notice, that must be considered conclusive of the question. (1) The consideration for the covenant was the grant of an easement which became appurtenant to the land, and passed with it to the defendant on his purchase. This easement he has accepted and enjoyed, and it is his only title to drain the land into the canal. The principle is generally conceded, and it is certainly equitable, that, when the benefit and burden of a contract are inseparably connected, both must go together, and liability to the burden is a necessary incident to the right to the benefit. 'Qui sentit commodum sentire debet et onus.' Notes to Spencer's Case, 1 Smith L. C. 143; Savage v. Mason, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 500; Coleman v. Coleman, 19 Pa. 100, 57 Am. Dec. 641." The principle is eminently sound, and has been approved with us in different cases and in other courts of recognized authority. Younce v. Lumber Co., 148 N. C. 34, 61 S. E. 624; Railroad v. Railroad, 147 N. C. 268-385, 61 S. E. 185, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 223, 125 Am. St. Rep. 550, 15 Ann. Cas. 363; Railway v. Bank, 42 Neb. 469, 60 N. W. 886; Smith et al. v. Rogers, 14 Ind. 224.

[3] The present defendant, then, having taken over the contract, with full notice and knowledge of the terms, and being bound by its covenants to build the railroad, as far as this could be effected by agreement between the parties, has elected to repudiate the obligation, and, it having been fully established that this agreement to build the road over the land was allowed substantial effect in reducing the selling price of the timber, under the general equitable principle of indebitatus assumpsit, as stated in our former decision, the defendant should make good the loss which the plaintiff has suffered, to be properly admeasured by the difference between the contract price and the actual values. The rights of the parties have been properly adjusted under these principles, and we find no reason for disturbing the results of the trial. It has been repeatedly held in this state that these contracts, conveying standing timber, are contracts concerning realty, and must be so considered and dealt with in determining the rights of the parties, and, this being true, several of the authorities heretofore cited are to the effect that the covenant in question here is one running with the land (Norfleet v. Cromwell, supra; Ga. Ry. v. Reeves, supra; Burbank v. Pillsbury, supra), and as such binding on the present owner to the extent that the same is lawful whether with or without notice. See, generally, on this subject the well-considered case of Wiggins v. Pender, 132 N. C. 628, 44 S. E. 362, 61 L. R. A. 772. But, it having been clearly established that the Cumberland Company has taken an assignment of the entire contract, with full notice and knowledge of its terms, we rest our decision on the principle that this company, having accepted the benefits of the contract, must also come under its burdens and the legal liabilities incident to them.

[4] We are not unmindful of the fact that the suit was instituted to collect the penalty, and that this is the specific prayer for relief; but, all of the issuable and relevant facts having been made to appear both by allegation and proof, the relief may be awarded according to the facts established, and the prayer for relief is not of the substance. There is no error, and the judgment in plaintiff's favor must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

STATE v. FOGLEMAN.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 5, 1913.)

1. WITNESSES (§ 262*)—RECALLING WITNESSES—DISCRETION.

Permitting or refusing the recalling of witnesses for further examination on matters already gone into rests in the discretion of the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 797, 899, 904, 1165; Dec. Dig. § 262.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 763, 764*)—INSTRUCTIONS—WARNING JURY AGAINST SYMPATHY.

Charging that, while the prisoner's parents had a right to come in and manifest an interest in his defense, the jury in making up their verdict have no right to consider them, when considered with the statement just preceding that deceased's wife and defendant's parents had been before the jury, and appeals had been made to take into consideration, in making up the verdict, their feelings and the effect it would have on them, and that deceased's wife had a right to come in and manifest an interest in the prosecution, and with the statement just following, "You are sworn to decide this case according to the evidence, and not according to sympathy or feeling for anybody," is not a reference to the testimony of the parents but a proper warning of the jury against being influenced by sympathy for either side.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1731-1748, 1752, 1768, 1770; Dec. Dig. §§ 763, 764.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1172*)—INSTRUCTIONS—STATEMENT OF DEFENDANT'S CONTENTIONS.

Complaint may not be made of the trial judge having stated one of the contentions of defendant's counsel; it not appearing that it was an incorrect statement or that it prejudiced defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3128, 3154-3157, 3159-3163, 3169; Dec. Dig. § 1172.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1038*)—APPEAL—OBJECTIONS FOR REVIEW—INSTRUCTIONS.

That complaint may be made on appeal of the trial judge having incorrectly stated a contention of defendant's counsel, counsel must at the time have called it to the court's attention. [Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2646; Dec. Dig. § 1038.*]

5. HOMICIDE (§ 178*)—EVIDENCE—INCRIMINATING OTHERS.

A charge that is not allowable when one is charged with crime to show by circumstances or insinuations that some one else killed deceased is proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 307-309; Dec. Dig. § 178.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 785*)—INSTRUCTIONS—BIAS OF WITNESSES.

The charge that it is the duty of the jury in considering the testimony of defendant's parents to consider their relationship and partiality to him, and the effect a conviction would have on them, and then ascertain as best they can what influence that would have on the truthfulness of their testimony, and then give to the testimony of each that weight and effect to which under all the circumstances the jury think he is entitled, is proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1774, 1776-1781, 1889-1894; Dec. Dig. § 785.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 786*)—INSTRUCTIONS—INTEREST OF DEFENDANT.

A charge which, after merely giving the history of legislation on the right of a defendant to testify in his own behalf, proceeds: "But * * * the law imposes on the jurors the duty of carefully scrutinizing his testimony and, after considering it, to determine as best they can what influence his interest in the result of the prosecution will have on his testimony, and then give to his testimony that weight and effect which under all the circumstances you * * * think it is entitled to. If you think he told the truth, it is your duty to give to his testimony the same weight and effect you would to the testimony of any disinterested witness"—is correct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1787, 1895-1901, 1960, 1984; Dec. Dig. § 786.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Peebles, Judge.

John Fogleman was convicted, and appeals. Affirmed.

John A. Barringer and W. P. Bynum, both of Greensboro, for appellant. The Attorney General, for the State.

CLARK, C. J. The defendant was convicted of murder in the second degree. The homicide occurred in Greensboro on the night of April 9, 1913. The deceased and the prisoner had been drinking and just before the homicide were arguing and tussling. The deceased was crossing the street near an electric light, the prisoner following closely behind, when, as several testified, the latter, taking a pistol from his right hind pocket, fired it at the deceased, who walked on a few steps and fell. This the prisoner denied. The wound was on the left side of the head near the back. The prisoner was engaged in business in the city, and the officers, being unable to find him the next morning, went out to his father's house about 6 miles from town and found him in the woods about 300 or 400 yards from the house. He had a bedquilt and overcoat with him and was getting up from the quilt. This was between 11 and 12 o'clock. The prisoner testified that he was near the place of the homicide at the time of the shooting and heard the shot but denied that he fired it. He admitted that he had been indicted several times for retailing; that the shooting took place about 10 days after the last trial, and a number of such cases were still pending against him. There was evidence tending to show that the deceased was supposed to be a detective.

[1] The first exception is that, after a witness had been examined by the state and cross-examined and then again examined by the state and stood aside, the counsel for the prisoner asked permission to examine the witness on matters which had already been gone into by counsel on both sides, and the court "declined to allow the question as a matter of discretion." This was in the discretion of the court. State v. Groves, 119 N. C. 822, 25 S. E. 819; State v. Jimmerson, 118 N. C. 1173, 24 N. E. 494; Sutton v. Walters, 118 N. C. 495, 24 S. E. 357; Olive v. Olive, 95 N. C. 486; Pain v. Pain, 80 N. C. 822. In the latest case (In re Abee, 146 N. C. 273, 59 S. E. 700) the court said that the recalling of witnesses for further examination is a matter resting in the discretion of the trial judge and is not subject to review.

The prisoner excepted to the following charge: "The prisoner's mother and father had a perfect right to come in the courthouse and manifest an interest in his defense. But you have no right in making up your verdict to take them into consideration at all." This, however, must be read in connection with the context.

[2] The court just before this had said: "The wife of the deceased has been before you as an exhibit, and the mother and father of the prisoner have been before you all they could, and appeals have been made to you to take into consideration their feelings in making out your verdict, and the effect it would have upon them. Mrs. Tucker (the wife of the deceased) had a perfect right to come into the courthouse and manifest an interest in this prosecution." And, just after the paragraph above excepted to, the court said: "You are sworn to decide this case according to the evidence and not according to sympathy or feeling for anybody at all." The court was not referring to the testimony which had been given by the father and mother of the prisoner but was properly warning the jury against being influenced in their verdict by sympathy for either side. As Chief Justice Merrimon said: The "Judge is not a mere moderator but he is an integral and essential part of the court and should see that justice is impartially administered."

[3,4] Exception 3 is because the judge stated one of the contentions of the prisoner's counsel. It does not appear from the case on appeal that this was an incorrect statement or that it prejudiced the prisoner. It has been held that, if the court does not correctly state such contention, it is the duty of counsel at the time to call the matter to the attention of the court or it will not be considered on appeal. Jeffress v. Railroad, 158 N. C. 215, 73 S. E. 1013; State v. Cox, 153 N. C. 638, 69 S. E. 419.

[5] Exception 4 is to the following charge: "It is not allowable, when one man is charged with a crime, to show by circumstances or insinuations that some one else killed deceased." The charge was correct. It is not a question of some one else killing him but whether the prisoner killed the deceased or not.

In State v. Lambert, 93 N. C. 623, it was held that evidence cannot be admitted to show that a third party had malice to the deceased, a motive to take his life, opportunity to do so, and had threatened to do so. In that case State v. Davis, 77 N. C. 483, to the same effect is quoted.

[6] The prisoner further excepts because the court charged the jury: "When you come to consider the testimony of his father and mother, it is your duty to consider their relationship to him, their partiality to him, and the effect that it would have on them to have him convicted, and then ascertain as best you can what influence that would have upon the truthfulness of their testimony, and then give to the testimony of each one that weight and effect which under all the circumstances you think he is entitled." We find no error in this instruction. It calls fairly to the attention of the jury the attendant circumstances which might bias their testimony and left the jury to judge what weight and effect they should give it.

[7] The last exception is that the court charged the jury: "When you come to consider the testimony of the prisoner, you must remember that prior to 1881 the law did not regard the testimony of a man charged with a crime as fit to go before the jury, but they found that there were some very hard cases, and in order to obviate any trouble of that sort in 1881 the Legislature very properly passed a law allowing anybody charged with a crime, even though a conviction would forfeit his life, to go upon the witness stand and testify in his own behalf." This was merely the history of the legislation on this subject, and the court added immediately: "But at the same time the law imposes upon the jurors the duty of carefully scrutinizing his testimony and, after considering it, to determine as best they can what influence his interest in the result of the prosecution will have upon his testimony, and then give to his testimony that weight and effect which under all the circumstances you and your conscience think it is entitled to. If you think he told the truth, it is your duty to give to his testimony the same weight and effect you would to the testimony of any disinterested witness." This instruction is correct. State

v. Byers, 100 N. C. 512, 6 S. E. 420, and cases there cited, and citations to that case in Ann. Ed.

No error.

WALKER, J. (concurring in the result). I think the opinion of the court in this case states the correct rule with respect to the credit a jury should give to a witness likely to be biased by his interest in the cause or his relation to it or to the parties when it says: "The prisoner further excepts because the court charged the jury: 'When you come to consider the testimony of his father and mother, it is your duty to consider their relationship to him, their partiality to him, and the effect that it would have on them to have him convicted, and then ascertain as best you can what influence that would have upon the truthfulness of their testimony, and then give to the testimony of each one that weight and effect which under all the circumstances you think he is entitled.' We find no error in this instruction. It calls fairly to the attention of the jury the attendant circumstances which might bias their testimony and left the jury to judge what weight and effect they should give it." This, as I understand the law, and have always understood it, is substantially the correct rule. It provides against undue influence upon the jury by bias and at the same time gives to the testimony of the interested witness its proper weight, if not thus influenced, and also subjects it to further examination and scrutiny by the jury, as regards any other circumstance, such as character, demeanor, opportunity for knowledge, and so forth, which may be calculated to strengthen or weaken it, so that finally the jury, upon full consideration of them all, may intelligently consider the testimony and extract the truth from it. I also concur in this statement, when referring to the defendant's own testimony: "The law imposes upon the jurors the duty of carefully scrutinizing his testimony and, after considering it, to determine as best they can what influence his interest in the result of the prosecution will have upon his testimony, and then give to his testimony that weight and effect which under all the circumstances you and your conscience think it is entitled to." I do not assent to the qualification of it in these words: "If you think he told the truth, it is your duty to give to his testimony the same weight and effect you would to the testimony of any disinterested witness." If the jury find that a witness has told the truth, they should, of course, decide according to his testimony, without the necessity of any comparison with others. The truth is what they are required to find. If it is meant that, if they find that the witness was not influenced by his natural bias, they should give his testimony the same weight and effect as the testimony of the other witnesses who are disinterested and impartial, and that is what I suppose is meant, it is clearly erroneous, because, his bias removed, the interested witness may still not be entitled to the same weight as the others, as they, by their greater intelligence, knowledge of the facts, demeanor in the witness box, and so forth, may have entitled themselves to the greater confidence of the jury and their testimony to greater weight.

We had better follow the long line of precedents established by this court throughout many years and adopt the first rule stated in the opinion without the added qualification. State v. Nash, 30 N. C. 35; State v. Nat, 51 N. C. 114; Flynt v. Bodenhamer, 80 N. C. 205; State v. Byers, 100 N. C. 512, 6 S. E. 420; Hill v. Sprinkle, 76 N. C. 353; State v. Vann (at last term) 77 S. E. 295; State v. Graham, 133 N. C. 352, 45 S. E. 514; Herdon v. Railway, 162 N. C. —, 78 S. E. 287; and numerous other cases decided by us to the same effect.

The qualification of the rule, though, as made by the court below was in favor of the defendant, and he therefore cannot complain.

BROWN, J., concurs in this opinion.

BARNES v. NORTH CAROLINA PUBLIC SERVICE CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 5, 1913.)

STREET RAILROADS (§ 87*)—DRIVING ANIMALS NEAR TRACK—LIABILITY OF COMPANY.

One who drives a horse close to a street car cannot recover from the car company for injuries occasioned by the fright of the horse at the usual and customary operation of the car; this being particularly true where the driver, though able to turn down another street, fails to do so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 181, 182; Dec. Dig. § 87.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Shaw, Judge.

Action by W. W. Barnes against the North Carolina Public Service Company. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John A. Barringer, of Greensboro, for appellant. Taylor & Scales, of Greensboro, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. On May 31, 1912, the plaintiff in a buggy was driving a horse on Church street in Greensboro. Riding with him was a boy, leading a young, unbroken colt in the rear of the buggy by a halter. The street car of the defendant was on its regular run on said street. When the car had reached a point about 75 yards south of the intersection of North Davie street with said Church street, the motorman on the car and the plaintiff saw each other; they being then about 150 yards apart. The plaintiff drove on, he says, about 75 yards further towards the car; the horse and colt showing signs of fright at the approaching car, and becoming more frightened as it drew nearer. The motorman did not stop the car, or slacken speed, and, when it came abreast of the buggy, the colt jumped upon one of the rear wheels of the buggy, and upset it, throwing the plaintiff to the ground, whereby he was injured. There was no collision of any kind. There was nothing unusual about the car, which was running at the usual rate of speed, and making no noises except that necessarily incident to the operation of street cars.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes 79 S.E.—56

[1] The plaintiff testified that after the horses became frightened he continued to drive towards the car, and even started to drive across the track directly in front of it. He further testified, that the colt was unbroken and skittish, and that he would have known it would be frightened by the car if he had thought about it; that there were cross streets near where the accident happened which he could have turned into after his team became frightened, but did not do so because he thought he had as much right on Church street as defendant's car.

Upon this evidence his honor properly allowed the motion to nonsuit. It appears from the plaintiff's own evidence that he was not injured by reason of any negligence on the part of the defendant's motorman, but by reason of his horses becoming frightened by a street car operated in the usual method. It is true that he had as much right on the street as the car; but the car had as much right as he did. It was serving the public in the usual and ordinary manner and without any unnecessary noise. The plaintiff should not have driven further in the direction of the car after he saw that his team was frightened, when he could have turned out in the bystreet. The injury was caused by his own want of care, and not by any want of care on the part of the defendant.

In Doster v. Street Railway, 117 N. C. 661, 23 S. E. 450, 34 L. R. A. 481, the court said: "Where a horse is being driven or is running uncontrolled along the highway parallel to a railway of any kind, though it give unmistakable evidence by its movements that it is alarmed at an approaching train or car, the engineer or motorman in charge is not negligent in failing to diminish the speed," in the absence of a collision. The court further said: "The plaintiff voluntarily exposed himself, his buggy, and his mule to the risk of any accident which might be caused by the animal taking fright at the usual noise incident to running a street car by electricity; there being no testimony tending to show that the motorman wantonly or maliciously made unnecessary noise for the purpose of scaring the animal."

There is no suggestion in the complaint, or the testimony, that the motorman in this case wantonly or maliciously ran the car to where the plaintiff was. In the Doster Case the plaintiff waved the motorman to stop the car, and called to him to do so, and finally got out of his buggy, and held the bridle of his horse. In the present case the plaintiff made no motion of any kind, nor gave any signal for the car to stop, but drove on towards the car.

The rule laid down in Doster v. Street Railway, supra, that a street railway company is not liable for an injury resulting from horses being frightened by the noises or appearance of the car when operated in the usual manner has been cited and approved. Everett v. Railroad, 121 N. C. 520, 27 S. E. 991; Dunn v. Railroad, 124 N. C. 257, 260, 32 S. E. 711; Miller v. Railroad, 128 N. C. 37, 38 S. E. 20. "Railroad companies running their trains in a lawful and usual manner are not responsible for damages occurring to travelers along the road in consequence of their team taking fright at the noises ordinarily made by the operation of such trains." 2 Thompson, Neg. par. 1908; 2 Shearman & Redfield, Neg. (6th Ed.) § 485; Morgan v. Railroad, 98 N. C. 247, 3 S. E. 506; 36 Cyc. 1487, 1488, 1490; Clark on Street R. R. (2d Ed.) 114. The reason of the rule is thus stated in Doster v. Street Railway, 117 N. C. 663, 23 S. E. 450, 34 L. R. A. 481: "People who pay their money in the reasonable expectation of being carried expeditiously are not to be delayed by every person who ventures to test the nerve of a horse or a mule by driving it along the same street on which a company runs its street cars by electricity. Where persons subject themselves to such risks, and no collision with the moving car ensues, injuries caused by the conduct of frightened animals are deemed in law to be due directly to their own want of care."

A condition might occur in which a street car should halt for a moment, as if, for instance, it should suddenly come around a corner, frightening a horse, and the motorman can see that by halting a moment the driver may be given an opportunity to turn around, and drive off in safety. In this and other conceivable cases it would be negligent for the motorman not to stop his car a brief period to give the driver of the conveyance an opportunity to save himself. But nothing of this kind occurred in this case.

The plaintiff testified that he was 150 yards from the car when he first saw it, and after seeing it he continued to drive towards it a distance of 75 yards before the accident occurred. Both car and plaintiff were traveling towards the point where North Davis street crosses Church street. The plaintiff should not have expected that the car should stop and wait till he might get to Davis street and turn down it. He should have given way for the car, for he knew that his animals were frightened. He could have turned back, or could have turned down a side street. The car could not have done this. Nor, as it was engaged in a service for the public, should the plaintiff have expected that the car should stop, when he had ample opportunity to do so himself, and avoid the injury. The proximate cause of his injury was his own conduct. Strickland v. Railroad, 150 N. C. 4, 63 S. E. 161.

We need not consider the evidence as to the nature of the plaintiff's injuries, which were serious. There was certainly damnum, but not injuria. The plaintiff was not injured by a collision with the defendant's car, but by the colt overturning his buggy, and throwing him out. The colt was frightened when the defendant's car was where it had a right to be, in the public service, and was being operated in the usual manner. The colt was frightened because the plaintiff did not choose to turn down one of the bystreets, but drove on probably 75 yards towards the car, which was frightening his team more and more as he approached it. The car was not running unusually fast. Indeed, it appears that the plaintiff was going at the same speed, as each moved 75 yards after the plaintiff and motorman saw each other.

There is a wide distinction in many respects between a street car and an automobile. The street car is engaged in a public service, and running regular schedules, which it owes a duty to the public to observe. It is running on a regular track, and cannot turn out, nor can it stop without losing its schedule. The noises it makes are not as calculated to frighten teams as an automobile, and the streets on which the street cars are to be found are well known to drivers, who can avoid them, whereas, an automobile may be met with anywhere and unexpectedly. A street car runs slower, and makes frequent stops. For these and other reasons, the statute has prescribed the speed limit of automobiles, and the duties of chauffeurs on meeting people whose teams are frightened. Chapter 107, Laws 1913.

The judgment of nonsuit is affirmed.

STATE v. SHELTON.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 5, 1913.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 730*)—TRIAL—REMARKS OF JUDGE.

The remark of the judge that defendant could deny it, made in reply to the unsound argument of defendant's counsel, in addressing the court as to the incompetency of a conversation between defendant and his wife, with whose murder he was charged, that this kind of evidence was analogous to that prohibited by Revisal 1905, § 1631, and that if witness did not state the truth as to the conversation, the wife being dead, there would be no one to deny it, was not improper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1693; Dec. Dig. § 730.*]

2. WITNESSES (§ 128*)—CONVERSATION BETWEEN DECEASED AND DEFENDANT—CRIMINAL CASE.

Revisal 1905, § 1631, prohibiting evidence of a party in interest against the executor or administrator of a decedent as to a conversation or transaction with decedent, has no application to criminal cases, so as to prevent the state introducing evidence of a conversation between defendant and one whom he is charged with murdering.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 553-555, 562-564, 570; Dec. Dig. § 128.*]

3. HOMICIDE (§ 340*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

The charge on burden of proof to show willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, and on reasonable doubt, being full and clear, the use of the words "beyond a reasonable doubt," instead of properly "to the satisfaction of the jury," in the charge to find guilty of murder in the second degree, "if you find * * * beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant previous to the time he killed * * * was so intoxicated as not to be able to form a specific intent, and to deliberate and premeditate, but was not insane, * * * so as not to know the difference between right and wrong, and with a deadly weapon slew * * * with notice," was not of sufficient importance to warrant a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 715-717, 720; Dec. Dig. § 340.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§§ 150, 238*)—INTOXICATION REDUCING DEGREE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

While the burden of proof is on the state at all times to prove the willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, yet defendant claiming that at the time of and immediately before the homicide he had been rendered, by drunkenness, incapable of forming a deliberate and premeditated purpose to kill, has the burden of proving it, not however beyond a reasonable doubt, but only to the satisfaction of the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 275, 501; Dec. Dig. §§ 150, 238.*]

5. HOMICIDE (§ 340*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where there was no sufficient evidence that at the time of the homicide defendant was in such a mental condition, brought about by excessive drinking, as to render him incapable of committing deliberate and premeditated murder, error in instructing as to the burden on him to show such condition is harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 715-717, 720; Dec. Dig. § 340.*]

6. HOMICIDE (§ 28*)—INTOXICATION REDUCING DEGREE.

Where the purpose to kill was deliberately and premeditatedly formed when sober, imbibing intoxicants to whatever degree or extent in order to carry out the design will not avail to reduce the murder to the second degree.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 44, 45, 46, 133; Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

7. HOMICIDE (§ 238*)—INTOXICATION REDUCING DEGREE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in a homicide case, held insufficient to show that at the time of the killing defendant was so drunk as to render him utterly incapable of forming a deliberate and premeditated purpose to kill, but rather to show that he had for months been deliberating and premeditating the murder, and that any drinking by him on the day of the killing was to assist him to execute his purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 501; Dec. Dig. § 238.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Rockingham County; Lane, Judge.

Walter Shelton was convicted of murder in the first degree, and appeals. Affirmed.

P. T. Stiers, of Reidsville, and C. O. McMichael, of Wentworth, for appellant. Attorney General Bickett and Assistant Attorney General Calvert, for the State.

BROWN, J. The defendant offered no evidence, and the case was tried upon that introduced by the state. This evidence tends to prove these facts: The defendant was the husband of Lula Shelton. It is evident that they lived unhappily together. About two weeks prior to Christmas, 1912, the wife refused to live with the defendant any longer on account of his conduct, and she went to the home of her mother. On Christmas eve defendant went there and pointed a pistol at his wife and told her he would kill her if she did not live with him. He then asked for his overcoat, and, as he was about to leave, said to his wife's sister that he intended to kill his wife when she put her foot off the lot, and instructed her to tell his wife. There is no evidence that he was so drunk on this occasion that he was irresponsible and did not know what he did and said. About ten days before the homicide, defendant told one Adkins he was going to kill his wife because she would not live with him, and he told at different times numerous other witnesses that he was going to kill his wife, and the whole Trent family, being the family of his wife; that she had sworn to lies on him. On the 24th day of March, 1913, the wife was at the home of Mrs. Jennie Black in Reidsville. She was sitting in a room with several other people, when the defendant came in, walked up to his wife, and started to put his hand in his pocket. His wife threw up both hands and started towards him, when he pulled out his pistol and shot her twice. The wife fell and died in seven or eight minutes. A sister of the defendant then pushed him towards the door, and he went out into the yard, where he was arrested by two men, and as he was being led away he said: "I did what I said I was going to do, what I wanted to do. I put three balls in her, and I will go to the electric chair for it." He repeated this statement afterwards to other witnesses.

The exceptions to the evidence are without merit and are not of sufficient importance to require discussion.

[1,2] The third exception relates to a remark of the judge. Counsel for the defense, in addressing the court as to the incompetency of a conversation between the defendant and his wife, maintained that this kind of evidence was analogous to that prohibited by section 1631 of the Revisal; that if the witness Effie Trent did not state the truth about the conversation, her sister Lula Shelton being dead, there would be no one to deny it. The judge remarked from the bench and in the hearing of the jury that the defendant could deny it, and to this remark the defendant excepts. The exception ought not to be sustained. Section 1631 has no application whatever to criminal cases. The conversation between the husband and the wife in which he threatened to kill her was entirely competent. The judge was simply replying to an unsound legal proposition that was being argued by the counsel for the defendant, and his remarks were in no way improper. He subsequently in his charge warned the jury that they could not consider to the prejudice of the defendant the fact that he did not go upon the stand and testify as a witness.

[3,4] The exception chiefly relied on by the defendant is to the following extract from the charge of the court: "If you find from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant, previous to the time he killed his wife, if you find he did kill her, was so intoxicated as not to be able to form a specific intent and to deliberate and premeditate, but was not insane, by reason of it as before explained to you, so as not to know the difference between right and wrong, and with a deadly weapon slew his wife with malice, you will find him guilty of murder in the second degree." His honor erred in using the words "beyond a reasonable doubt" in that connection, but we do not think the error was very material and of sufficient importance to warrant another trial. The burden of proof is on the state at all times to prove the willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, and his honor so instructed the jury very clearly; but, where the defendant claims that at the time of and immediately before the homicide he had been rendered incapable of forming a deliberate and premeditated purpose to kill by reason of drunkenness, the burden is on him to prove it, not beyond a reasonable doubt, but to the satisfaction of the jury. The charge of the court upon the burden of proof and the doctrine of reasonable doubt is so full and clear that it would scarcely have been misunderstood. His honor said: "This defendant not only pleads not guilty to this charge against him, but, when he comes into this court and put upon his trial, is presumed to be innocent of any crime. This is no mere idle presumption to be disregarded at will, but is a fundamental principle of the law of this state, and applies in this case, as in all other trials for violation of the criminal laws. And a defendant is covered with this presumption of innocence until the state by competent evidence rebuts such presumption, and, before you can return a verdict of guilty against this defendant of any degree of crime, the state must have satisfied you of his guilt, and that to the exclusion of every reasonable doubt. That is the burden that is upon the state in this case. I repeat, to prove the guilt of this defendant beyond a reasonable doubt before you can convict him of any degree of homicide."

[5] We are further of the opinion that the charge was harmless error for the reason that there is no sufficient evidence in the record that at the time of the homicide he was in such a mental condition, brought about by excessive drinking, as to render him incapable of committing deliberate and premeditated murder.

State v. Murphey, 157 N. C. 614, 72 S. E. 1075, is a leading case on this subject, and the question is fully discussed by Mr. Justice Hoke. In that case it is stated that there was evidence that at the time of the killing "the mind of the prisoner was so affected, at the time, by voluntary drunkenness, that he was incapable of committing murder in the first degree." In the opinion the learned judge says: "It is very generally understood that voluntary drunkenness is no legal excuse for crime, and the position has been held controlling in many causes in this state and on indictments for homicide. The principle, however, is not allowed to prevail where, in addition to the overt act, it is required that a definite specific intent be established as an essential feature of the crime. In Clark's Criminal Law, p. 72, this limitation on the more general principle is thus succinctly stated: 'Where a specific intent is essential to constitute crime, the fact of intoxication may negative its existence.' Accordingly, since the statute dividing the crime of murder into two degrees, and in cases where it becomes necessary, in order to convict an offender of murder in the first degree, to establish that the killing was deliberate and premeditated, these terms contain, as an essential element of the crime of murder, a purpose to kill previously formed after weighing the matter (State v. Banks, 143 N. C. 658, 57 S. E. 174; State v. Dowden, 118 N. C. 1148, 24 S. E. 722), a mental process embodying a specific definite intent, and if it is shown that an offender, charged with such crime, is so drunk that he is utterly unable to form or entertain this essential purpose, he should not be convicted of the higher offense. It is said in some of the cases, and the statement has our unqualified approval, that the doctrine in question should be applied with great caution. It does not exist in reference to murder in the second degree, nor as to manslaughter. It has been excluded in well-considered decisions where the facts show that the purpose to kill was deliberately formed when sober, though it was executed when drunk—a position presented in State v. Kale, 124 N. C. 816, 32 S. E. 892, and approved and recognized in Aszman v. Indiana, 123 Ind. 347, 24 N. E. 123, 8 L. R. A. 33. And it does not avail from the fact that an offender is, at the time, under the influence of intoxicants, unless, as hereinbefore stated, his mind is so affected that he is unable to form or entertain the specified purpose referred to."

Wharton sums up the matter by saying that "a person who commits a crime while so drunk as to be incapable of forming a deliberate and premeditated design to kill is not guilty of murder in the first degree. The influence of intoxicants upon the question of the existence of premeditation, however, depends upon its degree and its effect on the mind and passions." Homicide (5th Ed.) p. 811.

All the authorities agree that to make such defense available the evidence must show that at the time of the killing the prisoner's mind and reason were so completely intoxicated and overthrown as to render him utterly incapable of forming a deliberate and premeditated purpose to kill.

[6] As the doctrine is one that is dangerous in its application, it is allowed only in very clear cases, and, where the evidence shows that the purpose to kill was deliberately and premeditatedly formed when sober, the imbibing of intoxicants to whatever extent in order to carry out the design will not avail as a defense.

In the rulings of the court and the charge to the jury the defendant has had the full benefit of his plea of insanity, which was very properly repudiated by the jury, as there is as little evidence to support that as there is the plea that his mind and reason at the time he slew his wife were so completely dethroned by intoxication that he could not be guilty of a willful, deliberate, and premeditated murder.

[7] The evidence that the defendant formed and expressed to several different persons at various times, extending over a period of two months, the settled purpose to kill his wife, is overwhelming. On Christmas eve, 1912, he sought his wife, pointed a pistol in her face, and told her he would kill her if she did not live with him. There is no evidence that on these occasions he was drunk and did not know what he was doing. None of the witnesses who were present at the homicide say that defendant was drunk, and one of the witnesses, Moricle, said he had seen defendant under influence of whisky, but on this occasion "he looked like a sober man."

Witness Adkins testifies to a conversation ten days before the homicide, in which defendant told him he intended to kill his wife because she would not live with him. "At the time of the conversation I could not say whether Shelton was drunk or not. He had had a drink. He drank right much when he was not at work. He was not at work at this time. It had not been long since he quit work. I saw him about once a week, and he was always drinking."

Witness Tally testified that defendant told him that he intended to kill his wife; that he saw him the afternoon of the homicide, and "his condition seemed to be all right." Witness further said: "I have known Shelton eight or ten years. Sometimes he was drinking, sometimes he was not. You could call him drunk, but he was going. Sometimes for two or three days he would drink, sometimes he would not. He seemed to be sober on the day of the homicide."

Witness Walker testified that he had conversation with defendant the morning of the homicide: "I am not able to tell what his condition was." Witness further stated that defendant before that had come to the store drunk; he generally came in drinking, and witness asked his brother to keep him out. Witness further testified that the defendant a few hours before the killing had asked witness, "If you were going to kill yourself, where would you shoot?" "I told him I had never thought of such a foolish thing. A few hours before the killing, I had told my wife that I believed Shelton was crazy."

Witness Michael testifies to hearing defendant say on the evening of the homicide that he had done what he aimed to do, and, on the subject of habits, he said: "I have known Walter Shelton four years. I live in the same neighborhood with him. I have heard of his drinking habits for the last two years. His general reputation in the neighborhood is that of a drinking man. On the evening of the killing, he was as sober as I usually saw him."

Witness Myrick testifies: "I have known Walter Shelton about 15 years and lived in Reidsville practically all the time Walter has. He drank a good deal. Sometimes he would act kinder foolish. I have heard about his knocking a fellow in the face with a beer bottle. The evening of the homicide he looked like he was drunk."

Thomas Lebas testified as follows: "During Christmas week Shelton made a statement to me. He said he had a wife and was going to kill her, and I says: 'Walter, do you know you are going to get in trouble? There will be another Allen case.' He said he was going to kill her. I asked him what for. He said because she would not live with him. I asked him if she was a nice lady. Said, yes, she was a nice lady, and give me that to understand right then. I told him to go home; he was drunk. Said he was not drunk, and he was not going home, either. I saw him on the day of the homicide, about 75 or 100 yards, before and after. He was going up the opposite side from where I was standing with his right hand in his right coat pocket. I just noticed him going along. I did not pay much more attention to him. He was walking right pertly as usual, and I talked there about three minutes, when Miss Effie Trent came running down the street and said her sister had been shot. I ran to the house as soon as I could get there, and found her on the bed shot and dying. She lived about six or eight minutes after I got in the house. I saw Shelton against the front fence along the street. I took hold of him one time when he was about to get away. He was drinking some, not drunk. He stayed a little intoxicated most of the time. I don't say the tenth or eleventh notch. That would be pretty good speed."

This is the entire evidence relating to the condition of the defendant. In our opinion it fails to show that at the time of the homicide the defendant was so drunk as, in the language of Justice Hoke, "to render him utterly incapable of forming a deliberate and premeditated purpose to kill." It tends rather to prove that the defendant had been for two months deliberating and premeditating the murder of his wife, and that, if he was drinking at all on the day of the homicide, it was to assist him to put his deadly purpose into execution.

We have given this case a very careful examination, and are constrained to conclude that there is no error.

BOARD OF GRADED SCHOOL COM'RS OF CITY OF WINSTON v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF FORSYTH COUNTY.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 5, 1913.)

1. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 19*)—SCHOOL FUNDS—RIGHT TO PARTICIPATE.

Revisal 1905, § 4116, as amended by Pub. Laws 1913, c. 149, provides that the county board of education shall apportion the county school fund to the various school districts, first, however, reserving a fund sufficient to pay the county superintendent's salary and the expenses of the board, and that it may also reserve a fund for building, repairing, and equipping schoolhouses, to be used as directed in section 4124. Section 4124 provides that the building of all new schoolhouses shall be under the control and direction of and by contract with the county board of education, and that the board shall pay not exceeding one-half of the cost thereof out of the fund set aside for building under section 4116. Held that a graded school district under the control and supervision of graded school commissioners is entitled to share in the building fund under the conditions prescribed in section 4124, which should be enforced reasonably and not arbitrarily; that section not limiting the fund to schoolhouses under the control of the county board of education, but to schoolhouses the building of which is under its control.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. §§ 16, 84-87; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

2. STATUTES (§ 219*)—AIDS TO CONSTRUCTION—EXECUTIVE CONSTRUCTION.

It being by statute the duty of the State Superintendent of Public Instruction to construe the school law, his construction thereof, though not binding on the courts, is entitled to high consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 296, 297; Dec. Dig. § 219.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; Cooke, Judge.

Controversy between the Board of Graded School Commissioners of City of Winston and the Board of Education of Forsyth County, submitted without action. From a Judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This is a controversy submitted without action to construe sections 4116 and 4124 of the Revisal of North Carolina. The plaintiff is a corporate body, and has complete control and supervision of the public schools of the city of Winston. The defendant is a corporate body, and has control of the public schools of Forsyth county. Section 4116 of the Revisal, as amended by chapter 149, Public Laws of North Carolina 1913, provides that the County Board of Education, after first reserving a fund sufficient to pay the salary of the county superintendent and the expenses of the county board of education, may reserve a fund for building, repairing, and equipping schoolhouses in counties where the school fund exceeds, as it does in Forsyth county, $25,000, a sum not greater than 7½ per cent. of the school fund for said county. The only question presented is whether or not the defendant has authority, under section 4124, to appropriate money from the building fund to the plaintiff to be used in the erection of a school building in the city of Winston. It is admitted that the plaintiff has received from the defendant its just per capita apportionment as provided in section 4116 for maintaining schools, and that the city of Winston pays more than half the school taxes of Forsyth county levied by the General Assembly. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant excepted and appealed.

Hastings & Whicker, of Winston-Salem, for appellant. Manly, Hendren & Womble, of Winston-Salem, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. The ninth article of the Constitution is devoted to education, and it is declared in the first section of the article that, "Religion, morality and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged." This language is taken from the ordinance of Congress of 1787, passed for the government of the Northwest Territory, and was substantially adopted in the Constitution of Ohio, and was considered in Board of Education v. Minor, 28 Ohio St. 211, 13 Am. Rep. 233, in which case the court says: "The three things so declared to be essential to good government are 'religion,' 'morality,' and 'knowledge.' These three words stand in the same category, and in the same relation to the context; and if one of them is used in its generic or unlimited sense, so are all three. That the word 'knowledge' and the word 'morality' are used in that sense is very plain. The meaning is that true religion, true morality, and true knowledge shall be promoted by encouraging schools and means of instruction. The last named of these three words, 'knowledge,' comprehends in itself all that is comprehended in the other two words, 'religion' and 'morality,' and which can be the subject of human 'instruction.' True religion includes true morality. All that is comprehended in the word 'religion,' or in the words, 'religion and morality,' and that can be the subject of human 'instruction,' must be included under the general term, 'knowledge.' Nothing is enjoined, therefore, but the encouragement of means of instruction in general knowledge—the knowledge of truth. The fair interpretation seems to be that true 'religion' and 'morality' are aided and promoted by the increase and diffusion of 'knowledge,' on the theory that 'knowledge is the handmaid of virtue,' and that all three—religion, morality, and knowledge—are essential to good government."

The ideal citizen, then, under the Constitution is "the wise man and endowed with knowledge" leading to a clean, upright life, and to a just conception of true religion. One of the means to this end is the establishment of a "general and uniform system of public schools," which is enjoined upon the General Assembly by section 2 of article 9. This system as outlined in the Constitution, standing alone, does little more than excite and stimulate the desire for knowledge, and is inadequate to enable the citizen to reach the higher heights. It was to be expected, then, in a government founded upon the will of the people, by men who believed that unlimited knowledge leads to true morality and true religion, and that these are necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, that some provision would be made for higher education, as has been done in the sections relating to the University, and that there would be nothing to discourage those living in thickly settled communities, where property valuations are higher, from incurring obligations, in addition to those imposed by the General Assembly for the system of schools for the entire state, in order that better educational facilities might be furnished to their children, and we, therefore, find no prohibition in the Constitution preventing a community, which pays a special tax for graded or other schools, from sharing in the equitable division of the tax for schools levied by the state.

[1] It was upon this principle that it was held in Greensboro v. Hodgins, 106 N. C. 182, 11 S. E. 588, that it was the duty of the county authorities to apportion to a graded school district a part of the school fund levied by the state, but that such district was only entitled to a just and equitable part, and not necessarily to as much as it paid. The authority to make this apportionment, approved by the Supreme Court, is found in section 4116 of the Revisal, as amended by chapter 149 of the Laws of 1913, and as the same statute enjoins the duty upon the county board of education to reserve a fund for building and repairing schoolhouses in the county, there would seem to be no good reason for permitting graded schools to participate in one part of the fund and excluding them from the other.

The defendant contends, however, that while the board of education is required to reserve a building fund in section 4116 of the Revisal, the disposition of the fund is regulated by Revisal, § 4124, in which it is said: "The building of all new schoolhouses shall be under the control and direction of and by contract with the county board of education. * * * All contracts for buildings shall be in writing and all buildings shall be inspected, received and approved by the county superintendent of public instruction before full payment is made therefor"—and that as the graded school of Winston is under the control of a board of commissioners and not of the board of education, the plaintiff has no right to any part of the fund reserved for buildings. In other words, the argument of the defendant is that under section 4124 of the Revisal, all school buildings erected from the reserve fund provided for in section 4116 must be under the control of the board of education, and as the graded school buildings of Winston are controlled by a board of commissioners, and not by the board of education, the graded school district is not entitled to share in the building fund. The two sections are parts of one statute, designed to establish a uniform system of public schools, and the language used should be understood with reference to the context, and in that sense which will make the two harmonious and consistent, and a construction of section 4124 should not be adopted, except from necessity, which would deprive the plaintiff of a benefit conferred by section 4116. No such necessity exists. Section 4124 does not say that all "new schoolhouses" shall be under the control of the board of education, but that "the building of all new schoolhouses" shall be under its control, and that "all contracts for building" shall be in writing and approved by the county superintendent, thereby conferring authority upon the board of education and the county superintendent to exercise reasonable supervision over the contract for the building, and over its performance, but it is silent as to the control of the building after it has been erected. We are therefore of opinion that there is no conflict between the two sections, and that the plaintiff is entitled to share in the building fund reserved by the defendant, under the conditions prescribed in section 4124, which should be enforced reasonably and not arbitrarily.

[2] This construction accords with the opinion of the State Superintendent of Public Instruction, whose duty it is, by statute, to construe the school law, and while his construction is not binding on us, it is entitled to high consideration. In his notes and decisions on the School Law, he says: "The city schools are entitled to their equitable part of the building fund. They pay their part of it, and in the apportionment of the building fund, just as in the apportionment of the other part of the school fund, they are entitled to be treated exactly like any other public school district of the county. The fact that these districts are operated under a special charter does not prevent them from being public school districts entitled to all the rights and privileges of other school districts in the distribution of the common public school fund, including the building fund. The fact that they issue bonds and levy taxes for better buildings and equipment ought to entitle them to more consideration, instead of less, by the county board of education, in the distribution of the county building fund, and certainly ought not to cause them to be discriminated against by excluding them from sharing in that fund, which they helped to pay, because they are willing to assume an additional burden of taxation to get better houses and equipment than the county and the regular school district can afford to provide. They should be encouraged rather than discouraged in such commendable efforts."

For the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed.

Affirmed.

STATE v. WILKERSON.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 5, 1913.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 782*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS—BURDEN OF PROOF—"PRIMA FACIE."

While under the express provisions of Pub. Laws 1913, c. 44, the possession of more than one gallon of spirituous liquors is prima facie evidence that it is kept for sale in violation of that act, this merely authorizes, and does not compel, the jury to convict on evidence of possession alone and unsupported, nor does it change the burden of proof, since "prima facie" means "at first," "on the first appearance," "on the face of it," or "so far as can be judged by the first disclosure presumably," and hence it was error for the court, after charging that possession made a prima facie case, to add that it then was the duty of accused to go forward and satisfy the jury by the greater weight of the evidence that he did not have the liquor in his possession for the purpose of sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1847, 1849, 1851, 1852, 1877, 1878, 1880-1882, 1906, 1907, 1909-1911, 1960, 1966, 1967; Dec. Dig. § 782.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, p. 5549.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 823*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CURE BY OTHER INSTRUCTIONS.

On a trial for having possession of liquor for sale, where the court charged that proof of possession of the liquor made a prima facie case and required accused to show by the greater weight of the evidence that he did not have possession thereof for the purpose of sale, an instruction that, if the jury had a reasonable doubt concerning the facts as to his possession and the purpose thereof, they should acquit did not cure the error; it being confusing and contradictory.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1992-1995, 3158; Dec. Dig. § 823.*]

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 140*)—CRIMINAL OFFENSES—ILLEGAL POSSESSION.

A person who, in good faith, purchased liquor in Virginia, where it was lawful to buy it, as agent for other persons who sent him there for the purpose of buying it for them, and brought it into this state, did not violate Pub. Laws 1913, c. 44, making it unlawful to have possession of intoxicating liquors for the purpose of sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 150; Dec. Dig. § 140.*]

4. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 238*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where, on a trial for having possession of intoxicating liquor for the purpose of sale, the evidence tended to show that accused purchased the liquor in another state as agent for other persons who sent him there for the purpose of buying it for them, and who gave him the money with which to pay therefor and paid him for his services, and that he brought it within the state for the purpose of distributing it to them, his intent, and whether the transaction was a sale, were questions for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 324-330; Dec. Dig. § 238.*]

5. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 169*)—CRIMINAL OFFENSES—PERSONS LIABLE.

A person who purchased intoxicating liquor in another state, where it was lawful to sell it, as agent for other persons, and brought it within the state to distribute it to such persons, did not violate Revisal 1905, § 3534, providing that, if any person shall unlawfully and illegally procure and deliver spirituous or malt liquors to another, he shall be deemed to be the agent of the seller and guilty of a misdemeanor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 187, 188; Dec. Dig. § 169.*]

6. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 223*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS—INDICTMENT—VARIANCE.

Under an indictment charging that accused had possession of whisky contrary to statute, treated on the trial as charging a violation of Pub. Laws 1913, c. 44, making it unlawful to have possession of intoxicating liquors for the purpose of sale, accused could not be convicted of violating Pub. Laws 1911, c. 133, making it unlawful for any corporation, club, etc., to maintain any place where intoxicating liquors are received, kept, or stored for sale, distribution, etc., since the allegations and the proof must correspond.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 263-274; Dec. Dig. § 223.*]

Clark, C. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Vance County; Cline, Judge.

Zip Wilkerson was convicted of an offense, and he appeals. Reversed.

The defendant was arrested upon a warrant issued by the recorder of Vance county and based upon the following affidavit of M. N. Parrish: "M. N. Parrish, being duly sworn, complains and says that at and in said county on or about the 28th day of April, 1913, Zip Wilkerson did unlawfully and willfully have in his possession eleven and one-half gallons of whisky for sale, contrary to the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state. [Signed] M. N. Parrish."

He was tried before the recorder, convicted and appealed to the superior court. The evidence at his trial in the latter court tended to show that defendant had been employed by 10 men near Henderson in Vance county, who were customers at his store, to go to Virginia and buy for them 10 gallons of whisky, one gallon for each man. He agreed to do so if they would pay him $2.50 for the service. Each of them gave him $2 to pay for the whisky and 25 cents for buying and hauling it. He hauled for the public and kept a horse and buggy and also a wagon for the purpose. He went to Virginia in his buggy, bought the liquor there with the money, and was hauling it back for delivery to them when, on the way to his home, he was arrested by the officer with the whisky in his possession. He bought a gallon for himself and had in his wagon, at the time of the arrest, 11 gallons of corn liquor in 3 kegs and 2 bottles. The gallon which he bought for himself was for his personal use and not for sale, nor did he know that any of the other persons for whom he bought the liquor intended to sell it or any of it. He received only 25 cents from each man for buying and hauling it.

Upon this evidence, which in the main was the testimony of the defendant himself, at least the material parts of it, the court charged the jury that, if they found, beyond a reasonable doubt, the defendant had in his possession more than one gallon of spirituous liquor at the time of his arrest, and he was not a druggist and had no medical depository, the law made it prima facie evidence of the violation of the act passed by the General Assembly in 1913, known as the "Search and Seizure Law" (that is to say, if those facts had been proven to them beyond a reasonable doubt, that statute puts upon the defendant the duty of going forward and satisfying the jury by the greater weight of the evidence that in fact he did not have the liquor in his possession for the purpose of sale), and further that if he bought the liquor as above set forth, and it was taken while in his possession before the bulk was broken or there had been any distribution among the men for whom he bought it, then, as matter of law, he was guilty of violating the act of March 3, 1913, known as the "Search and Seizure Law," and they should convict, but, if they had a reasonable doubt about it, they should acquit. The jury returned a verdict of guilty. Judgment was entered thereon, and defendant appealed.

Henry T. Powell and T. M. Pittman, both of Henderson, for appellant. Attorney General Bickett and T. H. Calvert, of Raleigh, for the State.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] The defendant was charged with a violation of the act of 1913, it being chapter 44, entitled "An act to secure the enforcement of the laws against the sale and manufacture of intoxicating liquors," ratified March 3, 1913. The act makes it unlawful for any person, firm, association, or corporation, other than druggists or medical depositories, duly licensed, "to have or keep in his, their or its possession for the purpose of sale, any spirituous, vinous or malt liquors," and makes proof of any one of certain facts prima facie evidence of the violation of the act, and among others it is provided that "the possession of more than one gallon of spirituous liquors at any one time, whether in one or more places," shall constitute such prima facie evidence of the fact that it is kept for sale in violation of the act. Having clearly before us the nature of the particular charge against the defendant, the law alleged to have been violated, and the proof offered in support of the charge, we are prepared now to consider the objection urged by the defendant's counsel to the charge of the court. The jury were instructed that the fact of his having in his possession more than one gallon of the liquor made out a prima facie case against the defendant. If the court had stopped here and not qualified this instruction, it would have been correct, but it did not do so but went beyond the terms of the statute and the law when it further charged that it then was the duty of the defendant "to go forward and satisfy the jury, by the greater weight of the evidence, that he did not have the liquor in his possession for the purpose of sale." In this further instruction we think there was error.

The defendant, as we have shown, is charged, under the act of 1913, with unlawfully having spirituous liquor in his possession for the purpose of selling it, and nothing else, and proof of the possession of more than one gallon of such liquor is made prima facie evidence of the unlawful act, which is that it is held by him for the purpose of sale, an act forbidden by the general law. It is not made unlawful for a person to have more than one gallon of spirituous liquor in his possession, but it is criminal to have possession of that quantity for the purpose of sale; and while the bare possession of so much may, in itself and as a fact, be innocent, it is yet made prima facie evidence of guilt under the statute, as in State v. Barrett, 138 N. C. 630, 50 S. E. 506, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 626. But it is only evidence, and, while it has the added force or weight of being prima facie, the latter means no more than that it is sufficient for the jury to convict upon it alone and unsupported, if no other proof is offered, but upon the whole evidence, whether consisting of the mere fact of possession or of additional facts, the jury are not bound to convict but simply may do so if they find beyond a reasonable doubt, or are fully satisfied, that the defendant is guilty. Prima facie means at first; on the first appearance; on the face of it; so far as can be judged by the first disclosure presumably. These are the definitions of the law, as we learn from the books. Black's Dict. (1st Ed.) 539. The jury are no more required to convict upon a prima facie case than they are to acquit because of the presumption of innocence. They must judge themselves as to the force of the testimony and its sufficiency to produce in their minds a conviction of guilt. In civil cases, the rule is the same (with a difference in the quantum), as prima facie evidence only carries the case to the jury and does not entitle the party in whose favor it has been offered to a verdict as matter of right.

Referring to this rule, as applied to civil cases, and the presumption, or prima facie case, arising under the maxim res ipsa loquitur, which presents one of the strongest of such cases, the Supreme Court of the United States has recently said: "In our opinion res ipsa loquitur means that the facts of the occurrence warrant the inference of negligence, not that they compel such an inference; that they furnish circumstantial evidence of negligence where direct evidence of it may be lacking, but it is evidence to be weighed, not necessarily to be accepted as sufficient; that they call for explanation or rebuttal, not necessarily that they require it; that they make a case to be decided by the jury, not that they forestall the verdict. Res ipsa loquitur, where it applies, does not convert the defendant's general issue into an affirmative defense. When all the evidence is in, the question for the jury is whether the preponderance is with the plaintiff. Such, we think, is the view generally taken of the matter in well-considered judicial opinions." Sweeney v. Erving, 228 U. S. 233, 33 Sup. Ct. 416, 57 L. Ed. 815. The court cites with approval the numerous cases decided by this court on the same subject. Womble v. Grocery Co., 135 N. C. 474, 47 S. E. 493; Stewart v. Carpet Co., 138 N. C. 60, 50 S. E. 562; Lyles v. Carbonating Co., 140 N. C. 25, 52 S. E. 238; Ross v. Cotton Mills, 140 N. C. 115, 52 S. E. 121, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 298; Board of Education v. Makely, 139 N. C. 31, 51 S. E. 784; Overcash v. Electric Co., 144 N. C. 572, 57 S. E. 377, 12 Ann. Cas. 1040; Winslow v. Hardwood Co., 147 N. C. 275, 60 S. E. 1130.

Justice Hoke says for the court in Furniture Co. v. Express Co., 144 N. C. 644, 57 S. E. 460: "It may be well to note here that, in using the terms 'prima facie' and 'presumptive,' the terms do not import that the burden of the issue is changed, but that on the facts indicated the plaintiff is entitled to have his cause submitted to the jury under a proper charge as to its existence or nonexistence and the effect of any presumption which may attach, as indicated in the cases"—citing several of the cases to which we have already referred.

It may therefore be taken as settled in this court, at least, and we believe the same may be said of most, if not all, of the courts, that prima facie or presumptive evidence does not of itself establish the fact or facts upon which the verdict or judgment must rest, nor does it shift the burden of the issue, which always remains with him who holds the affirmative. It is no more than sufficient evidence to establish the vital facts without other proof, if it satisfies the jury. The other party may be required to offer some evidence in order to prevent an adverse verdict or to take the chances of losing the issue if he does not, but it does not conclude him or forestall the verdict. He may offer evidence, if he chooses, or may rely alone upon the facts raising the prima facie case against him, and he has the right to have it all considered by the jury; they giving such weight to the presumptive evidence as they may think it should have under the circumstances. The defendant is not required to take the laboring oar and to overcome the case of the plaintiff by a preponderance of evidence is what we said in Winslow v. Hardwood Co., supra, and substantially the same thing was said in the other cases we have cited. This is undoubtedly the rule in civil cases, and it applies with greater force to criminal cases where the defendant has the benefit of the doctrines of reasonable doubt and the presumption of innocence. How can we say that prima facie evidence, or that which is apparently sufficient, excludes all reasonable doubt of guilt and by its own force overcomes the presumption of innocence? The bare statement of the proposition is sufficient to show its fallacy. It would destroy the presumption of innocence and take away the protection of the other rule as to reasonable doubt. The presumption of innocence attends the accused throughout the trial and has relation to every essential fact that must be established in order to prove his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Kirby v. U. S., 174 U. S. 47, 19 Sup. Ct. 574, 43 L. Ed. 809. He is not required to show his innocence; the state must prove his guilt. No valid conviction can be had in law which is based solely upon prima facie evidence as conclusive and foreclosing the verdict, or which even casts upon the defendant the burden of showing his innocence by the greater weight of the evidence. We know of no such rule, and it finds no warrant in the language of the statute. The decisions are all the other way, when rightly interpreted.

In a case very similar to this one, the court held that the jury must consider all the circumstances, whether introduced by the state or the accused, in connection with the evidence proving the possession of the liquor, taking into account as well the presumption of the defendant's innocence. State v. Cunningham, 25 Conn. 195. But directly to the point, and one which exactly fits this case, is the case of People v. Cannon, 139 N. Y. 32, 34 N. E. 759, 36 Am. St. Rep. 668, where the court thus sets forth, with great force and clearness, the limitations upon the power of the Legislature to create such presumptions, their extent and scope, and the rights of the defendant notwithstanding them: "It cannot be disputed that the courts of this and other states are committed to the general principle that even in criminal prosecutions the Legislature may with some limitations enact that when certain facts have been proved they shall be prima facie evidence of the existence of the main fact in question. See cases cited in 103 N. Y. 148 [8 N. E. 484, 57 Am. Rep. 705] supra. The limitations are that the fact upon which the presumption is to rest must have some fair relation to, or natural connection with, the main fact. The inference of the existence of the main fact because of the existence of the fact actually proved must not be merely and purely arbitrary or wholly unreasonable, unnatural, or extraordinary, and the accused must have in each case a fair opportunity to make his defense, and to submit the whole case to the jury, to be decided by it after it has weighed all the evidence and given such weight to the presumption as to it shall seem proper. A provision of this kind does not take away or impair the right of trial by jury. It does not in reality and finally change the burden of proof. The people must at all times sustain the burden of proving the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt. It in substance enacts that, certain facts being proved, the jury may regard them, if believed, as sufficient to convict, in the absence of explanation or contradiction. Even in that case the court could not legally direct a conviction. It cannot do so in any criminal case. That is solely for the jury, and it could have the right, after a survey of the whole case, to refuse to convict unless satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused, even though the statutory prima facie evidence were uncontradicted. The case of Commonwealth v. Williams, 6 Gray [Mass.] 1, supports this view."

In Board of Excise v. Merchant, 103 N. Y. 143, 8 N. E. 484, 57 Am. Rep. 705, the court in dealing with this very question says that, by the presumption or prima facie case arising by statute from possession of the liquor, "the burden of proof is not even really changed," and then adds that the case must be submitted to the jury, notwithstanding the presumption, upon the evidence, whatever it is, "with the burden still resting upon the prosecution to establish the guilt"; the offense in that case being an unlawful sale of liquor.

It is also stated as law in Black on Intoxicating Liquors that "the Legislature has undoubtedly a very extensive power in respect to fixing or modifying the rules of evidence to be applied by the courts. The exercise of this power, however, in relation to criminal proceedings is subject to certain important limitations, among which are the following: (1) The Legislature, in enacting rules of evidence, must not usurp judicial functions; (2) such rules must not be of the nature of ex post facto laws, or illegally retroactive in their operation; (3) they must not deprive the accused of his constitutional right to be confronted with the witnesses against him; (4) the Legislature cannot compel a defendant to furnish evidence against himself; (5) nor deprive him of his right to a trial by jury; (6) it would be unlawful to make any given fact or state of facts conclusive evidence of guilt in negation of the common-law presumption of innocence. The rules of evidence in prosecutions under the liquor laws have frequently been the subject of legislative attention, and the changes made have sometimes shown a wide departure from common-law principles. All such statutes, which for the most part are designed to facilitate convictions by admitting presumptive or indirect proof of certain facts, must be brought to the test of constitutional principles such as those above enumerated. If found to be in violation thereof, they are not defensible on any ground of public policy or the welfare of the community. As a rule, however, these acts have been so framed as to escape constitutional objection. Thus a provision that, in prosecutions for the common selling of intoxicating liquors, delivery in or from any building or place other than a dwelling house shall be deemed prima facie evidence of a sale is constitutional and valid. This neither conclusively determines the guilt or innocence of the party who is accused nor withdraws from the jury the right and duty of passing upon and determining the issue to be tried. And the same is true of a statute providing that whenever an unlawful sale of liquor is alleged, and a delivery proved, it shall not be necessary to prove a payment, but such delivery shall be sufficient evidence of sale. So if a law enacts that, where a person is seen to drink intoxicating liquor on the premises of one who has simply a license to sell liquor for consumption off the premises, it shall be prima facie evidence that the liquor was sold by the occupant of the premises with the intent that it should be drunk thereon."

This court has fully sustained this principle and approved these authorities by citing and relying upon them in State v. Barrett, 138 N. C. 630, 50 S. E. 506, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 626. It was held in Barrett's Case that, notwithstanding the statute expressly declares that the possession of more than a gallon of spirituous liquor shall be prima facie evidence of the purpose to sell it, it is, at last and in its essence, but evidence of guilt and not conclusive or determinative of defendant's guilt even by itself and unexplained.

It further holds that there is no shifting of the burden to the defendant, but it rests upon the state to establish the accusation of the bill of indictment beyond a reasonable doubt. It will be observed that in our case the court placed the entire burden upon the defendant to show his innocence, for the instruction to which exception was taken is that the statute requires him to satisfy the jury by the greater weight of the evidence that in fact he did not have the liquor in his possession for the purpose of sale, whereas according to all the authorities, and especially in Barrett's Case, the burden is on the state throughout the trial.

[2] The defendant profited little or nothing by the subsequent charge that, if the jury had a reasonable doubt about the facts recited by the court, being those which the defendant must prove by the greater weight of the evidence, they should acquit. This, to say the least of it, was very confusing, if not contradictory. What advantage did he gain by the charge as to reasonable doubt, after the jury had been told that there was a presumption against him and he must "satisfy them by the greater weight of evidence" of his innocence? It deprived him of the presumption of innocence and practically eliminated the benefit of the doctrine as to reasonable doubt by so weakening it that it amounted to nothing; and all of this was done under a statute (act of 1913) which merely establishes a prima facie case for the state sufficient, it is true, to carry the case to the jury, with the right to convict, but leaving in full force the doctrine of reasonable doubt and also the presumption of innocence, for a man, even under our present laws, may have more than a gallon of liquor in his possession for a perfectly lawful and innocent purpose. It is not the possession that is unlawful but the forbidden purpose for which it is held.

[3, 4] The Attorney General admitted that there was error in the charge, under the decisions in State v. Barrett, 138 N. C. 645, 50 S. E. 506, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 626, State v. McIntyre, 139 N. C. 600, 52 S. E. 63, State v. Dowdy, 145 N. C. 432, 58 S. E. 1002, State v. Dunn, 158 N. C. 654, 74 S. E. 359, and State v. Mostello, 159 N. C. 461, 74 S. E. 578, but he argued that what defendant did and proposed to do with the liquor, in law, constituted a sale, by his own admission on the stand. We do not assent to this position. It was lawful to buy the liquor in Virginia, and if he made the purchase there, acting solely and in good faith as agent for the other persons who sent him there for the purpose of buying it for them, he would not be guilty of selling liquor if he had delivered it. It was so decided in State v. Whisenant, 149 N. C. 515, 63 S. E. 91, as we think where it appeared that the defendant, as agent, had ordered some whisky for the prosecuting witness, which was to be shipped from another state, where our laws did not operate, and when it arrived he delivered it to the witness. It was held, if defendant acted bona fide, that he was not guilty, although he ordered the whisky as agent and received the money for it, and it was further said to be a transaction of interstate commerce. Under either view, defendant could buy liquor for another, as his agent, if he acted in good faith and was not concealing, under the guise of an agency, a transaction which was in fact a sale. If liquor can thus be ordered through an agent from another state, without violating the law, if done bona fide, why cannot the agent go into that state in person and buy it, where it can be lawfully sold, and then transport and deliver it himself? An agent may also receive at least a fair compensation for his services, provided the money is paid to him strictly as such and not as any part of the price for the liquor. His intent and the true nature of the transaction were questions for the jury, under a proper charge from the court. State v. Allen, 161 N. C. 226, 75 S. E. 1082, supports this view directly, and the facts were much like those in this case. State v. Johnston, 139 N. C. 641, 52 S. E. 273, is not in point, for there the jury found that the prosecuting witness, Brown, had paid the price of the liquor, which was fixed by the defendant beforehand. There was no agency. He was not buying for another but selling to him.

[5] Nor is the defendant indictable under Revisal, § 3534, as he procured the liquor in Virginia, where it was lawful to sell it. State v. Smith, 117 N. C. 800, 23 S. E. 449; State v. Burchfield, 149 N. C. 537, 63 S. E. 89. The case of State v. Smith, just cited, seems to be decisive of the point here raised and, we think, is fatal to the judge's charge. It is there held that it is no more unlawful to buy through one's agent than to buy directly himself, and the agent, when he buys lawfully, is just as innocent as his principal would be if he had bought himself; the real question being whether there was a bona fide agency or a sale in disguise. It is a question of intent, without regard to the fair appearance of the transaction. What is it, in fact or in substance and legal effect, is the question, and in this view, which is the true one, we are forcibly reminded of what Justice Ruffin observed in State v. Gilbert, 87 N. C. 527, 42 Am. Rep. 518, with regard to an indictment for carrying a concealed weapon. He said the offense of which the defendant is charged forms no exception to the general rule that to constitute a crime there must be a criminal intent, and the court perceived no good reason why it should be. "The law is a wholesome one, and its constant enforcement according to its true spirit and intention meets the desires and expectations of every well-disposed and peaceable citizen; but some care should be used, lest by pushing its requirements too far it may result in a reaction of sentiment against it."

[6] If it be said that defendant is guilty under Acts of 1911, c. 133, known as the "Club Act," it is quite enough to say that he was not indicted, nor was he convicted, under that law, and he has not had any opportunity to defend himself against any such charge. The Attorney General concedes that he is charged only with violating the act of 1913, and the judge below so expressly charged the jury. Besides, if the indictment had been framed upon the acts of 1911, c. 133, there is no fact made presumptive or prima facie evidence by it, and the charge would, if possible, be more erroneous than if confined to the Acts of 1913, as it should be. It may be, as argued by counsel, that upon the evidence in this case the jury would be warranted, under proper instructions, in convicting the defendant of the offense created by the Acts of 1911, c. 133, if he had been charged with a violation of that act. We need not give any opinion on that question, it not being raised on this record, as there is no allegation upon which such a conviction could be based and no reference whatever to the act. The allegations and proof must correspond. It would be contrary to all rules of procedure and violative of his constitutional right to charge him with the commission of one crime and convict him of another and very different one. He is entitled to be informed of the accusation against him and to be tried accordingly. State v. Ray, 92 N. C. 810; State v. Sloan, 67 N. C. 357; State v. Lewis, 93 N. C. 581; Clark's Cr. Proc. 150. We think that there is evidence sufficient to sustain a conviction upon the present indictment, but the jury must be so guided by the court as to find the facts essential to establish his guilt. The question here is as to the bona fides of the defendant. Was he really acting solely in the capacity of agent when he purchased the liquor, or was that a mere pretense, under cover of which he was violating the law by selling liquor or having it for sale? The case should have been submitted to the jury in this aspect, with the burden on the state to make out its case to their full satisfaction. If defendant was acting honestly and not deceptively, he had the right to buy liquor in Virginia, where it was lawful to sell to him, and to return to this state with it for the purpose of making delivery to the parties for whom he bought it, and if this was all it would not constitute a sale of the liquor or the possession of it with the unlawful purpose to sell, within the meaning of the Acts of 1913. State v. Allen, 161 N. C. 226, 75 S. E. 1082. The possession of the liquor, though, would carry the case to the jury. The rule as to the legal effect or significance of prima facie evidence has long prevailed in this and other courts, and we are not aware of any decision of this court which has stated it or has implied it otherwise than is done in this case.

There was error in the charge of the court in the respect pointed out, for which another trial is ordered.

New trial.

ALLEN, J. (concurring). I believe in the enforcement of the prohibition law, as I do in the enforcement of all law, but I cannot agree to convict of one offense when the defendant is charged with another, because intoxicating liquors are the subject of investigation.

The Search and Seizure Law (chapter 44, Laws 1913, § 2) says: "It shall be unlawful for any person to have or keep in his possession for the purpose of sale, any spirituous, vinous or malt liquors."

The charge in the warrant is that the defendant "did unlawfully and willfully have in his possession 11½ gallons of whisky for sale." The warrant follows the language of the statute, and there can be no doubt that the defendant was charged with a violation of the act of 1913. But, if there is any doubt about the charge against the defendant, there is none as to how he was tried, because the presiding judge, in his charge to the jury, said: "Gentlemen of the jury, the defendant, Zip Wilkerson, is indicted here, charged with the violation of an act passed by the General Assembly in 1913, known as the Search and Seizure Law. He is charged in the bill as having in his possession for the purpose of sale more than one gallon of liquor." He then charged the jury as to the effect under the act of 1913 of the prima facie case made by the possession of more than one gallon of intoxicating liquors, and of this charge the Attorney General, who prosecutes in behalf of the state, says in his brief: "Under the decisions of this court there was error in this instruction. State v. Barrett, 138 N. C. 645 [50 S. E. 506, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 626]; State v. McIntyre, 139 N. C. 600 [52 S. E. 63]; State v. Dowdy, 145 N. C. 432 [58 S. E. 1002]; State v. Dunn, 158 N. C. 654 [74 S. E. 359]; State v. Mostella, 159 N. C. 461 [74 S. E. 578]." All of these cases, cited by the Attorney General to show that the charge of his honor was erroneous, were concurred in by the chief justice.

It is certain, therefore, if the rule upon which the opinion of the court rests was adopted in an ill-advised moment to accord with a highly technical conception of the doctrine laid down by a text-writer and is a more metaphysical proposition, it has been reiterated time and again, with the consent of all the members of the court, and as it has been used at least twice (State v. Barrett; State v. Dowdy) for the conviction of those charged with violating the prohibition law, it is hardly fair or legal to change it now to enable the state to convict under one statute, when he is charged under another.

The defendant has not been charged with an offense under the Club Act of 1911, nor has he been tried under that act, and there is no contention that he was tried according to law, as heretofore declared by this court, under the Search and Seizure Law of 1913.

It should be kept in mind that neither life, nor limb, nor liberty, nor property has any security or abiding place except by adhering to the Constitution, and that it provides that "in all criminal proceedings every man has the right to be informed of the accusation against him"; that "no man shall be put to answer any criminal charge, except as hereinafter allowed, but by indictment," etc.; that "no man ought to be taken, imprisoned, or disseised of his freehold, liberties, or privileges, or outlawed or exiled, or in any manner deprived of his life, liberty, or property, but by the law of the land"; and that if a citizen can be tried in the superior court before a jury, and when he has been tried illegally, can be convicted here, without a jury, of another and different charge, the safeguards of the Constitution amount to nothing.

CLARK, C. J. (dissenting). The warrant in this case charges that the defendant "did unlawfully and willfully have in his possession 11½ gallons whisky for sale." There is no reference to any particular statute. Upon the defendant's own evidence he had in possession 11 gallons of whisky for which he had been paid in advance and which in return for the money he was to divide out among 10 men. Upon this the judge should have simply told the jury that, if they believed the defendant's testimony, he was guilty. Anything that he said other than this was simply surplusage, harmless, and immaterial, for upon the defendant's own testimony the verdict of guilty was correct and should be sustained.

We can pass by, for the present, the exception to the judge's charge on the effect of a prima facie case: If the instruction was erroneous, it was harmless, for upon the defendant's own showing the judge should have charged the jury to find him guilty. On the stand the defendant testified that he had in his possession 11 gallons of whisky in 3 kegs; that for a fee of $2.50 he went to Virginia and bought this whisky in bulk; that he brought it back to North Carolina and was going to divide and deliver it to the 10 men who had "chipped in" $2.50 each to buy it with, when he was arrested. The possession of the whisky and his purpose in having it are thus admitted.

State v. Johnson, 139 N. C. 641, 52 S. E. 273, is exactly in point. There Johnson agreed to go from Charlotte to Salisbury and get half a gallon of whisky, bring it back to Charlotte, and deliver it to Brown, who before he left Charlotte paid him $1, the purchase price of whisky. Brown, J., said: "We think the facts set out in the special verdict plainly disclose an agreement or contract to deliver to Tom Brown half a gallon of whisky entered into the city of Charlotte on July 15th, by the defendant and a receipt of the agreed price, also a delivery of the whisky next morning, in pursuance of the agreement. These facts constitute a sale of liquor upon the part of the defendant within the prohibition territory." This is exactly the case here. The defendant received the money from the other parties to go to Virginia where he got the whisky in bulk and brought it back for the purpose of dividing it and delivering it to the several purchasers, according to contract. If, as the court said in State v. Johnson, supra, "these facts constitute the sale of liquor" after the delivery, then unquestionably having it in possession for such purpose is having it "in possession for sale."

Therefore, taking defendant's testimony as true, the question is when a number of persons have raised a fund and put it in the hands of an agent to buy whisky, and he has such whisky in his possession, to be afterwards divided out by him to them in proportion to the money that each had paid in, whether this is having it in possession for an illegal purpose.

The identical question was raised in State v. Colonial Club, 154 N. C. 177, 69 S. E. 771, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 387, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1079, and the court there held by a vote of three to two that this did not constitute "having liquor in possession for the purpose of sale." The Legislature at the first ensuing session enacted (Laws 1911, c. 133) that such a condition should constitute having liquor in possession for an illegal purpose and a misdemeanor. That is conclusive of this case.

Chapter 133, Laws 1911, provides as follows (leaving out the verbiage which is not pertinent to this defendant): "Any corporation, club, association, person or persons that shall directly or indirectly * * * in any manner aid in keeping * * * a club room or other place [here a buggy] where intoxicating liquors are received, kept, or stored, for barter, sale, exchange, distribution or division, among the members of any such club or association or aggregation of persons by any means whatever, or that shall act as agents in ordering, procuring, buying, storing, or keeping intoxicating liquors for any such purpose shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." Upon the defendant's evidence he was an agent in procuring intoxicating liquor for sale or division among the aggregation of persons who furnished him the money for that purpose. He was therefore guilty of a misdemeanor under said chapter. He had in the language of the warrant "unlawfully and willfully in his possession 11 gallons of whisky" and was guilty of a misdemeanor under that chapter. It was mere surplusage to charge further that he had it for sale. It is true that the title of the act is "To prohibit the sale or handling of intoxicating liquors by clubs or associations." But the body of the act as above stated is broader and makes it a misdemeanor for any agent to procure intoxicating liquor for distribution or division among the members of any aggregation of persons.

There is no question of interstate commerce involved as in State v. Whisenant, 149 N. C. 515, 63 S. E. 91 (if indeed the latter case is law since the passage of the Webb-Kenyon Act). The whisky was not ordered from a Virginia house. When the whisky was delivered to the defendant in Virginia he received the full title to the property. Under his contract made in North Carolina and to be performed in North Carolina, he took the whisky home with him, and it was found in his possession in this state, and he admitted that he had it for the purpose of division among the 10 men who had paid him the money, which act was to be done here. It makes no difference that they paid him in advance. The sale was not completed until a division among the aggregation of persons for whom he had bought the whisky. No one of them had any title or ownership in the whisky till such partition should be made, and he had it in possession for the unlawful purpose of a sale by means of such division. There could be but one inference from the evidence, and the judge might well have charged the jury that if they believed the evidence to return a verdict of guilty. State v. Railroad, 149 N. C. 508, 62 S. E. 1088.

In State v. Herring, 145 N. C. 418, 58 S. E. 1007, 122 Am. St. Rep. 461, the court held (Hoke, J.) that taking orders and procuring whisky to be thereafter delivered to the parties who had furnished the agent with the money for such purchase made the defendant guilty of a sale if the whisky was delivered. It follows that, if the whisky is intercepted before the division and delivery, such agent is guilty of "having it in possession for sale."

In State v. Burchfield, 149 N. C. 537, 63 S. E. 89, the court held (Walker, J.) that under Rev. 3534, it was a misdemeanor for any one "to procure for, or deliver spirituous liquors to, another, and that such agent was punishable even though he had no interest in the sale other than as agent of the purchaser, and that his acting solely as agent for the buyer was no defense."

It follows that upon the defendant's own testimony he was guilty of a misdemeanor both under Rev. 3534, and Laws 1911, c. 133. It is therefore unnecessary to review the charge of the court as to the effect of prima facie evidence. It is certain that the judge's charge was correct under the uniform rulings of this court until a very recent period when the court, in what may be well termed an ill-advised moment, changed its former clear ruling to accord with a highly technical conception of the doctrine laid down by a text-writer. It may well be doubted if any jury has ever been impaneled in North Carolina which would be affected by the difference in the formula, whether that formerly in use, or that which is now considered more correct, is used. In this day, when the American Bar Association, and the demands of a practical age, and indeed the opinion of all the leading courts, are in favor of abolishing useless distinctions which can be of no use in the better administration of justice, it is unfortunate that stress should be laid upon this. It would be well to return to the older and more logical formula, or at least to hold that the variance is immaterial, for the difference can never be understood or appreciated by a jury whose object should be simply to ascertain the real facts of the controversy submitted to them.

But, whatever may be said in favor of the change which has been made, the failure to use it was absolutely immaterial in this case, for upon the defendant's own testimony he is guilty of a misdemeanor embraced within the terms of the warrant, "the unlawful possession of the 11 gallons of whisky." The defendant testified that he had it in possession, undivided, for the purpose of division and distribution. The judge charged the jury that they must find beyond a reasonable doubt the facts, which he recited and which under the statute would "constitute prima facie evidence," and added that, "if they found those facts beyond a reasonable doubt, then the duty was on the defendant to go forward and satisfy the jury by the greater weight of the evidence that he did not have such liquor in his possession for the purpose of sale." This was the long-recognized and logical method of expressing to the jury the legislative meaning of a prima facie case. There is no logical ground to contest its correctness. It can only be criticised as a metaphysical proposition. The Legislature must be presumed to use words in their ordinary sense, and usual acceptation. "Prima facie" is thus defined in Webster's International Dictionary: "Evidence sufficient in law to raise a presumption of fact or establish the fact in question unless rebutted."

There is nothing in the Constitution which consecrates this or any other technicality or formula. The repetition of an error which has been found injurious or unnecessary does not make it any less harmful. Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 1, 25 Am. Dec. 677, had been repeated countless times and endured for 70 years. But it was founded in error and like other errors was fated to pass away. Mial v. Ellington, 134 N. C. 1, 46 S. E. 961, 65 L. R. A. 697. The same is true of many other decisions which have been reversed. Most technicalities that prove harmful are abolished by legislation, because the courts are slower in reforms of this kind. In the present case the formula used by the judge below is in accordance with that which was recognized throughout this state till a very short time ago, and no harm but great good would follow a return to our former rulings on that subject. The public policy of a state is expressed by the lawmaking power, and the sole object of the courts should be to construe and execute the law in the spirit in which it was enacted. The only way to enforce the law is to enforce it, and in its integrity.

In this state the defendant made the contract to furnish 10 men with whisky; in this state they paid him the money for it; in this state he had the whisky ready to divide and deliver to them. Is there no law yet that makes possession of whisky under these circumstances "unlawful and willful" as charged in this warrant? To small avail is the act of the General Assembly of 1908 and its approval on a referendum, and to small avail are the acts of Congress and the subsequent acts, both state and federal, curing all defects discovered by the courts if this transaction can escape the condemnation of the law. There was one who said he could "drive a coach and six through any act of Parliament." It seems that legislators and Congressmen are still unable to use language effectively to express their meaning when that language is subjected to the critical eyes of courts.

THOMPSON v. THOMAS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1913.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 233*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—FAILURE TO RECORD—EFFECT.

A deed is not valid as against a junior deed to a purchaser for a valuable consideration which is first registered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 563-566; Dec. Dig. § 233.*]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 235*)—FAILURE TO RECORD—EFFECT.

Under Rev. 1905, § 980, providing that no conveyance of land shall be valid as against creditors or purchasers for a valuable consideration but from the registration thereof, registration is not required as against a subsequent deed, made without a valuable consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 567-569, 571-576; Dec. Dig. § 235.*]

3. DEEDS (§ 68*)—RECORDING—EFFECT.

A deed by a grantor who did not have sufficient mental capacity to execute it was void, and was not rendered valid by its registration prior to the registration of an earlier deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 149-156; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Davidson County; Long, Judge.

Action by Maggie H. Thompson against Charles B. Thomas. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jno. T. Perkins, of Morganton, and Emery E. Raper, of Lexington, for appellant. F. C. Robbins and Walser & Walser, all of Lexington, and Justice & Broadhurst, of Greensboro, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. This is an action to recover two lots in Thomasville, N. C. The plaintiff and defendant are half brother and sister, and, moreover, their mothers were sisters. Both claim title to the property under conveyance from the widow of their father, who was the mother of the defendant. The plaintiff claims under two deeds bearing date January 28, 1909, each deed reciting a consideration of $1, and both probated April 11, 1912, after the death of the grantor, and recorded the next day. The defendant claims under a deed from his mother, Sallie L. Thomas, for both lots, dated and registered August 14, 1909, reciting a consideration of $1, and "other considerations accepted." She died in 1912, leaving her son, the defendant, her sole heir. The jury upon issues submitted to them found that the deeds to the plaintiff dated January 28, 1909, were duly executed and for a valuable consideration, and that the plaintiff did not procure their execution by fraud. The jury found that at the time of the execution of the deed of August 14, 1909, by Sallie L. Thomas to Chas. R. Thomas, the defendant, she did not have sufficient mental capacity to execute said deed, and that it was made without valuable consideration.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

There was a great mass of evidence on both sides, and numerous exceptions to the admission of evidence and to the charge. None of the exceptions, however, present serious questions of law for the consideration of the court. The contest was almost entirely one as to the facts, and was settled by the jury upon issues properly submitted. It can be of no service to discuss well-settled propositions of law, nor to develop more fully the voluminous evidence upon what must have been a very unpleasant controversy between near relatives.

[1-3] The deed to the plaintiff executed January 28, 1909, was not registered until April 12, 1912, and would not be valid against the junior deed to the defendant, executed and registered in August, 1909, if the grantee in the latter deed had been a purchaser for a valuable consideration and the grantor had been competent to execute a deed. But the jury having found that the latter deed was without valuable consideration, the statute would not apply. Rev. § 980. Besides the jury further found that the grantor, at the time of the execution of the deed of August 14, 1909, did not have "sufficient mental capacity to execute said deed." It was therefore void, and registration could not give it validity. The defendant was sole heir to his mother, but the jury having found that her deed to the plaintiff was executed for a valuable consideration, and that its execution was not procured by fraud, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the premises.

Upon consideration carefully made of all the exceptions and of the entire evidence, we think that the matter has been determined by the jury under the superintendence of the careful and able judge, who committed. No error.

CROSBY et al. v. WIGGINS LAND CO. et al.
(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 28, 1918.)

QUITCLAIM DEED — CANCELLATION — MISREPRESENTATIONS.

Plaintiffs, in a suit to cancel their deeds conveying the remainder in land after expiration of a life estate for misrepresentation of the grantee, held entitled to recover.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Colleton County; Geo. E. Prince, Judge.

Action by M. J. Crosby and others against the Wiggins Land Company, R. G. Wiggins, and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, R. G. Wiggins appeals. Affirmed by equally divided court.

Padgett, Lemacks & Moorser, of Walterboro, for appellant. Howell & Gruber, of Walterboro, for respondents.

FRASER, J. Edward O'Quin, now dead, owned a plantation in Colleton county, known as the "Carn Farm." In 1888 he conveyed it to Mrs. "Mary A. Padgett and her children." On the record the following entry appears: "On 5 & 9 lines the words heirs erased before signing." The grantees treated the deed as a conveyance in fee, and through several conveyances the timber was conveyed to the Thayer Lumber Company. Subsequent to that conveyance, the land was conveyed to Mr. Geo. Fletcher. Mr. Fletcher, finding the land unprofitable, tried to sell the land to Mr. R. G. Wiggins. Mr. Wiggins had the title examined for this sale, and the investigation showed that Mr. Fletcher had only an estate for the life of the children of Mrs. Padgett. Mr. Wiggins told Mr. Fletcher that if he would get a quitclaim deed from the heirs of Edward O'Quin he would buy the land, as that would give him title to the land and the timber. Mr. Fletcher told Mr. Wiggins that he did not claim the timber, but he would try to get the quitclaims and that Mr. Wiggins could make out of it anything he could. Mr. Fletcher conveyed the land to the defendant Wiggins Lumber Company, for which Mr. Wiggins was the agent, and the heirs of O'Quin conveyed the reversion to J. R. Paschall, at the suggestion of Mr. Wiggins, and Paschall conveyed to Wiggins. Mr. Fletcher's price was based upon his idea of the value of the land. The inducement to Mr. Wiggins to buy was that he would thereby get the timber as well as the land. The Thayer Lumber Company paid for the timber $2,500. Mr. Fletcher paid $2,250 for the land, and $95 to attorneys for the titles and securing the quitclaims, and sold it to Wiggins Lumber Company for $2,500. It is estimated that on account of increased values of land and timber the timber is now worth about $4,000 and the land about $3,000. Mr. Wiggins had the quitclaim deeds prepared by his attorney, and the deeds were carried to Mr. W. J. Fishburne of the then firm of Fishburne & Padgett, in order that he might have them executed. Mr. Fishburne was about to go away on a trip and turned over the papers to his copartner, Mr. Padgett, in order that he might procure the execution of them. Seven of the heirs of Edward O'Quin executed quitclaim deeds. There was no money paid for those deeds to the heirs of Edward O'Quin.

This action is brought by the heirs of Edward O'Quin to set aside these deeds, on account of mistake of fact and fraud. The circuit decree was in favor of plaintiff. From this Mr. Wiggins appealed on the ground that the preponderance of the evidence was against the finding.

There is conflict of testimony as to what Mr. Fishburne told Mr. Padgett and what Mr. Padgett told the heirs of Edward O'Quin. Mr. Fishburne says he told Mr. Padgett of the defect and that the deeds were a mere matter of form. Mr. Padgett testified that he has no recollection of this and is sure that he did not so understand Mr. Fishburne, but that he merely told them that the deed was to enable Mr. Fletcher to sell his land and that the deeds would back up what their father had done. It is a pleasure to state that no fraud is alleged against Mr. Fishburne or his partner, Mr. H. B. Padgett. Memory is unreliable, and a witness may, with perfect honesty make a statement that is not in accordance with the facts. Mr. D. L. Smith, one of the witnesses to the deed of Mrs. Mary Crosby (one of the O'Quin heirs), said that Mr. Padgett told Mrs. Crosby that the deed was "a mere form to cure the defect." The grantors state that Mr. Padgett told them, "There is nothing in it for you or against you." Subsequently Mr. Fishburne said he regarded the deeds as merely formal. It is entirely probable that Mr. Fishburne, who knew what the defect was, and who considered the absence of the words "heirs" as purely formal, should have told his partner, and the partner should have told the O'Quins, and then, the whole subject being new to him, he has forgotten.

It will be observed that the theory of the appellant and his attorneys still is that these deeds are merely formal. Are they merely formal? It appears that they are not. Appellant speaks of the omission of the word "heirs." The word was not omitted. It was stricken out, and so important was it that attention was called to it before the deed was executed. It certainly was not inadvertent. The O'Quins may not have known it, and did not, but they had a substantial right, which was a fee in reversion, after the expiration of the life estates. The whole estate is estimated at about $7,000 and advancing in value. What Mr. Fletcher needed was a conveyance of this interest. A life estate is roughly estimated at one-half of the whole. The O'Quins were asked to convey about $3,500 worth of property for nothing, and to make the conveyance without an hour for reflection or investigation. The deeds are spoken of as quitclaims. In one sense they are, in that there is no warranty clause. Rapalje & Lawrence Law Dictionary: "Quitclaim is a release or acquitting of a man for an action that he (the releasor) hath taken or might have against him." Popularly it may be taken to be the relinquishment of an uncertain claim. The usual words of a quitclaim, "remit, release and forever quitclaim" are not in the deeds. They are straight conveyances of "all my right, title, and interest in Carn Farm." Besides that, the consideration for which these deeds were executed did not exist. There was no money consideration. Two other considerations are set up: (1) To enable their neighbor to get what he thought he had bought. (2) To sustain their father's deed. When they found that the deeds did not and were not intended to sustain the deed of their father, but really to defeat it as to the most valuable portion, they have brought this action to undo what they did under a mistake. The statement of Jacob O'Quin does not have the effect the appellant claims. Jacob O'Quin said, in a conversation with his neighbor, "If it wasn't for one party trying to beat the other, that he (Jacob) would not have anything to do with it." It was a high and noble purpose to convey away rights to sustain the supposed deed of their father, but quite another to do what would deprive a bona fide purchaser of his title under that deed. There is also quite a difference between making a conveyance to enable a neighbor to get what he thought he had purchased, and making a conveyance to enable a stranger to get what he did not purchase.

Was there fraud? There was. Rapalje & Lawrence Law Dictionary: "Fraud is used in many senses, but the point common to all of them is pecuniary advantage gained by unfair means." The pecuniary advantage here was that Mr. Wiggins would get the timber for which he was not to pay. The unfair means was to secure deeds to the property of great value, under the statement that the deeds were merely a formal proceeding to cure an omission. It makes no difference that the attorneys were honest and not conscious of the advantage. Indeed, the more honest and reputable they were, the more likely were they to secure the advantage. As a matter of law, the principal is responsible for the acts of the agent, and the agent is charged with the knowledge of the principal. Combining therefore the act of the agent with the knowledge of the principal, can it be doubted that it was unfair to send to the O'Quins, people of little education, at the hands of highly honorable gentlemen, deeds already prepared for immediate execution, and state that the result desired was to help their neighbor and sustain their father? We think not, and find that there was fraud.

It is said, however, that this suit is really in the interest of the Thayer people, and that, by reason of a contract between the Thayer people and the heirs of O'Quin, the Thayers will get the land. It is said that, where equities are equal, the courts will not interfere; that if these deeds are affirmed the Thayers will lose the timber for which they have paid, but if they are canceled Mr. Wiggins will practically lose the land for which he has paid. The contract between the Thayers and the O'Quins is not before the court for enforcement, and we can make no finding as to its validity. Suppose, however, that that contract is binding; the equities of the parties are not equal. Mr. Wiggins would not undertake the purchase until he found that by this plan he could get the timber for which he was not to pay, and thereby defeat the right of the Thayers to the timber. The Thayers did not move in the matter until they found that their timber was in danger. The purpose to defeat another is fraud. See Lowry v. Pinson, 2 Bailey, 324, 23 Am. Dec. 140; Magovern v. Richards, 27 S. C. 288, 287, 3 S. E. 340; Gerald v. Gerald, 28 S. C. 444, 6 S. E. 290. The purpose to protect yourself is not. Whether the means by which they seek to protect is or is not fraudulent is not before this court. There was no abuse of discretion in requiring appellant to pay the costs and disbursements of this suit.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

GARY, C. J., concurs. HYDRICK and WATTS, JJ., concur in the result.

HILLER v. BANK OF COLUMBIA.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 29, 1913.)

1. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 154*)—DEPOSITS—SET-OFF—BURDEN OF PROOF.

A bank seeking to charge against deposits due a depositor money paid on the depositor's debt without his authority must plead and prove that the depositor ratified such payment by adopting it for his own use, and, in the absence of an appropriate pleading, evidence of such a ratification is inadmissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 502-512, 515, 516, 518-533; Dec. Dig. § 154.*]

2. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 154*)—DEPOSITS—ACTION—EVIDENCE.

In an action by depositor to recover the balance of an account kept in her name as an individual where the bank sought to set off payment of checks signed by her as administratrix, in which capacity she kept another account, her husband's will, under which she was acting, is inadmissible in evidence, where it appeared that the moneys in both accounts belonged to her individually.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 502-512, 515, 516, 518-533; Dec. Dig. § 154.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1053*)—REVIEW—INSTRUCTION—CURE OF ERROR IN ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In an action by depositor for the balance of an account kept in her name as an individual, where her husband's will was improperly admitted in evidence upon the theory that moneys kept by her in account as administratrix belonged to his estate, the error was not cured by the charge in which the court properly concluded that the moneys in the account as administratrix belonged to her individually, where his remarks as to that matter might not have been understood by the jury as a charge to them, being prefaced by the statement that what he was saying was not so much for the jury as for the benefit of counsel in case he erred.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4178-4184; Dec. Dig. § 1053.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—REVIEW—PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

In an action by a depositor for the balance of an account kept by her individually, where it appeared that she had another account in her name as administratrix, although all the money belonged to her as an individual, the improper admission of her husband's will on the theory that the latter account did not belong to her absolutely, and hence the bank could not set off as against the individual account the payment of checks signed as administratrix, is prejudicial to the bank.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1068, 1069, 4153-4157, 4166; Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 192*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CHARGE ON FACTS.

A charge is not improper as a charge on the facts merely because it does not state hypothetically facts which are admitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 432-434; Dec. Dig. § 192.*]

6. TRIAL (§ 145*)—ACTION FOR DEPOSIT—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where a customer carried two deposits in a bank, one as administratrix and one individually, the funds in both of which were her individual property, and authorized her agent to sign her name to checks on the administratrix account, and the bank, by directions of the agent, charged checks signed as administratrix to the individual account, an instruction in an action for the balance on that account, which withdrew from the jury the question whether the course of dealing between the parties justified the bank in believing the agent within his powers in directing the checks to be charged to the individual account, was improper; there being some evidence the plaintiff had at a previous time carried two accounts, on both of which the agent was authorized to draw.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 328, 341; Dec. Dig. § 145.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 215*)—PRESENTATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW IN COURT BELOW—OBJECTIONS—NECESSITY.

No advantage can be taken of a charge which misstated the issues where it was not made the ground of objection below.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1309-1314; Dec. Dig. § 215.*]

8. TRIAL (§ 191*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CHARGE ON FACTS.

A charge which assumes a disputed question of fact is improper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 420-431, 435; Dec. Dig. § 191.*]

9. TRIAL (§ 253*)—INSTRUCTIONS—IGNORING ISSUES.

Where a depositor carried two accounts, one as administratrix and one individually, both however being her individual property, an instruction, in an action for a balance on the individual account to which the bank had charged checks signed as administratrix, being directed so to do by the depositor's agent, who was authorized to sign checks on the administratrix's account, that defendant could not recover unless it proved that the checks were signed by the depositor herself was improper as ignoring the issue of the agent's authority, real or apparent, to direct the checks to be charged to the individual account.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 612-623; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

10. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 119*)—LIABILITY OF AGENT—BURDEN OF PROOF.

A principal who would escape liability for the acts of his agent done within the apparent scope of the agency, on the ground that the agent's authority was limited, has the burden of proving the limitation and notice thereof to the third party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 391-401; Dec. Dig. § 119.*]

11. TRIAL (§ 256*) — INSTRUCTIONS — REQUESTS.

Where the charge is desired on a special phase of the case, it must be brought to the attention of the court by request to charge, and, in the absence of an appropriate request, the giving of a mere general charge is not error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 628-641; Dec. Dig. § 256.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Richland County; T. H. Spain, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Nannie E. Hiller against the Bank of Columbia. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

See, also, 92 S. C. 445, 75 S. E. 789.

D. W. Robinson, of Columbia, for appellant. Frank G. Tompkins, of Columbia, for respondent.

HYDRICK, J. A short time after her husband's death, in 1904, plaintiff collected a policy of insurance on his life, which was payable to her, in her own right, and deposited the money in the defendant bank to her credit as "Nannie E. Hiller, Adm'x." Her husband left a will of which she was executrix, and, after his death, she continued a mercantile business in which he had been engaged, though she was not authorized to do so by the will. Her brother-in-law, John G. Hiller, was her agent in the management of the business. He made deposits to her credit on her said account at bank and, in doing so, signed her name in the indorsement of checks payable to her order and signed her name to checks on said account. She also drew checks on said account. She testified that at first she drew all the checks herself but later she gave him authority to sign her name to checks. She also said that, in signing her name, he tried to imitate her signature, and the testimony showed that it was difficult for even an expert in handwriting to distinguish them.

On April 19, 1910, plaintiff deposited $200 in the defendant bank to her credit as "Nannie E. Hiller," without "Adm'x" added. Some time in June thereafter a number of checks were presented at the bank, signed "Nannie E. Hiller, Adm'x," payment of which would have overdrawn that account. The bank was about to return them unpaid, when John G. Hiller happened to go into the bank, and, on his attention having been called to the matter, he directed the bank to charge them to Mrs. Hiller's personal account, saying that it was all hers—her business. This was done, and the amount to plaintiff's credit was thereby exhausted, except 13 cents, about which there is no controversy. The bank having refused, on demand, to pay Mrs. Hiller the $200 so deposited by her, she brought this action to recover said sum. The defense was that the money had been paid out on checks drawn by her or her authorized agent. The defendant attempted to show that the checks which had been charged to her personal account were signed by the plaintiff herself, and the evidence was conflicting as to whether she or John G. Hiller signed them. She admitted that she signed one for $55.20, which paid for a bale of cotton bought at the store, but denied signing the others. The one she admitted signing did not have "Adm'x" after her signature. The others did. A number of handwriting experts testified that, in their opinion, she signed most, if not all, of them. The bank contended further that the course of dealing between it and plaintiff and John G. Hiller, with the knowledge and acquiescence of plaintiff, had been such that it was justified in obeying his directions to charge the checks to her personal account. In support of that contention, besides the other testimony showing the general course of dealing, it introduced testimony to the effect that on a former occasion plaintiff had two accounts at the bank, and John G. Hiller was allowed to draw checks on both.

[1] Defendant also sought to show that the "Adm'x" checks which had been charged to plaintiff's personal account were drawn to pay her own debts for the purpose of asking that, as both funds were held by her in her own right, it be allowed to set off said checks against the amount to her credit on the personal account. The court excluded the testimony and ruled out the defense on the ground that it had not been pleaded in the answer. In this connection we may dispose of the exceptions based upon that ruling.

On the first appeal (92 S. C. 445, 75 S. E. 789) this court said with regard to that defense: "To avoid misunderstanding, we refer to another point not properly made by the appeal. When the depositor has not assigned his demand against the bank by check or otherwise, the right of the depositor to demand his balance is subject to the right of the bank to set off against the balance any debt due by him to the bank; and this right of the bank extends to a demand of the bank for money paid out on the depositor's debts without his authority, if the depositor subsequently ratifies the payment by adopting it for his own benefit. Lowrance v. Robertson, 10 S. C. 8; 27 Cyc. 838; Crumlish's Adm'r v. Central Imp. Co. et al., 38 W. Va. 380, 18 S. E. 456, 23 L. R. A. 120, 45 Am. St. Rep. 872, note. But the burden would be on the bank of properly pleading and proving such defense. This subject is referred to in the exceptions, but the defense was not alleged in the answer, nor was evidence on the point offered." Notwithstanding the plain declaration of the court that the defense had not been pleaded, and that it could not avail defendant, unless pleaded, no effort appears to have been made to obtain leave to plead it. Therefore there was no error in excluding the evidence offered to prove it.

[2] Previous to the first trial, the defendant had set up in its answer the defense that plaintiff had mingled her own funds with those of her husband's estate in her account at the bank and had drawn them out from time to time. On plaintiff's motion this defense and all the allegations of the answer relative to the will of plaintiff's husband and his estate, and the mingling of the funds thereof with plaintiff's own funds, were stricken out; and on the former appeal it was held that there was no reversible error in striking out those allegations because the undisputed evidence made only one issue, to wit, whether the money deposited by plaintiff, which, according to the undisputed evidence, was her own, had been drawn out by her or by her authorized agent, and that that issue was raised by the allegation of the answer that it had been so drawn out. Notwithstanding this ruling, on the second trial in the court below the plaintiff was allowed, against the objection of the defendant, to introduce her husband's will, and her attorney was allowed to argue therefrom to the jury that she had two funds in the bank, one of her husband's estate and one of her own; and the court refused to charge defendant's request that the will was not material to the issues in the case, and that it gave plaintiff no authority to carry on the mercantile business for five years after her husband's death.

The will was improperly admitted, because, on the second trial as on the first, the undisputed evidence was that the money deposited in both accounts belonged to plaintiff in her own right. Therefore the admission of the will could only confuse the issue.

[3] It might have been held that the error in admitting it was cured by the charge, because the court correctly concluded and held that there was no testimony that any estate money was deposited in the "Adm'r" account, if it were clear that the jury understood that holding as an instruction to them. But, in the beginning of what is set out in the record as the charge, his honor said: "What I shall say in the beginning is not so much for the jury as it is for the benefit of counsel in the case, in the event I err in saying it." Upon consideration of his honor's subsequent remarks on the subject, it is by no means clear that he intended any of them as instructions to the jury, or that the jury would have been warranted in accepting and acting upon them as such. And it was not until he came to the point in his remarks where he said that he thought it was his duty to submit only one question to the jury that we can say with certainty that he was addressing his remarks to the jury.

[4] We have often held that the admission of testimony which is merely irrelevant will not be ground for the reversal of a judgment, unless it is made to appear that it was prejudicial; and we are loath to disturb a judgment upon such grounds. But, under the circumstances above stated, we are not prepared to say that the error was not prejudicial, especially as the court refused to charge defendant's request with regard to the relevancy of the will and the absence of authority therein to plaintiff to continue the mercantile business after her husband's death.

[5] We do not agree with appellant that his honor charged on the facts, when he said to the jury: "And she says she opened one on this side, called individual account; she would have had the right to say to John G. Hiller: 'You may check on this administratrix account. You may draw checks on it and sign my name to them, and the bank is authorized to pay those checks; but you cannot sign checks on this individual account. I alone shall draw checks on that.' If she did that, she did what she had the right to do." The facts stated were all admitted or undisputed, and we have frequently held that the trial judge does not violate the inhibition against charging on the facts, when he states admitted or undisputed facts as a basis of applying the law. It would sound absurd, even to an intelligent layman, to hear a trial judge stating hypothetically, in his charge to the jury, facts which are admitted or undisputed. In prohibiting judges from charging on the facts and from stating the testimony, the purpose of the lawmakers was to prevent the judge from becoming a participant, directly or indirectly, in the decision of disputed issues of fact.

[6] But we think his honor erred when he further said, in the same connection: "And if John G. Hiller was authorized to draw on this account, and instead he drew on this account, he did what he had no right to do, and if the bank paid the checks, they did what they had no right to do." The last sentence of this instruction eliminated from the consideration of the jury the contention of the bank that the course of dealing between the parties had been such as to justify the conclusion that Hiller was acting within the scope of his authority when he directed the checks in question charged to plaintiff's personal account. It also withdrew from their consideration the knowledge or lack of knowledge of the bank of the limitation of the authority of Hiller to draw checks on only one account, which, in view of the testimony of the previous course of dealing, was an important element in determining whether the bank's defense should be sustained.

The rule is that the principal is responsible for the acts of his agent done within the scope of his authority, real or apparent. An agent is clothed in law with all the authority which his principal holds him out as having, or knowingly allows him to hold himself out as having. Therefore if the plaintiff, by her course of dealing with the bank, through Hiller, held him out as having the authority which he exercised, or knowingly allowed him to exercise such authority and acquiesced in it, and if the circumstances were such that a reasonably prudent person would have concluded therefrom that he had such authority, the bank was justified in obeying his directions, and its defense should be sustained. Welch v. Clifton, 55 S. C. 568, 33 S. E. 739; Blowers v. Railway, 74 S. C. 221, 54 S. E. 368; 81 Cyc. 1331-1335. The testimony, especially that which tended to show that, on a previous occasion, two accounts had been kept, and Hiller drew on both, with the knowledge and acquiescence of plaintiff, made an issue of fact whether the bank was justified in its course, and the court invaded the province of the jury in charging that it had no right to do what it did, under the facts stated in the hypothesis. Buist Co. v. Mercantile Co., 73 S. C. 48, 52 S. E. 789.

[7] The court erred in stating the bank's contention to the jury, saying: "The bank contends that these ten checks (the 'Adm'x' checks which had been charged to plaintiff's personal account) were on this account called individual account, not to be drawn on by John G. Hiller at all, but by Nannie E. Hiller." The bank's contention was not that said checks were drawn on the personal account but that, notwithstanding they were drawn on the "Adm'x" account, they were drawn by Mrs. Hiller herself; and, as there was not enough money to her credit in that account to pay them, she must be held to have intended that they should be paid out of the other account. With one exception, the checks showed on their face that they were drawn on the "Adm'x" account. The bank further contended that it was within its rights in obeying Hiller's direction to charge the checks to plaintiff's personal account. This error would not, however, be ground for reversal of the judgment, because it was the duty of defendant's attorney to pay attention to the charge and to call attention of the court to the error in stating his contentions. We have frequently held that if counsel sit by and allow the court to misstate the issues or their contentions, without calling attention to it and asking that it be corrected, they will not be allowed to take advantage of it on appeal.

[8] But the instruction was further erroneous in that it involved a charge on the facts, in so far as the court said of the individual account, that it was "not to be drawn (on) by John G. Hiller at all but by Nannie E. Hiller." Whether John G. Hiller had authority to draw on that account was, as we have seen, an issue of fact which was exclusively for the jury.

[9] We think also that his honor narrowed the issue too much when he told the jury that the bank must prove that "the ten checks in issue drawn upon it (the individual account) were drawn rightly, to wit, drawn by Nannie E. Hiller." This instruction left out of view this very material feature of the defense that, even if the checks were drawn by John G. Hiller, still if he had authority, real or apparent, to direct the bank to charge them to Mrs. Hiller's personal account, the bank had the right to do so. His authority to draw the checks on the "Adm'x" account was admitted, and they were so drawn, so that the question whether the plaintiff drew those checks herself was not the sole question at issue, nor was a finding that she did not draw them herself conclusive of the bank's defense.

[10, 11] Appellant contends that his honor erred in charging that, when plaintiff proved that she put the money in the bank, the burden was upon the bank to show that it was rightly paid out. As a general proposition that was a correct statement of the law, and from the context it appears that the court had in mind only the general rule in such cases. It is true, as contended by appellant, that, when a general agency is shown, the burden is upon the principal who would escape liability for the acts of his agent done within the apparent scope of the agency, on the ground that the agent's authority was limited, to prove the limitation and notice thereof to the other party. Whaley v. Duncan, 47 S. C. 147, 25 S. E. 54; Lowry v. Railroad Co., 92 S. C. 43, 75 S. E. 278; 81 Cyc. 1644. But, as the principle for which appellant contends arose out of a special phase of the case, it should have been brought to the attention of the court by a request to charge.

Judgment reversed.

GARY, C. J., and FRASER, J., concur. WATTS, J., was absent at the hearing and did not participate in the decision of this case.

CHATTANOOGA &amp; C. I. RY. CO. v. MORRISON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1913.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)*1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 122*) — TEMPORARY ADMINISTRATOR — RIGHTS TO SUE.

Where an instrument was propounded as a will, and a caveat was filed thereto, and pending the ensuing litigation on the issue of devisavit vel non a temporary administrator was appointed under Civil Code 1910, § 3938, such temporary administrator could file an equitable petition to enjoin a railroad company from unlawfully taking possession of a strip of land forming part of a tract left by the decedent, and constructing its road and operating the same, without first acquiring the right to do so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 494-495½; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

2. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 275*) — REMEDY OF LANDOWNER — INJUNCTION — RAILROADS — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Under the evidence there was no abuse of discretion in granting an interlocutory injunction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 769-773; Dec. Dig. § 275.*]

3. INJUNCTION (§ 147*)—APPLICATION FOR INTERLOCUTORY INJUNCTION—HEARING—PRACTICE.

While generally at the hearing of an application for an interlocutory injunction the testimony is introduced by means of affidavits, the rule is not inflexible; and, where witnesses are present, without objection on their part, for the purpose of testifying, the presiding judge may, in his discretion, allow them to be examined orally; due care being taken that no injustice is worked thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 320-322; Dec. Dig. § 147.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 129*)—CONTRACTS—OPERATION AND EFFECT.

A beneficiary's agreement that a railroad company may, pending condemnation proceedings, construct its railway across the land in which she has an interest is not conclusive upon her as administratrix of the estate where she is not the sole beneficiary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 533-536; Dec. Dig. § 129.*]

Error from Superior Court, Walker County; Moses Wright, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Morrison, administratrix, against the Chattanooga & Chickamauga Interurban Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

W. H. Payne, of Chattanooga, Tenn., for plaintiff in error. R. M. W. Glenn, of La Fayette, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. The Chattanooga & Chickamauga Interurban Railway Company was proceeding to construct its railway through a tract of land. Elizabeth Morrison, as temporary administratrix of Mattie Thomas, decedent, appointed under the statute pending litigation growing out of the propounding of an instrument as the will of the deceased and a caveat filed thereto, filed her equitable petition, seeking to enjoin the defendant from further trespassing upon the land, and praying to recover a judgment for the damages already done. The defendant admitted that it was proceeding to construct its railway across the land, but denied the right of the temporary administratrix to prosecute this action. It also contended that it had entered upon the land with the consent of the heirs of the decedent, including Elizabeth Morrison, and that it had begun proceedings to condemn a right of way, but they had been suspended with the consent of such parties until the litigation in regard to the will should be concluded. It further set up estoppel by reason of expenditures incurred with the knowledge of the plaintiff.

[1] 1. The first question which arises is whether the plaintiff had the right to file a proceeding to enjoin the taking of possession of a part of the land left by the decedent and the laying of its track thereon, if the evidence justified the finding that this was unlawful. By Civil Code 1910, § 3935, it is declared that the ordinary may, at any time, grant temporary letters of administration upon any unrepresented estate, for the purpose of collecting and taking care of the effects of the deceased. Section 3936 requires that a bond be given for double the amount of the personal property belonging to the estate. Section 3937 declares that a temporary administrator may sue for the collection of debts or personal property of the estate. Section 3938 provides that, pending an issue of devisavit vel non upon any paper propounded as a will, temporary letters of administration may be granted, unless the will has already been admitted to probate in common form, and letters testamentary have been issued.

Without discussing the various forms of special administration which were permissible under the common law, it will be seen from the above summary of the provisions of our Code that it is contemplated that there will be a permanent administration, but that provision is made for a temporary appointment, in two instances: First, where there is an unrepresented estate; and, second, pending an issue of devisavit vel non. In construing the power of an administrator so appointed, and its limitations, the purpose of the appointment is to be kept in view; and it must also be remembered that in this state real estate as well as personalty is subject to the payment of the debts of the decedent, and may be administered for that purpose, when necessary. As early as 1858, in the case of Johnson v. Brady, 24 Ga. 131, it was held that, "A temporary administrator, finding the assets of the estate of his intestate involved with other estates, and likely to be seized and sold, and the proceeds applied contrary to law, ought to ask an injunction until the affairs of the estate can be investigated, and conflicting claims adjusted." In Reese v. Burts, 39 Ga. 565, it was held that a temporary administrator might file an affidavit of illegality to an execution proceeding to sell the intestate's land. McCay, J., said: "We see no reason why the temporary administrator is not, in this state, bound to protect the real as well as the personal estate of the deceased from illegal interference. Land is assets for the payment of debts, in this state, and it is the duty of the administrator to keep it from strangers for that purpose." In Langford v. Langford, 82 Ga. 202, 8 S. E. 76, it was held that a temporary administrator had no right to distribute any portion of the intestate's estate, or to agree to sell and distribute the real property thereof, "nor can he interfere with the realty for any purpose except to preserve and protect it." See, also, Ewing v. Moses, 50 Ga. 264; Mason v. Atlanta Fire Co. No. 1, 70 Ga. 604, 607, 608, 48 Am. Rep. 585; Barfield v. Hartley, 108 Ga. 435, 33 S. E. 1010. He cannot institute an action to recover land alleged to belong to the estate and held adversely thereto. Banks v. Walker, 112 Ga. 542, 37 S. E. 866; Ward v. McDonald, 135 Ga. 515, 69 S. E. 817.

It will thus be seen that, while a temporary administrator cannot sue to recover land held adversely to the estate, or for mesne profits thereto, or maintain similar actions, and there is a distinction between his powers in regard to realty and personalty, it has been recognized that, under certain circumstances, he may take proper action to protect and preserve real estate against unlawful seizure or sale or illegal interference. In the present case, if it be conceded that the defendant was unlawfully proceeding to enter upon the land forming a part of the estate of the decedent and to appropriate a portion of it, to the damage of the estate, without condemning it in accordance with the law, who should stop such illegal action if not the temporary administrator? If certain persons claiming to be the heirs of the deceased should apply for an injunction, the defendant would reply that they have no title until it has been determined that the deceased died intestate. If the persons named in the alleged will as legatees should proceed, it will be said that they had no title until the will had been probated. No permanent administrator, either with the will annexed or based on intestacy, has been appointed. If the temporary administratrix cannot preserve the estate from unlawful seizure by the railroad company and use for a right of way, then it is without protection.

The case falls within the authorities above cited so far as the preservation of the status is concerned. But so far as the petition seeks to go further and recover damages on account of what has already been done, we think it is not sustainable.

[2] 2. Having determined that the plaintiff was a proper party to institute and maintain the suit for an injunction, did the presiding judge abuse his discretion in granting it? It was contended by counsel for the defendant that all of the heirs of the decedent had agreed to allow the defendant to enter upon the land without having first condemned it, and that the defendant had begun proceedings for the purpose of condemnation, but they had been postponed until the result of the litigation in regard to the will should be known. If the will should be set aside, as it does not appear that the decedent left any children or descendants of children, her husband would be her heir. Civil Code 1910, § 3930. While there are some general expressions on the part of witnesses for the defendant that all parties in interest agreed, it does not appear that the husband of the decedent did so, or was notified of the condemnation proceedings. Again, it appears that the land in controversy was included in the residuary clause of the alleged will, and it was alleged by the plaintiff that the legacy thereunder would have to be abated in order to pay expenses of administration, funeral expenses, and the like.

[4] The agreement, on the part of the plaintiff as an individual, for the defendant to enter upon the land would not be conclusive upon her in her representative capacity, if she were not the sole beneficiary. Moreover, her agreement provided that the proceeding to condemn the land should be instituted within a limited time, or the consent should go for naught. There was evidence tending to show that while it was technically begun, it was postponed by the defendant, though the plaintiff, through her husband, was asking that it proceed. If it was not a valid proceeding, it would not meet the requirements of the agreement. If it was a valid proceeding, the defendant could not cause it to be delayed and insist on going forward with the construction and operation of its road upon the land in the meantime, although other legatees named in the will consented. Without discussing the evidence at length, there was enough to authorize the presiding judge to grant the injunction.

[3] 3. The only other point for determination is one of practice. The presiding judge, on the hearing of the application for an interlocutory injunction, over objection by counsel for the defendant, allowed certain witnesses, sworn on behalf of the plaintiff, to be examined orally, in lieu of requiring their testimony to be reduced to the form of affidavits. There was no objection by the witnesses on the ground that they could not be compelled to attend such a hearing by compulsory process; nor did any of them decline to make affidavits, so as to raise the situation provided for by section 5918 of the Civil Code of 1910. When such a question is raised by a witness, we will deal with it as may seem proper in the light of his objection. Here the witnesses for the plaintiff were present, and the sole objection to admitting their oral evidence came from the defendant. The defendant was permitted to cross-examine them, and did so. If it had no right to do this, it was accorded a privilege of which it cannot complain. No evidence offered by the defendant, by affidavit or otherwise, was rejected. No application was made to require affidavits to be filed, and it does not appear that the defendant was taken by surprise, or that he asked for further time to rebut such evidence; nor was it shown that any injury was done to it. We fail to see how the defendant was hurt. Generally such hearings have been by affidavits. But there is no inviolable sanctity about an affidavit as against oral evidence. It is a matter of practice. And where the witnesses are present, at least, and not objecting, we think the presiding judge has a discretion as to whether he will hear affidavits or oral testimony. Indeed every one who has presided as a judge on the circuit bench will doubtless recognize the fact that not infrequently the truth can be reached by a few pertinent questions, though it may be beclouded and obscured in pages of carefully prepared affidavits. It requires more time to hear oral evidence; but it is more important to learn the truth than to save time. Of course the power should be justly used so as not to entrap or work a hardship upon either party. Justice is the object to be obtained, and it should be reached by just means.

In Boyce v. Burchard, 21 Ga. 74, and Hester v. Exley & Keller, 130 Ga. 460, 60 S. E. 1053, the rejection of certain evidence was affirmed, but oral evidence and affidavits were treated on the same basis. See, also, 7 Encyc. Ev. 1858; Davis v. Covington and Macon R. Co., 77 Ga. 322, 2 S. E. 555; 22 Cyc. 942; Bish. Eq. (8th Ed.) 16; Civil Code 1910, § 5406; Rogers v. Rogers, 103 Ga. 763; 30 S. E. 659; Robertson v. Heath, 132 Ga. 310, 64 S. E. 73.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

WALKER v. WOOD. (No. 4,646.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 7, 1913.
On Rehearing, Oct. 31, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 485*) — ATTORNEY'S FEES—UNSWORN DENIAL—SUFFICIENCY.

An obligation in a promissory note to pay attorney's fees if it is collected through an attorney at law is conditional, and for that reason an unsworn denial by the defendant that the statutory notice was given is sufficient, in a suit upon such a note where attorney's fees are claimed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 1542-1554; Dec. Dig. § 485.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 858*)—VACATION.

Where such an answer was erroneously stricken, it was error to overrule a motion, made during the term, to vacate a judgment in the plaintiff's favor which included attorney's fees.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 696, 701; Dec. Dig. § 858.*]

3. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 584*)—ATTORNEY'S FEES—JUDGMENT.

The stipulation in the note sued on for the payment of attorney's fees being conditional, the plaintiff was not entitled to a judgment for attorney's fees as upon an unconditional contract in writing. Turner v. Bank of Maysville, 13 Ga. App. —, 79 S. E. 180.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 1946, 1947; Dec. Dig. § 534.*]

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by G. B. Wood against C. N. Walker. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed conditionally on rehearing.

R. W. Orenshaw and Samuel D. Hewlett, both of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error. H. L. Graves, of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment reversed.

On Rehearing.

An unconditional judgment of reversal was entered in this case. Upon a motion for a rehearing, counsel for the plaintiff in the court below indicates his willingness to abandon his claim for attorney's fees, and, in view of the fact that the defendant's answer was properly stricken in so far as it undertook to set up a defense to the recovery of the unconditional part of the note, consisting of the principal and interest due thereon, we now direct that the judgment of the court below may be affirmed, provided the plaintiff will, within 10 days after the remittitur is filed in the court below, write off the sum awarded as attorney's fees. If this should not be done, the judgment will stand reversed.

Affirmed with condition.

MANNING v. STATE. (No. 5,223.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 29, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 723*)—TRIAL—MISCONDUCT OF SOLICITOR GENERAL.

The language of the solicitor general in concluding the argument for the state was improper, highly inflammatory in character, and calculated to prejudice the jury against the defendant, and was not warranted by the evidence. The trial judge should have declared a mistrial, or have strongly admonished the jury that the language was improper, and that they should disregard it in their deliberations.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1663, 1674, 1676; Dec. Dig. § 723.*]

Error from Superior Court, Laurens County; K. J. Hawkins, Judge.

R. T. Manning was convicted of violating the prohibition law, and brings error. Reversed.

T. E. Hightower, of Dublin, for plaintiff in error. E. L. Stephens, Sol. Gen., of Wrightsville, for the State.

HILL, C. J. On the trial of one for the offense of selling liquor, the solicitor general, in closing his argument, used the following language: "These blind tigers are running around all over the country, sending souls to hell, and have no respect for Jesus Christ or woman, and you ought to stop that kind of stuff. Everything you hear is people all over the country talking about blind tigers, and I ask you not to tolerate this stuff, and I ask you to help me convict them." The attorney for the accused objected to this language, and moved the court for a mistrial. Unquestionably the language used by the solicitor general was improper, and the court should have declared a mistrial, or should have admonished the jury that the language was improper, and not to regard it, or give it any weight in their deliberations. The case is a close one on the evidence, and for this reason we more readily grant a new trial. It was not a fair inference, from the evidence, that the defendant was a "blind tiger," as defined by the Supreme Court. Only one sale was proved, and that by a witness who probably had ill will towards the accused.

Judgment reversed.

MOBLEY v. STATE. (No. 5,184.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 30, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 67*)—LABOR CONTRACT ACT—PROSECUTION FOR VIOLATING LABOR CONTRACT ACT—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In a prosecution for a violation of section 715 of the Penal Code, generally known as the "labor contract act," the burden is upon the state to show that the hirer alleged to have been damaged has in fact sustained a loss capable of definite computation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 75; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

2. FRAUD (§ 68*)—MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 67*)—PROSECUTION FOR VIOLATING LABOR CONTRACT ACT.

The "labor contract act" was not designed to afford machinery for the collection of debts by criminal prosecution but was intended to apply only to cases where punishment should be inflicted upon those who obtained money, or other advance of value, by fraud and with the intent to cheat and damage the opposite party to the contract. It is axiomatic that, where no loss is shown to have been sustained by a person alleged to have been defrauded, the act alleged to be fraudulent is not punishable as a crime.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 76; Dec. Dig. § 68;* Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 75; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 67*)—PROSECUTION FOR VIOLATING LABOR CONTRACT ACT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The conviction in this case was wholly unauthorized.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 75; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

Error from City Court of Millen; Thos. L. Hill, Judge.

Jule Mobley was convicted of violating the Labor Contract Act, and brings error. Reversed.

C. B. Garlick, of Waynesboro, for plaintiff in error. W. Woodrum, of Millen, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The record in this case to our minds develops a remarkable state of facts. In saying this we, of course, accord to the testimony in behalf of the prosecution the same preference which the judge (who tried the case without a jury) gave it and disregard entirely the defendant's showing before the jury so far as in conflict with it. The defendant was charged with a violation of the "labor contract act" (Acts of 1903, p. 90), embodied in sections 715 and 716 of the Penal Code, and on trial before the presiding judge, without a jury, was adjudged guilty and sentenced to serve 12 months upon the chain gang, without any alternative. A review of the evidence shows that the accused had contracted to serve as a farm laborer, or share cropper, with the prosecutor for 12 months from January 1, 1913, to January 1, 1914. He worked from January 1, 1913, until May 10, 1913, and during that entire period, according to the testimony of the prosecutor himself, received the sum total of $11.20, $10 of which was paid him in December, 1912, at the time the contract was made, and $1.20 being the sum paid in May, 1913, upon which the prosecution in the case at bar is based. The defendant was one of three share croppers with whom the prosecutor contracted at the same time, and, though the prosecutor contracted with each separately, it appears that the three were to jointly cultivate, in corn and cotton, in return for one-half of the crop they might by their labor produce, 70 acres or more on the prosecutor's plantation. According to the testimony the contract of the prosecutor with the defendant, as with each of his collaborators, made each of them what is ordinarily known as "croppers," and, as a legal result of this relation, the title to the crop was fixed in the prosecutor as landlord. Tolbert and Alonzo Wright, the two persons who, according to the testimony of the prosecutor, severally contracted with him to cultivate the two tracts of land jointly with the accused, so far as appears from the record, continued in service, and no complaint is made that they were not still laboring at the time of the trial.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The testimony does not show that the defendant did not work faithfully, barring lost time (probably caused by bad weather), during the four and a third months of his service under the contract, but the prosecutor testified: "On the 10th day of May he got $1.20 in money from me, of the value of $1.20. He told me he wanted the money, and I let him have it because he was working on a share crop with me. I would not have loaned the money if he had not been working with me. After obtaining the $1.20 Julie Mobley quit the crop and left and never worked any more in the crop. He has done no work for me since, neither has he paid nor offered to pay me the $1.20 back." The prosecutor further testified that the defendant left because he did not want to pay the prosecutor, and that he (the prosecutor) was damaged $1.20 and was damaged more than this because his crop suffered for want of work. He testified also that he paid the defendant's road taxes (amounting to $3), but since there is no suggestion that this payment was made at the request of the defendant, and since no one can, as a matter of right, make another pay his debts by paying them for him and then requiring that the sum advanced be repaid, the road tax is immaterial.

[1] Leaving out of view the question whether the prosecution's case failed because of failure to prove that the accused did not have good cause for quitting the service of the employer with whom he had contracted (Johnson v. State, 13 Ga. App. —, 79 S. E. 179), for it is evident that the prosecutor's testimony upon this point is purely opinionative, without the statement of a single fact from which the court could for itself determine whether the conclusion reached was correct, the real question in the case is whether the record shows that the employer sustained loss. A citizen cannot be deprived of his liberty or convicted of crime upon suspicion that he has caused a loss or because of an imaginary loss. When loss is made the basis of a fraud alleged to be criminal, it must be proved to be an actual loss, definite in amount and capable of exact computation. It is no longer an open question that proof of actual loss is essential to authorize a conviction of the offense denounced in section 715 of the Penal Code. Millinder v. State, 124 Ga. 452, 52 S. E. 760; Abrams v. State, 126 Ga. 591 (2), 593, 55 S. E. 497; Coleman v. State, 6 Ga. App. 398, 65 S. E. 46. On the direct examination, as we have already stated, the prosecutor testified that he was damaged in the amount of $1.20, which the accused obtained from him, and which he would not have "loaned" the accused but for the fact that he was in his employ, and that he also sustained some damage (not estimated) due to the fact that his crop had suffered for lack of cultivation. Upon cross-examination the prosecutor (who was the only witness) testified that the crop which the accused, jointly with the Wrights, was to cultivate could reasonably be expected to make 30 bales of cotton, worth 10 or 12 cents per pound, and that the corn crop would amount to 50 bushels of corn, and after payment of the expenses and of advances made to the croppers, amounting to about $600, he could get one-half of the net remainder. Properly construing the testimony, the 30 bales of cotton would be worth at least $1,800 (viewed as commercial bales averaging 500 pounds each), and the corn would be worth $50, making $1,850 for the receipts (to say nothing of the cotton seed and fodder, which this court knows to be marketable), which would leave $1,250 (after deducting the $600 above stated as expenses and advances), a half of which, or $625, would be the property of the prosecutor. In the meantime, and until there is a settlement and the advances and expenses (whether they are greater or less) are paid, the entire crop is in the absolute control of the prosecutor. Civil Code, § 3707.

To say the least of it, we do not think that the evidence showed, beyond a reasonable doubt, that this laborer, in procuring a loan of $1.20 after four and a half months of faithful service, intended to defraud his employer. It is a matter of common knowledge that ordinarily by the 10th of May arable land has been prepared for planting and corn and cotton have been planted and have generally received their first working. There is nothing in the record to suggest that this was not true in the present case. It might have been possible for the prosecutor to prove his loss with sufficient definiteness to have established it, but he did not attempt to do so, and, on the contrary, it appears that one Charley Wright came to the defendant's place after the defendant left and took the defendant's place in the crop, and that Charley Wright will be paid out of the crop as a part of the expenses. There is nothing to suggest that Charley Wright is not as good a farm hand as the defendant, and therefore it devolved upon the state to show how the crop was damaged by the exchange of laborers, and definitely how much the damage amounted to. This the state failed to do. From the figures in the record it seems to us that the defendant, who abandoned his third of a half interest in the crops, is the only probable loser actually disclosed. But if, as a matter of fact, the sum of $1.20 loaned him, and the $1.20 for extra plowing on Life Fleming's crop, was the only cash advanced him up to May 10th, we cannot greatly blame him for seeking greener fields and pastures new. As an obiter we would say this would be good cause for quitting.

[2] 2. We regret that there seems to be a very prevalent misapprehension of the scope and purposes of section 715 of the Penal Code, ordinarily known as the "labor contract act" of 1903. This statute was not designed to afford machinery for the collection of debts by criminal prosecution, but it was intended to apply only to cases where punishment should be inflicted upon those who obtained money, or other advances of value, by fraud and with the intent to cheat and damage the opposite party to the contract. It is axiomatic that, where no loss is shown to have been sustained by a person alleged to have been defrauded, the act alleged to be fraudulent is not punishable as a crime.

In the present case, aside from the absence of any proof that the employer sustained actual loss, the fact that the servant and farm laborer discontinued his service after having obtained as small a sum as $1.20, after having given satisfactory service for more than four months, and after having apparently performed all the hard labor incident to the preparation for planting, does not beyond a reasonable doubt compel the conclusion that this servant, at the time of the advancement or loan, harbored and was actuated by a definite intent to defraud. The defendant is a human being. He may be presumed to have some knowledge, indefinite though it may be, of the value of his services in preparing the ground and planting the crop. Presumably he knew the amount of the advances made to him, and if, as an intelligent being, he knew that he had given full value, or more than value received, for all of the advances he had obtained, he would not have had an intent to defraud, even if he had intended to quit his master's service at the time he asked for the loan. Of course in quitting the servant acts at his peril in becoming judge in his own case, and he must take the consequences if he judges wrongly. But, when his act is called in question, the law places upon the prosecution the burden of proving beyond any reasonable doubt that, at the time the servant quitted the service of his employer, he either knew, or reasonably should have known, that his act would impose a loss. In Mulkey v. State, 1 Ga. App. 521, 57 S. E. 1022, and in Patterson v. State, 1 Ga. App. 782, 58 S. E. 284, we pointed out that the intent to defraud was one of the absolutely essential ingredients of the offense denounced in section 715 of the Penal Code. It rests upon the state to prove the existence of this intent at the time the advance was made which it is claimed was procured by fraud. The offense of cheating and swindling, based on the violation of a contract to perform services, so far as it is affected by the element of fraud, does not differ in any respect from other offenses into the perpetration of which fraud enters as a controlling ingredient. In all cases, civil or criminal, where fraud is claimed to have been committed, the charge fails when it appears that no loss resulted from the act alleged to have been fraudulent. No loss, no fraud. This is true in law at least, and we think it is also sound in morals.

[3] 3. Under the rulings in Young v. State, 3 Ga. App. 463, 60 S. E. 117, Holloway v. State, 6 Ga. App. 243, 64 S. E. 671, and Coleman v. State, 6 Ga. App. 398, 65 S. E. 46, the evidence was wholly insufficient to authorize the judgment finding the accused guilty, and the court erred in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Judgment reversed.

COOPER v. STATE. (No. 5,183.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 29, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 88*)—CITY COURTS—SALE OF NARCOTIC DRUGS—ACCUSATION.

One charged with a violation of the act of 1907 as to the sale of narcotic drugs (Acts 1907, p. 121), as codified in sections 1651 and 1652 of the Civil Code (Pen. Code, § 459), can be prosecuted in a city court having jurisdiction of misdemeanors, by accusation filed therein, as well as by indictment of the grand jury transferred to that court from the superior court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 127; Dec. Dig. § 88.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 369, 376, 419, 420*)—EVIDENCE—HEARSAY—CHARACTER EVIDENCE—OTHER OFFENSES.

The accused was on trial for a violation of the above-mentioned statute. The trial judge permitted the state to prove by the justice of the peace, who issued the warrant upon which the accusation was based, that he had information that the accused had been convicted before, and, that being the second charge, fixed the bond at a larger amount. Held, that this evidence should have been excluded, on the objection that it was hearsay, irrelevant, and prejudicial. It was putting the character of the accused in issue by the state, and was also a violation of the general principle that, while one is on trial for one offense, evidence that he committed another offense is inadmissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 822-824, 836-839, 841, 843, 973-983; Dec. Dig. §§ 369, 376, 419, 420.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 850*)—CUSTODY OF JURY—DISQUALIFICATION OF BAILIFF.

A deputy sheriff, who is also the prosecutor in a criminal case, is not a proper official to have charge of the jury in that case pending the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2033, 2034, 2038; Dec. Dig. § 850.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 814*)—SALE OF NARCOTIC DRUGS—PROSECUTION—INSTRUCTIONS.

It was erroneous to instruct the jury that if they believed that the accused did sell the drug, as alleged, to the person named in the accusation "or to any one else," within the last two years prior to the filing of the accusation, they would be authorized to find him guilty; the error being in the use of the words "or to any one else."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1821, 1833, 1839, 1860, 1865, 1883, 1890, 1924, 1979-1985, 1987; Dec. Dig. § 814.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Error from City Court of Bainbridge; H. Spooner, Judge.

C. R. Cooper was convicted of the unlawful sale of narcotic drugs, and brings error. Reversed.

W. V. Custer and W. M. Harrell, both of Bainbridge, and P. D. Rich, of Colquitt, for plaintiff in error. M. E. O'Neal, Sol., of Bainbridge, for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment reversed.

COX v. STATE. (No. 4,926.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 29, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 655*)—NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS—CONDUCT OF JUDGE.

A trial judge may, by the form of the question which he propounds, intimate an opinion as to the existence of a fact the proof of which is material to the issue, and such an intimation of opinion, under the provisions of the Code (Pen. Code, § 1058; Civ. Code, § 4863), requires the grant of a new trial. Sharpton v. State, 1 Ga. App. 542, 57 S. E. 929; Rouse v. State, 2 Ga. App. 184, 58 S. E. 416.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1520-1523, 1527, 1535; Dec. Dig. § 655.*]

2. PERJURY (§ 37*)—DEFENSE—INSTRUCTION.

Upon the trial of one indicted for the offense of perjury, an instruction which withhold from the jury the determination as to whether the testimony alleged to have been false was material to the issue is erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perjury, Cent. Dig. §§ 134-138; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

3. PERJURY (§ 31*)—BURDEN OF PROOF—EVIDENCE.

In a trial for perjury, the burden is upon the state to prove that the accused was duly sworn, as alleged in the indictment, and it is error to charge the jury that, from the fact that the accused went upon the stand as a witness, submitted to an examination as a witness, and answered questions as a witness, the law would presume that he was sworn, and the burden of proof would be upon him to show that he was not sworn.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perjury, Cent. Dig. § 107; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

4. PERJURY (§ 10*)—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE—"OATH."

While no presumption that an oath was administered to one accused of perjury arises from the fact that he made statements upon the stand as a witness, still it is not necessary that in testifying a witness should have his hand upon the Bible, or that he raise his hand. If he appeared as a witness, and a lawful oath was administered to him, and he assented to it, the fact that he consciously took upon himself the obligation of the oath could be implied, and it would be immaterial whether he was standing with the rest of the witnesses or in another part of the courtroom by himself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perjury, Cent. Dig. §§ 36, 37; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4871-4874; vol. 8, p. 7735.]

5. PERJURY (§ 37*)—INSTRUCTIONS—DEFINITION OF OFFENSE.

A definition of the offense of perjury, from which is omitted the statement that the alleged false testimony was material to the issue in question, is fatally defective, and the jury should be told that a charge of perjury cannot be based upon testimony not delivered in a judicial proceeding, and that, to convict of this offense, the testimony of two witnesses, or of one witness supported by such circumstances of corroboration as the jury consider necessary for that purpose, is required. Pen. Code, § 259.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perjury, Cent. Dig. §§ 134-138; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 814*)—INSTRUCTIONS—EVIDENCE.

Where there is no evidence that the accused confessed, the judge is not required to charge the jury upon the subject of admissions and confessions. Malone v. State, 77 Ga. 767; Sellers v. State, 99 Ga. 212, 25 S. E. 178; 8 Mich. Enc. Dig. Ga. Rep. 228.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1821, 1833, 1839, 1860, 1865, 1883, 1890, 1924, 1979-1985, 1987; Dec. Dig. § 814.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1122*)—APPEAL AND ERROR—EXCEPTION—SUFFICIENCY.

An exception, in which it is insisted that the judge erred in failing to charge the jury the rule of law as to the insanity of the accused at the time the alleged perjury was said to have been committed, without alleging any reason why the failure to charge was error or without pointing out wherein the cause of the accused was prejudiced, presents nothing for the consideration of this court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2940-2945; Dec. Dig. § 1122.*]

8. EXCEPTION TO CHARGE.

The exception to the entire charge of the court is too vague and indefinite to be considered.

Error from Superior Court, Bartow County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Ben Cox was convicted of perjury, and brings error. Reversed.

Wm. T. Townsend, of Cartersville, and John W. Bale, of Rome, for plaintiff in error. J. M. Neel, Sol. Gen. pro tem., of Cartersville, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment reversed.

POPE v. STATE. (No. 5,001.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 30, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 83*)—VOLUNTARY MAN-SLAUGHTER—PRINCIPAL IN SECOND DEGREE.

One may be convicted as principal in the second degree of the offense of voluntary manslaughter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 109; Dec. Dig. § 83.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 310*)—REFUSAL OF INSTRUCTIONS—EVIDENCE.

There being no evidence of any conspiracy or concert of action between the accused and the person who actually committed the homicide, and the evidence not demanding a finding that the deceased came to his death as a result of the wound inflicted by the accused, it was error to refuse to charge the jury the law applicable to the offense of assault with intent to murder, for, unless the jury should find that the death of the deceased resulted from a wound inflicted by the accused, he could at most be convicted only of the offense of assault with intent to murder, and would not be guilty of any grade of unlawful homicide.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 657-661; Dec. Dig. § 310.*]

3. NO OTHER ERROR.

Except as above indicated the trial was free from material error.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 67*)—"PRINCIPAL IN SECOND DEGREE."

A "principal in the second degree" is a person who is present, aiding and abetting the act to be done.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 81-86; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5556, 5557; vol. 8, p. 7763.]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 59*)—PARTIES TO OFFENSE.

Where two or more parties, either with or without a common cause or quarrel, act with a common intent, and jointly commit an unlawful act, each is chargeable with criminal responsibility for the acts of all the others.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 71, 73, 74, 76-81; Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

Error from Superior Court, Jasper County; J. B. Park, Judge.

One Hulan, alias Buck, Pope, was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, and brings error. Reversed.

Greene F. Johnson, of Monticello, for plaintiff in error. Jos. E. Pottle, Sol. Gen., of Milledgeville, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The plaintiff in error was jointly indicted with one Ollie Roberts for the offense of murder. The indictment charges both defendants as principals in the first degree. The accused was found guilty of voluntary manslaughter, and his motion for a new trial was overruled. The fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, seventeenth, and eighteenth grounds of the motion raise in various forms the question whether the defendant, Pope, could lawfully be convicted as a principal in the second degree. It is contended that the evidence did not authorize the instructions to the jury which are complained of in these grounds, that they gave to the state the benefit of a theory to which it was not entitled under the evidence, and it is further insisted that the offense of voluntary manslaughter is of such a nature that one cannot be a principal in the second degree in the commission of this offense. The twelfth ground of the motion for a new trial excepts to an instruction of the court upon the law of self-defense, on the ground that the instruction imposed upon the defendant the burden of satisfying the jury that he was acting in self-defense, before they would be authorized to acquit him, whereas, the law imposes upon the state the burden of satisfying the jury beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was not acting in self-defense at the time he committed the homicide. In the thirteenth ground of the motion complaint is made that the verdict finding the defendant guilty is entirely unsupported by evidence, for the reason that there is no evidence sufficient to authorize the jury to conclude that the defendant fired the shot which took the life of the deceased. In the fifteenth ground of the motion it is insisted that, since there was evidence from which the jury might have inferred that the plaintiff in error was acting independently in shooting at the deceased, and no evidence as to which of the joint defendants inflicted the mortal wound, it was error for the court to omit to charge the jury that, if they found from the evidence that he acted independently in shooting at the deceased, and without any concert of action with the other defendant, and without any common purpose with the joint defendant, and there was no evidence of a conspiracy, then he could not be convicted either of murder or of voluntary manslaughter, unless the jury found that the life of the deceased was taken by a wound inflicted by him. In the nineteenth ground it is insisted that the court erred in failing to give in charge the law of assault with intent to murder, and in omitting to instruct the jury that, in the event they believed this offense to have been made out by the evidence, they would be authorized to find the defendant guilty of assault with intent to murder. As it is not likely that any of the alleged errors assigned in the other grounds of the motion for new trial will recur upon another trial of this case, those grounds will not be considered.

According to the evidence the defendant, Pope, and the deceased had some words. The evidence is in conflict as to whether the deceased attempted to use a weapon, and as to who really provoked the difficulty. Whether justifiably or not, Pope fired upon the deceased. At about the same time the deceased was fired upon by Ollie Roberts, his codefendant. A large crowd had assembled, and a frolic had for some time been in progress; but it does not appear that Pope came to the frolic with Roberts, or that they spoke to each other either before or after they reached the scene of the festivities. There was no evidence that they were intimate or even acquainted with each other. The undisputed evidence discloses that they were not akin, and only one of the defendants participated in the quarrel with the deceased. There is no evidence tending to show that the two defendants participated in a common intent, other than the fact that both fired upon the deceased about the same time. The deceased came to his death by reason of one of the shots in the mêlée, fired by one or the other of the defendants; but the record does not disclose which gave the mortal wound.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes.

[1] 1. We think it is settled that one may be convicted as a principal in the second degree of the offense of voluntary manslaughter. Maughon v. State, 9 Ga. App. 559, 71 S. E. 922. Of course, one could not be accessory before the fact of the offense of voluntary manslaughter, because of the fact that the offense is usually committed upon the sudden heat of passion, and there can be no case of voluntary manslaughter where there has been such previous deliberation and premeditation as is necessarily involved in the commission of a crime which is counseled, commanded, and procured. Ex vi termini the whole idea of an accessory before the fact involves predetermination, for the accessory intends to be, and, as a matter of law, must necessarily be, absent from the scene of the crime at the time of its commission.

[4] A principal in the second degree, however, is one who is present, aiding and abetting the act to be done, and the same causes which influence the principal in the first degree to be suddenly overwhelmed with the impulse to kill may operate upon a friend or near relative who may be present. Two friends may be traversing together a public highway; one of them may be assaulted by a third person, and, under the sudden impulse of passion engendered in the principal's companion by the natural bias of friendship, he may participate in acts that show participation in the intent to kill which has only instantaneously developed in the mind of his fellow. The human mind operates with such celerity that this is only one of the many illustrations which might be given to show that one in aiding and abetting another to commit a homicide may be mastered by the impulse, and his act may be the result of an intent entertained in common with another, although there was no premeditation and no conspiracy. The court, therefore, did not err in instructing the jury to the effect that if it be established that the principal in the first degree was guilty of voluntary manslaughter, one shown by proof to be a principal in the second degree may be convicted of the same offense.

The point now before us in its full scope was not before the Supreme Court in Brown v. State, 28 Ga. 199, for the ruling in that case went no further than to hold that one charged with the offense of murder as a principal in the second degree could be convicted of voluntary manslaughter, where it appeared that he participated in the felonious act, but that as to him the element of malice was lacking. It is distinctly held in that case that: "Presence and participation in the act of killing a human being is not evidence of consent and concurrence in the perpetration of the act by a defendant charged as aiding and abetting in the killing, unless he had a felonious design or participated in the felonious designs of the persons killing" (fourth headnote). The ruling stated in the fifth headnote is merely that, if one charged with murder in the first degree committed an assault upon the deceased with a deadly weapon, but the intention of the principal in the second degree was to participate in an assault and battery only, with no design to kill, and without knowledge that the principal in the first degree intended to use a weapon, the principal in the second degree would be guilty of manslaughter only. An instruction to the jury that the principal in the second degree would be guilty of murder if he was connected with the act of killing was expressly disapproved, upon the ground that this did not present to the jury for determination the question whether the defendant was actuated by the intent to kill.

[2] 2. Without referring to the several exceptions to the charge of the trial judge, the real error in the case, to our minds, as presented by various assignments of error, is that under the evidence this defendant could not have been convicted of any higher offense than that of assault with intent to murder, and the judge should have instructed the jury as to the law of assault with intent to murder, and have charged them that, if they believed the accused made an assault upon the deceased with intent to kill him, the jury would be authorized to find the accused guilty of assault with intent to murder, unless it appeared from the evidence that he was justified, under the rules of law appropriate to that subject, which we will not elaborate here.

[5] There was no evidence that the shot from this defendant's pistol struck the deceased, or that the wound which resulted in the death of the deceased was inflicted by him. Proof upon this point was essential to his conviction of any grade of homicide, unless the evidence demanded a finding that he was actuated by an intent which was shared by his codefendant. Proof that two or more parties, either with or without a common cause or quarrel, but acting with a common intent, jointly engaged in the same undertaking, and jointly committed an unlawful act, will charge each of the participants with liability and responsibility for the acts of all of the others. And this answers the suggestion of the learned counsel for the state that society would be helpless indeed if, when one was assaulted by deadly weapons in the hands of a mob, and killed, there could be no conviction of murder, because it was impossible to show which shot killed the deceased. In such a case as that used for illustration by the state's counsel, proof that one of the mob aided and abetted in the killing would supply evidence of a common intent; but can this be said to be true in a case in which it does not plainly appear that there was any common intent, or any common cause or quarrel, and where, on the contrary, it appears that the defendant was acting independently? It is perhaps true, as insisted by the solicitor general, that under the record the court might have treated this defendant as a principal in the first degree; but there is not sufficient evidence to make him responsible for the acts of the party indicted with him.

[§] The remaining exceptions are sufficient-ly dealt with in the headnotes.

Judgment reversed.

JOHN FLANNERY CO. v. JAMES.
(No. 4,616.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Sept. 16, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1003*)—VERDICT—EVIDENCE.

When a verdict is supported by some evidence, though it be against the large preponderance of the evidence, this court cannot grant a new trial on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3938-3943; Dec. Dig. § 1003.*]

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 116*)—AUTHORITY OF AGENT—FACTORS.

An agent of a cotton factor who is authorized to solicit shipments of cotton to his principal is presumptively authorized to make terms under which the cotton shall be shipped, received, stored, sold, and handled by his principal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 377, 377½; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

3. FACTORS (§ 23*)—POWER TO SELL—DISCRETION.

Where a cotton factor has advanced to the owner large sums of money on shipments of cotton, so that the factor's pecuniary interest in the cotton equals, if it does not exceed, the pecuniary interest of the owner in the cotton, the factor is not bound at his peril to hold the cotton under instructions from the owner, but has the right to exercise his own judgment as to when he shall sell the cotton, having due regard to his own pecuniary interest as well as to that of the owner, and the factor is not bound to follow instructions from the owner detrimental to his own pecuniary interest. Under the facts of this case, a charge embodying in substance the rule of law above stated should have been given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Factors, Cent. Dig. §§ 23, 24; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

4. FACTORS (§ 46*)—ACTION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence in a cotton broker's action against the owner of cotton for commissions and charges, wherein the defense was that plaintiff negligently failed to comply with selling instructions, held insufficient to show that the factor was guilty of neglect of his duty to the owner through violation of his instructions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Factors, Cent. Dig. §§ 72-80; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

Error from City Court of Blakely; L. M. Rambo, Judge.

Action by the John Flannery Company against D. W. James. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

O'Byrne, Hartridge & Wright, of Savannah, and W. G. Park, of Blakely, for plaintiff in error. Pope & Bennett, of Albany, and C. L. Glessner, of Blakely, for defendant in error.

HAMMOND, J. The John Flannery Company is a cotton factorage corporation located in Savannah, Ga. James is a cotton grower, cotton buyer, and shipper, located in Blakely. The John Flannery Company sued James in the city court of Blakely for $8,250.32 upon an account claimed to be due for advances made to him on 834 bales of cotton, commissions, storage charges, insurance, etc. James filed an original plea to the suit, in which he denied that he owed the amount claimed for storage, insurance, and interest. He set up a special contract made with an agent of the John Flannery Company, by the terms of which he was to be charged only 20 cents a bale for storage and insurance, and 6 per cent interest on advances, and alleged that the difference in his favor between the amount of these items as claimed in the suit (except the difference as to interest, which was waived) and the amount due under contract was $2,641.50, and he asked that this amount be deducted from the account. In his plea he admitted that he owed the balance of the account, to wit, $5,608.82, and this amount was tendered in full settlement and payment. The plea alleged also certain facts in reference to this tender, which was set up as an accord and satisfaction of the account. Subsequently, during the same term of the court, the defendant filed an amendment to his answer, in which he alleged that at the time the 834 bales of cotton were shipped to the John Flannery Company it was distinctly and expressly agreed between them that the cotton was to be sold by the plaintiff for the defendant whenever the price in the Savannah market reached 11½ cents a pound; but the plaintiff, in violation of this agreement, failed and refused to sell the cotton at this price, although the cotton did reach this price per pound in the Savannah market, and the plaintiff could have sold it for this price, and the plaintiff subsequently, in violation of the defendant's instructions and the agreement, did sell 820 bales of the cotton at 11 cents per pound, and 14 bales of the cotton at 9 cents per pound, and thereby the defendant lost, and the plaintiff became indebted to the defendant, the sum of $2,273.07, being the sum which would represent the difference in the value of the cotton at 11½ cents per pound and the price at which it was sold by the plaintiff. The amendment set up also that the plaintiff had lost all right to storage, insurance, and interest claimed, because of its negligent failure to carry out the defendant's instructions in reference to the sale of the cotton. The plea set out the amounts which it was claimed should be deducted from the account sued on. On the trial of the issues thus formed a verdict was found for the defendant. On motion of the plaintiff a new trial was granted.

On the second trial the defendant filed another amendment to his answer, thereby adding to his original answer, as first amended, the following allegations in substance: That the disregard of the instructions which the defendant had given to the plaintiff in reference to the sale of this cotton when the market price was 11½ cents per pound, and the failure to comply with the duty it owed as factor, arose out of the negligence and careless failure and omission of the plaintiff to properly grade and correctly classify the 834 bales of cotton, which lot of cotton graded as high as "Liverpool middling," but was negligently and carelessly undergraded by the plaintiff, and the plaintiff made no attempt to sell the cotton as "Liverpool middling" while the price of that grade of cotton remained as high as 11½ cents per pound, and did not discover its negligent mistake in undergrading the cotton until the market price had declined, and when it was impracticable to sell the cotton for this price in compliance with the instructions from the defendant. On the second trial the verdict was for the defendant, and the plaintiff filed a motion for a new trial, based upon the general grounds, and several special assignments of errors of law in the admission of evidence, and in excerpts from the charge of the court, and in refusals to charge. This motion was denied, and the case is here for review. We will first discuss the case as made by the evidence as pertinent to the issues, and we will then consider, in the light of the evidence, the special assignments of errors of law.

[2] The defense relied upon in the original plea and answer—that the plaintiff was entitled to only 20 cents per bale for storage and insurance, as per the terms of a special verbal contract made with the agent of the plaintiff—was proved by the defendant and his son. It was strenuously denied by the agent with whom the contract was alleged to have been made. On the law as applicable to this question we state the general rule. Whenever an agent is empowered to do a particular thing, he is also empowered to use all lawful means necessary to accomplish it, and, when an agent is sent out to solicit shipments of cotton to his principal, he is a general agent for that purpose, and presumptively is fully authorized to make terms upon which the cotton may be shipped, received, stored, sold, and handled by the principal. Bass Dry Goods Co. v. Granite Mfg. Co., 119 Ga. 124, 45 S. E. 980; French Plano Co. v. Cardwell, 114 Ga. 340, 40 S. E. 292. This rule would not be altered by any secret instructions given to the agent by the principal unknown to the shipper. Civil Code, § 3596.

[1, 4] 2. The second defense relied upon in the first amendment to the plea and answer is that the plaintiff negligently failed and refused to comply with the instructions given by the defendant to sell his cotton when it reached the market price of 11½ cents per pound. The instructions are admitted by the plaintiff; but it is insisted that they could not have been complied with, for the simple reason that cotton of the grade, of defendant's cotton never reached 11½ cents per pound in the Savannah market. True, the defendant introduced some evidence, not of much probative value, that the cotton could have been sold for 11½ cents per pound; but the daily market reports of the Savannah Cotton Exchange were sent to this defendant by the plaintiff every day, and he had knowledge from these reports that at no time had cotton reached 11½ cents per pound in Savannah for cotton of the grade of his cotton in the hands of the plaintiff. No reason is given why the plaintiff could not have complied with the instructions. On the contrary, the facts prove that it had every reason to make a sale as promptly as possible. When the cotton was first shipped by James, he drew drafts for its value on the John Flannery Company. These drafts were honored even before the cotton had been received, and there never was a time when the factor did not have a greater pecuniary interest in the cotton than the owner. Besides, the record contains many letters from the John Flannery Company urging James to sell because of the improbability of the cotton reaching 11½ cents per pound. To many of these letters James made no reply. The record shows also that the John Flannery Company needed the money which had been advanced to James on the cotton, and made frequent requests for payment. James did make some payments, but never sufficient to make the John Flannery Company safe, looking alone to the value of the cotton. It seems wholly inconceivable that a factor who had advanced on cotton more than its value, and who needed the repayment of its advances, should negligently or arbitrarily fail or refuse to sell the cotton, when by doing so his debt would be paid. James insists that the plaintiff could have sold his cotton for 11½ cents per pound, and that, if this had been done, the factor's debt would have been fully paid from the proceeds. We are discussing the question entirely apart from the well-established rule that a factor who has made advances on goods can regard his interest as to the time of sale, notwithstanding instructions. We are at a loss to understand how this issue could have been found against the factor. Instead of negligent disregard of a factor's duty, the evidence shows the greatest regard and consideration for the interest of the owner.

3. We come now to a consideration of the second amendment to the plea and answer, which was filed at the last trial. It is insisted that the reason why the plaintiff did not sell the cotton at 11½ cents per pound is because it had been undergraded; that the cotton was "Liverpool middling," but that the plaintiff had negligently undergraded it. This is the defense mainly relied on in the argument before this court. It is true the defendant testified that his cotton was "Liverpool middling," and the evidence shows that "Liverpool middling" was "Savannah middling," and, since the defendant so testified, this court cannot, in a juridic sense, say that there was no evidence in support of the amendment. But it is pregnant with significance that the defendant delayed so long in setting up this defense. He knew the grade which the plaintiffs gave his cotton when first received. He was definitely informed in a letter from the plaintiff, April 9, 1906, that: "We were rather strict in giving grades of your cotton as fully low middling. In value it will average between fully low middling and middling." Notwithstanding his knowledge of cotton and this representation as to the grade of his cotton, he accepts without dissent the grading as made by the factors. During the whole life of the transaction and during several years of litigation no objection was made to the grading of the factor. The question of grading was vital to the value of the cotton. On it depended the opportunity to sell at 11½ cents per pound. On it depended the ability to repay the debt made for advances. Yet no word was spoken or written by the defendant, although he was in possession of specific information on the subject. He did not take issue with the factors or notify them of any undergrading. He said nothing about undergrading when he made his tender. It was strictly a post mortem discovery. Though brought to life for the first time on the dissecting table of the second trial, it would be good in law if it were a real discovery. But why should the factors have undergraded the cotton? It is conceded that they were skillful, with long experience, and were business men of high integrity. Besides, they had every reason to grade the cotton as high as they truthfully could. They had advanced more money on it than it was worth, and the higher the grade the greater the security for the debt. While, therefore, the evidence pertinent to the issue made by this amended plea makes the grant of a new trial on general grounds inconsistent with the view of our right under repeated rulings, yet it moves us to a more favorable consideration of the special assignments of errors of law.

4. One of the grounds of the amended motion for a new trial assigns error in the following charge of the court: "If you believe, from the testimony in this case, that the Flannery Company had a soliciting agent upon the road, whose duty it was to go over his territory and solicit shipments of cotton for Flannery; if you believe that that agent had authority to quote the charges and expenses, or the terms upon which the Flannery Company would handle that cotton—then I charge you that it would follow, as a matter of law, that this agent would have a right to vary the terms under which he was sent out." This instruction, while rather broad, is not in conflict with the rule discussed in the first division of this opinion.

[3] 5. The trial judge instructed the jury that: "If any special instructions were given as to price, they [referring to the plaintiffs] were bound to sell it [the cotton] at that price, or stand the consequences of failure to do so if they sold it at a lower price." While this instruction states correctly an abstract principle of law, under the facts of this case it should have been qualified by the statement that, if a factor made advances on produce consigned to him for sale, he would have an interest in the consignment, and would have the right to exercise his discretion as to the time of sale, and that, if any instructions given were detrimental to the factor's interest, they might be disregarded by him. Frost v. Powell, 10 Ga. App. 95, 72 S. E. 719, and citations. We think this charge was erroneous also, because there was no evidence to warrant it. It was not contended that the plaintiff had, in selling the cotton for a lower price, disregarded the defendant's instructions; on the contrary, the evidence proves beyond all controversy that the plaintiff held the cotton, although not compelled to do so, because of the plaintiff's large pecuniary interest in it, for the 11½ cents per pound, and did not sell it until instructed by the defendant to do so at 11 cents per pound. True, the factor did not get 11 cents per pound; but it voluntarily made good the difference to the defendant, moved to do so by the natural desire to close out a transaction in which it had been from the first a probable loser.

We have given the case careful examination, and are clearly of the opinion that the ends of justice, as well as the voice of the law, demand another trial.

Judgment reversed.

Judge H. C. HAMMOND, of the Augusta Circuit, was designated by the Governor, and presided in this case in place of POTTER, J., disqualified.

PITTMAN v. STATE. (No. 5,206.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 29, 1913.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. LARCENY (§ 15*)—SIMPLE LARCENY—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

One cannot be convicted of simple larceny unless it appears that he took the goods described in the indictment wrongfully and fraudulently, with the intent then and there entertained to steal the same. If possession of goods be delivered by the owner to another under an agreement by the latter to sell them for the benefit of the owner and to return to the owner either the proceeds arising from the sale or the goods themselves if unsold, and the goods are subsequently converted, the conversion is larceny after a trust delegated, and the person thus guilty of the conversion cannot be convicted of simple larceny, unless there is some proof that he fraudulently induced the owner to surrender possession of the goods, intending at the time to appropriate them to his own use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. §§ 39-42; Dec. Dig. § 15.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 3991-4003; vol. 8, p. 7701.]

*(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)2. LARCENY (§ 63*)—SIMPLE LARCENY—EVIDENCE OF FRAUDULENT INTENT.

Evidence merely that defendant failed to pay for, and converted to his own use, goods received from the owner under an agreement that he should sell the same and return to the owner either the proceeds or the unsold goods was insufficient to sustain a finding that he fraudulently induced the owner to surrender the goods, intending at the time to appropriate them to his own use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. § 163; Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

Error from City Court of Ft. Gaines; B. M. Turnipseed, Judge.

Eli Pittman was convicted of simple larceny, and brings error. Reversed.

King & Arnold, of Ft. Gaines, for plaintiff in error. P. C. King, Sol., of Ft. Gaines, for defendant in error.

POTTLE, J. The accused was convicted of simple larceny, under an accusation charging that offense. He presents the point that if he was guilty of any offense the evidence demands a conviction of larceny after a trust. The evidence was that the accused went to the store of the prosecutor and wanted some goods to sell at a picnic which was to be held at Hatcher's Station. The prosecutor asked the accused why he did not purchase the goods at Hatcher's Station, and he replied that the merchants at that place did not have the goods he wanted. The prosecutor testified: "I let the defendant have on consignment, to sell for me at the picnic, the following goods [referring to the goods described in the indictment]. The defendant was to sell these goods for me at the picnic and bring me back the money, or return the goods that were not sold. I made several demands on the defendant for the money, but did not get the money, and no goods have been returned to me that I let him have. After waiting about a month I took out a warrant for him. I explained to the defendant, when I let him have the goods, I was not selling the goods to him, but he was to act as my agent. The defendant came to me and got some candy and other goods to sell at a picnic. I consigned the goods to him."

[1] The point presented is not without difficulty. The same facts may involve simple larceny and larceny after a trust, so that a conviction for either offense would be authorized. The decisions are in some confusion, and do not clearly draw a general distinction between the two offenses which can be applied in all cases. In Rice v. State, 6 Ga. App. 160, 64 S. E. 575, it was said that the words "other bailee," as used in section 189 of the Penal Code, must be understood as implying a delegated trust to a person occupying some fiduciary relation to the bailor, and that hence a mere temporary loan of property, with no benefit to the lender, was not such a bailment as was contemplated by that section of the Code. The principle enunciated in this decision was followed in Basley v. State, 10 Ga. App. 470, 73 S. E. 624, and upon its application to the facts of that case we held that the evidence demanded a finding that the accused was guilty of larceny after a trust, and not of simple larceny. In that case a master intrusted his servant with a bill for the purpose of getting it changed and bringing back the change, and the servant fraudulently converted and appropriated it to his own use. We said that this was a delegated trust to a person standing in a fiduciary relation, and both the actual and legal possession had been voluntarily surrendered by the owner without any fraud or artifice on the part of the servant other than that involved in the promise to return the money. In Bryant v. State, 8 Ga. App. 389, 66 S. E. 121, it was held that where property had been hired to another who afterwards converted it to his own use, he might be convicted of simple larceny if it appeared that he fraudulently induced the owner to hire the property to him, intending at the time to steal it. This decision was similar in principle to that made in Martin v. State, 123 Ga. 478, 51 S. E. 334, where it was held: "If a person, fraudulently intending to get possession of the money of another and appropriate the same to his own use, by false representations induces the owner to deliver the money to him for the purpose of being applied for the owner's use or benefit, and then appropriates it in pursuance of the original intent, he is guilty of both larceny after trust delegated and simple larceny, and may be prosecuted for and convicted of either offense." The case of Baron v. State, 126 Ga. 92, 54 S. E. 812, is an illustration of the exact converse of the proposition stated in the Martin Case. It was there held that if a person voluntarily, and without being induced by the fraud of another, delivers property into the latter's possession for the purpose of having it delivered at a distant place, and the person so receiving possession wrongfully and fraudulently converts the property to his own use, the conversion is larceny after a trust, without the element of simple larceny. In the opinion it was said: "It is not a case of violence to the possession of the prosecutor; for it affirmatively appears that the prosecutor voluntarily parted with his possession, and the injury results to the prosecutor, not from the thing being fraudulently taken from him, but from a fraudulent disposition by the defendant after the trust had been imposed. Under the facts, there is no simple larceny whatever in the case, and the court should not have charged upon that subject."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[2] We may get the matter clearer in our minds by recurring to the definition of simple larceny, which is: "The wrongful and fraudulent taking and carrying away, by any person, of the personal goods of another, with intent to steal the same." Penal Code, § 152. There can never be a conviction for simple larceny unless it appears that the original taking was wrongful and fraudulent and with the intent at the time of the taking to steal the property. If the possession is acquired rightfully and without fraud, and subsequently the goods be converted, the offense is not simple larceny. If the owner voluntarily surrenders possession and retains title to the property delivered, without any artifice or fraud on the part of the person receiving it, a subsequent conversion of the goods will be larceny after a trust. In the present case, the evidence shows that the owner surrendered merely the possession of the goods, but retained the title. His surrender of possession was voluntary. The case turns, therefore, on the question whether there was any evidence from which the jury could find that he was induced to surrender this possession by any artifice or fraud on the part of the accused. In other words, the question is whether the jury could find that the original taking by the accused was wrongful and fraudulent, and with a present intent to steal. Apparently, from the testimony of the prosecutor, the accused came to his store to buy some goods, either for cash or on credit, for the purpose of reselling them at a picnic. The prosecutor declined to sell the goods to the accused, but offered to deliver the goods to him in order that he might sell them as the agent and for the benefit of the prosecutor, upon the agreement of the accused either to return the goods or to bring back the agreed price to the prosecutor. So far as appears, this arrangement was entered into at the suggestion of the prosecutor himself.

There is nothing in the evidence to suggest any fraudulent intent on the part of the accused at the time he received the goods, except the bare fact that he failed to return them or to pay for them. It is settled by the decisions that this fact alone is not sufficient proof of a fraudulent taking of goods which were voluntarily delivered by the owner into the possession of the person receiving them.

If it had appeared, from the testimony, that the accused gave a false reason for coming to the prosecutor for the goods (such as that he could not purchase them at Hatcher's Station, for the reason that the merchants at that place did not have the goods he wanted, when in fact there were similar goods at Hatcher's Station), this would have authorized an inference that he had the fraudulent intent at the time he received the goods from the prosecutor. Or if it had appeared that the accused did not in fact sell or make any effort to sell the goods at the picnic, such inference might have arisen. But nothing of this sort appears. The case is one simply where the accused was appointed the agent of the prosecutor and the possession of the goods was voluntarily surrendered by the prosecutor without any artifice or fraud on the part of the accused, and he subsequently converted to his own use either the goods or the proceeds arising from the sale. For aught that appears, the accused may have sold the goods and stolen the money, forming the intent to steal after the goods were sold. It may be doubted whether, under the evidence as it stands, he could be convicted of larceny after a trust in stealing the goods; it not appearing but that in compliance with his contract he sold the goods as he agreed to do. But, however this may be, we do not think he could be convicted of simple larceny without some evidence to show the existence of a fraudulent intent at the time he received the goods.

Judgment reversed.

EVANS v. STATE. (No. 5,204.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 29, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. JURY (§ 83*)—COMPETENCY OF JUROR—CRIMINAL CASE.

A challenge propter affectum to a juror in a criminal case should be sustained when it is made to appear to the court as trier that the juror, in his official capacity as justice of the peace, received the affidavit and issued the warrant which was the basis of the accusation. The smallest degree of interest is a decisive objection to a juror in a criminal case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 400, 402-404; Dec. Dig. § 83.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 572, 775*)—INSTRUCTION—ALIBI—EVIDENCE.

In charging upon alibi it is error to instruct the jury that if they "believe from the evidence, and believe it beyond a reasonable doubt, that it was impossible for the defendant to be present at the scene of the offense at the time of its commission, and that the evidence in this respect is sufficient to exclude the possibility of the defendant's presence at the time and place it was committed, you will be authorized to acquit the defendant." To establish an alibi the evidence must be sufficient to exclude the possibility of the defendant's presence at the scene of the crime at the time of its commission, but he is not required to establish the impossibility of his presence beyond a reasonable doubt; it is sufficient if this impossibility is shown to the reasonable satisfaction of the jury. Proof of alibi may entitle the accused to an acquittal even though it goes no further than to raise a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt when considered on the general case with the rest of the testimony; and for this reason, if for no other, to require the defendant to establish the defense of alibi to the exclusion of a reasonable doubt places on him a burden not imposed by law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1263, 1289-1291, 1833-1837; Dec. Dig. §§ 572, 775.*]

Error from City Court of Leesburg; H. L. Long, Judge.

Eli Evans was convicted of crime, and brings error. Reversed.

W. G. Martin, of Leesburg, for plaintiff in error. J. B. Hoyl, of Leesburg, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The plaintiff in error excepts to the judgment overruling his motion for a new trial. The accusation was based upon an affidavit made before a justice of the peace, who issued the warrant for the defendant's arrest.

[1] On the panel put upon the prisoner, this justice of the peace appeared as a juror. Immediately after the panel was put upon the accused, and before the jury was stricken or sworn, the accused objected to the justice of the peace, upon the ground that he was not a competent juror, because of the facts stated above, and, in substantiation of this objection, submitted to the court the affidavit of the prosecutor and the warrant issued by the justice, commanding the arrest of the defendant, and the entry of the arrest (from which it appears that the prosecutor was also the arresting officer). The court overruled the objection and held that the juror was competent, and this ruling is the subject of the first assignment of error.

In our search for precedents we have been unable to find a case identical upon its facts with the case at bar. Apparently in this state the practice of excusing a juror under such circumstances has been very general, for otherwise the question would ere this have been raised in some form in the Supreme Court. However, upon the question now squarely presented whether, upon timely challenge to the poll, a juror in a criminal case, who in his official capacity as a magistrate received the affidavit of the prosecutor and issued the warrant for the arrest of the accused, is subject to challenge propter affectum, we are compelled to hold that, upon proof of the fact that the challenged juror is the individual who issued the warrant, he should be held subject to challenge, and that as to him the defendant should not be required to exercise the right of peremptory challenge by exhausting one of his strikes. The argument of learned counsel for the state, to the effect that justices of the peace are not disqualified from serving as jurors in criminal cases, has no bearing whatever upon the question. Of course the mere fact that a juror might happen to be a justice of the peace would be no objection to his qualification as a juror, and in fact the intelligence and personal character of these magistrates is such as ordinarily to render them peculiarly qualified for jury service. The objection in the case at bar was not that the juror Godwin was a justice of the peace but that he was the justice who issued the warrant in this case. And it is for this special reason that we hold that he was disqualified.

Nothing is better settled than that no man can be a judge in his own case, and the disqualification dependent upon this rule has very naturally been extended, in the interest of fair jury trials, to include any and every case in which the trier in question does not possess an exclusive interest but may be affected by a partial interest in the subject-matter. The principle that a juror should not sit on a cause in which he is eventually interested is founded in wisdom and justice and has no regard to the degree of pecuniary interest. Under our law, the justice of the peace who issues a warrant in a criminal case has a pecuniary interest in the result of the trial, for if the accused is convicted and is sentenced to pay a fine and the costs, and does pay it, the fees for issuing the warrant and for other services legally performed by the justice must be included in the costs and be paid as a part of the costs before the defendant is entitled to be released. It matters not how upright the magistrate may be nor that the amount of his costs may be small. It may be that the juror in question is a man of such Spartan firmness that his interest would not affect him, even though it were a hundredfold as large; and history is not without instances of men of that stamp; and yet, if the courts should proceed upon any such theory as this, the rule of absolute impartiality (which is the very foundation of a fair trial by jury) would be violated. Rules must be made for ordinary cases and not for exceptions. And unless the rule that every juror who tries the case of his fellow citizen must be not only absolutely fair and impartial but also absolutely disinterested is strictly adhered to and zealously upheld, our boasted right of trial by jury will become little more than a mockery. The court's duty to provide an impartial jury is absolutely imperative.

In a South Carolina case the court, in discussing the interest of jurors (Horry's Case, 1 Bay [S. C.] 229), adopts the following notable quotation from Blackstone: "The smallest degree of interest is a decisive objection to a witness, and much more so to a juror." 2 Black. Com. 480. In this state the interest of a witness is no longer ground for objection, but as to a juror there has been no relaxation of Blackstone's rule, so far as we are able to discover. No right has been more sacredly guarded by the courts in this state than that accorded to every litigant of having his case tried by jurors not only fair, impartial, and disinterested but even beyond suspicion of bias. In Anderson v. State, 63 Ga. 675, the surety upon the defendant's bond was held to be disqualified for interest upon objection by the state, and certainly such a surety's pecuniary interest in the defendant is not ordinarily greater than would be the interest of a committing magistrate in his costs. In Johnson v. City of Americus, 46 Ga. 81, and Mayor, etc., of Cartersville v. Lyon, 69 Ga. 577, the Supreme Court held that citizens of a municipality were disqualified, because of interest, to sit as jurors in causes in which the municipality was a party; and it required a statute to abrogate this rule. Inasmuch as the right of liberty is more precious than the possession of mere worldly goods, it would seem, certainly in the absence of a statute and in criminal prosecutions, that the rule of Blackstone should be strictly adhered to. It is true the qualification of a juror, when he is put upon the court as a trior, is a matter addressed peculiarly to the court's discretion; but it should be borne in mind that, in the determination of the qualification of jurors in criminal prosecutions, it has uniformly been held that the discretion or latitude given the trial judge is greater when exercised in excusing jurors whose qualifications are in doubt than in retaining them.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Not only on account of pecuniary interest, but also for other reasons, the justice of the peace who binds over one accused of crime should not be held qualified to pass upon his guilt or innocence. In the first place, the act of taking the affidavit is not merely ministerial. Gillett v. Thibault, 9 Kan. 431. The magistrate determines judicially to order an arrest. And even if it be true that every citizen has a right to have a warrant issued when he is willing to swear that another has committed a crime, still the warrant cannot be issued until the prosecutor has sworn to the charge; and the crime to which the prosecutor swears cannot be properly designated in the warrant until there has been a statement of at least enough of the facts to enable the justice of the peace to determine the offense for which the warrant should be issued. Under such circumstances, it would be unreasonable to suppose that an intelligent man would not form some kind of an opinion with reference to the case which has been stated and verified in his hearing by the affidavit of the prosecutor. Not only is this so, but as an officer of the state the justice of the peace who issues the warrant sets in motion the entire criminal machinery of the state, from the operation of which the trial of the defendant results; and human nature is of such fashion that the justice of the peace will generally feel such interest in his handiwork as not to desire to be held blamable for issuing a warrant without sufficient cause or without any cause.

Upon grounds of public policy, if for no other reason, and in order that one accused of crime may have no semblance of cause for complaint, an officer of the state who, in the discharge of his duty, has taken an affidavit charging a citizen with crime, and thereupon has issued the warrant upon which he was arrested, should not be put upon the accused as a juror on his trial for that crime. The safety of every social institution worth preserving depends upon the integrity of our jury system. If there be possibility of error either way, it is far better to err by being overcautious in adhering to every regulation which will tend to provide juries whose impartiality shall be, like the virtue of Caesar's wife, above suspicion.

[2] 2. The defendant, upon his trial, relied upon alibi as his defense. Upon this subject the court charged the jury as follows: "The defendant claims he was not present at the place the crime was committed. If you believe from the evidence, and believe it beyond a reasonable doubt, that it was impossible for the defendant to be present at the scene of the offense at the time of its commission, and that the evidence in this connection is sufficient to exclude the possibility of the defendant's presence at the time and place it was committed, you will be authorized to acquit the defendant." We think the court erred in this instruction. As pointed out by Chief Justice Bleckley in Harrison v. State, 83 Ga. 129, 9 S. E. 542, the defense of alibi rests upon two prongs: The jury may either consider the alibi on the general case, for the purpose of determining whether any view of the alibi in connection with other evidence raises a reasonable doubt; or they may consider whether the proof of the alibi alone and of itself raises such a doubt as will require the jury to acquit. But it is expressly held that, no matter which may be the purpose to which the proof of alibi is put, the defendant is not required to establish this defense by that degree of proof which excludes every reasonable doubt, but he is only required to establish it to the reasonable satisfaction of the jury. For that reason the judge in the present case, by telling the jury that they would be authorized to acquit the defendant if they believed beyond a reasonable doubt that it was impossible for him to be present at the scene of the offense at the time of its commission, placed upon him a greater burden than that imposed by law. The implication from this was that the burden was upon the accused to establish this defense beyond a reasonable doubt. See McDonald v. State, 12 Ga. App. 526, 77 S. E. 655. To say that one who relies upon an alibi as a defense must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that it was impossible for him to be present at the scene of the crime at the time of its commission would take away from the jury their right of acquitting the defendant if the proof of alibi, though not perfect, was such as to raise a reasonable doubt as to whether he was present at the commission of the crime or not.

Judgment reversed.

SILVER v. STATE. (No. 5162.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 30, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. POISONS (§ 4*)—SALE OF NARCOTICS—OFFENSE.

It is a penal offense to give, furnish, or sell any of the narcotic drugs mentioned in the statute (Acts 1907, p. 121, Civ. Code 1910, § 1651), except upon the conditions prescribed therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Poisons, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

2. POISONS (§ 2*)—SALE OF NARCOTICS—OFFENSE.

The statute regulating the furnishing or sale of narcotic drugs was intended, not only to prevent traffic in such drugs, but also to lessen the evils consequent upon the habitual use of such narcotics.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Poisons, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

3. HOMICIDE (§ 68*)—INVOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

Where a person, in violation of the statute, administers, by means of a hypodermic syringe, morphine to another in such quantity as to cause death, he commits an unlawful act, and a conviction of involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act would be authorized. It would be no defense that in the administration of the drug the intent was not to cause death, but to alleviate pain.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 91, 92; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 68*)—INVOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

The charge of involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act can be based upon an act malum prohibitum, as well as upon an act malum in se.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 91, 92; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

5. No ERROR—CONVICTION SUSTAINED.

No material error of law appears, and the evidence supports the verdict.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

6. HOMICIDE (§ 138*)—VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER—INDICTMENT.

An indictment for voluntary manslaughter through the unlawful administration of morphine need not state the quantity administered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 231; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

7. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 63*)—STATEMENT OF CONCLUSION.

An indictment charging voluntary manslaughter in that accused caused decedent's death by administering morphine "by means of a hypodermic syringe, by reason of which administration" decedent was then and there killed, was not objectionable as stating a conclusion instead of a fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 185; Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 762, 763, 764*)—HOMICIDE (§ 289*)—VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a prosecution for voluntary manslaughter by the unlawful administering of morphine, an instruction that the offense was complete if accused intended to administer the morphine and death resulted was not objectionable as an invasion of the province of the jury, or an expression of opinion of accused's guilt, or for failure to state that to complete the offense death must result directly and proximately from the unlawful act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1731, 1750, 1752, 1754, 1758, 1759, 1768-1770; Dec. Dig. §§ 762, 763, 764.* Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 594; Dec. Dig. § 289.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1171*)—HARMLESS ERROR—CONDUCT OF COUNSEL.

In a prosecution for involuntary manslaughter by the unlawful administering of morphine, any error in permitting the solicitor general to read from medical books extracts relating to the properties of viburnum was harmless, where the evidence showed that death was caused by morphine and there was no claim that it was caused or contributed to by viburnum.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3126, 3127; Dec. Dig. § 1171.*]

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; W. G. Chariton, Judge.

Isaac Silver was convicted of involuntary manslaughter, and brings error. Affirmed.

Shelby Myrick, of Savannah, for plaintiff in error. Walter G. Chariton, Sol. Gen., of Savannah, for the State.

HILL, C. J. [6, 7] Isaac Silver was convicted of the offense of involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act. On arraignment he demurred, on general and special grounds, to the indictment. The demurrer was sustained in part and overruled in part. Subsequently he made a motion for a new trial on the general grounds, and on numerous special grounds. The motion was overruled, and he excepted. The first count of the indictment charges "the offense of involuntary manslaughter, for that the said Isaac Silver, in the county of Chatham and state of Georgia aforesaid, on the 8th day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirteen, with force and arms, and without any intention to do so, but in the commission of an unlawful act, to wit, by furnishing and giving away to one Esther O'Marea, alias Marion Leonard, morphine, not upon the original written order or prescription of a lawfully authorized practitioner of medicine, dentistry, or veterinary medicine, which said morphine was furnished and given away by the said defendant to the said Esther O'Marea, alias Marion Leonard, by administering the same to her by means of a hypodermic syringe, by reason of which administration said Esther O'Marea, alias Marion Leonard, was then and there killed; the said Isaac Silver, then and there well knowing the loss of life as aforesaid to be a possible consequence of the unlawful giving away and furnishing in manner aforesaid of said morphine, did then and there unlawfully and feloniously kill said Esther O'Marea, alias Marion Leonard, contrary to the laws of the state, the good order, peace, and dignity thereof." The second count in the indictment charged the offense of involuntary manslaughter in the commission of a lawful act without due caution and circumspection. This ground was stricken on demurrer. The indictment as a whole, and the first count specifically, were demurred to on the ground that the allegations were not sufficient to show a violation of the criminal laws of Georgia. The first count was demurred to also on the grounds that it did not state the exact quantity of morphine administered, and that it did not state how or in what manner the deceased was killed by the administration of the morphine; that the allegation that by reason of such injection the said Esther O'Marea, alias Marion Leonard, was killed was a mere conclusion. These special grounds are manifestly without merit. It was not necessary to state the exact quantity of morphine administered; it was sufficient to allege that the deceased was killed by the administration of morphine by the defendant. The quantity was wholly immaterial. The first count does state specifically that Esther O'Marea, alias Marion Leonard, was killed by the accused by administering morphine to her "by means of a hypodermic syringe, by reason of which administration said Esther O'Marea, alias Marion Leonard, was then and there killed." The sentence as a whole is not a conclusion, but the statement of a fact.

[1] There was no error in overruling the demurrer on the general ground. The Act of 1907 (Acts of 1907, p. 121), contained in section 1651 of the Civil Code, declares that "it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation, to sell, furnish, or give away any cocaine, alpha or beta eucaine, opium, morphine, heroin, chloral hydrate, or any salt or compound of any of the foregoing substances, or any preparation or compound containing any of the foregoing substances or their salts or compounds, except upon the original written orders or prescription of a lawfully authorized practitioner of medicine, dentistry, or veterinary medicine," etc., and section 459 of the Penal Code provides that any person who shall violate any of the provisions of section 1651 of the Civil Code, supra, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. It was insisted by the learned counsel for the plaintiff in error that this statute was never designed to cover an isolated instance of the administration of morphine by means of a hypodermic syringe, especially where the morphine was administered without charge, at the request of a party suffering pain; that the law in question was intended only to operate against persons selling the narcotic drugs mentioned in the act. This argument was based in part upon the caption of the original act, which is in the following language: "An act to provide against the evils resulting from the traffic in certain narcotic drugs, and to regulate the sale thereof." There was no attempt to question the constitutionality of the act, but the caption was referred to simply for the purpose of supporting the position that the intention of the Legislature was to prevent the sale of narcotic drugs, and not to make it a penal offense to give away such drugs, or administer a narcotic drug to alleviate suffering.

[2] The act in question was passed by the Legislature by virtue of the broad police powers of the state, not only to prohibit the traffic in such dangerous drugs, but also to protect the victim of the habit by making it difficult for such victim to obtain the drug. In other words, the act was aimed at both the evil of the traffic and the evil of the habit. This, we think, is clearly indicated in the body of the act. It expressly makes it unlawful for any person to either "sell, furnish, or give away" any of the narcotic drugs mentioned in the act, except upon the written order or "prescription of a lawful practitioner of medicine, dentistry, or veterinary medicine; and, in furtherance of the purpose to prevent the evils of the habit, the act further provides that it shall be unlawful for any practitioner of medicine, dentistry, or veterinary medicine to furnish or prescribe any of the narcotic drugs mentioned "for the use of any habitual user of the same." Under the express terms of this act, therefore, we must hold that it is a violation of the statute for any person either to sell, furnish, or give away any of the narcotic drugs mentioned in the act without a written order or prescription as therein provided.

[3, 4] It is insisted, in the next place, that the charge of involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act can only be predicated upon an act that is malum in se, and cannot be based upon an act malum prohibitum, and in support of this position the authorities cited in 21 Cyc. 761, 765, are given. Whether the administration of morphine is an act evil in itself would, of course, largely depend upon the amount and the circumstances under which it was administered. Administration in small amounts and to alleviate pain might be construed as a beneficent act, but administration without this purpose, or to one who habitually uses it, might well be considered a wrongful act. However this may be, under the statute of this state the administration of morphine in any quantity or for any purpose, except under prescription as provided by the statute, is unlawful; and the Penal Code, § 67, declares that "involuntary manslaughter shall consist in the killing of a human being without any intention to do so, but in the commission of an unlawful act." In Hayes v. State, 11 Ga. App. 371, 73 S. E. 523, it is said: "An unlawful act within the meaning of our statute is an act prohibited by law; that is to say, an act condemned by some statute or valid municipal ordinance of this state. In order, therefore, to support an indictment for involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act, some act must be alleged which is prohibited by a valid law." The administration of morphine without a prescription being unlawful under the statute of this state, it follows that where death ensues from such unlawful and intentional administration of morphine, the person so administering the morphine is guilty of involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act. The question made by counsel for plaintiff in error seems to be settled by the statute and the decision of this court. Even if this were not so, we would hesitate to concur in the soundness of the view that the unlawful act which constituted an element of involuntary manslaughter must be one malum in se, for, outside of those things which are condemned as evil or wrong by the Holy Scriptures, the question of what would be evil or wrong in its nature depends on individual conception and environment.

[5, 8] 2. The following charge of the court is objected to: "If he intended to commit the act—that is, to administer the drug described—and death resulted from that, then the offense would be complete." It is insisted that this charge took away from the jury the right to decide whether, under all the facts and circumstances of the case, the offense of involuntary manslaughter had been committed at all by the defendant, and because it amounted to an expression of opinion that the defendant was guilty as charged, and also because it incorrectly laid down the rule with reference to death resulting from an unlawful act, in that it did not state that, in order for the offense to be complete, death must result directly and approximately from the unlawful act. We think this excerpt from the charge is not subject to the criticism upon it, and that it clearly states the law pertinent to the contentions. If one intentionally does a wrongful act, he is liable for the natural and probable consequences of the act. The very definition of involuntary manslaughter shows that, although the homicide be not intended by the party committing the unlawful act, yet if the unlawful act be intentionally committed, the party committing it would be responsible for the consequences resulting therefrom.

[9] 3. It is earnestly insisted that the trial judge erred in permitting the solicitor general to read, over the objections of the defendant, certain extracts from a book known as "Bartholow's Materia Medica and Therapeutics," relating to the properties of the drug viburnum, and its effect upon the human system, and also in permitting the solicitor general to read these extracts to the jury as a part of his argument; the objection being that the book was not in evidence, and was no part of the record. The trial judge, referring to this ground of the motion for a new trial, makes the following statement in his order overruling the motion: "Whilst the decisions are conflicting on the subject of the eighth ground, and there is no positive adjudication in Georgia on that point, it is fair to assume, if the action permitted stood by itself, it would be held to be error. Whether it was harmful error, necessitating the grant of a new trial, will be referred to later herein. The reading of the book to the jury was not begun by the prosecuting officer. The defendant's counsel sought and obtained the consent of the judge, over the objection by the solicitor general, to read to a witness extracts from the book, and to establish the reliability of the work itself. This was error on the part of the court, but it is not error of which the defendant can complain, since he induced the ruling, and he must therefore abide by the consequences of his act. Two wrongs do not make a right, but one error may make that innocuous which by itself would be error. A paper might not be admissible in evidence, but if one of the parties introduces a part of it, he cannot object to references to other portions which he may not wish the jury to hear. That is precisely what the defendant himself did in this case. Not only did counsel read to the witness in the hearing of the jury extracts from the book and seek and obtain commendation of the work from the witness, but the defendant, whilst making his statement, read to the jury an extract from the book. His position thus being that the book was credible, and the publication having been established, and its contents, so far as it suited the defendant's purposes, read by him to the jury, why should the solicitor general not read that portion on the same subject which follows? It could not have been harmful error, since what the solicitor general read had already been established by witnesses. But more than this, it was absolutely harmless error—no more error than reading Phillips' Famous Cases of Circumstantial Evidence, or the Declaration of Independence—for no one contended that viburnum had killed the deceased. It was a question between the absolute poison of morphine and club sandwiches. Apparently viburnum could have been taken as freely as soda water, but the one thing which would produce the characteristic signs apparent on the dying girl was morphine. She had been given morphine, through injection, by the defendant; the signs of morphine poison were present, and we might with equal advantage speculate on death by lightning from a clear sky as consider any other means of death than the one set forth in the indictment and demonstrated by the evidence." We adopt in part what has been so well said by the trial judge in discussing this ground. It is perfectly manifest that, even if it had been erroneous to permit the solicitor general to read from this book of the effect of viburnum on the human system, it was harmless error. The evidence demanded a finding that the cause of the death of the girl was an overdose of morphine. There was no pretense that her death was caused or contributed to by viburnum. It is true the evidence shows that she took about an ounce of viburnum just after the morphine had been injected into her hip, but the evidence is uncontroverted that this quantity of viburnum was absolutely harmless. For myself I do not see any logical reason why the statement of an expert scientist contained in a book would not have as much value as a mere expert opinion of a scientist on the same subject made on the witness stand. The only difference, of course, would be that in the one case there would be the right of cross-examination, and in the other this right could not be exercised.

The other special assignments of error contained in the motion for a new trial have either been abandoned or are without merit. The controlling question in the case under the evidence was whether the decedent died from the effects of morphine poisoning or ptomaine poisoning. The expert evidence on the subject demanded the verdict that she died from morphine poisoning. The contention that she died from the effects of ptomaine poisoning is an inference from the following facts: The decedent and another girl both received hypodermic injections of morphine at the same time; both girls also ate of club sandwiches and drank of beer; one girl vomited and did not die, the other girl failed to vomit and died—and therefore it was what they had eaten and drank, and not the morphine injected into the blood, which caused the death. This inference is not without some force, but its weakness consists in the fact that no two persons are affected in the same manner, either by what they eat or drink, or by morphine, the effect of food or medicine upon a person largely depends upon the physical condition of the subject, and as to the particular drug, upon the habit, but this discussion is academic, for the evidence is clear and strong that the decedent died from the effects of morphine poisoning; certainly the jury were authorized to accept this theory of the evidence. We fail to find any error in the record that would warrant the grant of another trial.

Judgment affirmed.

MIMBS v. BATTLE. (No. 4,681.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 31, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 47*)—ACTION—PETITION—SUFFICIENCY.

While certain paragraphs of the petition were subject to special demurrer, the petition as a whole set forth a cause of action, and it was error to dismiss the suit upon general demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. §§ 91, 92, 96; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

Error from Superior Court, Colquitt County; W. E. Thomas, Judge.

Action by J. H. Mimbs against J. J. Battle. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

W. A. Covington and Shipp & Kline, all of Moultrie, for plaintiff in error. Parker & Dowling, of Moultrie, and Branch & Snow, of Quitman, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. This was an action for malicious prosecution. It was dismissed on general demurrer. In brief the petition set forth that Battle sold to Mimbs in January, 1910, a mare, representing to Mimbs that she was sound in every respect, and especially that her eyes were sound and perfect, although, as alleged, Battle well knew at the time that the mare's eyes were weak and defective; that shortly after his purchase the plaintiff discovered that the mare's eyes were very defective, and that she was going blind, and thereupon he tendered the mare to Battle, and asked for the note which he had given Battle for the purchase price, but Battle refused this offer of rescission. The mare finally went totally blind, and, upon Battle's threatening to sue, the petitioner offered the mare back and the sum of $25 in addition; but this offer was refused. Finally, the mare having become totally worthless, the plaintiff took her to Battle's stable, and left her with the person who at that time had the stable in charge. A few minutes thereafter Battle approached the petitioner on the streets of the city of Moultrie, and, after cursing and abusing him, threatened to have him arrested. It is alleged that a few moments after the unprovoked abuse and threat of arrest the petitioner was actually arrested by the sheriff, under a warrant sworn out by the defendant, Battle, charging him with the offense of misdemeanor. The petitioner gave a bond for his appearance at the next regular term of the city court of Moultrie, and at the next succeeding term of that court he appeared and asked for a trial, but was informed that there was nothing in the charges against him, and that no accusation would ever be drawn. It was further alleged that Battle failed to push the case in any court, abandoned the prosecution, and the prosecution has terminated.

It is easily to be seen that this petition is demurrable in several respects. But the plaintiff offered an amendment which, we think, so amplified the statements as to the prosecution as to enable it to withstand the general demurrer. In the meantime it is stated that the warrant under which the plaintiff was arrested was returned by the sheriff to the clerk of the city court of Moultrie, that it was docketed upon the criminal docket of that court, and that from the entries upon the docket it appears that the case was dismissed; the entry of the dismissal being in the handwriting of his honor J. D. McKenzie, who was judge of the city court of Moultrie in the years 1911 and 1912. From the amendment it further appears that the defendant appeared in accordance with the obligation of his bond at the November term, 1911, the February term, 1912, the May term, 1912, and the August term, 1912, of the city court, and finally, in October, 1912, in the open session of the city court, he was informed by the solicitor and the judge that there was nothing against him, and that the case against him was dropped. It is further averred that, after search in the offices of the clerk and the sheriff of the city court of Moultrie, neither the affidavit nor the warrant nor the bond can be found, and the contents of these papers are briefly set forth, so as to lay the ground for parol evidence of their contents.

The chief insistence of counsel for the defendant in support of the ruling sustaining the general demurrer is that, while the original petition attempted to set out the essential elements of an action for malicious prosecution, the amendment transformed the action into a suit for malicious arrest. It is further contended, of course, that the allegations of the original petition were insufficient to set forth any cause of action. We agree with the contention of counsel for the defendant that the plaintiff cannot in the present action recover damages for slander; but we are of the opinion that the averments as to the language alleged to have been used by the defendant to the plaintiff in the hearing of the public can well be treated as a matter of inducement illustrative of the contention that the swearing out of the warrant and the subsequent proceedings were without any probable cause.

The principal questions in the case, as raised by the demurrers, are (1) whether the facts alleged show a case of malicious prosecution, and (2) whether it can be determined from the allegations that the prosecution is ended. Our Code defines a malicious prosecution to be a criminal prosecution "maliciously carried on, and without any probable cause, whereby damage ensues to the person prosecuted." Civil Code, § 4439. It is undisputed from the record that the defendant swore out a warrant against the plaintiff, charging the commission of a misdemeanor, and that upon this warrant the plaintiff was arrested. In pursuance of the provisions of the act creating the city court of Moultrie the warrant was returned to that court, and the plaintiff executed a bond to the clerk of the court, and the case was entered on the docket. It does not appear whether the solicitor preferred an accusation; but for five terms of the court the defendant in the warrant—the plaintiff in this case—was required, in accordance with the obligation of his bond, to attend the city court of Moultrie, and at length, after having several times orally demanded a trial, was informed in open court by the judge and the solicitor that there was nothing against him, and subsequent inquiry disclosed that the judge had formerly made upon his docket an entry that the case was dismissed. Under the facts which we have already stated, it appears that the jury would be authorized to find that the prosecution was instituted with malice and without probable cause. The defendant flew into a rage, whether rightfully or wrongfully, because the plaintiff returned a horse which the defendant had sold. He threatened the plaintiff that he would have him arrested. So far as appears from the allegations of the plaintiff's petition, the plaintiff had done no act which made him a violator of any penal law of this state. The affidavit and the warrant attempted to conceal the imaginary offense under the blanket term of a misdemeanor. For five terms of the court the prosecutor made no effort to have a judicial investigation either in the city court or by indictment in the superior court—of which this court knows that there were two sessions in the period of time set forth in the petition. Certainly these circumstances are sufficient to authorize the inference on the part of the jury that there was no basis for the prosecution at the start, and the conduct of the prosecutor in not pressing the prosecution corroborated the inference that the prosecution was instituted in bad faith. Before there can be a recovery for damages resulting from malicious prosecution, it must appear that the prosecution has ended. The petition set forth that the case has been dismissed in the city court, and we hold this dismissal to be sufficient evidence of the termination of the prosecution, since prosecutions in that court must be based upon affidavit, and it would require an entirely new affidavit to renew the prosecution.

Judgment reversed.

TAYLOR v. STATE. (No. 5,092.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 30, 1913.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 381, 782*)—CHARACTER EVIDENCE—PROBATIVE EFFECT—INSTRUCTIONS.

"Evidence of good character is not admitted as a mere makeweight but as evidence of a positive fact and may of itself, by the creation of a reasonable doubt, produce an acquittal." Seymour v. State, 102 Ga. 803, 30 S. E. 263. It was therefore error, in instructing the jury upon the weight and effect to be given to evidence touching the good character of the accused, to charge them in effect that it is only in connection with other evidence that such evidence may, by the creation of a reasonable doubt, produce an acquittal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 846, 1847, 1849, 1851, 1852, 1877, 1878, 1880-1882, 1906, 1907, 1909-1911, 1960, 1966, 1967; Dec. Dig. §§ 381, 782.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 381*)—CHARACTER EVIDENCE—PROBATIVE EFFECT.

While, of course, mere proof of the good character of the accused will not avail as a defense when the jury are satisfied by the evidence, beyond all reasonable doubt, of the guilt of the accused, still such proof of good character may of itself annihilate an apparently plain case of guilt by discrediting and impeaching the testimony upon which the conclusion of guilt is necessarily based.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 846; Dec. Dig. § 381.*]

3. HOMICIDE (§ 340*)—APPEAL—PREJUDICIAL ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

The instructions of the trial judge, other than those relating to the consideration of the testimony as to the defendant's good character, were free from error, but since the verdict rendered, of guilty of shooting at another, was not demanded, and there was testimony supporting the defendant's statement at the trial, which might have justified him, the error in the instructions to which we have referred must be adjudged to have been prejudicial and a new trial should have been granted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 715-717, 720; Dec. Dig. § 340.*]

*(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)4. HOMICIDE (§ 340*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—REFUSAL OF INSTRUCTIONS.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, the refusal of instructions relating to the offense charged, particularly an instruction not to convict defendant of such offense if he was resisting an illegal arrest, was harmless where defendant was convicted only of the lesser offense of shooting at another.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 715-717, 720; Dec. Dig. § 340.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 824*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUEST.

Where, in a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, one defense is that defendant was attempting to prevent an illegal arrest but there is no evidence thereof outside of defendant's statement, the court need not, in the absence of request, instruct on the law relative to resistance of illegal arrest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1996-2004; Dec. Dig. § 824.*]

6. HOMICIDE (§ 809*)—VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER—EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, the state's evidence that accused shot a depot gatekeeper without any present provocation, when considered with defendant's evidence that he was resisting an illegal arrest and evidence of defendant's ejection from the waiting room a few minutes before the shooting, authorized an instruction on voluntary manslaughter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 649, 650, 652-655; Dec. Dig. § 300.*]

7. HOMICIDE (§ 295*)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO MURDER—INSTRUCTIONS—COOLING TIME.

Where, in a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, the court instructs relative to the "cooling time," he should state that the cooling time is a question solely for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 606-609; Dec. Dig. § 295.*]

8. HOMICIDE (§ 105*)—RESISTING ARREST.

Where a person does not exceed the measure of force necessary in the resistance of an illegal arrest, he is guilty of no offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 135; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

9. JURY (§ 110*)—INCOMPETENCY OF JUROR—WAIVER.

Where accused accepted a juror before his strikes were exhausted, he waived his right to object that the juror was incompetent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 502-513, 515-523; Dec. Dig. § 110.*]

10. JURY (§ 110*)—INCOMPETENCY OF JUROR—SCOPE OF INQUIRY.

The examination of a juror upon his voir dire exhausts the right of accused to inquire into his competency unless he puts him upon the judge as a trier and then proves some fact tending to establish that his answers on the voir dire were not true.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 502-513, 515-523; Dec. Dig. § 110.*]

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; H. A. Mathews, Judge.

W. H. Taylor was convicted of shooting at another, and brings error. Reversed.

John R. Cooper, of Macon, for plaintiff in error. John P. Ross, S. C. Gen., of Macon, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The defendant was indicted for the offense of assault with intent to murder and was convicted of the statutory offense of shooting at another, and he excepts to the judgment overruling his motion for a new trial. There are numerous assignments of error in the motion for a new trial. We have given consideration to each of them and have carefully examined the record with reference to all of those assignments whose validity depended upon an examination of the record. All of the requests to charge which were refused and which contained correct and pertinent instructions appear to have been well covered in the charge of the court.

[4] The refusal to give some of the requested instructions which were pertinent and legal but which related to the offense of assault with intent to murder affords no just grounds of complaint, because the defendant was convicted only of the lesser offense of shooting at another, and manifestly the court's omission to give these instructions was not harmful to him. Several of the requests for instructions did not correctly state the law.

We shall not discuss some of the assignments of error (such as the exception to the court's refusal to continue the case) for the reason that they relate to points not likely to recur upon another trial; and some of them (including some of the assignments of error upon rulings on the evidence) will not be dealt with for the reason that the questions sought to be raised were properly presented.

[5] One of the assignments of error relates to the refusal of a request to charge the jury as follows: "The defendant has two defenses in this case, one of self-defense, and the other to prevent an illegal arrest. If the defendant shot in order to save his own life, you could not convict him of any offense. If you believe that the defendant shot in order to resist an illegal arrest, or an attempted illegal arrest, then and in that event you could not convict him of assault with intent to murder." If an arrest was attempted by the prosecuting witness, the fact appears only from the defendant's statement, and therefore, in the absence of a request (as has been often ruled), the court was not required to give instructions upon the subject; but an instruction embodying the principle relating to resistance to an illegal arrest, or an illegal attempt to arrest, would be required on request. The failure of the judge to give an instruction on this point was harmless however, since the accused was not found guilty of assault with intent to murder; but upon the next trial, if requested to do so, the court should charge the jury that if they believe from the evidence, or from the statement of the accused, that the prosecuting witness was attempting illegally to arrest him, he would have the right to resist and use whatever force was necessary to prevent an illegal arrest, and that if, in resistance of illegal arrest, he used no more force than was necessary for that purpose he would be justified.

[6] According to the evidence for the state, the accused shot one Moffett (who was a gatekeeper at a railroad depot in Macon, Ga.) without any present provocation; and a verdict finding him guilty of assault with intent to murder would have been fully authorized by this testimony. According to his statement, Moffett attempted to strike him with a "billy," such as is ordinarily used by the police, which, according to the testimony, was a weapon likely to produce death, and he shot only to prevent Moffett's blows. There was also testimony in support of the defendant's statement, at least to the extent that Moffett had the bludgeon in his hands and attempted to strike him before he fired, though Moffett asserted that Moffett's official club was hanging up in the depot at the time of the encounter. It is insisted that under this state of the case the defendant should either have been convicted of assault with intent to murder, or acquitted, for the reason that there is no middle ground upon which a finding of a verdict for shooting at another can rest. We think there is nothing in this contention, however, because the jury was fully authorized, from the evidence as a whole, to find that the accused was not justified, and yet to find that his assault upon Moffett, instead of being due to a deliberate intention to kill, was the result of uncontrollable passion aroused by a previous assault or indignity inflicted upon him about 15 minutes before the shooting, when Moffett, as caretaker of the building, had ejected Taylor from the waiting room. The evidence is in dispute as to the degree of force used by Moffett in removing him from the waiting room, but it is uncontradicted that he was removed from the waiting room by Moffett a very few minutes before the shooting, and that they had some words in regard to the matter. It was only a very few minutes from the time that he was put out of the waiting room until he returned to the depot and the shooting took place; and if the jury, though satisfied of his guilt of some offense, had doubt as to whether he was guilty of assault with intent to murder, or of shooting at another, they did nothing more than their duty if they gave him the benefit of the doubt and found him guilty of the lesser offense. Viewing the evidence as a whole, we are very clearly of the opinion that the law of voluntary manslaughter was involved in the case, and that the instructions of the court upon this subject were both necessary and proper.

[1-3] The verdict could very well be allowed to stand but for the fact that the judge erred in his instructions to the jury as to the weight and effect of the testimony which had been submitted touching the good character of the accused. We would not order a new trial if the error in this respect had been an immaterial one, nor would we feel obliged to grant a new trial if the defense of the accused rested wholly upon his statement; but the testimony that the shooting of the prosecuting witness was unprovoked is contradicted, and the error as to the instruction is a vital one, affecting the whole scope of the testimony as to the good character of the defendant.

Upon the subject of good character the court charged as follows: "Now in this case the defendant has put in evidence his good character. Good character in itself is no defense, no complete defense, but proof of good character is a matter for the jury to consider in connection with all the evidence in the case, and it is entitled to have such weight as the jury think it ought to have as bearing upon the question of the guilt or the innocence of the accused; it may be considered and should be considered and given such weight as you think it entitled to have for that purpose. If the consideration of the other evidence, taken in connection with the proof of good character, should develop a reasonable doubt, or if in that consideration a reasonable doubt arises as to the guilt of the defendant, it would be the duty of the jury to give the defendant the benefit of that doubt and acquit him." It cannot be said that the last sentence of this instruction is in itself erroneous, but we think that, in addition to the principle therein stated by the court, the jury should have been distinctly told that proof of good character may be sufficient alone and of itself to raise in the minds of the jury such a reasonable doubt as to the defendant's guilt as to authorize his acquittal, or it may be sufficient to authorize the jury to discredit entirely testimony which if credited would require the conviction of the accused; and for this reason it was clearly error for the judge to tell the jury that good character in itself is no defense, and the modification to the effect that it was "no complete defense," without explaining that sentence, as suggested above, was likely to confuse the jury.

There was a time when the law was as stated by the trial judge and when proof of good character could only be considered in connection with the other evidence in the case to enable the jury to say whether, when considered in connection with the other evidence and upon the case as a whole, the proof of good character generated a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt. There are a number of cases apparently to the effect that good character as a defense is only available in doubtful cases and is of no value where the evidence is clear. Thomas v. State, 59 Ga. 784; Coxwell v. State, 66 Ga. 309; Epps v. State, 19 Ga. 102; Jackson v. State, 76 Ga. 551. According to the later rulings of the Supreme Court, however, in which the prior rulings of the court were expressly referred to and construed, formal evidence of good character, when offered by the defendant in a criminal case, should be considered by the jury not merely where the balance of the testimony in the case makes it doubtful whether the defendant is guilty or not but where such evidence of good character may of itself generate a doubt as to the defendant's guilt. Shropshire v. State, 81 Ga. 591, 8 S. E. 450; Redd v. State, 99 Ga. 210, 25 S. E. 268; Seymour v. State, 102 Ga. 804, 30 S. E. 263. In the latter case Chief Justice Simmons, delivering the opinion of the court, says: "Evidence of good character is not admitted as a mere makeweight but as evidence of a positive fact and may of itself, by the creation of a reasonable doubt, produce an acquittal." And in Mitchell v. State, 103 Ga. 17, 29 S. E. 435, Justice Cobb, delivering the opinion of the court, held that proof of the defendant's good character was sufficient of itself to authorize an acquittal and to rebut the presumption arising, in a case of larceny, upon proof of the defendant's recent possession of property alleged to have been stolen. As was said in the Shropshire Case, of course if the guilt of the defendant is plainly proved to the satisfaction of the jury, beyond a reasonable doubt, it would be their duty to convict, notwithstanding proof of good character, and in that event the proof of good character would be of no avail. Such a case would merely be one in which the jury might believe that the defendant had a good character and yet be fully convinced of his guilt of the crime with which he was charged. The Seymour Case and the Mitchell Case are both instances in which it was held that proof of good character might effect more than the mere creation of such a reasonable doubt as would authorize acquittal. They establish the proposition that proof of good character as a substantive fact may in some cases provide an absolute defense to the accused by going further than merely raising a reasonable doubt and actually disproving the charge by discrediting the witness upon whose testimony the charge rests.

We have no doubt that the learned and eminently fair judge who tried this case, in using the language that "good character in itself is no defense," or at least not a complete defense, had in mind the proposition that proof of good character is not available as a defense if the jury is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, from the evidence in the case, that the defendant is guilty. But the language actually used did not appropriately convey that meaning to the jury. Personally we are reluctant to grant a new trial upon this ground, for we are not certain that in the case at bar the error in the instructions prejudiced the defendant. Personally we are inclined to the opinion that the accused, smarting under his ejection from the waiting room, flew into a rage and in passion, but without malice, shot the gatekeeper, and that therefore the case is a typical case of "shooting at another." But no one can know what would have been the effect of a consideration of the proof of good character, under proper instructions, especially since the jury, even if they did not justify the defendant, were not compelled to find him guilty of shooting at another but might have found him guilty of the lesser offense of assault.

[7, 8] Since, in our judgment, there should be another trial of the case, it is perhaps proper for us to say that, if the judge in his charge to the jury on that trial should refer to the subject of "cooling time," they should be told that "cooling time" is a question solely for the jury; and, if an appropriate request upon the subject is timely presented, the jury should be instructed upon the theory of the defense which rests upon the defendant's statement, to the effect that he made his attack upon the prosecutor in resistance to an attempted illegal arrest. For if the defendant, in resistance of an attempt to arrest him illegally, did not exceed the measure of force necessary for that purpose, he would not be guilty of any offense; and, even if he did use unnecessary force in resistance of illegal arrest, it would not necessarily follow that he would be guilty of shooting at another, for under some circumstances the jury might be authorized to find such a one merely guilty of assault.

[9] It is apparent that the defendant waived the incompetency of the juror Broadway, if he was incompetent, by accepting him as a juror before his strikes were exhausted.

[10] As to the ruling of the court upon the competency of stockholders in railroad companies having the depot building in charge, and their relatives, to serve as jurors in this case, there is no ground for complaint. The objection of counsel for the defendant was made en bloc to all jurors who might be stockholders or employes of the Central of Georgia Railway Company and other railroads using the depot and was properly overruled. Even if it be true, as was insisted by counsel, that the Central of Georgia Railway Company was the real prosecutor or behind the prosecution of the case, the court would have been compelled to act merely upon supposition to reach this conclusion from the fact that the person who was assaulted happened, at the time of the assault to be the gatekeeper of the depot. The examination of jurors upon their voir dire prima facie exhausts the right of the defendant of inquiring into the competency of the jurors. If either the state's counsel or the accused wishes to test further the bias or prejudice of the juror, he must first put the juror upon the judge as a trier and then proceed to prove some fact tending to establish that his answers upon the voir dire are not true. The effort in this case fell far short of the legal requirements. The motion to purge the jury was properly overruled, because there was no evidence that the Central of Georgia Railway Company or any other railroad company using the depot was participating in the prosecution. Even if this had appeared, we are not prepared to hold that every employe or stockholder of one of these railroads would be disqualified to serve as a juror. It would take more than the mere fact of pecuniary interest in the corporation to disqualify a stockholder in this case, and an employe would not have even that interest.

Judgment reversed.

PETERSON v. STATE. (No. 5,159.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 31, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DRUNKARDS (§ 10*)—APPEARANCE ON PUBLIC HIGHWAY.

Under the rule of strict construction, penal statutes cannot be extended beyond their precise terms. Under the terms of section 442 of the Penal Code of 1910, it is only unlawful for a person to be and appear in an intoxicated condition on any public street or highway when the intoxication is made manifest by boisterousness, or by indecent condition or acting, or by profane, vulgar, or unbecoming language, or loud and violent discourse of the person or persons so intoxicated or drunken; and consequently the law does not provide for the punishment of intoxication upon public streets which is not otherwise manifested than by reckless driving.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drunkards, Cent. Dig. §§ 10, 11; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

2. DRUNKARDS (§ 10*)—RECKLESS DRIVING.

Reckless driving cannot properly be included within that indecent conduct and acting which the provisions of section 442 of the Penal Code of 1910, require as one of the evidences of the public intoxication which is punishable by law; and the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the accusation, in which this point was presented.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drunkards, Cent. Dig. §§ 10, 11; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

Error from City Court of Albany; Clayton Jones, Judge.

Ben Peterson was convicted of indecent conduct while intoxicated, and brings error. Reversed.

R. J. Bacon, Jr., and R. H. Ferrell, both of Albany, for plaintiff in error. J. W. Walters, Jr., Sol., of Albany, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment reversed.

BIRMINGHAM FERTILIZER CO. v. DOZIER.

DOZIER v. BIRMINGHAM FERTILIZER CO.

(Nos. 5,021, 5,022.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 31, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. TROVER AND CONVERSION (§ 40*)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—NOTES.

The evidence authorized the verdict; no material error of law was committed, and the court did not err in refusing to grant a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trover and Conversion, Cent. Dig. §§ 232-244; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1040*)—HARMLESS ERROR—RULINGS.

Error in sustaining a demurrer to certain paragraphs of defendant's answer was harmless where the jury has found rightly in spite of the error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4089-4105; Dec. Dig. § 1040.*]

3. COURTS (§ 188*)—JURISDICTION—EQUITABLE DEFENSES.

While a city court is without jurisdiction to afford a plaintiff affirmative equitable relief, it may entertain an equitable defense which will prevent plaintiff from recovering.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 439, 440, 442, 447, 448, 451, 452, 454, 458, 464, 465, 467, 468; Dec. Dig. § 188.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

The erroneous admission of defendant's evidence which was outside the issues presented by his answer was harmless where such evidence was within the issues presented by certain clauses of his answer which were erroneously stricken.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1063, 1069, 4153-4157, 4166; Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

5. TROVER AND CONVERSION (§ 35*)—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden is on the plaintiff in trover to prove not only title but also right of possession where he has by contract surrendered possession to another.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trover and Conversion, Cent. Dig. §§ 215, 216; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

Error from City Court of Blakely; R. H. Sheffield, Judge.

Action by the Birmingham Fertilizer Company against P. N. J. Dozier. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error, and defendant files cross-bill of exceptions. Judgment on main bill of exceptions affirmed, and cross-bill of exceptions dismissed.

A. H. Gray and Glessner & Park, all of Blakely, for plaintiff in error. Smith & Miller, of Edison, and Byron R. Collins, of Blakely, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. The Birmingham Fertilizer Company brought an action in trover to recover from P. N. J. Dozier 29 promissory notes, described in an exhibit attached to the petition, and alleged to be of the value of $850. The defendant in his answer admitted having in his possession at the time of the service of the suit certain promissory notes of the form described in the plaintiff's petition, but not all of them. In other words, the defendant contended that some of the notes described in the plaintiff's petition had been delivered by him to the plaintiff prior to the suit. The defendant, in his answer, contended that those notes which were in his possession did not belong to the plaintiff, and, by way of equitable defense, alleged that by virtue of a contract between the parties the notes included his commissions and charges for the sale and handling of the fertilizers, which gave him such an interest in the notes as entitled him to retain possession of them until the commissions were paid. The defendant further pleaded that under the contract between himself and the fertilizer company after taking into consideration the payments made by him and the notes delivered by him to the plaintiff at its request, the plaintiff was indebted to him in a sum greater than the amount evidenced by the notes which are in his possession. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant; the plaintiff's motion for new trial was overruled, and exception is taken to this judgment. The defendant, by cross-bill of exceptions, excepts to the judgment, striking from his original answer paragraphs 5, 6, and 7, and his prayer "to have his claims against the petitioner offset, and that the plaintiff be mulct-ed the costs of the court," and excepts also to the court's refusal to allow certain amendments to his answer. Since, in view of the result of this case, the ruling upon the defendant's answer—without regard to its correctness—was harmless, we shall consider only the assignments of error in the main bill of exceptions.

[1, 2] It appears from a review of the record that the verdict was perhaps partly induced by evidence which would have been admissible under the defendant's answer if the court had not sustained the demurrer to the fifth, sixth, and seventh paragraphs, and had allowed the amendments which he sought to make. Under the ruling in Spence v. State, 7 Ga. App. 825 (2), 68 S. E. 443, if the result reached by the jury would have been the correct conclusion of the case had the judge ruled or charged in accordance with the contentions of one of the parties to the case, the verdict will not be set aside merely because the judge erroneously ruled to the contrary, or omitted to give in charge to the jury a principle which should appropriately have been included within his instructions. In other words, if the result reached would have been the same had the court ruled properly, and if the jury has found rightly in spite of judicial error, the finding will not be set aside in order that the same result may be reached by a proceeding free from legal error.

The defendant, in his answer, attempted to set up, in response to the petition in trover, that he had received on commission $8,576.36 worth of fertilizer; that he had paid over to the Birmingham Fertilizer Company, on account of his sales, $6,850.73, and had returned to it notes amounting to $1,915.68; that his commission and storage, by virtue of the terms of the contract between himself as agent and the plaintiff as principal, amounted to nearly $600, leaving the plaintiff due him the sum of $542.52. The defendant did not ask a judgment for this $542.52, but merely insisted that, inasmuch as the plaintiff owed him $542.52, he was entitled to the possession of the notes still remaining in his hands, and that, as the plaintiff was not entitled to possession, it could not recover these papers in trover. The fact that the jury found for the defendant itself evidences that the jury must have acted upon the evidence which the defendant would have introduced in support of his answer if it had been allowed, and that he received full benefit of his contention, although the plea in which this contention should have been formally presented to the court was stricken.

[3] Having held that the defendant got the benefit of his answer and of the stricken amendments as substantially as if the court had overruled the demurrers which were sustained, the question which arises upon the main bill of exceptions is whether the amendment, the evidence in support of which no doubt caused the verdict for the defendant, could properly have been allowed, and whether paragraphs 5, 6, and 7 should have been stricken. We think there is no doubt that the court should not have stricken these paragraphs of the answer, and the amendments offered appear to be merely amplification of the statements in the original answer. The insistence of the plaintiff in error in the main bill of exceptions is that the city court of Blakely is without jurisdiction and cannot take cognizance of the equitable rights which the defendant sought to assert. That the city court is without jurisdiction to afford equitable relief is true; but it is one thing to invoke affirmative equitable relief and quite another thing to interpose as a defense a right, whether founded in law or equity, which will prevent the plaintiff from recovering. The fact that one's equitable rights will prevent a plaintiff, of whose case as laid the court has jurisdiction, from recovering does not involve the necessity that the court trying the case shall be clothed with equitable jurisdiction. The court may not be able to afford affirmative relief in equity generally; but it must be presumed to bear in mind the rights of the parties at issue, and for this reason may deal with any matter of which the court has jurisdiction, whether such rights depend for their existence upon law or equity which may affect the cause in question. For this reason we think the city court of Blakely had full jurisdiction to entertain the defendant's plea, and, if the evidence authorized it, to grant his prayer, which did not ask that judgment be rendered for the overplus claimed by him against the plaintiff, but asked merely that he be not required to deliver up notes which he was legally entitled to hold as collateral security for his commissions, the consequence of which would be that he would be forced to proceed to recover these notes from a non-resident, which the plaintiff corporation was alleged to be.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[4, 5] It was error for the court to overrule the plaintiff's objections to testimony along the line of the paragraphs of the answer which had been stricken, and of the amendments which had been disallowed, these rulings upon the pleadings being an adjudication that the defendant could not plead the commissions accruing to him under the contract in recoupment of the plaintiff's action; but the ruling in regard to the testimony was error only because violative of the previous ruling to the contrary. And since the defendant, by timely exception pendente lite, preserved his rights, the whole matter is now properly before this court for adjudication, with the result that we must hold that the ruling in regard to the evidence, though in a technical sense error, in effect corrected the antecedent error in striking the paragraphs of the defendant's answer. A review of the evidence discloses that the testimony authorized the jury to find that the defendant contracted with the plaintiff to sell for it guano upon commission, and that, deducting the commissions transmitted by the agent in cash, and the notes which were returned to the plaintiff, the plaintiff was indebted to the defendant and entitled to retain the remaining notes which are in his possession as collateral until his commissions and charges are paid. To recover in trover it is essential that the plaintiff show either title or right of possession; in some cases he must show both. In the latter class of cases, although the plaintiff may show that he has legal title, if it appears that he has by contract surrendered possession to another, who is rightfully entitled to retain possession, he cannot recover possession by mere proof of title. Under the testimony in behalf of the defendant the jury were authorized to find that, even if the fertilizer company had title to the notes in question, Dozier was entitled to their possession as collateral until his commissions and his account for storage were paid.

The plaintiff's case was based upon the theory that the notes were placed in Dozier's hands for collection, and that it was his duty to surrender them upon demand. If the jury had believed the testimony in behalf of the plaintiff, the result would have been a verdict in his favor. On the other hand, if the contention of the defendant, which is sustained by the testimony in his behalf, is credible to the jury—that the fertilizer was sold by him on commission under a written contract, under which he was to receive $1 per ton as commission on fertilizer of a certain grade sold by him, and that the fertilizer sold was of this grade—there is a stipulation in the contract that the notes taken for fertilizer shall be payable to the Birmingham Fertilizer Company, and it appears that the notes were so taken. The notes were sent to Dozier by the company for collection, and in the trust receipt given by Dozier it appeared that the notes of Thompson, Keaton, and McDowell, aggregating something over $1,800, had been entered as a credit on the statement of account rendered by the fertilizer company to Dozier. This trust receipt was attached to an amendment offered by the defendant, and was not admitted in evidence by the court; but the defendant testified in substance to the same facts as appear from this receipt in the record, and, if the jury credited his testimony on this point, there remained only one other question, and that was whether a stipulation of the contract which imposed personal liability on Dozier in case of his failure to collect any of the several notes was abrogated, and Dozier was relieved from liability by the conduct of the plaintiffs in themselves undertaking to collect the notes due by Keaton, Thompson, and McDowell. Upon this point the jury evidently gave preference to the testimony in behalf of the defendant, and they had this right.

Judgment on main bill of exceptions affirmed; cross-bill of exceptions dismissed.

POTTLE, J., disqualified.

HILLIS v. E. T. COMER & CO. (No. 4,717.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 31, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 271*)—FORECLOSURE—AFFIDAVIT TO COPY—SUFFICIENCY OF VERIFICATION.

Where a chattel mortgage is foreclosed by attaching to the affidavit of foreclosure a copy of the mortgage, this copy must be "verified as correct by an affidavit thereon of the owner or his agent or attorney." Such a copy is not sufficiently verified by a certificate, signed by the attorney for the mortgagee and by the attesting officer, which recites merely, "I hereby certify on oath that the above is a true and correct copy of the original mortgage which is not in my possession." Such a certificate does not show that any oath was administered to the attorney as required by the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 555-558; Dec. Dig. § 271.*]

2. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§§ 43, 48*)—WHAT CONSTITUTES—"IN TRUST."

An instrument in the form of a promissory note for the purchase price of fertilizer contained the stipulation: "In consideration of interest of payees in my crops, by reason of this fertilizer being furnished to make same, I hereby covenant and agree that all cotton and corn grown during the current season on lands fertilized with this manure shall be held by me in trust for payment of this third note." Held, that the language quoted was adequate to create a lien upon the crops mentioned, and that the mortgage was sufficient when aided by parol evidence identifying it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 83, 93-95; Dec. Dig. §§ 43, 48.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3485, 3486; vol. 8, p. 7684.]

3. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 278*)—FORECLOSURE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

There being no evidence in the present case to identify the crops mortgaged by showing on what land the fertilizer was used, it was error to direct a verdict in favor of the plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 567; Dec. Dig. § 278.*]

Error from City Court of Waynesboro; Wm. H. Davis, Judge.

Action by E. T. Comer & Co. against R. J. Hillis. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

H. A. Boykin, of Sylvania, and H. J. Fullbright, of Waynesboro, for plaintiff in error. Brinson & Hatcher, of Waynesboro, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. This is a case in which it was sought to foreclose a mortgage. An affidavit of illegality was overruled in part, and in part sustained, and a verdict was directed by the court. The mortgage was as follows:

"State of Georgia, Screven County.

"Millhaven P. O. July 6th, 1912.

"1,080.00. On or before October 1st next I promise to pay to E. T. Comer & Co., or order, one thousand eighty and <sup>00</sup>/<sub>100</sub> dollars, from first proceeds of sale or picking of my cotton crop of this present year, for 480 sacks Farmer's Pride guano.

"(1) Which are hereby guaranteed by payees to standard of analysis branded on each sack, and it is understood that no other or larger warranty is given by the payees. I admit that every sack is branded according to law, and that the inspector's tag is attached thereto.

"(2) If this note is not paid on or before maturity I agree to pay 8 per cent. per annum interest from maturity, and all cost of collection, including ten per cent. attorney's fees.

"(3) I hereby expressly waive and renounce all exemption and homestead rights I may have under the laws of this state or any other state as against this debt or any renewal thereof.

"(4) In consideration of interest of payees in my crops, by reason of this fertilizer being furnished to make same, I hereby covenant and agree that all cotton and corn grown during the current season on lands fertilized with this manure shall be held by me in trust for payment of this third note.

"Witness my hand and seal the day and year above written. R. J. Hillis.

"Signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of: J. T. Arvet, N. P. B. C. Ga. J. W. Comer."

It is verified by the following certificate:

"I hereby certify on oath that the above is a true and correct copy of the original mortgage which is now in my possession. H. C. Hatcher.

"Signed before: E. C. Blount, Dpty. Clerk Supr. Court, Burke Co., Ga."

The affidavit of foreclosure was not made by H. C. Hatcher, but was by L. J. Kilpatrick, as the agent of E. T. Comer & Co. In the affidavit of foreclosure it is averred that the mortgage is attached. By the affidavit of illegality it was sought to raise the following points:

That, while the affidavit of foreclosure recites that the mortgage is attached, none is attached, and it is recited that what is attached is the mortgage, instead of there being an averment that the paper attached is a true copy of the original mortgage. As to this ground of illegality we will only say that, as the court had the papers before it, it is to be assumed that the trial judge could determine the validity of the objection by an inspection of the papers, and ascertain whether what purported to be a mortgage was the original or a copy, and that he did determine this question properly.

[1] The second ground of illegality of the foreclosure is that the copy mortgage attached is not a sworn copy; in other words, that it does not appear that H. C. Hatcher was duly sworn to the certificate, or that he was authorized to make the affidavit that the paper was a true copy of the original mortgage. Section 3286 of the Civil Code permits the affidavit of foreclosure to be annexed either to the original mortgage or to a sworn copy of the original mortgage; but, if for any reason a copy is used instead of the original, it is required to be "verified as correct by an affidavit thereon of the owner or his agent or attorney." Even though the trial judge was authorized to infer that Hatcher was the attorney of the foreclosing mortgage holder, it does not appear from the certificate of Hatcher that he was in fact sworn. Hatcher states in the certificate that he certifies "on oath"; but the attesting officer does not state that Hatcher was in fact sworn, or that he knew that Hatcher was assuming the obligation of an oath, or that he administered an oath. Nor does it appear, by reading Hatcher's certificate, or by the contents of the certificate being called to the attention of the officer, that the latter knew that Hatcher was certifying on oath. The language used in the certificate would have been as effectual to obligate Hatcher if he were actually sworn as if the phraseology appropriate to an ordinary affidavit had been used. But there is no jurat to the certificate. Instead of the attesting officer who was qualified to administer oaths stating that the certificate was sworn to and subscribed before him, it is merely stated that it was signed before him. On this subject, see Green v. Rhodes, 3 Ga. App. 301, 68 S. E. 1090. The very fact that an officer authorized to administer an oath certified no more than that the proposed affiant "signed" the statement in question is of itself sufficient to cause a suspicion that for some reason the administration of an oath was dispensed with, that the proposed affiant was in fact not sworn, and that for that reason the officer who signed the jurat purposely omitted the usual form, to the effect that the person who signed was first sworn. Of course it was not essential that the deputy clerk should have administered a formal oath; but it was his duty to have called the attention of the signer of the sworn certificate to the fact that he was assuming the obligation of an oath. One of the tests for determining whether one who makes an affidavit or other sworn certificate was in fact sworn is a determination of the question whether the affiant could be convicted of falsely swearing. In any trial for perjury or false swearing it is absolutely essential to prove that an oath was administered before it becomes material to investigate whether the statements alleged to have been false were false or true. Certainly the certificate in the present case, if employed in a criminal prosecution, would not serve even to indicate that Hatcher had sworn. When the officer before whom the writing is signed does not know that the signer proposes to be sworn, there is no administration of an oath, and the recital as to an oath is not more binding than in a case where the signer himself does not consciously assume the obligation imposed by an oath. Since it does not appear from the record that there was any effort to amend the affidavit verifying the copy mortgage, we are of the opinion that the court erred in overruling the second ground of the affidavit of illegality.

[2] The third ground of the affidavit of illegality presents the contention that the paper which it was sought to foreclose was not a mortgage, but only a promissory note. This ground was properly overruled, for the covenant and agreement that the property described in the paper should be held by the maker "in trust" for its payment is sufficient to create a mortgage lien. The Code does not require that any particular form of expression shall be used to create a mortgage. It is evident from the language employed that it was the intention of the maker of the note to create a special lien operative upon the property described, and the expression used is tantamount to the ordinary term "mortgage." In Jackson v. Carswell, 34 Ga. 279, Jackson gave a note describing land as advertised by Rollins Stanley, administrator of Benjamin Jackson, and promised to pay certain named persons $500 "out of said land." The Supreme Court held that this instrument contained "all the necessary stipulations to create a mortgage lien." We think the stipulation to "hold property in trust" with which to pay a note is really stronger than simply to say a note is to be paid "out of the land."

Another ground of attack upon the mortgage was that the property was not sufficiently described, and we think this ground was properly overruled, under the ruling in Thomas Furniture Co. v. T. & C. Furniture Co., 120 Ga. 881, 882, 48 S. E. 833. See, also, Stephens v. Tucker, 55 Ga. 543; Crine v. Tifts, 65 Ga. 644; Duke v. Neisler, 134 Ga. 594, 68 S. E. 327, 137 Am. St. Rep. 250. In the Neisler case the description did not go as far as that contained in the mortgage now before us; but the Supreme Court held that a mortgage containing, as a description of the property mortgaged, the language "our crop planted this year, and on which said fertilizer is used," was not void for uncertainty. See, also, Broach v. O'Neal, 94 Ga. 478, 20 S. E. 113; Patterson v. Evans, 91 Ga. 799, 18 S. E. 81.

Even if the affidavit of foreclosure is fuller and more complete in its description of the property than the mortgage, the added terms of description could not have resulted in harm to the defendant. In the foreclosure the mortgagee was compelled to stand on the mortgage and be confined to its description; but, since the description in the mortgage could properly be supplemented by parol explanation, the inclusion in the affidavit of a description of the land upon which the mortgaged property was grown could not have harmed the defendant.

[3] However, since there was no proof that the fertilizer sold by the plaintiff was used in the cultivation of the cotton, the identification of the property only partially described in the mortgage itself was not completed by parol, and it was therefore error to have directed a verdict for the plaintiff. It is true that the defendant did not testify that the guano was not placed under the cotton; but there was no testimony whatever that the guano was in fact used on the cotton, and affirmative proof upon this point was essential under the rulings of the Supreme Court in Patterson v. Evans, 91 Ga. 799, 18 S. E. 31; Thomas Furniture Co. v. T. & C. Co., 120 Ga. 881, 48 S. E. 333, and citations.

The court erred in directing a verdict as to the cotton, because it was not made to appear that the guano was used in the cultivation of the cotton levied upon, and, if it was not so used, the cotton levied upon was not subject to the mortgage.

Judgment reversed.

CHARLESTON & W. C. R. CO. v. BROWN.
(No. 4,905.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 31, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 246*)—INJURY TO RAILROAD EMPLOYE—RIGHT OF RECOVERY.

This was an action against a railway company under the federal Employers' Liability Act (Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1322]) to recover damages for personal injuries. The case made by the petition was substantially as follows: The plaintiff was a locomotive fireman on the defendant's train, which operated daily between Georgia and South Carolina. At a point in South Carolina the track was being repaired, and, when the train upon which the plaintiff was employed approached, one of the track flagmen grabbed a flag of distress, and in an excited manner ran up the track of the railroad, met the train, and signaled it to stop; thereupon the engineer, after putting on the emergency brakes, jumped from the engine, and the plaintiff, seeing that the rails of the track ahead of the engine were out of line and "buckled," and believing that the train would be wrecked and his life be in peril, jumped from the engine, and in doing so sustained serious injury. It is alleged that the defendant was negligent in suffering its roadbed to get out of order and its rails to become "buckled," and in not placing a danger flag at a sufficient distance on its line from the place where the track was out of order, after the "buckled" condition of the track had been discovered, to have notified the employes on the engine of the danger, and thus have prevented the application of the emergency brakes and the apparent necessity for the plaintiff to jump from the engine. Held, that the petition was not subject to general demurrer, nor to demurrer upon the ground that the negligence complained of was not the proximate cause of the injury, nor was it essential to allege that the train actually ran off the track. The plaintiff did not complain of injuries sustained by reason of a derailment, but complained of injuries resulting from his fall in consequence of the jump made necessary by an emergency brought about by the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 789-794; Dec. Dig. § 246.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 228*)—NEGLIGENCE (§ 101*)—INJURY TO RAILROAD EMPLOYE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

The allegations of the petition showed that the plaintiff was engaged in interstate commerce, and the suit was properly brought under the federal Employers' Liability Act. Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1322]. Under this act it is not essential for the plaintiff to show that he was free from fault. He was entitled to recover for the negligence of the defendant, and his own fault, if any, would not defeat but merely go in reduction of the damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 670, 671; Dec. Dig. § 228.* Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 85, 163, 164; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 302*)—PRESENTATION BELOW—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

The exception to the admissibility of documentary evidence, as set forth in the eighth ground of the motion for a new trial, cannot be considered, because the document to which exception is taken is not set forth in the motion for a new trial, either literally or in substance, nor is a copy attached thereto as an exhibit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1744-1752; Dec. Dig. § 302.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 255*)—INSTRUCTIONS—FAILURE TO REQUEST.

While, under the federal Employers' Liability Act (Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1322]), there is no presumption of negligence against the railway company in a case of this character, still failure of the judge in the present case to affirmatively charge the jury that there is no such presumption is no cause for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 627-641; Dec. Dig. § 255.*]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§§ 246, 289*)—INJURY TO RAILROAD EMPLOYE—RIGHT OF RECOVERY—QUESTION FOR JURY.

The evidence authorized the verdict, which was not legally excessive, and the question as to whether the plaintiff's injuries resulted from his own negligence or from that of the defendant was fairly submitted to the jury, and there was sufficient evidence to support their finding in the plaintiff's favor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 789-794, 1089, 1090, 1092-1182; Dec. Dig. §§ 246, 289.*]

6. NO ERROR.

No material error of law was committed, and the judgment overruling the motion for a new trial will not be disturbed.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

7. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 246*)—INJURY TO RAILROAD EMPLOYE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—EMERGENCY.

The question whether a locomotive fireman was justified in jumping from his engine in an emergency depends upon whether he used ordinary care under the circumstances of the emergency presented to him, and not upon the true conditions as they may have appeared to other persons in a better position to ascertain the real facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 789-794; Dec. Dig. § 246.*]

Error from City Court of Richmond County; Wm. F. Eve, Judge.

Action by J. J. Brown against the Charleston & Western Carolina Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

W. K. Miller, of Augusta, for plaintiff in error. H. C. Roney, of Augusta, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. Brown, the plaintiff in the court below, brought an action for damages, alleging that he was injured while employed as a fireman by the defendant who was alleged to be a carrier engaged in interstate commerce. He expressly planted his case upon the federal Employers' Liability Act of 1908 (Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1322]), which provides that such a carrier shall be liable in damages to any person suffering injury while employed by the carrier in such commerce, resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of the carrier, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency, due to its negligence, in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, works, boats, wharves, or other equipment. Of course, in such a case the burden of proving that the negligence of the employer was the proximate cause of the injury rests upon the plaintiff (Bowers v. Southern Railway Co., 10 Ga. App. 367, 73 S. E. 677), and the doctrine that the servant assumes the risks ordinarily incident to his employment applies where the action to recover damages for personal injuries is based upon the federal Employers' Liability Act (under the same circumstances and conditions), just as it would apply if the action were proceeding under the statutes of this state.

In the case at bar the plaintiff's petition alleged that he was a locomotive fireman on a passenger train of the defendant, which ran daily from Augusta, Ga., into the state of South Carolina, and returned to Augusta. On the occasion under investigation the train upon which the plaintiff was a fireman left Spartanburg, S. C., at 12:30 p. m. for Augusta, and on the return trip reached Woodruff, S. C., and had passed that station a mile or two when the casualty which resulted in the plaintiff's injury occurred. The petition alleges that track hands were working on the line of the railroad, and that, as the train approached and was within a short distance from where they were working, one of the track workmen grabbed a flag of distress in a very excited manner, and ran up the railroad, meeting the train, and signaling the train to stop, and that thereupon the engineer, after putting on the emergency brakes, jumped from his engine, and the plaintiff, seeing that the rails of the track ahead of the engine were out of line and "buckled," and that apparently the train would be wrecked, and believing his life to be in peril, also jumped from the engine, and in jumping lost his footing and fell, and the fall broke the bones of his right hip, his collar bone, and two ribs. It is averred that the defendant was negligent in suffering its roadbed to get out of order and its rails to become "buckled," and in not placing a danger flag at a sufficient distance on its line from the place where the track was out of order, after this condition was discovered, to have notified the crew of the passenger train of the danger, and thus have prevented the necessity for applying the emergency brakes, and to have prevented the plaintiff's injury. The defendant demurred to the plaintiff's petition, the demurrer was overruled, and upon the trial the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff. Exception was taken pendente lite to the judgment overruling the demurrer, and this exception, as well as that to the judgment overruling the motion for a new trial, is presented for our consideration by the bill of exceptions.

[1] 1. We find no error in the judgment overruling the demurrer. The petition was certainly sufficient to withstand the ground of the demurrer in which it was insisted that the petition failed to set out a cause of action, nor could the ground in which it was insisted that the negligence complained of was not the proximate cause of the injury be sustained, for, if the allegations of the petition were proved, the jury might be authorized to infer that the negligence of the defendant was the prime underlying cause of the injury suffered by the plaintiff, and that, though he might have been negligent in some respects, he would not have jumped or have been hurt but for the concurrent negligence of the servants of the company. Nor was it necessary for the plaintiff to allege that the train ran off the track. His case was not one of a person complaining that he was injured by reason of a derailment. The petition plainly alleged that the plaintiff was injured in jumping from the engine, and by reason of the fall consequent upon the jump. Therefore it is immaterial, so far as concerns his right to recover, whether the train remained upon the track or was derailed.

[7] The petitioner alleged sufficient facts to authorize submitting to the jury the question whether he was justifiable in jumping from the engine at a time when, as it appeared to him, his life was in peril, for it must be borne in mind that one who is called to act in an emergency must necessarily be governed by the surroundings as they appear to him, and that, though he must use ordinary care for his preservation, the determination of the question as to whether he did or did not use ordinary care is to be reached by a consideration of the aspect the circumstances of the emergency presented to him, and not the true condition as it may have appeared to bystanders who, perhaps, may have had better opportunity of ascertaining the real facts.

[2] 2. We think the facts alleged clearly brought the case under the federal Employers' Liability Act, and that the seventh ground of the demurrer (which, though applicable only to the seventh paragraph of the petition, was general in its nature) was properly overruled. Under the allegations of the petition the defendant was engaged in interstate commerce; the plaintiff was employed by it on an interstate run; he had suffered an injury, and, even if this injury was partly due to his own negligence, if the injury also resulted in part from the negligence of an employé of the carrier, he was entitled to recover. He was not required to show that he was free from fault (as the employé who proceeds for damages under the statutes of this state must do), if he succeeded in proving that it was negligence to give the signal to stop the train, and that his injury resulted primarily from this negligence of one of the carrier's employés.

[3] 3. In one of the grounds of the motion for a new trial complaint is made that the plaintiff, Brown, was allowed to introduce a letter from the defendant's engineer to the master mechanic of the railroad company. It is assigned as error that the engineer was a witness under subpoena of the plaintiff, and therefore his reason for jumping from the engine should have been given by himself as a witness, and, further, that his letter could not operate as an admission by the defendant company nor bind it as such, and the cases of Carroll v. East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia Railway Co., 82 Ga. 452, 10 S. E. 163, 6 L. R. A. 214, and Howard v. Savannah, Florida & Western Railway Co., 84 Ga. 711, 11 S. E. 452, are cited in support of this contention. The majority of the court decline to consider this ground of the motion for a new trial, because the document, to the admissibility of which objection was raised, is not set forth in the motion for a new trial, either literally or in substance, nor is a copy attached to the motion as an exhibit. The writer (not losing sight of the decisions of the Supreme Court which require documentary evidence to be exhibited in the motion for a new trial) is of the opinion that, even if we should consider the exception, it is without merit. Moved by the argument of the learned counsel for the plaintiff in error, I was under the impression that the paper in question was necessarily a letter, and its admissibility seemed to be doubtful, because the paper refers partly to matters not connected with the plaintiff, and therefore foreign to the issue. After mature deliberation, however, it is my opinion that the trial judge did not err in overruling the specific objections made to the introduction of the paper, and it is plain that its admissions could not have harmed the defendant. It does not appear from the contents of the paper whether it was a letter or a report such as is sometimes required by the rules of employers. The paper is equally susceptible of either construction. The addressee is addressed as "master mechanic," and there is no word which refers to anything other than the occurrence in which the plaintiff was injured, nor is there any statement acknowledging receipt of an inquiry, or indicating that the paper is a letter in reply to one received by the writer. The trial judge could properly have held that the paper submitted for his inspection was a report by an employé to his superior, and, even if this is not so, the engineer was in charge of the engine; he was, for the occasion, the alter ego of the defendant company. Some of the statements in the letter (if it was a letter) could be treated as admissions of the company itself because made by its alter ego.

Of course, an agent's declarations, beyond the scope of his authority, or as to matters outside the scope of his duty, cannot affect his principal, and consequently, in Wright v. Georgia Railroad & Banking Co., 34 Ga. 337, it is held that the statements of an agent should not go to the jury until it has been shown that his sayings relate to matters within the scope of his agency; but the principal is bound by statements made by him as to matters which are peculiarly within the province of his agency. Under the rulings in Imboden v. Etowah & Battle Branch Mining Co., 70 Ga. 87 (11), 113, Cotton States Life Insurance Co. v. Edwards, 74 Ga. 222, Dobbins v. Pyrolusite Manganese Co., 75 Ga. 450, Georgia Railroad Co. v. Smith, 76 Ga. 634, Krog v. Atlanta & West Point Railroad Co., 77 Ga. 202, 4 Am. St. Rep. 77, as well as in many subsequent cases, such admissions of Hargrove, the engineer, as related to matters within the scope of his duty as engineer were admissible, whether the communication to the master mechanic be treated as a formal report or as correspondence personal in its nature. As was said by Chief Justice Jackson, in the Imboden Case, supra; A corporation can only make admissions through its agents, and "the admissions of such agents acting within the scope of their powers and about the business of their agency" are admissible. "Unless such admissions are binding on a corporation, it cannot be bound by admissions at all. The only way in which a corporation can talk and admit is by agents. It is dumb as well as deaf by itself, having no organs of speech or hearing except by natural persons as its agents." In the present case Hargrove was the engineer in charge of the particular engine in jumping from which the plaintiff was hurt. It was his duty to operate the engine and control its movements, and as to the particular engine he was the alter ego of the carrier. For this reason it would seem plain that so much of his communication to the master mechanic as relates to the particular facts touching the operation of the engine at the very time the plaintiff was hurt was relevant testimony, and, even though the communication contains some irrelevant matter, the admission of the whole paper was not erroneous, for the objection was not aimed at these particular portions of the paper, but was directed to it as a whole.

The requirement that admissions of an agent which bind his principal must be made dum ferve opus is supplied, in a case in which the admission is made at a time so far subsequent to the transaction to which the statement relates that it cannot be said to be a part of the res gestæ, if the statement is as to matters peculiarly within the very class of work intrusted to this agent, and especially if it is the business of this agent solely, and does not relate to the acts or duties of any one else than himself. For this reason, as to so much of the statement of Hargrove as related to what he himself did in applying the emergency brakes and stopping the train, it is immaterial that this statement was made several days after the casualty in which the plaintiff was alleged to have been injured. As was held in Chattanooga, etc., Railroad Co. v. Liddell, 85 Ga. 490, 11 S. E. 853, 21 Am. St. Rep. 160, the sayings of an agent are admissible only upon the principle of being a part of the res gestæ; but, in Evans v. Atlanta & West Point Railroad Co., 56 Ga. 500, it is pointed out that statements made in the line of the agent's duty are to be classed, as to the particular transaction involved, as part of the res gestæ. I am of the opinion, therefore, that so much of the engineer's report to the master mechanic as relates to facts as to which it was his duty to report was properly admissible.

[4] 4. Exception is taken to the fact that the trial judge did not instruct the jury that under the federal Employers' Liability Act there is no presumption against the railway company. The court did not charge upon this subject at all, and the request to charge was merely oral. The real question presented, therefore, is whether it was the duty of the court to point out to the jury the distinction or difference between the federal statute and the laws of this state, due to the fact that there is a presumption of negligence against the company where it is sought to recover damages under the laws of this state, but no such presumption where the right to recover is based upon the federal statute. We do not think that the court, in the absence of an appropriate written request, is in any case required to charge the jury what is not the law. His duty is fulfilled if he tells the jury what is the law applicable to the case. In the present case, in telling the jury that the plaintiff was required to prove all the allegations of negligence set forth in the petition, or that otherwise the jury should find for the defendant, the judge certainly conveyed no intimation that there was a presumption of negligence against the company, and, in order to hold that further instructions were necessary, it would have to be assumed that there was some good reason why the jury should have thought that there was a presumption before it would appear that a jury of ordinary intelligence would have such an impression. The judge several times told the jury that the action was based on the federal Employers' Liability Act.

[5] 5. The plaintiff proved his case as laid. The evidence was sufficient to authorize the jury to find that the fireman was impelled by the aspect of his surroundings, as they appeared to him, to jump from the engine for the preservation of his own safety. It was not necessary that the train should have run off the track, since if he waited for the derailment of the train before jumping, he might be injured before he could jump, or might, by the overturning of the engine, be prevented from jumping at all. It was for the jury to say what emotions of apprehension might naturally and reasonably be aroused in the mind of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff was authorized to act in accordance with the conditions as they appeared to him, and not as they might have appeared to a bystander. "All the authorities concur in holding that the duty of a person for his own safety in such an emergency is not to be measured by the ordinary standard, but that allowance is to be made for the emotions. The authorities to this effect which might be cited amount to scores, if not to hundreds." Atlanta, Knoxville & Northern R. Co. v. Roberts, 116 Ga. 508, 42 S. E. 753; Georgia Railway & Electric Co. v. Gilleland, 133 Ga. 621, 66 S. E. 944; Smith v. Wrightsville & Tennille R. Co., 83 Ga. 671, 10 S. E. 361. As was said by us in ruling upon the demurrer, the fact that the engine was not derailed is of no consequence in determining whether the plaintiff was justified in jumping, for, as was held in Southwestern Railway Co. v. Paulk, 24 Ga. 356, "if, through the default of the company, or of its servants, the passenger is placed in such a perilous condition as to render it an act of reasonable precaution, for the purpose of self-preservation, to leap from the cars, the company is responsible for the injury he receives thereby, although if he had remained in the cars he would not have been injured." And the case of an employé cannot differ from that of a passenger if the employé is free from all fault as to the matters which caused his peril.

It is strenuously insisted by learned counsel for the plaintiff in error that the buckling of the track was due to natural causes, and that, since the section force had an hour for dinner, they did not, after returning, have sufficient time to pull the track in line, or to find out that they could not do so before the arrival of the train. Even if we concede all that is claimed in behalf of the plaintiff in error upon this point, the fact remains that the jury were authorized to find that the signal upon which the train was stopped was not properly given, nor given at the proper place, as well as that it was not given as soon as it should have been. Furthermore, even if the buckling of the track was due to natural causes, the circumstances as detailed by the plaintiff, if his testimony was credible, authorized him to infer that one of the rails had been taken up in order to cut it off, and that, if he remained upon the engine until the gap in the track was reached, the engine would be overturned.

[§] 6. Without discussing at length other assignments of error, whose review would be profitless either to the parties or the profession, we are content to express the opinion that no material error of law was committed. There was sufficient evidence to authorize the verdict, which was approved by the trial judge upon review, and the judgment overruling the motion for a new trial will not be disturbed.

Judgment affirmed.

HOTSINPILLER v. HOTSINPILLER et al.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 14, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 46*)—ACTION ON CONTRACT.

If by the express terms of an oral contract for continuous services, or the clear understanding of the parties, payment therefor is to be postponed until the death of the promisor, or provision made therefor in his will, right of action on the contract does not accrue to the other party until the death of the promisor, and the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the event contemplated happens.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 240-253; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

2. CONTRACTS (§ 214*)—CONSTRUCTION—PAYMENTS.

Though such contract does not so expressly provide for postponement of payment, yet if from the peculiar circumstances of the parties, the dealings between them, their confidential relations, and the declarations of the promisor, it clearly appears that such was the understanding by which they were to be bound, the contract should be so interpreted and enforced.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 980-995; Dec. Dig. § 214.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Preston County. Bill by William G. Hotsinpiller against George W. Hotsinpiller and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Wardner & Robinson, of Grafton, for appellant.

MILLER, J. Plaintiff, claiming to be a large creditor of the estate of his father, James W. Hotsinpiller, deceased, sued John A. Hotsinpiller, executor, and others, in equity, seeking to charge that estate with the payment of his debt of $2,938.40, which his bill alleges was for labor performed for his father during his life time, "in the year 1900, and for several years prior thereto," and which he alleges was never paid by decedent nor by his executor since his death. There is no allegation of an express contract that said labor was to be paid for at testator's death, or provision made therefor in his will. It is alleged that the personal estate is insufficient to pay the debts, and that the executor has failed to bring any suit within the time prescribed by statute, to subject the real estate to the payment of the debts, wherefore plaintiff's suit.

The executor demurred to and answered the bill, the answer putting in issue the validity of the alleged account, and pleading the statute of limitations. The demurrer was overruled, and issue being joined on the general replication to the answer, the case was referred to a commissioner, to report the debts, and other matters usual in such cases.

On the evidence introduced the commissioner found and reported, among other things, a debt in favor of plaintiff for $939.00, for five years services, 1,585 days, at sixty cents per day. No exceptions were filed to this report, and the court decreed that sum to plaintiff, who has appealed to this court to reverse that decree because he was not allowed and decreed the full amount of his claim. No exceptions were filed to the report, but the legal question relied on is fairly presented on the face of the record. The commissioner reported that if the statute of limitations did not apply, which with other questions he submitted to the court, plaintiff would be entitled to his whole claim, $3,038.40, unless he should be charged with his board, clothing, etc., during the five intervening years he was an invalid and was maintained by testator. By its decree complained of the circuit court evidently concluded that the statute of limitations applied, for it adopted the finding of the commissioner and decreed to plaintiff only $939.00.

[1] The only appearance or brief filed here was by counsel for appellant. The proposition on which they rely to reverse the decree is that plaintiff's claim did not accrue until after the death of his father, and that the statute of limitations did not begin to run until the debt then matured. If the contract was as is claimed, right of action did not accrue until the death of the testator, and the proposition is well founded in law. Cann v. Cann, 40 W. Va. 138, 20 S. E. 910, and Cann v. Cann, 45 W. Va. 563, 31 S. E. 923, and the decisions of other courts referred to in those cases.

[2] It is not specifically alleged, that by the terms of the contract for services, payment was to be made at death, or provision made therefor by will; but will not proof of such contract support the contract alleged? We are disposed to hold that it will. We recently decided that an oral contract to make a will, if certain and definite in terms, and upon sufficient consideration, if equitable, is valid and enforceable against the estate of a decedent, as any other valid contract. Davidson v. Davidson, 79 S. E. 908, decided at the present term and not yet officially reported. See, also, the authorities cited therein for the proposition. In Reynolds v. Robinson, 64 N. Y. 589, that court held that where the provision in a will was not sufficient to cover compensation for services rendered and to be so provided for, the party rendering the service had cause of action against the personal representatives of decedent for any balance due him on his contract. The authorities are numerous for the proposition that where the agreement is for services to be compensated by provision in a will, and the will makes no such provision, an action at law lies to recover the value of such services. Besides our cases and other cases cited, see monographic note to Johnson v. Hubbell (N. J.) 66 Am. Dec. 773, 735, where most of the cases are collated. See, also, Judge Holt's concurring opinion in Cann v. Cann, 40 W. Va., at page 157, 20 S. E. 910, on the question of the statute of limitations.

The cases referred to constitute ample grounds for the conclusion that where there is a contract for services to be rendered, payment to be postponed until the death of promisor, or to be provided for in his will, the cause of action does not accrue until the death of the deceased promisor, and action may be brought at any time thereafter within the period prescribed by the statute. For a full discussion of this subject, see Stone v. Todd, 49 N. J. Law, 280 et seq., 8 Atl. 300. In that case it is said to be "well settled that where there is no express agreement as to the time or measure of compensation for long-continued services, the law will not imply a postponement of compensation until the termination of the employment, but for the purpose of determining when the statute will begin to run, the hiring will be regarded as from year to year." Citing Beach v. Mullin, 34 N. J. Law, 343; Davis v. Gorton, 16 N. Y. 255, 69 Am. Dec. 694. But as the remarks of the learned judge following the above quotation are peculiarly pertinent to the case here, we may with propriety quote them also. He says (49 N. J. Law, 283, 8 Atl. 304): "The jury have found that there was an understanding between the plaintiff and the deceased that she should remain in charge of his household during his life, without any claim or demand for services, and at his death, if she survived him, she should be compensated liberally for her services, either by will or by a charge against his estate. The verdict can only be sustained upon such finding. The facts are very close on this point. It is not entirely clear that if she had left before the death of the intestate an action for services rendered would have been suspended until his death upon any express agreement between them. The result seems to have been reached by the jury from the peculiar circumstances of the dealing between the parties and their confidential relation, showing that there was such an understanding, by which the plaintiff and the decedent were bound, and his distinct statement that she should be well paid at his death, and similar expressions testified to by witnesses."

As in the New Jersey case, so in this, the point, on the statute of limitations, is close. If we overrule the lower court and give plaintiff a decree here for the full amount of his claim we must find that the contract for services, which was fully proven, and as to which there was no evidence to the contrary, also includes a contract or understanding for postponement of payment till death, or provision made for same in decedent's will. Can we reach this conclusion from the evidence? There is little, if any, evidence of an express contract to postpone payment until the death of the promisor, or to provide for plaintiff in his will, so as to suspend the running of the statute. The plaintiff, whose evidence, being objected to, we cannot consider, swears that he had a contract with his father for sixty cents a day, and that he worked seventeen years for him "at sixty cents a day by the year," making $2,938.40, subject to credits $154.20; that he had been paid each year on the account small amounts, out of which he had provided his clothing. He was then asked: "Q. What did your father ever tell you about paying you? A. He said he had fixed in his will for me to get my money. That is what he told me, he made a provision in his will." A disinterested witness, Adolphus Evans, swore that the testator stated to him that he had plaintiff to stay with him at fifty or sixty cents a day, that plaintiff was a good boy and that he would keep him with him while he lived, that testator had made it appear to him as near as he could come at it that he had made provision for plaintiff in his will, and intended to keep him on the place there with him. Witness said this conversation took place when he tried to buy the timber on the testator's land, and who declined to sell, giving as a reason that he had arranged things. W. A. Rodeheaver, another disinterested witness, who tried in 1907, to purchase a part of decedent's land, swears, that testator declined to sell, giving as a reason, "John has got my money and he pays the taxes on the land, keeps them paid up, and he says I don't owe very much, except Willie (meaning plaintiff) and he says I have made provision for him, but he didn't say what provision or anything of the kind; didn't talk any more about it." Rachel Sheets, a sister of plaintiff, says, with reference to the alleged contract: "I sat right by father when he hired him; he said he would give him sixty cents a day the year through, wet and dry, and provide some of his clothes if he needed them." "Q. And how about board? A. Board went in too, he said." On cross-examination: "Q. You don't mean to say he undertook to board him, furnish clothes and pay him sixty cents? A. Yes, sir, that is what he said; he said he could have some clothes out of the trade. Q. As a matter of fact, he has had all the clothes he needed from the farm, or from your father's property, has he not? A. I suppose so." This witness also swears that for five or six years intervening between the date of the alleged contract and her father's death, plaintiff was an invalid from a sunstroke, and sore finger, during which time her father was cared for by her mother, her brother Lee and plaintiff, but that the latter earned his board and that they could not have gotten along without him. No claim is made by plaintiff for compensation during these five years. Mrs. Nose, another sister, after referring to services rendered by plaintiff, his work on the farm, and his labor in caring for the old people day and night testified: "Q. What did your father ever say about paying Will for his services? A. He said he provided for him in the will; and he said it would be good when he was gone; it would all come in a lump together. Q. Did your father ever tell you what he was to pay Will for his services? A. Yes, sir, time and time again; he was to give him sixty cents a day and clothing," and that he was to have his board. Mrs. Hose, another sister, after proving the declarations of her father that he had hired plaintiff at sixty cents per day, testified: "Q. Do you know whether or not your father paid Will for his services? A. He didn't pay him very much; he said he couldn't; he had his taxes and things to raise, he couldn't pay these other men. Q. Did you ever hear him say how much he was to provide for Will? A. He told me, after he was sick two or three years, he told me had made a will; I went up to wash for him during this time the will should have been made; I went up on Tuesday, he made it along through the week, and he told me he made a will and I says to him, 'You did?' and he says, 'Yes, I have made a will, for I am paralyzed, and I provided for William G. Hotsinpillar in my will, for I owe him,' and he said he wanted us children to see Will was paid. Then on Thursday before he died, he died on Sunday he called me to the bed and told me as near what he owed, who all he owed, and he wanted them paid to the half cent, and he said he provided in his will for his debts to be paid; and he wanted William G. Hotsinpillar paid, and if there was anything left he wanted me to have equal with the boys. Q. That was on Tuesday before he died? A. Yes, sir, that was Sunday night."

The contract for sixty cents per day is fully proven. Indeed this seems to be conceded. No proof was offered to the contrary. But how about the contract to postpone payment, or to provide therefor in testator's will? Unless we can find from the evidence, the situation of the parties at the time of the contract, and afterwards, and the declarations of the old man respecting provisions to be made for plaintiff, that the parties regarded the employment for a continuous service, to be paid for at the death of decedent, or that he was to specifically provide for such payment by testatorial devise, the statute would run against the debt, and the decree below would have to stand. As noted we can not consider plaintiff's evidence. If we could he does not distinctly state that it was a part of the contract, that payment was to be postponed, or provided for by will. He does say, that, subsequently, his father told him that he had provided for payment in his will. The will, however, shows no specific provision therefor. A general provision is made for payment of all the testator's debts, as follows: "I direct that all my just debts be paid as soon after my decease as conveniently may be, and to that end charge my whole estate, real and personal, with the same." The will was made in 1897; testator survived until 1909, more than ten years thereafter. After making small money bequests to his daughters he provided that the rest of his estate, real and personal, should be divided equally between his four sons, George, John, William (the plaintiff), and Samuel.

We do not think the evidence clearly proves a contract for provision by will, such as could be specifically enforced against decedent's estate. But does not the evidence prove a contract for continuous service and a mutual understanding between the parties that payment was not to be made until testator's death, and that no action would accrue to plaintiff until that time? Testator had little money, not sufficient to pay all his taxes, as the evidence shows. He had no source of income except what was produced from his farm, mainly by the labors of plaintiff, which at times had to be divided between the farm and the care and nursing of his father and mother. If plaintiff had sued before his father's death would not a good defense have been an understanding or agreement to postpone payment until that time? We think the evidence would have sustained that defense. From the whole record it is quite evident, we think, that the parties did not contemplate payment before the death of testator. His financial condition made that impossible. This is manifest from the numerous declarations of deceased in his life time. Nothing of consequence was paid. Only small sums, about sufficient to clothe plaintiff, was ever paid. We think, therefore, we must find from the evidence, that there was a mutual understanding between the parties that plaintiff was to labor on, under the contract, and wait for his pay until his father's death, and thereafter look to his estate, under some general or special provision to be made in his will. If this was the understanding or agreement, under which plaintiff worked for twenty years, or thereabouts, and devoted himself to the care and keeping of his old parents, while his brothers and sisters married and went away in other pursuits, we think the cause of action did not, under the authorities cited, accrue until the death of his father, and that the statute of limitations should not be applied. The decree below, therefore, will be modified so as to give plaintiff the full amount of his claim, and when so modified it will be affirmed.

STATE v. REED et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 14, 1913. Rehearing Denied
Nov. 14, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 186*)—SUIT FOR SALE OF FORFEITED SCHOOL LANDS—DECREE.

Though a decree of dismissal in a suit for the sale of lands as forfeited, for the benefit of the school fund, recites that it is entered on motion and by the consent of the commissioner of school lands and the attorney prosecuting the cause, yet if it is based on a report of the commissioner of school lands pursuant to the latter provision of Code 1906, ch. 105, sec. 6, and actually dismisses lands from the cause, it is not a mere retraxit but an adjudication.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. § 599; Dec. Dig. § 186.*]

2. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 186*)—SUIT FOR SALE OF FORFEITED SCHOOL LANDS—REPORT OF COMMISSIONER.

When a new county is formed from the territory of a county in which a suit for the sale of forfeited lands has been instituted, the commissioner of school lands of the new county may make the report in the suit which is contemplated by the latter provision of Code 1906, ch. 105, sec. 6.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. § 599; Dec. Dig. § 186.*]

3. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 186*)—SUIT FOR SALE OF FORFEITED SCHOOL LANDS—REPORT OF COMMISSIONER—HEARING—DELAY—GROUNDS.

A hearing of the matters raised by the report of the commissioner of school lands, pursuant to Code 1906, ch. 105, sec. 6, will not be delayed to enable a formal party to the cause, claiming the right to redeem, to contest the same, when the matters are the same as those already raised by the bill and as to which he has had ample time to present his case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. § 599; Dec. Dig. § 186.*]

4. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 186*)—SUIT FOR SALE OF FORFEITED SCHOOL LANDS—DISMISSAL.

When it appears by a report of the commissioner of school lands that the forfeited title to tracts involved in a suit for the sale of forfeited lands has been granted by the State to another and that there has been no subsequent forfeiture of the same, the suit may properly be dismissed as to such tracts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. § 599; Dec. Dig. § 186.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Marion County.

Action by the State against John R. Reed, trustee, and others. From the decree, J. K. Anderson, trustee, appeals. Affirmed.

Malcolm Jackson, of Charleston, Edward C. Lyon, of New York City, John W. Mason, Jr., of Fairmont, and Campbell, Brown & Davis, of Huntington, for appellant. Stokes & Bronson, of Williamson, and Holt & Duncan, of Huntington, for the State.

ROBINSON, J. The decree of dismissal complained of was entered in an old suit for the sale of forfeited lands, begun in the circuit court of Logan County in the year 1893, and later transferred to the circuit court of Marion County. The suit originally involved the William McCleary grant of 100,000 acres, the greater part of which was in the county of Logan as the territory of that county existed at the time the suit was instituted. In 1895, Mingo county was formed from the bounds of Logan. A part of the grant involved was thus thrown into Mingo.

In 1908, amended bills were filed in the name of the State, specifying two particular tracts of the original survey, lying on Sycamore Creek, in Mingo, as remaining forfeited and unsold for the benefit of the school fund. These amended bills brought in the claimants of the two tracts and prayed that the land be proceeded against pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided. In them, it was averred that the commissioner of school lands of Mingo County had reported the two tracts to the circuit court of Mingo County, that a proceeding for their sale under the statute had thereupon been begun in that court, but that the same had been dismissed when it was found that the grant to which the two tracts belonged was already involved in the suit pending in Marion County.

No appearance was made to the amended bills by any claimant of the two tracts until March, 1911, when J. K. Anderson, Trustee, appellant herein, appeared and tendered his answer claiming title thereto in succession to McCleary, admitting the alleged forfeiture, and praying that he be permitted to redeem. The commissioner of school lands of Mingo County filed a report in the cause, setting forth that upon investigation by him it had been ascertained that the two tracts specifically proceeded against by the amended bills were not subject to sale as forfeited land, but were rightfully the property of the heirs of one Lawson, by virtue of a grant from the State for one tract and a deed of a commissioner of school lands for the other, and the regular payment of taxes on both. With this report, the grant and the deed through which the heirs of Lawson had taken the State's title to the land were exhibited. In view of the matters found and reported, the commissioner of school lands of Mingo County asked that the suit be dismissed as to the two tracts of land.

The court refused to continue the cause on motion of Anderson, Trustee, but heard the same upon his answer, the report of the commissioner of school lands, and the other papers and orders properly in the cause, and entered a decree dismissing the suit as to the two tracts of land. From that decree Anderson, Trustee, has appealed.

[1] It appears from the decree that the same was entered on the motion and by the consent of the commissioner of school lands of Mingo County and the attorney prosecuting the amended bills. Appellant submits that the decree shows that the dismissal was a mere retraxit of the suit which could not be made over his objection and to the deprivation of the right to redeem opened to him by the instituting of the suit. But we hold that the decree is in such terms that it speaks an adjudication pursuant to the latter provision of Code 1906, ch. 105, sec. 6. For the sake of clearness we recite that provision: "And if at any time during the pendency of any suit for the sale of school lands, whether now pending or hereafter brought, the commissioner of school lands of the county where such suit was or may be instituted shall become satisfied that part or the whole of the lands sought to be sold therein is not liable to sale for the benefit of the school fund, such commissioner shall report in writing to the court the facts and reasons which lead him to that conclusion, which report shall be filed and made part of the record; and if the court upon consideration thereof, and upon such other inquiry as it may be advised to make, shall concur in such report, in whole or in part, it shall confirm the same to that extent and shall dismiss such suit as to the lands embraced in such report as far as it may be confirmed."

[2] That the commissioner of school lands of Mingo County was the proper officer to make such report as that mentioned in this statute we have no doubt. True he was not the commissioner of school lands of the county so nomine in which the suit was instituted. But his county, Mingo, had been taken from the county in which the suit was instituted, Logan. The formation of the new county gave him jurisdiction over proceedings for the sale of all forfeited lands therein. It substituted him, as to this very suit, then already begun, for the commissioner of school lands of the county in which the suit was instituted, as far as lands involved therein situated in the new county were concerned. Indeed, in a sense the suit was instituted in his county, for it was instituted when Logan and Mingo were one and the same. The division of the county divided the duties and acts to be done under the statute in a suit already begun between the official of the old and the official of the new county, each taking jurisdiction over the forfeited lands within the territory of his county.

[3] Did the court err in refusing appellant time to meet the matters contained in the report on which the dismissal was made? Appellant was a purchaser of the land pendente lite. He and those under whom he held had years in which to ask redemption in this very suit. When he purchased, the record told him that the title which he was taking had been forfeited, and the examination which he was bound to make under the law in that regard directed him to this suit in which the land was involved for sale for the benefit of the school fund. But he and his predecessors did nothing until after the amended bills were filed. Even then, though a formally summoned party, though the amended bills set up the claim of the Lawson heirs to the land and brought him in to answer as against the same, he took no steps in the cause for more than two years to vindicate the right to redeem which he claims as against the Lawson heirs and all others. When appellant filed his answer it was a delayed one. The court was not bound to grant him a continuance to make out a case, since he showed no grounds for a continuance by affidavit. The statute makes this rule applicable to ordinary chancery causes also applicable here. Code 1906, ch. 105, sec. 7. Appellant was in default and entitled to no further time without purging himself of the delay. The rule is just as pertinent for a wholesome administration in this class of cases as in any other. It can not rightly be said that appellant was taken by surprise by the report of the commissioner of school lands and the request of the State to dismiss and therefore was entitled to time in which to meet these matters. Long before, by the amended bills, he had been summoned to meet the very same claim which was reported by the commissioner of school lands as warranting a dismissal—the claim of title by the Lawson heirs. Yet he sought delay solely for the purpose of proving only that which the amended bills called upon him to prove—the superiority of his claim of right to redeem over the claim of title by the Lawson heirs. He asked delay to present proof which he had already been given more than two years to present. If he had promptly filed his answer and put in proof of a right to redeem as against the Lawson heirs, as the bills called upon him to do, the filing of the report and the asking of the dismissal could in nowise have affected his interests. He was bound to take cognizance that the statute allowed a report to be filed and a dismissal asked at any time and to be prepared for the same by having diligently made out his claim that he was entitled to redeem as against the State and all other claimants of the land. Of course if the matter presented by the report had been of a claim which the bills had not called him to answer, there might have been ground for a request for time to meet the same. But such was not the case. Under the status of the cause when it was submitted by the State in prosecuting it, appellant was entitled to no further time and the court could take the cause for decision.

[4] Plainly the record of the cause supports the decree. As submitted the record fully proved that the forfeited title which appellant claimed the right to redeem had been sold by the State to others upon the forfeiture which appellant himself admitted and from which he asked to redeem. The record was plainly against him as to all that was raised by the bills and asked by his answer. It showed that the forfeited title which he asked to redeem had been sold by the State long years before his asking the redemption, and that there had been no subsequent forfeiture of the title thus passed. State v. King, 64 W. Va. 610, syl. 2, 63 S. E. 495. The decree was a proper one to make. It will be affirmed.

LYNCH, J., absent.

GUY v. LANARK FUEL CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 30, 1913. Rehearing Denied
Nov. 14, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 92*)—LIABILITY TO SERVANT—MEDICAL ATTENDANCE—NEG-LIGENCE.

A master who employs a physician to treat his employes, and collects small monthly fees from their wages, all of which he turns over to the physician as his compensation, is not liable for the physician's malpractice, unless he was negligent in selecting or retaining him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 148; Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 92*)—LIABILITY TO SERVANT—MEDICAL ATTENDANCE—NEG-LIGENCE.

Having selected a competent physician, the master may rely upon the presumption that his competency will continue until notice of a change.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 148; Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 270*)—LIABILITY TO SERVANT—MEDICAL ATTENDANCE.

Evidence of the physician's general reputation for drunkenness in the community in which he practices is admissible as tending to prove that the master knew, or by proper diligence should have known, of it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 918-927, 932; Dec. Dig. § 270.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 92*)—LIABILITY TO SERVANT—MEDICAL ATTENDANCE.

To constitute constructive notice, the reputation must be so general and notorious that ignorance of it shows neglect of the master's duty. Reputation confined to a small number of the master's employes is not sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 148; Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 92*)—LIABILITY TO SERVANT—MEDICAL ATTENDANCE—NOTICE OF INCOMPETENCY.

Where the reasons which are relied upon to charge the master with knowledge of the physician's reputation apply with equal force to show knowledge by the servant also, the negligence of the latter in not complaining is as great as that of the former in retaining the physician.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 148; Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Raleigh County.

Action by Annie L. Guy against the Lanark Fuel Company. Verdict for plaintiff, and, from an order granting a new trial, plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Sanders & Crockett, of Bluefield, and M. F. Matheny, of Charleston, for plaintiff in error. Price, Smith, Spilman & Clay, of Charleston, and McGinnis & Hatcher, of Beckley, for defendant in error.

WILLIAMS, J. Plaintiff recovered a verdict for $12,500 damages against defendant in an action of trespass on the case for a personal injury, alleged to have been caused by the malpractice of Dr. A. B. Nelson, who was employed by defendant company to treat its employes and their families. The court sustained defendant's motion to set aside the verdict, and granted it a new trial, and plaintiff was awarded this writ of error to that order of the court. Her counsel urge that it was error to set aside the verdict.

Defendant is engaged in mining coal, and employs a large number of miners. It employed Dr. Nelson to treat, professionally, its employes and members of their families. In consideration of the physician's services, each married employe was required to pay a monthly fee of $1, and each unmarried one a fee of 75 cents. The fees were deducted from the wages earned, and the money turned over to the doctor. The company retained no part of it, nor is there any evidence that it profited by the physician's services. Plaintiff, the wife of Benjamin M. Guy, who is one of defendant's employée, became ill on October 15, 1910, and Dr. Nelson was summoned in. She was then suffering great pain. Both she and her husband testify that they told the doctor that she had not menstruated for two or three months, and had then begun to menstruate, and Mrs. Guy says she told him that such a thing had never occurred in her life before; that she had always been strong and healthy, and regular in her periodical sickness, and that she feared she was going to have an abortion. The doctor did nothing but take her temperature, and give her a few white tablets, and told her she would be all right in the morning. This visit was made between 7 and 9 o'clock in the evening. He returned the next day about 12 o'clock, and did nothing but repeat the performance of the previous evening. He came to see her the third day. Plaintiff says she was then very much worse, and told him that she feared she was going to die. He made no examination of her person, and pronounced her temperature normal. She and her husband both testify that on the third visit the doctor was drunk. The next day her husband called in Dr. Hume, who made a digital examination, and discovered that she was suffering from an abortion. Dr. Hume says he found that there was some infection, necessitating an operation. He gave her some medicine to relieve her pain, and on the next day returned, and curetted the uterus, and found portions of an afterbirth; he also discovered that septic poison had set in, caused, he says, by the retention of portions of the afterbirth. He testifies that curetting is the usual practice in such case, and gives it as his opinion that, if this had been done sooner, it was strongly probable that infection and septicæmia would not have followed. He also says that it was the duty of a physician, having the history of the case, to make a digital examination. Dr. Hume treated her for about a week; but she continued to grow worse on account of the infection, which extended from the uterus up into the fallopian tubes, and involved the ovaries to such an extent that she had to be taken to a hospital, and have them removed. Her physical suffering and mental anguish were very great. She remained in the hospital over five weeks. She was then 37 years old, had been married 15 years, and was the mother of five children.

Counsel for defendant practically admit that the evidence is sufficient to warrant the jury in concluding that plaintiff's injury resulted from the neglect or malpractice of Dr. Nelson, due to his drunken condition; but they insist that the evidence fails to prove negligence on the part of defendant, that the jury were not justified in finding against it, and that the court properly set aside the verdict.

[1] To entitle plaintiff to recover, it is necessary to prove two things: (1) That the malpractice of Dr. Nelson was the proximate cause of her injury; and (2) that defendant was negligent in selecting or in retaining him. Defendant was under no legal obligation to provide a physician and surgeon for its employée; but, having assumed to do so, it was bound to exercise reasonable care to select a competent and skillful one. Neil v. Flynn Lumber Co., 77 S. E. 324; Big Stone Gap Iron Co. v. Ketron, 102 Va. 23, 45 S. E. 740, 102 Am. St. Rep. 839; Secord v. St. Paul, etc., Ry. Co. (C. C.) 18 Fed. 221; Laubheim v. De K. N. S. Co., 107 N. Y. 228, 13 N. E. 781, 1 Am. St. Rep. 815; and Dye v. Corbin, 59 W. Va. 266, 53 S. E. 147. It was not bound to select a physician possessing the highest degree of competency and skill, but only the average skill of physicians in the locality in which he was to practice. Lawson v. Conaway, 37 W. Va. 159, 16 S. E. 564, 18 L. R. A. 627, 38 Am. St. Rep. 17, and Neil v. Flynn Lumber Co., supra.

"Where the hospital is maintained by a master for the sole purpose of relieving injured servants, without any intention of profit to himself, he is not liable to his servants for the malpractice of the physician employed, if ordinary care was exercised in selecting him, although the hospital is supported by the contributions of the servants." 26 Cyc. 1082; 5 Labatt (2d Ed.) § 2005; Richardson v. Carbon Hill Coal Co., 10 Wash. 648, 39 Pac. 95; and Quinn v. Kansas City, etc., Co., 94 Tenn. 713, 30 S. W. 1036, 28 L. R. A. 552, 45 Am. St. Rep. 767. To the same effect as above is Neil v. Flynn Lumber Co., supra.

[2] Did defendant exercise reasonable care in the selection and retention of Dr. Nelson? If it did, then it is not liable for his malpractice; otherwise it is liable. The record discloses no proof whatever that Dr. Nelson was not, at the time of his employment, generally competent. On the contrary, it is proven that he had graduated at a reputable medical college, had successfully passed an examination by the state medical board of this state, had had some experience in actual practice, and was recommended for employment to defendant's superintendent by another reputable physician. But the contention is that after his employment he became so much addicted to the excessive use of intoxicants as to render himself careless and incompetent, and that he had acquired so general and notorious a reputation for drunkenness in the community that defendant either must have had actual knowledge of it, or was negligent in not obtaining such knowledge.

No more rigid rule is applicable in case of the employment of a physician to treat its servants than is applicable in the case of employment of fellow servants, and it is well settled in such cases that the master's duty is not wholly discharged by the exercise of proper care in their selection in the first instance. He is bound to keep himself advised as to their continued fitness, so far as it can be accomplished by proper supervision and superintendence. 3 Labatt (2d Ed.) §

1098; Cooney v. Commonwealth, etc., B. R. Co., 196 Mass. 11, 81 N. E. 905; B. & O. R. Co. v. Henthorne, 73 Fed. 634, 17 C. C. A. 623; Ohio & Miss. Ry. Co. v. Collarn, 73 Ind. 261, 38 Am. Rep. 134; N. & W. B. R. Co. v. Nuckols, 91 Va. 193, 21 S. E. 342. But the same degree of care to keep himself informed of the continued fitness of his servants is not required of the master as in case of their employment, or as is required in keeping machinery and appliances, which are known to deteriorate with use, in proper repair. On the contrary, "when suitable and competent persons have been employed, good character and proper qualifications may be presumed to continue, and the master may rely on that presumption until notice of a change." 3 Labatt (2d Ed.) § 1098; Southern P. Co. v. Hetzer, 135 Fed. 272, 68 C. C. A. 26, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 288; Blake v. Maine, etc., R. R. Co., 70 Me. 60, 35 Am. Rep. 297; Lake Shore, etc., Ry. Co. v. Stupak, 123 Ind. 210, 23 N. E. 246; Mich. Cent. R. R. v. Gilbert, 46 Mich. 176, 9 N. W. 243.

[3] A corporation acts by, and obtains knowledge through, its officers and agents, and knowledge acquired by them is generally attributed to it. But there is no evidence that any of defendant's officers had actual knowledge of Dr. Nelson's drunken habits. On the contrary, it is proven by Mr. L. E. Yoder, defendant's chief engineer and superintendent, who employed the doctor, and by Mr. John Porter, his successor in office, who was in charge of the mine at the time plaintiff's injury occurred, that they had not heard of Dr. Nelson's drinking, and knew nothing of it, prior to October 15, 1910, the time of plaintiff's sickness, notwithstanding they say they made inquiry frequently, when at Lanark, to find out if there were any complaints against him. Moreover, Mr. Porter says plaintiff's husband was the first one who thereafter informed him of his drinking. This testimony is not contradicted, and it proves that defendant did not have actual knowledge of the doctor's incompetency. But it seems to be well settled that the general reputation of an employé for drunkenness or habitual carelessness in the community in which he is employed is admissible as tending to prove that the master had actual knowledge thereof, and that he should have been thereby put upon inquiry to ascertain if that reputation was well founded. B. & O. R. R. Co. v. Henthorne, 73 Fed. 634, 17 C. C. A. 623; Wabash R. R. Co. v. Kelley, 153 Ind. 119, 52 N. E. 152, 54 N. E. 752; Driscoll v. City of Fall River, 163 Mass. 105, 89 N. E. 1003; Gilman v. Eastern R. R. Co., 13 Allen (Mass.) 493, 90 Am. Dec. 210; Davis v. Railway Co., 20 Mich. 105, 4 Am. Rep. 364; Western Stone Co. v. Whalen, 151 Ill. 472, 38 N. E. 241, 42 Am. St. Rep. 244; Hilts v. Chicago, etc., Ry., 55 Mich. 437, 21 N. W. 378; 1 Wigmore on Evidence, § 249. In Wabash R. R. Co. v. Kelley, supra, it was held that: "The reasonable diligence which a railroad company must use in carrying out its agreement to care for its injured and sick employes includes the duty to discharge a surgeon in chief who had become incompetent from the use of intoxicants and narcotics, which was notorious in the community, so that the supervising officials of the company must have, or at least ought to have, known it." Judge Cooley, in Davis v. Detroit, etc., R. R. Co., 20 Mich. 124, 4 Am. Rep. 364, says: "The ignorance itself is negligence in a case in which any proper inquiry would have obtained the necessary information, and where the duty to inquire was plainly imperative." But can we say that it was the duty of defendant to make inquiry of persons in the neighborhood to ascertain if Dr. Nelson had continued to remain a sober man, before it had received any intimation that he was drinking? Such a course would be unusual indeed, and we do not think the rules of law lay upon defendant any such requirement. For, having ascertained that the doctor was competent at the time it employed him, defendant had a right to presume he would continue so. It was reasonable to suppose that his professional skill would improve with practice, and the law does not recognize such general depravity in mankind as to exact of an employer ceaseless vigilance to guard against its consequences.

Does the testimony prove that the doctor's reputation for drunkenness in the community in which he was practicing was so general as to establish negligence in defendant not to know of it? We think not. Certainly not, when its officers and managers in charge of its works at Lanark, where the doctor lived and practiced, testify that they never heard of his drinking. Nearly all the witnesses examined on this question were, or had been, employes of defendant, and lived at or near its mine. Five or six of plaintiff's witnesses testified to having seen the doctor in a state of intoxication; sometimes two or more of them being witnesses to the same occasion. This testimony was admissible for the purpose of proving the doctor's incompetency, as there is also evidence tending to prove that he failed to give plaintiff proper treatment at the time he was called to see her because of his then drunken condition. But it was not admissible for the purpose of proving his general reputation. 1 Wigmore on Evidence, § 250.

[4] On the other hand, quite as many witnesses, including Ben Guy, plaintiff's husband, testified for defendant that they never heard his reputation for drunkenness or sobriety discussed prior to October 15, 1910. In Driscoll v. Fall River, 163 Mass. 105, the court, in discussing the effect of evidence as to the general reputation of one of its employes as affecting the master with notice of his careless habits, says: "The reputation of a foreman amongst a few workmen employed under him is not a general reputation. It is merely the opinion of a small number of men, of which there is no sufficient reason to suppose the master may be cognizant, or which he may be bound to heed." See, also, the opinion of Judge Cooley, of same purport, in Davis v. Detroit, etc., 8 R. R. Co., 20 Mich. 123, 4 Am. Rep. 364; 3 Labatt on Master and Servant (2d Ed.) § 1105; and Walkowski v. Penokee, etc., Mines, 115 Mich. 629, 73 N. W. 895, 41 L. R. A. 33.

R. E. Peters, D. W. Anderson, Ben Carey, Henry Thomas, and Spencer Thompson testified that they were acquainted with the doctor's reputation in the community, and that he had the reputation of being a drunkard. But on cross-examination none of them could give the names of more than one or two persons whom they had heard speak of the matter, and generally, when a name was mentioned, it proved to be some one of the other witnesses. Moreover, most of the witnesses were unable to say whether they had heard it mentioned before, or after, the time of plaintiff's injury. Such testimony is too uncertain and indefinite to support a verdict depending on proof of general reputation as matter of notice. It shows that the reputation is limited, and not general. It does not arise to the dignity of proof of a general reputation. Nor does it prove that the limited reputation for drunkenness was not acquired after October 15, 1910, the time of plaintiff's injury. Shortly after that time the doctor was taken to a sanitarium, and it is admitted that he then acquired a very general reputation for drunkenness. But defendant was not affected by a reputation thereafter acquired.

[5] But there is another reason why we think the court did not err in setting aside the verdict, and that is this, the evidence by which plaintiff seeks to show defendant's negligence applies with equal force to prove her own negligence, or that of her husband, which is the same thing, for he acted as her agent in calling in the physician. Ben Guy's opportunities to know Dr. Nelson's general reputation for drunkenness, if he had such reputation, was equally as good as, if not better than, that of defendant's managers. He lived in the same community with the doctor; they did not. He saw him frequently, and had on previous occasions called him in to treat members of his family. In Davis v. Detroit, etc., 8 R. R. Co., supra, which was an action by defendant's "head yardman" to recover damages for an injury received through the carelessness of one of its engineers, plaintiff and the engineer were fellow servants, and the principle on which he sought to make defendant liable was its negligence in retaining a careless and incompetent fellow servant. The only evidence in that case to show that defendant knew or should have known of the engineer's careless habits was the testimony of a few witnesses as to his reputation in that regard. Judge Cooley, in discussing the effect of such evidence upon plaintiff at page 125, says: "It cannot be claimed that the officers of the company were chargeable with constructive notice of the unfitness of Harris, and the plaintiff not. The same facts which it is claimed they ought to have heard about must have transpired in his immediate presence, or at least within the limited space within which he was constantly employed, and in view of those with whom he was constantly associated. All the reasons which charge the officers with knowledge apply with more force to a person situated as he was, in a position intermediate the persons who would be likely to complain and the officers. The probability that he was fully informed is greater than that they were, and, if they were guilty of negligence in not discharging Harris, we think the plaintiff was guilty of at least equal negligence in not complaining of him."

We do not mean to say that the duty rests upon the servant, as it does upon the master, to acquaint himself in regard to the competency of a fellow servant with whom he is working; but what we do say is that, having knowledge of such incompetency, it is the servant's duty to bring it to the attention of his master, else he will be held to have assumed the risk. And in the present case the only evidence of knowledge is the testimony of certain witnesses as to reputation, and it is just as reasonable to suppose that Ben Guy had notice of it as that defendant had. Like a two-edged sword, the evidence cuts both ways. See, also, 4 Thompson on Negligence, §§ 4895, 4896.

For the reasons herein given, we affirm the judgment of the lower court, and remand the case for further proceedings.

HINDMAN v. RAPER.

[Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1913.
Rehearing Denied Nov. 18, 1913.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 216*)—PROCEEDINGS TO DISPOSSESS—RECOVERY OF DOUBLE RENT.

Where one claiming to be a landlord made an affidavit, and procured the issuance of a warrant to dispossess another as a tenant who failed to pay his rent when due, and who refused to deliver possession, and the defendant interposed a counter affidavit, denying that he held the premises under the plaintiff or any one from whom the plaintiff claimed title, and where upon the trial the plaintiff testified to having made a demand for possession, but did not specify the date thereof, and the defendant denied the making of such demand, it was error to direct a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the premises, with double rent for the year in which the trial took place and for several preceding years, including two years before the commencement of the proceeding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 861-865; Dec. Dig. § 216.*]

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; John W. Maddox, Judge.

Action by Lewis Raper against George Hindman. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

On March 30, 1910, Raper made an affidavit to obtain a warrant to dispossess Hindman, alleging that one Raines had rented the land to Hindman for the year 1907 for the sum of $30; that Raines conveyed the land to the plaintiff, who is the owner thereof; that Hindman had "failed to pay rent when due, or any part of rent for that year or since, and deponent desires possession of the same from the said George Hindman; and that said George Hindman neglects, omits, and refuses to give possession of the said premises and tract of land described above to affiant." Hindman filed a counter affidavit, alleging that "he is not holding possession over and beyond his term; that he does not hold the premises from the said Lewis Raper or from any one [under] whom the said Lewis Raper claims, either as alleged in said affidavit, or otherwise." The plaintiff amended his affidavit by alleging as follows: Plaintiff bought the land from Raines on November 23, 1907. Prior to the purchase Raines rented the property to Hindman for the year 1907 for the sum of $30. On November 25, 1907, Raines swore out a distress warrant against the defendant for the rent of the premises for that year. On February 14, 1910, judgment was rendered in the justice's court in favor of Raines. Hindman appealed to a jury in that court, and on March 12, 1910, a verdict was rendered in favor of Raines. This was an adjudication that Hindman was the tenant of Raines, who was the predecessor in title of the plaintiff, and the defendant is estopped from denying that he is the tenant of plaintiff. On the trial, at the close of the evidence, the court directed a verdict for the plaintiff for the premises in dispute, and for double rent for the years 1908, 1909, 1910, 1911, and 1912, amounting to $300. The defendant excepted.

M. B. Eubanks, of Rome, for plaintiff in error. Harris & Harris, of Rome, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts as above). Raines conveyed the land to Raper during the term of the tenancy of Hindman. In Raines v. Hindman, 136 Ga. 450, 71 S. E. 738, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 863, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 347, it was held that Raines could not evict the tenant after the expiration of the term, on the ground that the latter was a tenant holding over beyond his term, or on the ground of nonpayment of rent. In the opinion it was said that "Raper had the right, after 1907, to dispossess the defendant as a tenant holding over upon the failure of the latter to deliver possession to him." Acting under this, Raper made an affidavit, and obtained the issuance of a dispossessionary warrant. Raines proceeded by distress warrant to recover the rent for 1907, and obtained a judgment therefor. This adjudicated the existence of the relation of landlord and tenant between him and Hindman in that year. The conveyance made from Raines to Raper during the term made the latter the landlord. The direction of the verdict was, however, erroneous. It included double rent for the years 1908 to 1912, inclusive. Two of these years antedated the commencement of the present proceeding. Raper testified that he demanded possession from the defendant; but he did not know the date of the demand. Hindman denied that Raper ever spoke to him about vacating the premises or about rent, or gave him any notice to vacate. A proceeding of this character cannot be used as a means of recovering back rent accruing before any demand for possession. Talley v. Mitchell, 138 Ga. 392, 75 S. E. 465. Under the conflicting evidence in regard to the demand, it was error to direct a verdict.

A demand for possession made by Raines after he had conveyed the property to Raper would not authorize the latter to recover possession with double rent. The judgment against Raines on the dispossessionary warrant sued out by him adjudicated the fact that he was not entitled to recover possession, because he was not the landlord when he commenced the proceeding; but it did not adjudicate that he never had been such.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

ATLANTIC COAST LINE RY. CO. v.
COLLINS. (No. 5,004.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 31, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 320*)—HEARSAY—EXCLUSION.
Where a witness testifies to certain facts upon his direct examination, but upon cross-examination shows that he has answered from hearsay and without any personal knowledge of the facts about which he has testified, his testimony should, as hearsay, be excluded from consideration, for the reason that hearsay evidence is without probative value.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1201; Dec. Dig. § 320.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 134*)—FAILURE TO DELIVER FREIGHT—EVIDENCE.

Upon cross-examination the plaintiff, by his testimony, demonstrated that his knowledge of the loss of the six sacks of fertilizer was wholly dependent upon hearsay; and, the testimony of those witnesses who would have known of the failure of the carrier to deliver (if there was a failure in this respect) not being introduced, the judgment in favor of the plaintiff in the justice's court was not warranted by the evidence, and the certiorari should have been sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 588-592, 607; Dec. Dig. § 134.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1078*)—BRIEF—ABANDONMENT OF OBJECTIONS.

The questions raised by the demurrers, not being argued in the briefs, must be treated as having been abandoned.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4256-4261; Dec. Dig. § 1078.*]

Error from Superior Court, Mitchell County; Frank Park, Judge.

Action by G. D. Collins against the Atlantic Coast Line Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff. From denial of certiorari, defendant brings error. Reversed.

Pope & Bennet, of Albany, and Spence & Bennet, of Camilla, for plaintiff in error.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment reversed.

LEATHERS v. RABURN. (No. 4,803.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 31, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 444*)—ACTION BY ADMINISTRATOR—PETITION—SUFFICIENCY.

Where suit is brought by a plaintiff in his individual capacity to recover damages for an alleged injury to property, the title to which is alleged to be in him, an amendment merely adding, after the name of the plaintiff, the words "as administrator of" a named person, is not sufficient to state a cause of action for the recovery of damages to property in the plaintiff as legal representative of the estate of that person, unless it is alleged, either in the original petition or in the amendment, that the title to the property was in the person named as decedent, and that that person is in fact dead and that the plaintiff has been duly appointed and qualified as administrator upon the decedent's estate. The petition as amended failed to set forth a cause of action in the plaintiff as the legal representative of the person named, and it was error to overrule a demurrer raising this objection. In view of this erroneous ruling, it is unnecessary to determine any of the questions raised by the plea in abatement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1813-1817, 1837-1841; Dec. Dig. § 444.*]

Error from City Court of Carrollton; Jas. Beall, Judge.

Action by H. O. Raburn against O. R. Leathers. Plaintiff amends, so as to sue as administrator. Judgment for plaintiff, as administrator, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Boykin & Boykin, of Carrollton, and John M. Moore, of Montezuma, for plaintiff in error. Newell & Fielder, of Carrollton, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment reversed.

AVERY & CO. v. POPE. (No. 4,728.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 31, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

ATTACHMENT (§ 2, 106*)—PLEADING (§ 199*)—AFFIDAVIT—"DUE"—PURCHASE MONEY.

The court erred in dismissing the attachment.

(a) In an affidavit made to obtain an attachment for purchase money, the statement that the defendant is indebted is equivalent to the word "due," employed in the statute. Civ. Code 1910, § 5056.

(b) The property sought to be attached was sufficiently described to enable the levying officer to identify it for the purpose of seizure. Furthermore, the defendant was precluded by the admissions of his answer from denying that the property was subject to the attachment; and the demurrer should have been filed at the appearance term, and came too late.

(c) The modes of procedure to be followed in attachments for purchase money do not differ from attachments based upon other grounds enumerated in section 5055 of the Civil Code of 1910.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Cent. Dig. §§ 5-7, 280-284; Dec. Dig. §§ 2, 106,* Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 464-469; Dec. Dig. § 199.*]

Error from City Court of Leesburg; H. G. Long, Judge.

Attachment proceedings by Avery & Co. against R. F. Pope. The attachment was dismissed, and plaintiffs bring error. Reversed.

J. B. Hoyl, of Leesburg, for plaintiffs in error. R. R. Forrester, of Leesburg, and Hollis Fort, of Americus, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment reversed.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO. v. BUNN

et al.

BUNN v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.

(Nos. 4,976, 4,977.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 31, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. BAILMENT (§ 31*)—ACTION FOR LOSS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

"In all cases of bailment, after proof of loss, the burden of proof is on the bailee to show proper diligence."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bailment, Cent. Dig. §§ 124-131; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 25*)—ARGUMENT—RIGHT TO OPEN AND CLOSE.

The admissions made by the answer as amended were sufficient, without more, to entitle the plaintiff to recover the damages sued for, and, the amendment having been filed before any evidence was introduced by the plaintiff, there was no error in allowing the defendant to open and conclude the argument to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 44-75; Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

3. BAILMENT (§ 31*)—ACTION FOR LOSS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The defendant failed to successfully carry the burden set up by his affirmative defense, and the verdict in his behalf is without any evidence to support it, and is therefore contrary to law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bailment, Cent. Dig. §§ 124-131; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

4. PLEADING (§ 243*)—AMENDMENT TO PETITION.

The judgment allowing the plaintiff to strike from his petition an allegation which was immaterial and not essential to his case, but was introduced merely by way of inducement, was not erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 643-651, 820-822; Dec. Dig. § 243.*]

Error from City Court of Waycross; W. C. Lankford, Judge.

Action by the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company against J. R. & T. Bunn. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error, and defendants file cross-bill of exceptions. Reversed on main bill, and affirmed on cross-bill.

The Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company brought suit in the city court of Waycross against J. R. & T. Bunn for $1,049.95 principal, with interest. It was alleged that the plaintiff was a railroad company operating a line of road through the county of Ware and the station of Fairfax therein; that the defendants were carriers for hire, and the plaintiff delivered to the defendants at their tramroad two freight cars in good order, giving the numbers; that these cars were delivered to the defendants for use on their tramroad, and they agreed to pay a per diem for the use of the cars; and that while these cars, with others, were being moved by the defendants over their tramroad and across a trestle spanning what was called "Seventeen-Mile creek," the bridge or trestle gave way, resulting in the destruction of the two cars. The amount sued for was the value of the cars, less the value of the trucks, which were saved, and a small amount for repairs made on the trucks, and a small sum for inspecting the cars and for freight covering the transportation of the cars from Fairfax to the respective railroads (stating them) to which the two cars belonged.

To this petition the defendants filed a general and special demurrer, which was overruled, and they filed an answer, practically denying all the allegations of the petition, or, for want of sufficient information, neither denying nor admitting the allegations. The defendants admitted that they were carriers for hire, and that they had agreed to pay 25 cents a day for all cars furnished on their tramway by the plaintiffs. Pending the trial, and before any evidence had been introduced, the defendants offered an amendment (which was allowed over objection), admitting that the plaintiff had delivered into their possession, custody, and control the cars described in the petition, and that they were damaged as alleged while in the possession of the defendants, and that the damages were the sums claimed by the plaintiff, and upon filing this amendment the trial judge granted to the defendants the right to open and conclude the argument. This amendment was allowed over the following objections: (a) That the amendment comes too late to entitle the defendants to the opening and concluding argument before the jury, because the plaintiff's counsel has already made his opening statement to the jury, although no evidence has yet been introduced by plaintiff. (b) That the admissions in the amendment are not sufficient to entitle defendants to the opening and concluding arguments, because the answer, as sought to be amended, does not admit the plaintiff's case as laid, and does not admit, among other things, that the cars involved were in good condition when received by the defendants from the plaintiff. The allowance of this amendment is complained of in the main bill of exceptions. The plaintiff demurred also on general and special grounds to the original answer; the trial judge sustained the demurrer as to certain portions of the answer (to which ruling no exception was taken by the defendant), and overruled the demurrer as to certain other portions of the answer. The judgment overruling the demurrer to these portions of the answer is also complained of in the main bill of exceptions.

The paragraphs of the answer which were sustained as against the demurrer alleged substantially that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence in furnishing to the defendants cars which were defective, and that the defects in the cars caused the destruction of the bridge and the consequent wreck of the cars. It was objected by the demurrer that the allegations of the answer in this respect did not specifically state the day when the cars were received by the defendant, the time when the trestle or bridge which fell, destroying the cars, was built, the name of the party by whom it was constructed, or the names of the employees of the defendant by whom the cars were being handled and operated at the time they were wrecked; that the defects alleged were not pointed out or the manner in which said defects could have caused a wreck; and that these averments of the answer were simply the conclusions of the pleader without the statement of any facts upon which they were based. In the answer relating to this subject it is alleged that the defendants cannot point out the defects specifically in the cars that were destroyed because of their destruction; but they aver affirmatively that the bridge or trestle was substantially built, that the track over the bridge was in good order, and that the train pulling the cars was running very slow, and the inference drawn from these facts by the answer was that the two cars were defective, and that these defects which could not be described specifically caused the wreck of the two cars.

The original petition, in the fourth, fifth, and seventh paragraphs thereof, alleged that the various rail carriers in the United States interchange and handle the cars of one another under a system of rules known as the "master car builders' rules"; that under the terms of the said rules any carrier having in its possession or use the car of another carrier thereby becomes an insurer of the same, and obligated to pay for the same should it be damaged or destroyed while in its possession; and that the defendants received said cars from the plaintiff in good order for use by them on their said tramroad under the rules. The plaintiffs submitted an amendment to the petition, striking therefrom, the words "under said master car builders' rules," and over the objection of defendant that the striking of these words constituted a new cause of action, this amendment was allowed. The exception to the allowance of this amendment constitutes the single assignment of error in the cross-bill of exceptions. The verdict rendered on the trial was in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiff's motion for a new trial was overruled. The special grounds of the motion for a new trial, so far as material, are covered by the exceptions pendente lite. The evidence will be referred to in the discussion of the general grounds of the motion.

Bennet, Twitty & Reese, of Brunswick, for plaintiff in error. J. R. Walker, of Valdosta, and Andrew B. Estes, of Waycross, for defendants in error.

HILL, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). [1, 2] 1. Did the trial judge err in allowing the defendant to open and conclude the argument upon the filing of the amendment to the answer? The attack made upon this ruling is that this amendment was not sufficient to entitle the defendant to the opening and conclusion of the argument, for the reason that it did not admit the plaintiff's prima facie right to recover. Objection is also made upon the ground that the amendment came too late. The latter objection is manifestly without merit, the amendment having been made before the introduction of any evidence by the plaintiff, and, if the amendment contained a sufficient admission of the plaintiff's right to recover prima facie, there was no error in allowing the defendants the opening and conclusion of the argument. Culver v. Wood, 138 Ga. 60, 74 S. E. 790; Brunswick Railroad Co. v. Wiggins, 113 Ga. 842, 39 S. E. 551, 61 L. R. A. 513; Central of Georgia Railway Co. v. Morgan, 110 Ga. 168, 35 S. E. 345. This must be determined by a consideration of the allegations of the petition, which state the cause of action, and the admissions made by the amendment to the answer. The petition alleged, in substance, that the plaintiff railroad company delivered to the defendants, as bailees for hire, two described cars, to be used by the bailees in the transportation of lumber to their sawmill over their tramway; that the defendants agreed to pay a certain per diem for the use of these cars; that the two cars in question belonged respectively to certain named railroad companies, but were in the possession of the plaintiff at the time of the bailment; that the two cars were delivered by the plaintiffs to the defendants in good order for their use on their railroad, and the defendants obligated themselves to keep the said cars in like good order, and to pay the plaintiff for all damage or injury to the cars while in their possession, use, custody, or control. The petition alleged the value of the two cars, alleged that they were destroyed by the negligent conduct of the defendant as described in the petition, and the suit was brought to recover for the damage sustained by the wrecking of the cars while they were in the possession of the defendants. Proof of these allegations would have made out a prima facie case, for "in all cases of bailment, after proof of loss, the burden of proof is on the bailee to show proper diligence." Civil Code 1910, § 8469. The amendment to the answer, upon the allowance of which the trial judge awarded to the defendants the right to open and conclude the argument, was in the following language: "The defendants admit that on or about the 3d day of August, 1907, the plaintiff delivered into their possession, custody, and control the two cars described in plaintiff's petition, damages to which are sought to be recovered in this case, and that the damages to said cars were sustained while they were in the possession of defendants, and that the damages were the sums claimed by defendant." An analysis of this amendment shows that three things were admitted: The bailment, the damage, and the amount of the damages. Did the admission of these three things give the plaintiff a prima facie right to recover? These admissions, aided by the rule that the burden of proof of proper diligence is on the bailee, clearly made out plaintiff's right to recover, and to avoid liability it was necessary for the defendant to establish some affirmative defense, and this it undertook to do.

[3] The defense set up was that the cars were defective, and that these defects caused the wreckage, and not the negligence, as alleged, of the defendants. After a careful examination of the evidence we have reached the conclusion that this defense was not established by the evidence; in other words, that the presumption of negligence against the bailee on proof of the bailment and of damage was not overcome. Defects in the cars were alleged in the most general terms. None were pointed out by the answer. It was alleged that the trestle and the track were in safe and sound condition, and that the train was handled with due care by the servants of the defendants, and it is claimed that, as these things were shown, the cars must have been defective, else the wreck could not have occurred. But the evidence is uncontroverted that these two cars were carefully inspected before they were delivered to the defendants; that they were moved by the plaintiff from Brunswick to Fairfax; that the defendants accepted them without any complaint and used them; that they were loaded by the servants of the defendants and moved over their tramway for some miles; and that no defective condition was discovered and nothing happened until the trestle was reached. The trestle gave way, and the cars broke loose from the train, and fell through the broken trestle. These facts would seem to indicate that the cause of the wreck was the defective and unsafe condition of the trestle. The proof of defects in the cars is more unsatisfactory than the allegation on that subject made by the answer. The evidence in behalf of the defendants as to any defects in the cars is that some of the planks in the sides or the floors of the cars were unsound. How could these unsound planks cause the trestle to give way? The wheels and the trucks of the two cars were sound; only some of the planks were decayed, and, in passing, it might be stated that the defendants admitted that they had subsequently used some of these planks in constructing other cars. This being so, a verdict for the value of these planks was demanded. There being no reasonable causal connection between the partially decayed planks of the cars and the breaking down of the trestle, it seems that we must look for some other cause of the wreck. This cause is found in the evidence for the plaintiff that the trestle had been previously inspected and found to be in an unsafe condition, and this unsafe condition was reported by the inspectors to the defendants, and they were warned to have necessary repairs made; but the warnings were not heeded. We will not prolong the discussion on this point. We feel constrained to grant another trial, because we do not find any evidence of probative value to support the verdict.

[4] 2. The cross-bill of exceptions contained only one assignment of error, to wit, that the court erred in allowing the plaintiff to strike from the seventh paragraph of the petition the following words "under the said master car builders' rules," on the ground that the striking of said words constituted a new cause of action. This assignment of error is not meritorious. The allegation of the petition in reference to the master car builders' rules was simply by way of inducement; the allegation does not relate to the cause of action. It was made as an explanation of the possession of the cars by the plaintiff, and the measure of diligence which these rules imposed upon carriers who had possession of the cars of other carriers. It had nothing whatever to do with the liability of the defendants, or with the contract of bailment between the plaintiff and the defendants relating to the two cars. The allegations as to these rules were wholly immaterial, and, in so far as the cause of action was concerned, were superfluous. The judgment on the cross-bill of exceptions must therefore be affirmed.

Judgment on main bill of exceptions reversed; on cross-bill of exceptions affirmed.

THORPE v. MAYOR AND ALDERMEN OF CITY OF SAVANNAH. (No. 5,180.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 31, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§§ 63, 591, 604*)—
POLICE POWER—DELEGATION OF DISCRETION —CONTROLLED BY COURTS.

It is a lawful exercise of the police power of a municipality, whether conferred expressly or under a general welfare clause, to prescribe terms upon which citizens of the municipality shall be permitted to keep cattle within its corporate limits. As incidental to this power the municipality, through its constituted authorities, has the right to grant to a city official the discretion to permit or to refuse an application of a citizen to keep cattle within the corporate limits, and, unless such discretion is arbitrarily abused, the courts will not interfere with its exercise by the officer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 152, 155, 1310, 1335-1337, 1378, 1379; Dec. Dig. §§ 63, 591, 604.*]

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; W. G. Charlton, Judge.

Mrs. V. L. Thorpe was convicted of violating a city ordinance, and, from a judgment

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes on certiorari sustaining the conviction, she brings error. Affirmed.

W. B. Stubbs, of Savannah, for plaintiff in error. John Rourke, Jr., and David S. Atkinson, both of Savannah, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. The plaintiff in error was convicted of violating a city ordinance which prohibited the keeping of any cow or cows within the corporate limits of the city of Savannah except under a permit first obtained from the health officer of the city. On certiorari the conviction was sustained, and the plaintiff in error excepted. The brief filed in this court by counsel for the city so fairly and fully states the facts and so clearly and, in our opinion, correctly states the law pertinent to the question raised by the record that we adopt without substantial change that brief as the opinion of this court.

In section 1 of the ordinance of the city of Savannah of September 8, 1909 (the caption of which is "An ordinance to provide regulations touching the keeping of cows, stables for cows, dairies, milk and the sale of milk"), the following language appears: "It shall not be lawful for any person, persons, or corporations to keep or possess within the corporate limits of the city of Savannah, any cow or cows, either for the conduct of the dairy business, or for his or her personal use, unless and except that a permit shall have been first obtained from the health officer, permitting such cow or cows to be located within the corporate limits of the city of Savannah." Section 19 contains the penal provisions, as follows: "The violation of any provision or regulation of this ordinance, and any failure to comply therewith, and the refusal or failure to comply with any direction or order of the health officer hereunder, shall be subject, upon conviction before the police court of the city of Savannah, to a fine not exceeding fifty dollars and to imprisonment not to exceed ten days, either or both, in the discretion of the court." The plaintiff in error applied to the health officer for a permit to keep three cows on her residence lot, as she claimed, for her personal use. The entire lot, including that portion with the improvements thereon, was only 30 feet wide and 90 feet in length or depth. The health officer refused a permit for three cows but informed the plaintiff in error that he would grant a permit for one to be kept on the lot for her personal use. One reason for his refusal to give a permit for three cows was that, for the special reason hereinafter mentioned, the lot could not be maintained in a sanitary condition with three cows kept on it. The plaintiff in error declined to apply for a permit for one cow, and she continued thereafter to keep three cows on her lot without any permit. She was afterwards summoned to appear before the police court of the city to answer for a violation of the foregoing ordinance. Her case was heard before the recorder on February 20, 1913, and, upon conviction, a fine of $25 was imposed, with the alternative of 10 days in jail.

A certiorari was applied for, and in the recorder's answer to the writ it was stated: "(1) That Dr. W. F. Brunner, health officer of Savannah, testified upon the hearing of said case that he refused Mrs. Thorpe a permit to conduct a dairy on the premises in question for the reason that same was unsanitary; (2) that he refused a permit for keeping three cows upon said premises for the further reason that said premises could not be kept in a sanitary condition; the droppings from said cows mixing with the soil and causing the entire premises to be unsanitary and objectionable; (3) that another reason for his refusal of three cows on said premises was that the supply of milk from the three cows was more than was daily needed for the defendant's (the plaintiff in error) family, and that he had reason to believe that the overplus of milk was being sold." The answer was traversed as to the above-stated second and third paragraphs, and the jury on the trial of the issue found "against the traverse of the second paragraph and for the traverse of the third paragraph." It follows conclusively that the fact was judicially determined, under the above-stated second paragraph of the recorder's answer, that the premises of the plaintiff in error could not be kept in a sanitary condition with three cows on the premises, for the reasons specified by the health officer of the city, and that for these reasons he refused a permit for her to keep three cows thereon. After this fact was thus established in conjunction with the other facts not controverted, the judge of the superior court rendered his judgment sustaining the decision of the recorder and dismissing the certiorari. To this judgment the plaintiff in error excepts.

The plaintiff in error contends: First, that under the aforesaid ordinance she has the legal right to keep three cows, and as many cows as she pleases, within the corporate limits of the city, for her personal use, upon naming the number of cows in her application, and that the grant of the permit is mandatory on the health officer; and, secondly, that if the ordinance does not give her this right, and invests the health officer with a discretion as to granting or refusing a permit, the ordinance is unconstitutional and void, as depriving her of her liberty of action and the equal protection of the laws. It is contended by counsel for the city that under this ordinance no person can keep a cow or cows within the corporate limits without a permit from the health officer, who is invested with a discretion as to the grant or refusal of the permit, as the only means of safeguarding the public health; and, secondly, that ordinances of a municipality, passed in the exercise of the police power, for the preservation of the public health, as the ordinance in question was passed, are not unconstitutional and void for any reason. In his judgment dismissing the certiorari, the learned judge of the court below, after quoting from section 1 of the ordinance and referring to section 19 as containing the penalty for violations of the ordinance, says: "Whether the health officer acted arbitrarily or not is not the question before me, although it is alleged in the petition. Such ordinances, designed to protect the health of the entire community, must of necessity have some drastic provisions in order to be effective. If the health officer exceeds his power, the courts may interfere, but the mere exercise of judgment, when such prerogative is given for the general good, is not necessarily reversible, unless it be so patently oppressive as to leave the court no alternative. The ordinance is not unreasonable. There is a provision requiring a permit before a cow is kept on premises within the corporate limits; cows were kept by the plaintiff in certiorari without a permit; and the ordinance is therefore violated."

The power vested in an officer or public body to grant licenses, unless mandatory in terms, carries with it the right to exercise a reasonable discretion. 25 Cyc. 622, 623, and cases cited in notes 21 and 22. In People v. Wurster, 14 App. Div. 556, 560, 561, 43 N. Y. Supp. 1088, 1091, 1092, the court said: "The nature of the provision that the persons or classes of persons referred to in the ordinance are required to be licensed fairly means that license is essential to enable or permit them to pursue the occupations and institute and conduct the places of amusement and entertainment specified in the ordinance; and the further provision that licenses shall be granted to such persons or class of persons by the mayor for such purposes fairly and reasonably imports that the power is vested in the mayor to grant licenses and that they shall be granted by him only. In terms, therefore, the provisions are not imperative. * * * While the mayor may be permitted to exercise his judgment, his discretion is not unqualified. A denial of an application for a license may be such as to constitute an abuse of power. * * * It is now quite well settled by authority that public policy requires that power not imperative in terms vested in the chief magistrate of a city to grant licenses should be deemed discretionary. People v. Thacher, 42 Hun. 349; People v. Grant, 58 Hun. 455, 12 N. Y. Supp. 879; s. c., 126 N. Y. 473, 27 N. E. 964. * * * The view here taken is that, as incidental to the power vested in the mayor to grant licenses, he is permitted to exercise his judgment in such matters, without having discretion expressly conferred upon him by the ordinance, and that the denial to him of such right in the execution of the power granted is dependent upon a mandatory provision of an ordinance of the common council in that respect."

It is peculiarly proper that discretion as to the granting or refusal of permits for the sale of milk, and for other purposes looking to the preservation of the public health, should be committed to health officers or boards of health of a city. People ex rel. Lieberman v. Vandecarr, 81 App. Div. 128; 80 N. Y. Supp. 1108; s. c., 175 N. Y. 440, 67 N. E. 913, 108 Am. St. Rep. 781; s. c., 199 U. S. 552, 26 Sup. Ct. 144, 50 L. Ed. 305. City councils may exercise their police powers through the agency of the municipal health officers, in matters pertaining to health. It is the invariable custom to delegate such authority to such officers, or other like functionaries, and the authority to do so is well recognized. New Orleans v. Charouleau, 121 La. 890, 46 South. 911, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 368, 126 Am. St. Rep. 332, 15 Ann. Cas. 46; Fischer v. St. Louis, 194 U. S. 361, 24 Sup. Ct. 673, 48 L. Ed. 1018. In the case at bar the health officer of Savannah is expressly designated as the officer to grant a permit under the ordinance in question, and he is clearly invested with a discretion as to a grant or refusal of such permit. The ordinance itself could not in imperative and mandatory terms specify all the cases in which the health officer should be required to grant a permit, because each case for a permit necessarily presents its own special features and conditions, each of which requires personal investigation and a consideration of the size of the lot, its location or neighborhood, the number of cows applied for to be kept on the lot, and all other matters which might affect the public health; and the health officer of the city is logically and pre-eminently the city official to conduct such investigation and consider all such conditions as a prerequisite to exercising his discretion and judgment in granting or refusing a permit. The health officer in this case did not exercise his discretion and judgment arbitrarily; his refusal to grant a permit for three cows was on the ground that the small lot belonging to the plaintiff in error could not, for the special reasons assigned by him, be maintained in a sanitary condition with three cows kept on it. This view, as above stated, was expressly upheld by the verdict of the jury in the superior court that heard the facts, pro and con, upon this particular ground of refusal. He offered to grant a permit for one cow, but the plaintiff in error declined to apply for it and deliberately violated the ordinance by keeping three cows on her lot, within the corporate limits, without a permit.

"One of the chief purposes for the institution of municipal government is the conservation of the public health and safety. No more important obligation is confided to municipal corporations. The nature of the ordinances they shall adopt for this purpose is largely a matter within the discretion of the local authorities." 3 McQuillin, Mun. Corp. § 899; 28 Cyc. 709. The keeping of cows and dairies within the corporate area are subjects of local police regulation (3 McQuillin, Mun. Corp. § 909, pp. 1948, 1950, and cases cited in notes; section 969, p. 2152, and note 37), and likewise the inspection, testing, and sale of milk (Id. § 969, pp. 2149, 2154, and the many cases cited in the notes thereto).

The city of Savannah having the inherent right under the police power to regulate the keeping of a cow or cows, and cow stables, and milk dairies within its corporate limits, for the preservation of the public health, it follows that the plaintiff in error has not been deprived of any constitutional or legal right by the ordinance of September 8, 1909, nor by an act of the health officer thereunder. People ex rel. Lieberman v. Vandecarr, 175 N. Y. 440, 67 N. E. 913, 108 Am. St. Rep. 781; s. c., 199 U. S. 552, 26 Sup. Ct. 144, 50 L. Ed. 305; Adams v. Milwaukee, 144 Wis. 377, 129 N. W. 518, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1066; s. c., 228 U. S. 572, 33 Sup. Ct. 610, 57 L. Ed. 971, decided May 12, 1913. It is not "an element in the liberty secured by the Constitution of the United States that one person, or a minority of persons, residing in a community and enjoying the benefits of its local government" should have the powers of subordinating the welfare and safety of the entire population to their notions of what may be the best means of safeguarding the health of that community. Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 38, 25 Sup. Ct. 358, 366 (49 L. Ed. 643, 3 Ann. Cas. 765).

Judgment affirmed.

PHILLIPS & CREW CO. v. DRAKE et al.
(No. 5,043.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 31, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

JUDGMENT (§ 785*)—LIEN—PRIORITY—SALES.

Where personal property is delivered under a contract of conditional sale, and afterwards and before the contract has been recorded a judgment against the purchaser is obtained by a third person, the lien of the judgment has priority over the vendor's unrecorded reservation of title. The case is controlled by the decision of the Supreme Court in Southern Iron & Equipment Co. v. Voyles, 138 Ga. 258, 75 S. E. 248, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 375, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 869, and is distinguishable from the cases of Conder v. Holleman, 71 Ga. 93, and American Law Book Co. v. Brunswick Cross-Tie Co., 12 Ga. App. 259, 77 S. E. 104.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1358-1362; Dec. Dig. § 785.*]

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; Geo. L. Bell, Judge.

Claim case by the Phillips & Crew Company against John Drake and others. Judgment for Drake, and claimant brings error. Affirmed.

Hendrix & Silverman, of Atlanta, for plaintiff in error. Horton Bros. & Burreas, of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. Whitfield and others executed a promissory note to John Drake in 1908. On March 17, 1911, Phillips & Crew Company sold to Whitfield a piano under a conditional sales contract, in which title was reserved in seller. In 1912 Drake sued on Whitfield's note given in 1908, obtaining a judgment in December, 1912. The execution which issued upon this judgment was not filed for record or recorded upon the general execution docket of the county. On February 21, 1913, it was levied upon a piano in Whitfield's possession, admitted to be the same piano which had been sold to him by Phillips & Crew Company. At the time of the levy there was due upon the conditional sale contract an unpaid balance of something more than $100. The contract had never been recorded. Phillips & Crew Company filed a claim to the piano, and before the trial of the claim case, but after the levy of Drake's f. fa., they filed their conditional sale contract for record in the clerk's office of the superior court. Upon the trial in the superior court the judge directed a verdict in favor of the plaintiff in f. fa. Exception is taken to that judgment. The only question presented by the record is whether the lien of the judgment in favor of Drake is superior to Phillips & Crew Company's reservation of title.

This case is controlled adversely to the plaintiff in error by the decision of the Supreme Court in Southern Iron & Equipment Co. v. Voyles, 138 Ga. 258, 75 S. E. 248, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 375, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 369. In that case it was held that the lien of an attachment obtained after the execution of a conditional bill of sale which had been illegally recorded, had priority over the conditional sale, notwithstanding the attachment was founded on a debt antecedent to the conditional bill of sale. The statute (Civil Code, § 8262) provides that an unrecorded or a defectively recorded mortgage is postponed to younger liens. It is pointed out in the decision just cited that the same rules govern the priority of conditional bills of sale, as affected by registration, as govern the registration of mortgages. In the present case the undisputed evidence shows that Drake obtained a judgment which was junior in date to the conditional sale upon which the plaintiff in error's claim of title was founded. The mere fact that this judgment was founded upon a debt antecedent to the conditional sale did not prevent the judgment lien from having priority over the conditional sale. The facts of the case clearly distinguish it from the cases of Conder v. Holleman, 71 Ga. 93, and American Law Book Co. v. Brunswick Cross-Tie Co., 12 Ga. App. 259, 77 S. E. 104. In both of these cases the lien under which priority was claimed antedated the contract of conditional sale.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

A judgment creditor whose lien is obtained before the conditional sale is made is not one of the third persons referred to in section 3318 of the Civil Code. If, however, his lien is acquired after the conditional sale is made, he does come within the terms of that section of the Code. While the debt upon which the judgment is founded was not created upon the faith of the debtor's apparent unconditional ownership of the property, still the lien was obtained at a time when the possession of the debtor furnished presumptive evidence of ownership, and it is for this reason that the judgment lien takes priority. The fact that the execution which issued upon the judgment was not recorded upon the general execution docket of the county in which the judgment was rendered would make no difference. As against third parties acting in good faith and without notice who may have acquired a transfer or lien binding the defendant's property, a money judgment against him would not be a lien upon his property from the rendition thereof, unless the execution issuing thereon be entered upon the docket within ten days from the time of its rendition, and, if not entered within ten days, the lien dates from the time of such entry of the execution. Civil Code, § 3321. This section, however, has no application in the present case. The plaintiff in error is not in the position of one who acquires title on the faith of the defendant's apparent unincumbered ownership without notice of the judgment lien. Having sold the property to the defendant and delivered it over into his possession without recording its contract of conditional sale, it took the risk of creditors of the defendant acquiring a lien against his property. The owner of personal property sold on conditional sale cannot withhold the contract from record, and then enforce the reservation of title against one who subsequently obtains a lien at a time when the defendant is apparently clothed with the absolute title to the property.

There was no error in directing a verdict finding the property subject.

Judgment affirmed.

STATE v. DANIELS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1913.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1151*)—APPEAL—CONTINUANCE—REVIEW.

An order denying a continuance is not reviewable, unless there has been an abuse of discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3045-3049; Dec. Dig. § 1151.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 594*)—CONTINUANCE—PROOF OF FACTS BY OTHER WITNESSES.

It was not error to refuse a continuance for absence of a witness who was a fugitive from justice, by whom accused expected to prove that he was under the influence of cocaine at the time of the homicide to such an extent that he was incapable of premeditation and deliberation, where nothing was developed by the state indicating that accused was not in the full possession of his faculties and he claimed that he could prove the fact that he was under the influence of cocaine by other witnesses, but introduced no proof in his own behalf.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1321, 1322, 1332; Dec. Dig. § 594.*]

3. HOMICIDE (§ 232*)—PREMEDITATION—DELIBERATION—DAMAGES.

Where defendant killed deceased without provocation, prepared for the killing by arming himself with a deadly weapon, and just before shooting deceased addressed him by saying: "I am talking to you, damn you, I don't like you nohow, and what it takes to kill you, I got it"—and after the killing stated that he "wished he had got one more damn shot at the Dunne-gan nigger," the evidence was sufficient to show premeditation and deliberation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 480; Dec. Dig. § 232.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Durham County; Bragaw, Judge.

Cleve Daniels was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

This is an indictment for murder, and the prisoner being convicted of murder in the first degree, appeals from the sentence of death.

The prisoner moved for a continuance on account of the absence of Richard Cash, who was with the prisoner before and at the time of the killing, and by whom he expected to prove that he was under the influence of cocaine to such an extent that he was incapable of premeditation and deliberation. The motion was overruled, and the prisoner excepted.

The deceased, Jim Dunnegan, was killed in the daytime in the city of Durham on the 26th day of January, 1912. Ed Cain, offered by the state, testified: "Was living in January, 1913, on Glendale avenue in the northern part of the city of Durham; knew Cleve Daniels and Jim Dunnegan. Had known them for 10 or 15 years. Jim Dunnegan is dead; was shot. Saw the shooting; take place on Sunday; thinks deceased died on Monday morning. Went to the burial. Shooting took place about 50 yards from my house on Glendale avenue. I was about 10 feet from them. Was standing up against a tree on that street before the shooting. Garland Smith, Aaron Hobbs, and Joe Hayes were with us. Saw Jim Dunnegan and Robertson coming up from Corporation street, coming towards where I was standing. They stopped and went to talking. These two joined us, and made six of us there in all. Cleve Daniels and a white fellow named Cash was on Geer street at a house called Agnes Leathers', about 40 or 50 yards from where I was. Cleve Daniels went to Agnes Leathers' house, and afterwards he came to where we were standing. When he came up, Cleve Daniels says: 'What did you say, old nigger?' Never spoke to any one particularly, was talking to the whole crowd, and no one gave him any answer, and he said so a second time: 'What did you say, old nigger?' Jim Dunnegan asked him who he was talking to, and he said: 'I am talking to you, damn you. I don't like you nohow, and what it takes to kill you I got it.' He pulled out his pistol and fired, and Jim moved his leg like that, and he shot again, and by that time Jim grabbed his hand. He took his pistol out of his pocket and pointed it right level at Jim Dunnegan. Don't know whether he hit him the first time or not; knew he hit him on the second time, because Jim Dunnegan said so, then grabbed him. The shot hit him somewhere about the abdomen in the direction the pistol was pointed. It was a black pistol. I think a Smith and Wesson. (Identifies the pistol, which is here offered in evidence.) Nothing had been said between Jim Dunnegan and Cleve Daniels before Daniels stepped up and asked the question: 'What did you say, old nigger?' Jim Dunnegan had been with me about five minutes before Cleve Daniels came up. After the second shot, Jim Dunnegan grabbed Cleve Daniels by the wrist, and after he caught his wrist he snapped three more times, but the pistol failed to go off. Jim Dunnegan did not have any weapon; only he took the pistol away from Cleve Daniels in the struggle. Afterwards Cleve Daniels got up and went down to his house about as far as from here to the back side of the courthouse. Jim Dunnegan lived on Corporation street, about as far as from here to the corner of Roxboro street. The only other words spoken were, Aaron Hobbs, Cleve Daniels' brother, said to Jim Dunnegan, 'He has shot you once, why don't you beat hell out of him?' Jim Dunnegan did not do anything after he got Cleve Daniels down and struck him two or three times. Jim Dunnegan did not get his hand on Cleve Daniels until after the second shot was fired; they were about six feet apart then. Jim Dunnegan had both hands in his pocket. Cleve Daniels got the gun from back here somewhere (indicating his hip pocket). He had on an overcoat. Don't know whether he got it out of his overcoat pocket or his hip pocket. When Cleve Daniels walked up he said, 'What did you say, old nigger?' and didn't anybody say anything to him, and then he spoke a second time and said, 'What did you say, old nigger?' and Jim Dunnegan said: 'Who is he talking to?' and Cleve Daniels said, 'I am talking to you. God damn you, I don't like you nohow, and what it takes to kill you, I got it.' Then he drew his pistol." Cross-examination: "The oath was not supplied. He cursed when he told Jim Dunnegan he did not like him nohow. I told it at the trial before. I don't know that I told that before. I know he cursed; know there was a damn in the oath. Pistol was aimed at Jim Dunnegan, and the shots were bam! bam!—just like that, in the same direction both times. Jim Dunnegan did not catch hold of Cleve Daniels' hand after the first shot; did not tell that downstairs. Pistol was pointed in the same direction both times, one shot right after the other, and the range of the pistol was not changed between the shots; pointed both times at Jim Dunnegan; fired twice, and if both bullets left the pistol it hit him both times; did not swear downstairs that Jim Dunnegan ran to Cleve Daniels and said, 'Look, the negro shot me!' and grabbed him by the hand as he shot the second time. After he shot the second time, Jim Dunnegan grabbed him. They had had no trouble at all that I know of. Don't remember that he said, 'What did you say when I passed here before?' He went by the first time with Mr. Cash, but Jim Dunnegan was not there; only me, his brother, Garland Suitt, and Joe Hayes was there. Jim Dunnegan wasn't there. Don't know how long it was from the first time he went there until he came back. When Cleve Daniels first came by there Jim Dunnegan wasn't there, and Aaron had two dogs playing or fighting, and Cleve Daniels came by there and asked Garland Suitt about the dogs, and told him he would get him when he came back, and Jim Dunnegan wasn't anywhere about there. He did not have any words before with Jim Dunnegan. There was no trouble with Suitt, only Cleve Daniels told Garland Suitt he would fix him when he came back down there. Don't remember the exact words, he told him something about fixing him, damn him, when he came back. Don't know what Cleve Daniels' condition was. He did not look drunk to me. He did not look like he was under the influence of morphine or cocaine. He looked like he always looked. I have not had any trouble with Cleve Daniels; just had fusses like negroes always do. I did not dislike him. We are just as much friends as we always were. Did not have any trouble the day before that; had just cut his hair on Saturday. I was over to his house on that Saturday. I have been up for taking money away from Jim Strudwick and fighting seven or eight times. Did not get mad with Cleve Daniels the day I cut his hair. Cut his hair on Saturday." Redirect: "When Cleve Daniels passed by, Mr. Cash was with him and went about as far as from here to the station house before he came back. They were walking along."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes.

Bud Robertson, another witness, testified to substantially the same facts.

Mary Holman, a sister of the deceased, testified that she went to the home of the prisoner after the shooting; "that Cleve Daniels was standing on the porch with his wife, Bedie, as I walked up and said, 'Cleve Daniels, what did you shoot Jim Dunnegan for?' and he said, 'I have not shot no damn Jim.' And I looked up and saw Mr. Stone and another man, and I said, 'There comes the policeman now.' At that time Cleve Daniels shot out of the door and went through the front door and out of the back door, and tried to get over the fence. I saw him after they arrested him, and he said he wished he had gotten one more damn shot at the Dunnegan nigger."

The prisoner requested his honor to charge the jury that there was no evidence of premeditation and deliberation, which was refused, and he excepted.

J. C. L. Harris, of Raleigh, and Manning, Kitchin & Everett, of Durham, for appellant. Attorney General Bickett and T. H. Calvert, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

ALLEN, J. [1] We have given careful consideration to the entire record, and find no error in the proceedings in the superior court. The motion for a continuance was addressed to the discretion of the court, and the ruling of his honor, denying the motion, is not reviewable, unless there has been an abuse of discretion, and we find none.

[2] The killing was on the streets of Durham, in the daytime, in the presence of several witnesses, and immediately before the shooting the prisoner was at the home of Agnes Leathers, and just after was at his own home with his wife. No evidence was offered by the prisoner, and nothing was developed upon the examination of the witnesses for the state, indicating that the prisoner was not in full possession of his faculties. His honor was therefore fully justified in concluding that, if the prisoner was under the influence of cocaine at the time of the killing, as he alleged, he could prove the fact by other witnesses, and that he was not dependent upon the evidence of Bud Cain, a fugitive from justice, who might never return.

[3] There was, in our opinion, sufficient evidence of premeditation and deliberation to sustain a conviction of murder in the first degree. The absence of provocation; the preparation of a deadly weapon; the language used before the killing: "I am talking to you, damn you. I don't like you nohow, and what it takes to kill you, I got it"—and after, "that he wished he had got one more damn shot at the Dunnegan nigger," are circumstances tending to prove premeditation and deliberation, fit to be considered by the jury, and this evidence was submitted to them in a clear charge, which fully protected the rights of the prisoner.

In State v. McCormack, 116 N. C. 1036, 21 S. E. 694, the court says: "While premeditation and deliberation are not to be inferred as a matter of course from the want either of legal provocation or of proof of the use of provoking language, yet all such circumstances may be considered by the jury in determining whether the testimony is inconsistent with any other hypothesis than that the prisoner acted upon a deliberately formed purpose. State v. Fuller, 114 N. C. 885 [19 S. E. 797]. Kerr (in his work on Homicide, section 72) says: 'The question whether there has been deliberation is not ordinarily capable of actual proof, but must be determined by the jury from the circumstances. It has been said that an act is done with deliberation, however long or short a time intervenes after the intent is formed and before it is executed, if the offender has an opportunity to recollect the offense.' The test is involved in the question whether the accused acted under the influence of ungovernable passion, or whether there was evidence of the exercise of reason and judgment. The conduct of the accused just before or immediately after the killing would tend at least to show the state of mind at the moment of inflicting the fatal wound. In passing upon the question whether the facts in a given case are sufficient to show, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the killing was done with deliberation and premeditation, while sudden passion, aroused by provocation that would neither excuse nor mitigate to manslaughter the killing with a deadly weapon, is sufficient, if the homicide is committed under its immediate influence, yet the want of provocation, the preparation of a weapon, proof that there was no quarreling just before the killing, may be considered by the jury, with other circumstances, in determining whether the act shall be attributed to sudden impulse or premeditated design." This case has been approved in State v. Lipscomb, 134 N. C. 694, 47 S. E. 44; State v. Daniel, 139 N. C. 552, 51 S. E. 858; State v. Stackhouse, 152 N. C. 808, 67 S. E. 764, and in other cases.

The judgment must be affirmed. No error.

J. T. McTEER CLOTHING CO. v. HAY.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1913.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 713*) — CONCLUSIVENESS — MATTERS IN ISSUE.

A judgment upon the merits is a finality as to the claim or demand in controversy, not only as to every matter which was offered and received to sustain or defeat the claim or demand, but as to any other admissible matter which might have been offered for that purpose, and constitutes an absolute bar to a subsequent action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1063, 1066, 1069, 1234-1237, 1239, 1241, 1247; Dec. Dig. § 713.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 585*)—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A judgment is not conclusive in a subsequent action between the same parties upon a different claim or demand, but in such case operates as an estoppel only as to those matters in issue or points controverted upon which the judgment is rendered, and hence a judgment against defendant on a note covering all sums then due was not an estoppel as to a different claim or cause of action not then in issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1062-1064, 1067, 1073, 1084, 1085, 1092-1095, 1132; Dec. Dig. § 585.*]

3. JUDGMENT (§ 956*)—RES JUDICATA—EVIDENCE AS TO IDENTITY OF ISSUES.

Under a claim of estoppel by judgment, extrinsic parol evidence is admissible to show the material points and the decision in the former action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1822-1825; Dec. Dig. § 958.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alamance County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by the J. T. McTeer Clothing Company against W. E. Hay. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. New trial.

This action is to recover two items of an account for goods sold and delivered; the first item being of date March 26, 1909, for $305, and the second of date March 26, 1909, for $13.50, both being subject to a credit of $63 for goods returned, leaving a balance due of $255.50. The defendant denied the indebtedness, and pleaded an estoppel by judgment.

The facts appearing of record in regard to the estoppel are as follows: Prior to the institution of this action, the plaintiff commenced another action against the defendant, in which he alleged that on May 14, 1909, the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $1,002.28, and that on that day he executed his note therefor payable in installments; that payments had been made thereon; that default had been made; and that there was a balance due the plaintiff of $452.78. The defendant answered, admitting the allegations of the complaint, except he alleged that he was entitled to an additional credit of $40.

At January special term, 1911, a judgment by consent was rendered in said action, which, after reciting that the parties had agreed to a full settlement of all matters in controversy, adjudged that the plaintiff recover $412.78, which was the amount claimed by the plaintiff, less the additional credit of $40 claimed by the defendant. It does not appear of record that the two items embraced in this action were in controversy in the first action, and, on the contrary, the account attached to the complaint in the original action shows those two items were not due when the note was executed, and were not embraced therein.

On the trial of this action, the plaintiff offered a witness who testified: "I live at Knoxville, Tenn. I am treasurer and credit man of the McTeer Clothing Company. I am familiar with the books of that company. I know about the time the note was given for $1,000 as indicated in the record. At that time that was all the indebtedness of W. E. Hay that was due, but not the entire amount he owed. It was never intended that the note should cover anything but the past due indebtedness at the time the note was given. The items now sued for in this action were not due at the time the note was given. These items were to fall due the October following the execution of the note. The note was in the hands of the collecting department of the Credit Clearing House all the time from the time it was executed until suit was brought on it. It was afterwards forwarded to W. H. Carroll, attorney, here. That note and the suit upon it has been settled. W. E. Hay ordered the goods sued for by letter." This evidence was withdrawn from the jury, and the plaintiff excepted.

His honor submitted the following issue to the jury: "(1) Were all matters at issue between the plaintiff and defendant settled in the case between the same parties at the January special term, 1911?"—and instructed the jury, if they believed the evidence, to answer the issue, "Yes," and the plaintiff excepted.

W. H. Carroll, of Burlington, for appellant.

ALLEN, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1, 2] There appears to be some confusion in the authorities as to the matters concluded by judgment; some declaring that it estops only as to the questions actually litigated, and others that it not only estops as to those litigated but also as to all that might have been litigated in the action.

The apparent conflict arises from failure to distinguish between the difference in the causes of action; both rules existing but being applicable to different facts.

The line is clearly marked in Cromwell v. County of Sac, 94 U. S. 351, 24 L. Ed. 195, which has been approved in numerous cases, in which the court says: "The questions presented for our determination relate to the operation of this judgment as an estoppel against the prosecution of the present action and the admissibility of the evidence to connect the present plaintiff with the former action as a real party in interest. In considering the operation of this judgment, it should be borne in mind, as stated by counsel, that there is a difference between the effect of a judgment as a bar or estoppel against the prosecution of a second action upon the same claim or demand and its effect as an estoppel in another action between the same parties upon a different claim or cause of action. In the former case the judgment, if rendered upon the merits, constitutes an absolute bar to a subsequent action. It is a finality as to the claim or demand in controversy, concluding parties and those in privity with them, not only as to every matter which was offered and received to sustain or defeat the claim or demand, but as to any other admissible matter which might have been offered for that purpose. Thus, for example, a judgment rendered upon a promissory note is conclusive as to the validity of the instrument and the amount due upon it, although it be subsequently alleged that perfect defenses actually existed, of which no proof was offered, such as forgery, want of consideration, or payment. If such defenses were not presented in the action, and established by competent evidence, the subsequent allegation of their existence is of no legal consequence. The judgment is as conclusive, so far as future proceedings at law are concerned, as though the defenses never existed. The language, therefore, which is so often used, that a judgment estops not only as to every ground of recovery or defense actually presented in the action, but also as to every ground which might have been presented, is strictly accurate, when applied to the demand or claim in controversy. Such demand or claim, having passed into judgment, cannot again be brought into litigation between the parties in proceedings at law upon any ground whatever. But, where the second action between the same parties is upon a different claim or demand the judgment in the prior action operates as an estoppel only as to those matters in issue or points controverted, upon the determination of which the finding or verdict was rendered. In all cases, therefore, where it is sought to apply the estoppel of a judgment rendered upon one cause of action to matters arising in a suit upon a different cause of action, the inquiry must always be as to the point or question actually litigated and determined in the original action, not what might have been thus litigated and determined. Only upon such matters is the judgment conclusive in another action. * * * It is not believed that there are any cases going to the extent that, because in the prior action a different question from that actually determined might have arisen and been litigated, therefore such possible question is to be considered as excluded from consideration in a second action between the same parties on a different demand, although loose remarks looking in that direction may be found in some opinions. On principle, a point not in litigation in one action cannot be received as conclusively settled in any subsequent action upon a different cause, because it might have been determined in the first action."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[3] If the evidence offered by the plaintiff is admissible and true, the former judgment is not, under this rule, an estoppel as to the cause of action alleged, because it was not in issue in the former action, and this action is not on the same claim or demand. We are also of opinion that the evidence offered by the plaintiff is competent.

The question was decided in Yates v. Yates, 81 N. C. 401, which has been approved on this point in Bryan v. Malloy, 90 N. C. 513; Baker v. Garra, 108 N. C. 227, 13 S. E. 2; Jones v. Beaman, 117 N. C. 263, 23 S. E. 248.

In the Yates Case the court says: "A verdict and judgment directly upon the point in issue is as a plea, a bar, or as evidence, conclusive upon the same matter directly in question in another suit, not extending to any matter coming collaterally or incidentally in question, or inferred by way of argument. Duchess of Kingston's Case, 2 Smith's Leading Cases, 424. This became a rule and is enforced in the courts upon the idea that, when a point or question is once litigated and decided by a verdict and judgment, it was justice to the parties and good policy that the same should not again be drawn into contest in a subsequent suit between the same parties. And to give effect and application to the principle, the rules of pleading required it to be availed of by plea of the judgment as a bar, or estoppel, or as evidence on the general issue. And anciently under the system of pleading conducive to the end of ascertaining and preserving in a permanent form the material issues and the adjudication thereof, it was held that the record should not estop, unless it showed on its face that the very point sought to be kept from a second contest was distinctly presented by an issue and expressly found by a jury. A system of pleading more general and loose having been adopted and allowed at this day, but little of the ancient certainty of allegation and denial is now required, and hence it is difficult if not impossible to ascertain the subject-matter of a controversy and the precise points made and decided by a mere inspection of the record as formerly, and therefore it grew to be the rule that it was not necessary that the record should show definitely the precise point or question upon which the right of a plaintiff to recover or the validity of a defense depended, but only that the same matter might have been litigated and decided, and that intrinsic evidence might be admitted to define what the question was, its materiality, and its decision by the jury. Young v. Black, 7 Cranch, 565 [3 L. Ed. 440]; Packet Co. v. Sickles, 24 How. 333 [16 L. Ed. 650]; Wood v. Jackson, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 9 [22 Am. Dec. 603]; Eastman v. Cooper, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 276 [26 Am. Dec. 600]; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 531. The rule of the admissibility of parol testimony in support of the plea of estoppel to show what was the material point, and its decision in a former action, generally prevails at this day."

We are therefore of opinion there is error, and a new trial is ordered.

New trial.

GOBBLE et al. v. ORRELL et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1913.)

1. DIVORCE (§ 206*) — RESTRAINING SALE OF PROPERTY.

During the pendency of a suit for divorce, an order was made restraining the husband from selling his land. The final judgment awarded alimony and appointed a receiver of the land for the purpose of applying the rents to the payment of the alimony. Held, that the injunction was intended to operate only until the final decree, and hence a mortgage of the land by the owner, and the sale thereof by the mortgagee under a power of sale, subsequent to the final decree, were not in violation of the injunction, especially where the wife received the rents in full and was not injuriously affected by the conveyance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 600-603; Dec. Dig. § 206.*]

2. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 60*) — HOSTILE CHARACTER OF POSSESSION.

Where a decree of divorce granting alimony appointed a receiver of the husband's land to collect the rents and profits and apply them to the payment of the alimony, but he permitted the wife to take possession of the land in discharge of her claim for alimony, her possession was not adverse to the husband, especially as she could not hold adversely to the receiver without being guilty of contempt of court, and the husband, having been deprived of his possession by the court's judgment, should not lose his rights by his enforced failure to protect them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 282, 312, 323, 328; Dec. Dig. § 60.*]

3. RECEIVERS (§ 71*)—NATURE OF RECEIVER'S POSSESSION AND PROPERTY.

A receiver's possession is that of the court, taken for the purpose of securing the thing in controversy, so that it may be subject to such disposition as the court may finally direct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Receivers, Cent. Dig. §§ 127, 128; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Davidson County; Justice, Judge.

Action by J. H. Gobble and others against Cleveland Orrell and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

This is an action to recover the possession of land. Hiram Gobble originally owned it, and while he was owner, his then wife, Arena Gobble, obtained an absolute divorce from him at January term, 1880. In the decree the court adjudged that alimony, in the sum of $400 per annum, be paid by Hiram Gobble to the plaintiff, and appointed a receiver, with directions to "pay out of the rents and profits of said land, or the proceeds thereof, the said alimony, according to the terms of the decree"; that is, $400 annually until the death of Hiram Gobble, and $400 annually in four equal quarterly installments thereafter. An order had been previously issued by Judge Graves at fall term, 1878, restraining Hiram Gobble from selling or disposing of his real or personal property, and appointing the same person as receiver to take charge of the personal property, but not of the land. The receiver was directed in the preliminary order to sell so much of the personal effects described therein as should be necessary to pay temporary alimony, $10 a month, then allowed by the court. The final judgment varies, as will be seen, from the preliminary order in this respect: That it omits all reference to an injunction against selling the land, and puts the temporary receiver in charge of it and the personality, for the purpose of securing the alimony and its regular payment to the wife, who had secured the divorce, with directions hereinbefore stated. Hiram Gobble married a second time, and in 1892 he and his wife conveyed the land by mortgage, with power of sale, to J. M. Lomax, who, upon default in the payment of the debt secured by it, sold the land under the power and conveyed it to Robert H. Gobble, the purchaser, who died, leaving plaintiffs as his heirs. Hiram Gobble died in 1910, and defendants are his heirs. Arena Gobble died in April, 1911. The receiver, who was a brother of Arena Gobble, collected the rents of the land at first; that is, after the first decree of divorce, his sister remaining on the land, as she had done before. The evidence is not clear as to whether he collected the rents all the time. The jury, under an instruction of the court to answer the issue "Yes," returned the following verdict:

"(1) Are the plaintiffs the owners and entitled to the possession of the lands described in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

"(2) What damage are plaintiffs entitled to recover of defendants? Answer: $150." Judgment upon the verdict, and defendant appealed.

Walser & Walser, of Lexington, for appellants. E. E. Raper, of Lexington, for appellees.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] It is apparent that plaintiffs are the owners of the land, unless the defendants have acquired it by inheritance from their father, who had mortgaged it to J. M. Lomax; it being afterwards sold by him under the mortgage to Robert A. Gobble, father of plaintiffs. Defendants contend that Hiram Gobble sold and conveyed the land in violation of an injunction issued by the court in the divorce suit, and that his deed is therefore invalid, and if this is not so, they claim by the adverse possession of their mother for 20 years of the land after the decree was entered. But, in our opinion, neither defense is good or available in law to defeat the plaintiffs' recovery. In the first place, it is evident that the court, by omitting all reference to the injunction in the final decree and placing all of the property, both real and personal, in the hands of the receiver, with instructions to collect the rents and profits and pay the alimony, intended to dissolve the prior injunction as being, perhaps, unnecessary and futile, the receiver's possession being quite sufficient to secure the alimony to Mrs. Gobble, which was the object in making the order. The court continued the possession of the receiver as to the personal property, and enlarged the former order by giving him possession and control of the land for the purpose of his resorting to the personal property and the rents and profits of the land to pay the amount of alimony as it matured. The clear inference, and the true construction of the order and decree, which must be taken together, is that the injunction, or restraining order, lapsed or ceased to operate, and the receivership as to all the property was substituted in its place, as being a perfectly adequate and sufficient remedy for the preservation of the wife's rights. The position as to the injunction, therefore, cannot be sustained. While the point is not presented for decision, a reference to some of the authorities on the question, as to the effect of an injunction upon a deed made in violation of it, may not be out of place, and it will be seen that they are not altogether in perfect accord, some holding that the deed is voidable only to the extent of preventing its interference with the remedy of the party who obtained it, so that it will not be allowed to affect a substantial right of the other party, or to deprive him of a substantial interest. If such a right or interest is not impaired, the act done or deed executed in violation of the writ is permitted to stand, or, in other words, it is always subject to the enforcement of the right and the protection of the interest. The other authorities seem to hold the act or deed to be void, but it may be that the apparent conflict can be reconciled, if proper attention is given to the facts of each case decided, and the necessity of protecting the particular right involved, extending the principle in some cases, and relaxing or modifying it in others, to suit the facts and exigencies of the particular case. Butler v. Niles, 35 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 329, citing People v. Sturtevant, 9 N. Y. 263, 59 Am. Dec. 536; 2 Spelling on Inj. & Extr. Rem. § 1183; Union Trust Co. v. S. I. Nav. & Imp. Co., 130 U. S. 565, 9 Sup. Ct. 606, 32 L. Ed. 1043; 2 High on Inj. § 1461; Morris v. Bradford, 19 Ga. 527, citing Jackson ex dem. Webb v. Roberts, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 485; Farnsworth v. Fowler, 1 Swan (31 Tenn.) 1, 55 Am. Dec. 718; Seligson v. Collins, 64 Tex. 314; Bissell v. Besson, 47 N. J. Eq. 580, 22 Atl. 1077; Taylor v. Hopkins, 40 Ill. 442; Ward v. Billups, 76 Tex. 466, 13 S. W. 308. The general consensus seems to be that the act in contravention of the writ of injunction is not only punishable as a contempt of the court's authority, but will not be allowed to prejudice the right and remedy of the party in whose interest it issued, but whether, subject to this rule, it will be allowed to stand at all the authorities are not agreed. We refer to the subject in passing, as the reference may be of some practical avail in the future. It does not affect the merits of this appeal, as we hold that the court did not continue the injunction permanently, conceding its power to do so, its first order being merely equivalent to one enjoining the defendant against selling the land to the hearing, or until the matter was disposed of by a final decree. But if it had been continued, the plaintiff in that suit, as we will see, was not injuriously affected by its violation, as it was issued to protect and preserve her right to alimony, and this she received in full, and consequently was in no way prejudiced by the mortgage to Lomax and the subsequent conveyance to Robert A. Gobble.

[2] The other position advanced by defendants is equally untenable. They claim that, as their mother was in possession for 20 years adversely, she acquired thereby a title to the land, but we cannot admit the premise from which this conclusion is drawn. Her possession was not adverse. The receiver, it appears, collected the rents and profits of the land and paid them to her. The land was in the custody of the law, through him, and the judgment by which he was placed in the possession of it was given at her request. She could not take possession of the land and hold it adversely to the receiver, without being guilty of a contempt of the court by the violation of its order issued at her instance. High on Receivers (3d Ed.) 163.

[3] The receiver's possession is that of the court, taken for the purpose of securing the thing in controversy, so that it may be subject to such disposition as it may finally direct. High on Receivers, §§ 134, 135, et seq. The defendant in that suit was put out of possession by the judgment, as the receiver was ordered to collect the rents and profits, and was entitled to control the possession for that purpose. This being so, the law will not allow the possession by the plaintiff to destroy his title, while he was thus forbidden to enter and assert it. We have an ancient maxim that the act of law shall prejudice no man. Broom's Maxims (6th Ed.) marg. pp. 127, 395. The maxim was applied in Isler v. Brown, 66 N. C. 557, and Howell v. Harrell, 71 N. C. 161, to prevent the loss of a right by inaction or passiveness caused by its order. It is a just rule, and our moral perceptions of right would be rudely shocked if any other were allowed to prevail and deprive a man of his rights, when by the act of the court or the law he was rendered powerless to protect or preserve them. Besides, there is no evidence here of notorious and adverse possession under a claim of right. The plaintiff in the other case evidently held the possession by consent of the receiver, and her occupation was subordinate to his dominion over the land as an officer of the court. She received the rents and profits in this way, in discharge of her claim for alimony, instead of requiring him to lease the land, collect the rents, and pay them over to her. We will not presume that she intended to do a wrong.

Our conclusion is that the instruction to the jury was correct.

No error.

SCOTT et al. v. REYNOLDS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1913.)

1. WITNESSES (§ 37*)—COMPETENCY—KNOWLEDGE OF FACTS TESTIFIED TO.

In an action on an account for groceries, after plaintiff's clerk had testified that he presented an account to defendant's intestate; that it was the same account presented on the trial; that intestate said it was all right; that he wanted to settle it up; and that the witness did not sell any of the goods, the intestate not trading there while he worked there—he was properly permitted to testify, over objection, that the account presented was for groceries, since, while the witness did not sell any of the goods, it was doubtless apparent from the account that it was for groceries.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 80-87; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

2. INTEREST (§ 18*)—BOOK ACCOUNTS—WHEN ALLOWABLE.

Where a grocery account was presented to the debtor, who promised to pay it, the creditor was entitled to interest thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Interest, Cent. Dig. §§ 32-34; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Shaw, Judge.

Action by C. Scott and another, trading as C. Scott & Co., against L. Scott Reynolds, administrator of L. M. Scott. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Civil action, tried at September term, 1913, upon this issue: Is the defendant indebted to the plaintiff, and, if so, in what amount? Answer: $631.63, with legal interest from November 30, 1910, to present date. The defendant excepted and appealed.

Adams & McLean, of Greensboro, for appellant.

BROWN, J. [1] This action is brought to recover an account for groceries alleged to have been purchased by defendant's intestate from the plaintiffs. The defendant assigns error because the witness Mann was permitted to testify that the account presented to L. M. Scott, defendant's intestate, was for groceries. The witness Mann testified: That he works for C. Scott & Co., clerk in the store. That he knew Levi M. Scott. That he had heard the testimony of Mr. C. Scott. That he presented the account to Mr. Levy Scott. That he took it and looked at it and said: "That is Mr. Clarence Scott, is it?" Witness said: "Yes, sir." He said: "That is all right. I am expecting some dividends from some insurance cases along later in the spring, and I want to settle that up." This is all that witness said to him about it. That Mr. Scott looked at the account when he said it was all right and had the account in his hands when he said that. That the amount of the account was $631.63. That the account was the same one presented here. That this is the account he presented without the interest on it. Upon cross-examination the witness testified that it was some time right after the first of the year of 1911 when he presented the account to Mr. Scott; that he presented it to him in his office, right over here near the courthouse. On redirect examination witness testified that he did not sell any of the goods to Mr. Scott; that Mr. Scott never traded any there after he went to work there for Mr. Scott. Witness was asked this question: "What was the account you presented to him for?" Defendant objected. The court remarked: "I think it is competent." Defendant excepted. Witness answered, "For groceries." We see no merit in this exception. If the evidence is believed, it proves that the account was duly presented for payment to defendant's intestate, and that he recognized and promised to pay it. It is true the witness did not personally sell the goods, but the fact that they were groceries was doubtless apparent in the account, itself.

The remaining assignments of error have as little merit as the above, and need no discussion.

[2] Having proved to the satisfaction of the jury that the account was duly presented, and that the defendant's intestate promised to pay it, the plaintiff was clearly entitled to interest.

No error.

BREEDEN v. MINNEOLA MFG. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1913.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 286*)—ACTIONS FOR INJURIES—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

In an employer's action for injuries, where there was evidence of defendant's negligence as the cause of the injury, the question was for the jury, unless plaintiff's evidence established contributory negligence, although the jury might well have adopted defendant's view that the injury was caused by plaintiff's disobedience of orders.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1001, 1006, 1008, 1010-1015, 1017-1033, 1036-1042, 1044, 1046-1050; Dec. Dig. § 286.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§§ 285, 286*)—ACTIONS FOR INJURIES—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

In an employer's action for injuries, evidence held to make questions for the jury as to whether plaintiff was directed to clean the machine operated by him while in motion, whether the rag given him for this purpose was a safe appliance, whether the employer failed to instruct him as to the operation of the machine and its dangers, and whether its failure of duty was the cause of the injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1001, 1002, 1003, 1006, 1007, 1008, 1010-1016, 1017-1033, 1036-1044, 1046-1050, 1053; Dec. Dig. §§ 285, 286.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Shaw, Judge.

Action by De Paul Breeden against the Minneola Manufacturing Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This action was instituted to recover damages because of an injury alleged to have been received while in the employ of the defendant and through its negligence.

In his complaint the plaintiff alleges that he was injured at 2:40 o'clock of the afternoon of Saturday, January 2, 1908, while cleaning with a rag held in his left hand a certain part of a tentering machine in the cotton mill of the defendant at Gibsonville while the machine was in motion, and that he was at that time about 14 years of age. The complaint contains four specifications of negligence, to wit: (1) Failure to instruct; (2) that the work assigned to plaintiff "was entirely too heavy"; (3) that defendant failed to furnish certain appliances, to wit, brushes, in general and approved use for cleaning machinery; and (4) that the defendant required the plaintiff to clean said tentering machine while running. The defendant in its answer denied each allegation of negligence and pleaded contributory negligence, assumption of risk, and the three years' statute of limitations. At the close of the plaintiff's testimony the defendant moved that the action be dismissed and for judgment as in the case of nonsuit. This motion was overruled, and defendant excepted.

The defendant offered no testimony but prayed the court in writing in apt time "to charge the jury to answer the first issue 'No.'" The court refused to charge as requested, and defendant excepted.

The defendant in apt time in writing further prayed the court "to charge the jury, if they answer the first issue 'Yes,' to answer the second 'Yes.'" The court refused to charge as requested, and the defendant excepted.

The evidence of the plaintiff tended to prove that at the time of his injury he was 14 years old, lacking 20 days; that he had, prior to his injury, worked for four or five years in various cotton mills and had done quite a variety of work, beginning with "picking quills" and ending with the operation of the tentering machine on which he was injured; that he had for several months worked in the room in which the tentering machine was, operating the stitching machine and glossers, and that he was assigned to operate this particular machine "about eight or nine or ten days" before his injury; that prior to two weeks before his injury the defendant company had provided its employees with brushes with which to clean machines, but that at that time these brushes were taken away and they were given rags and waste instead; that when brushes were used for cleaning his hands would not be nearer than two feet to the machine.

The plaintiff testified, among other things, as follows: "It was my duty to clean the machine everywhere. If I didn't, I had to go back over it. There were no instructions given me at the time I was assigned to work on this machine as to how to clean it and operate it. Up until Saturday before I was hurt on the following Saturday, I had a brush to clean the machine with. It was a brush made out of a picker stick or anything you could get hold of, so that it was about 2½ or 3 feet long, made out of this warp they make cloth out of. You got the brush and cut notches in the stick and tied this piece of warp on this stick. The handle was from 2½ to 3 feet long. When you were cleaning the machine with a brush it was necessary for you to put your hands about two feet from the parts. Mr. Theodore Allred took these brushes and burned them up. When he came around and took the brushes I asked him what I must clean up with, and he says, 'You will have to clean up the best way you can.' I says, 'I am going to swipe me a brush somewhere and use that;' and he says, 'You can't use it if you stay in here. You will have to get out of here if you use a brush. You can clean up with a rag the best you can, or anything that you don't have to stick in there that will break the gears.' After they took up the brushes I had nothing except rags to clean up with. Neither Mr. Allred nor any one else warned me as to the danger in cleaning this machine with a rag. I was hurt about two weeks after these brushes had been taken up. I was on my knees wiping this here piece of frame that goes under the frame that holds the other frame to it. The piece that fastens across there. I was wiping this rod with this rag. I didn't have a brush so as to stand outside. I had to get on my knees and wipe with that rag. As I went to pull my hand out the wind of this here chain blew the rag and it caught in the sharp pointed teeth and jerked my hand right under this here wheel. The machine was running. The reason I did not stop the machine to clean it up was simply because they would not let me stop the machine. The reason why I did not stop the machine to clean it up was because, when the cloth would get pushed on me on a Saturday evening, I had to run this machine. They gave us three-quarters of an hour to stop the machine and clean it up, fan off. Q. Tell who gave you the instruction, who said you had to run it and clean it. A. Both of them gave me instructions, Mr. Charley Stout and Mr. Theodore Allred, both gave me instructions. Q. State what instructions they gave you. A. Told me I could not stop the machine. Q. About cleaning up while it was running or not running? A. Yes, sir; could not stop the machine during working hours, and if I wanted to clean it I would have to wait until this three-quarters of an hour came and then clean it or clean it during spare times when I got a chance or stay after working hours and get no pay for it. It would take about one hour and 15 minutes to clean it like they required. I had to sweep up the floor after I had cleaned up, after Mr. Theodore Allred inspected the machine. I said that both Stout and Allred told me not to stop the machine in order to clean it up. I do not know at what hour the machine stopped on Saturday. I know they gave us three-fourths of an hour to stop the machine and sweep up. I do not remember whether it was 5 o'clock or 10 minutes after 3, when the mill closed down on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday. I think it was 6 o'clock the year round. On Saturday I think it was 4. I think the machinery shut down in the finishing department on Saturday afternoon about a quarter past 3. It was not a quarter to 3. That is one thing I know. It shut down for us to line the machines up. He started around just as quick as we started to line up the machines, went around and inspected them, and we started to sweep the floor. That time was not given us in which to clean the machines; it was given us in which to line up the machine and sweep up. It was not given us expressly for cleaning the machine. I knew that if I got my hand caught in a moving chain I would get hurt, but you see I was trying to keep out of it. I was trying to prevent an injury to my person. I was doing what they required me to do, cleaning the machine. No instructions were given to me as to cleaning that machine. I knew I had to clean it, and clean it clean. That is all I knew. I knew how to do it with brushes. I didn't know how to do it unless I got down with the rag. I saw the chain there and saw the wheel there, and I knew if my hand was carried by the chain against the wheel that it would hurt me. A lot of the machine was nowhere near the chain and wheel; that is, a lot of the frame. I can't tell how much. I didn't understand the nature and mechanism of the machine before I was assigned to work on it. I knew nothing about it until he told me to run it. I knew how to keep the cloth on the teeth; knew nothing more about it. I knew I was likely to be hurt anywhere in there. I don't know that I knew it was dangerous cleaning that part; no, sir, not in that way. If I had had a brush it would not have been dangerous at all. The way I was cleaning it then I didn't know that I was liable to get hurt right at the present time. If I had, I would not have cleaned it. The chains were where I could see them underneath. I was kneeling down on both knees and the moving wheel and chain were immediately before my eyes. The wind in this chain could have blown the rag and jerked my hand. The rag was tight in my hand, gripped tight. I had it in the palm of my hand. My hand was caught before I knew it. The chain jerked my hand. I knew if my hand got in there it would get hurt, but I didn't intend for it to get in there."

W. E. Marshall testified for the plaintiff as follows: "I live at Durham. I lived at Gibsonville in the winter of 1909. I lived there 5 years and 7 months. I was master mechanic of the Minneola Manufacturing Company, the defendant. I was in their employ at the time Paul Breeden got hurt. That machine is something like 30 or 40 feet long, and the machine is to stretch the goods, to weave them all the same number of inches, have all the same length. Sprocket and chain. Chain continuous, one on each side, and as the carriage strikes the chain on each side the chain runs continuous, with a row of pins about like clothes pins or a little larger, something like three-eighths of an inch long, or half an inch. Space of about three-sixteenths of an inch apart, which sets them pretty thick. As these chains revolve they catch the goods here and take it out a certain distance, and the chain widens out. That machine has a frame on each side of it. It is supported by shafts and connections. At the opposite end some rollers which takes the goods off and folds it out. Driver on the machine at the opposite corner. Has a loose and tight pulley, and a short shaft drives that pinion into a large gear which drives the machine, operates the whole machine. Up at this end back here where the operator sits the goods is taken off on the table behind, and that goes over a reel, you might call it, and goes down under the platform that he sits on and comes up and enters the chain right here. There it first strikes it. That chain is open, exposed on the machine most of the way around, except a small piece right here (indicating) where the goods come over. The chain is open all the way around. The chain came here and came around the sprocket. The chain was exposed until it strikes that sprocket, which pulls it around. The wheel was more than three or four inches from the side of the carriage which reverses backward and forward on the frame of the machine. The wheel reaches to the front of the machine, all except a little shield there to stop the goods, pull the goods off until it strikes the proper place along the chain. In cleaning the machine it is necessary for one to get down under the machine when he is cleaning it with a rag. If one had a brush as was described to clean the machine and those parts about this sprocket wheel, he could do that without getting down under the machine, and could do it without placing his hand in close proximity to the chain and wheels. I worked for this defendant five years and seven months. I had been there something like three years before the injury. I know that this defendant company used brushes to clean their machinery up until about two weeks previous to the time of the injury to Breeden, and I know that this defendant took the brushes up about two weeks previous to this injury and they burned them up. I worked at the mills at Mayodan in Rockingham county, at Fries, Va., at Spray and Gibsonville. The Minneola was the last I worked for. I had worked for the others before. Three of the mills that I had worked for used brushes. One in the spinning room didn't use long-handled brushes, used short bristle brushes."

The jury returned the following verdict:

"(1) Was the plaintiff injured by the negligence of the defendant, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Did the plaintiff by his own negligence contribute to his injury, as alleged in defendant's answer? Answer: No.

"(3) What damage, if any, is plaintiff entitled to recover? Answer: $1,750."

Judgment in favor of the plaintiff upon the verdict, and defendant appealed, assigning as error:

(1) The refusal of the court to allow its motion that the action be dismissed and for judgment as in the case of nonsuit.

(2) The refusal by the court to give defendant's prayer "to charge the jury to answer the first issue 'No.'"

(3) The refusal by the court to give defendant's prayer "to charge the jury, if they answer the first issue 'Yes,' to answer the second issue 'Yes.'"

F. P. Hobgood, Jr., of Greensboro, for appellant. Brooks, Sapp & Hall, of Greensboro, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. (after stating the facts as above). There is no controversy as to the law governing this case; the defendant admitting that it was its duty to furnish the plaintiff with suitable and reasonably safe appliances and to instruct him as to his duties and as to the dangers in operating the machine at which he was working when he was injured.

The contention of the defendant is that as the plaintiff admits that the mill was stopped on Saturdays for the purpose of cleaning the machines, and that he had other opportunities to do so during the week when the machine was not in motion, the only reasonable deduction from the whole evidence is that the plaintiff was instructed to clean the machine when at rest, and not to do so when in motion, and that if this is true the rag furnished the plaintiff was a reasonable and safe appliance for cleaning the machine not in motion; that there was no need of instruction, because there was no danger if he performed his duties as he was told to do; and that the real cause of the injury to the plaintiff was his disobedience of the order not to clean the machine when in motion.

[1] The learned counsel for the defendant urges this contention in a strong, forceful argument, which convinces us that there was good reason for asking the jury to adopt his view, but it does not satisfy us that there was no other reasonable inference to be drawn from the evidence, and, if there is evidence of negligence as the cause of the injury, the question is one for the jury, unless the evidence of the plaintiff establishes contributory negligence on his part.

[2] The position of the defendant is predicated upon the fact that the plaintiff was directed to clean the machine when at rest and not to do so when in motion. No witness testified that this instruction or order was given, and the plaintiff testified: "It was my duty to clean the machine everywhere. There were no instructions given me at the time I was assigned to work on the machine as to how to clean it and operate it. No instructions were given to me as to cleaning that machine. Neither Mr. Allred nor any one else instructed me as to the danger in cleaning this machine with a rag." If the jury accepted this evidence, they must have found that the plaintiff was performing his duty when he was injured and that he had not been instructed to stop the machine to clean it. Again: "I said that both Stout and Allred told me not to stop the machine to clean up." "The reason I did not stop the machine to clean it up was simply because they would not let me stop the machine."

When the defendant took the brushes from the plaintiff which had been used in cleaning the machine, and in the use of which the hands of the plaintiff would not have been nearer to the machine than two feet, the plaintiff said to the foreman, "I am going to swipe me a brush somewhere and use that;" and he said: "You can't use it if you stay in here. You will have to get out of here if you use a brush. You can clean up with a rag the best you can, or anything that you don't have to stick in there that will break the gears." Were not the jury justified in inferring from this evidence that the defendant expected the plaintiff to clean the machine while in motion, as otherwise the use of a brush would not break the gears?

There is also evidence that the brush was taken from the plaintiff on Saturday before he was injured, and that prior to that time the machine was cleaned with the brush while in motion, and as the plaintiff, a boy 14 years of age, had been instructed not to stop the machine, it was not unreasonable for him to conclude that he was to clean the machine in motion, in the absence of specific instructions, which he says were not given him.

The excerpts from the evidence are subject to the criticism that they are taken from different parts of the testimony, and that all associated evidence is not presented; but, while this is true, nothing is omitted which is necessarily in conflict with that quoted.

We are therefore of opinion that there is evidence that the plaintiff was directed to clean the machine in motion; that the rag given him was not a safe appliance for this purpose; that the defendant failed to instruct the plaintiff as to the operation of the machine and its dangers; and that the failure of duty on the part of the defendant was the cause of the plaintiff's injury; and further that it is not necessarily inferred from the evidence of the plaintiff that he was acting in disobedience of orders.

It follows, therefore, that there is no error in overruling the motion for nonsuit or in refusing to give the instructions prayed for. No error.

ORINOCO SUPPLY CO. et al. v. MASONIC & EASTERN STAR HOME, Inc.
et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1913.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 118*)—NOTICE TO OWNER—TIME FOR NOTICE.

Under Revisal 1905, § 2019, giving subcontractors and laborers furnishing material for the building, repairing, and altering of any house or improvement on real estate a lien on such house and real estate for their labor or material, and providing that the sum total of all such liens shall not exceed the amount due the original contractor at the time of notice given, section 2020 requiring subcontractors, laborers, or materialmen claiming a lien to give notice to the owner at any time before settlement with the contractor, and providing that, if the owner shall refuse or neglect to retain out of the amount due the contractor as much as shall be due or claimed by the subcontractor, laborer, or materialman, he may proceed to enforce his lien, and that after such notice is given no payment to the contractor shall be a credit on or discharge of the lien, and section 2021, requiring contractors to furnish to the owner an itemized statement of the amount owing to laborers, etc., or for materials, upon delivery of which it shall be the owner's duty to retain from the money due the contractor a sum sufficient to pay such laborers and for such materials, and providing that any laborer or materialman may himself furnish such itemized statement, upon delivery of which he shall be entitled to all the liens and benefits conferred thereby as though the statement were furnished by the contractor, where neither the contractor nor materialmen gave notice to the owner until after the last payment by him to the contractor, the claims of the materialmen were not a lien on the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 161; Dec. Dig. § 118.*]

2. STATUTES (§ 48*)—VALIDITY—REPUGNANCY.

Pub. Loc. Laws 1911, c. 761, amends the general mechanic's lien laws (Revisal 1905, §§ 2019-2021), so as to provide that the owner shall require the contractor to furnish him, before paying any part of the contract price, an itemized statement, duly verified, of the amount due any person for materials, that the owner shall pay such amount to the person furnishing materials, and that in the event of his failure to require such statement the rights of laborers or materialmen to file and enforce a lien shall not be affected thereby, and provides in section 5 that it shall apply only to Durham, Rowan, Guilford, and Randolph counties, provided it shall not apply, nor shall it be enforced in Union and Stanly counties, and provided, further, that where material is furnished by any person, firm, or corporation outside of Union county its provisions shall not apply in the collection of such debt, but the law now on the statute books shall apply. Held, that such act is contradictory, self-destructive, and void, and capable of no construction giving it any force or effect, since it is expressly made inapplicable in Union county and outside of Union county.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

3. STATUTES (§ 246*)—RULES OF CONSTRUCTION—LOCAL STATUTES.

A special statute, entirely local in its nature, in abrogation of the general law of the state, should be strictly construed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 827; Dec. Dig. § 246.*]

4. STATUTES (§ 207*)—CONSTRUCTION—INCONSISTENT PROVISIONS.

Where the proviso in a statute is directly contrary to the purview of the statute, the proviso is good and not the purview, because the proviso speaks the later intention of the Legislature.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 284; Dec. Dig. § 207.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Shaw, Judge.

Action by the Orinoco Supply Company and others against the Masonic & Eastern Star Home, Incorporated, and others. From a judgment against it, the defendant named appeals. Reversed.

W. F. Harding, of Charlotte, for appellant. Chas. A. Hine, of Greensboro, for appellee Wharton Builders' Supply Co. L. M. Swink, Hastings & Whicker, and Manly, Hendren & Womble, all of Winston-Salem, for appellee Orinoco Supply Co.

BROWN, J. This is an action brought by the plaintiffs to subject the property of the defendant to a lien for material furnished to the Ange Construction Company, a contractor that had undertaken to erect under contract a building upon said defendant's lot in Guilford county. The contractor failed to complete the building, and was adjudicated a bankrupt. The owner completed it, and expended more than the contract price, and at the date of the adjudication in bankruptcy the owner owed the contractor nothing. None of the creditors, parties in this cause, filed any notice of their claims with the owner prior to the adjudication of the contractor in bankruptcy, except the Orinoco Supply Company, who gave notice of their claim on April 16, 1912, but this notice was given after the last payment to the contractor by the owner on April 8, 1912, and at the time the notices were filed nothing was owing to the contractor by the owner.

[1] Under the General Lien Law of this state (Revisal 1905, §§ 2019-2021) materialmen have no lien for materials furnished the contractor unless the contractor files with the owner an itemized statement of amounts due for material, or the materialman gives notice to the owner of the amount due him before the owner makes settlement with the contractor, and then only as to such amount as may be due the contractor from the owner on its contract. No notice having been given, either by the contractor or by the materialman, before the payments were made by the owner to the contractor, and there being no funds in the hands of the owner due the contractor on his contract at the time notice of claims was given, such claims cannot, under the general statute, be a lien on the property of the owner. 27 Cyc. 102; Clark v. Davis, 119 N. C. 115, 25 S. E. 794.

[2] But the plaintiffs contend that Act of 1911, c. 761, Public Local Laws, gives them a lien on defendant's property, irrespective of notice to the owner, and without regard to his indebtedness to the contractor. The special statute provides that the owner shall require the contractor to furnish him, before paying any part of the contract price, an itemized statement, duly verified, of the amount owing any person for materials furnished, and that the owner shall pay such amount shown by the statement to the person furnishing materials. The statute further provides that, in the event of failure of the owner to require the itemized statement duly verified, such failure shall not in any way affect the rights of the laborer or materialman to file and enforce his lien.

[3] It is contended by the defendant that such special statute is void for ambiguity, as well as in violation of the federal and state Constitutions. Section 5 of the special statute provides that: "This act shall apply only to Durham, Rowan, Guilford and Randolph counties: Provided, this act shall not apply nor shall it be enforced in Union and Stanly counties: Provided further that where material is furnished by any person, firm or a corporation outside of Union county the provisions of this act shall not apply in the collection of said debt, but the law as now on the statute book shall apply." This special statute, entirely local in its nature, is in abrogation of the General Lien Law of the state, and undertakes to confer on the furnishers of building material in four counties privileges, legal rights, and advantages not common to the citizens of other counties in the state. Its constitutionality is doubtful. But we are not called upon to pass upon it, as we think the act is self-destructive and void on its face. Being in abrogation of the general law, it should be strictly construed. 27 Cyc. 20.

[4] It has long been held that if a proviso in a statute be directly contrary to the purview of the statute, the proviso is good and not the purview, because the proviso speaks the later intention of the Legislature. 1 Kent, Comm. 430; Potter's Dwarria, p. 118; Bacon, Ab. tit. Statute.

It was held by all the Barons of the Exchequer in the case of Attorney General v. Governor & Company of the Chelsea Water Works, 9 B. & C. 835, that where the proviso of an act of Parliament was directly repugnant to the purview of it, the proviso should stand and be held a repeal of the purview, because as was said, "it speaks the last intention of the lawgiver." It was compared to a will, in which the latter part, if inconsistent with the former, supersedes and revokes it.

Dwarria says, page 118: "It has been remarked upon this case in Fitzgibbon that a proviso repugnant to the purview renders it equally nugatory and void as a repugnant saving clause; and it is difficult to see why the act should be destroyed by the one and not by the other, or why the proviso and the saving clause, when inconsistent with the body of the act, should be destroyed by the one and not by the other." See, also, Rex v. Justices of Middlesex, 2 B. & A. 818; Townsend v. Brown, 24 N. J. Law, 80.

In Farmers' Bank v. Haile et al., 59 N. Y. at page 59, the opinion says: "A saving clause is only an exception of a special thing out of the general things mentioned in the statute, and if repugnant to the purview is void. * * * The office of a proviso is more extensive, it is used to qualify or restrain the general provisions of an act, or to exclude any possible ground of interpretation as extending to cases not intended by the Legislature to be brought within its purview. * * * And if repugnant to the purview it is not void, but stands as the last expression of the Legislature." As between conflicting provisions of the same statute, the last in order of arrangement will control. See, also, the following pertinent cases: Hall v. Equator Mining & Smelting Co., Fed. Cas. No. 5,831; Quick v. White Water Township, 7 Ind. 570; Ryan v. State, 5 Neb. 276; Ex parte Hewlet, 22 Nev. 333, 40 Pac. 96; Packer v. Sunbury & E. R. Co., 19 Pa. 211; Hightower's Lessee v. Wells, 14 Tenn. (6 Yerg.) 249; Savings Inst. v. Makin, 23 Me. 360.

The statute under consideration declares, on the one hand, that it shall apply only to Durham, Guilford, and Randolph counties, and especially that it shall not apply nor be enforced in Union and Stanly counties, and on the other hand, it provides where material is furnished by any persons, firm, or corporation outside of Union county the provisions of the act shall not apply in the collection of said debt, but that the law now on the statute books shall apply. So it makes no difference whether in Union or out of Union the statute is inapplicable to the facts in this case, and admits of no construction which can give any force or effect to it.

We are led to the conclusion that the special statute relied upon by the plaintiffs is contradictory, self-destructive, and void.

Reversed.

WALKER and ALLEN, JJ., concurring in result.

BALLARD v. LOWERY, Sheriff, et al.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1913.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 128*)—JUDGMENT—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

Where a judgment was rendered by a justice of the peace without service of the summons on defendant, but the summons bore an indorsement purporting to show such service, defendant's remedy was by a motion before the justice to set aside the judgment, when it would be the justice's duty to find the facts, and the service, appearing valid on the face of the record, could not be impeached in an action to enjoin the service of execution thereunder.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 402-407; Dec. Dig. § 128.*]

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 127*)—JUDGMENT—VACATING—NOTICE OF MOTION—SERVICE.

Notice of a motion before a justice of the peace to set aside a judgment recovered by a nonresident plaintiff for want of service of the summons might be given by publication or by service on plaintiff's attorney of record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 401; Dec. Dig. § 127.*]

3. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 127*)—JUDGMENT—MOTION TO VACATE—STAYING EXECUTION—PROCEDURE.

Where judgment is rendered by a justice of the peace without service of the summons on the defendant, docketed in the office of the clerk of the superior court, and an execution thereon issued, and defendant then moves to set aside the judgment, he may apply to the clerk and, upon giving the required bond, have the execution recalled until the motion is finally disposed of.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 401; Dec. Dig. § 127.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 171*)—THEORY OF ACTION IN LOWER COURT—VACATING JUDGMENT.

Where a person against whom a justice of the peace rendered judgment without service of the summons, instead of moving before the justice to set aside the judgment, brought a civil action in the superior court to enjoin the service of an execution thereunder, the Supreme Court could not, even by consent, treat such action as a motion in the cause in the justice's court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1053-1063, 1066, 1067, 1161-1165; Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Anson County; Adams, Judge.

Action by T. J. Ballard against R. J. Lowery, sheriff, and others. From an order dissolving an injunction and dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The defendants S. Lowman & Co. were non-residents of the state.

Lockhart & Dunlap, of Wadesboro, for appellant. Guldedge & Boggan, of Wadesboro, for appellees.

BROWN, J. [1] On the 25th day of February, 1911, at the instance of S. Lowman & Co., J. H. Benton, a justice of the peace for Anson county, issued a summons against T. J. Ballard, returnable the 1st day of March, 1911. On February 27, 1911, the said summons was returned to said justice's court with the following indorsement: "Served February 27, 1911, by reading within summons to T. J. Ballard, defendant, R. J. Lowery, sheriff, J. T. Short, deputy sheriff." March 16, 1911, said justice of the peace rendered judgment in favor of S. Lowman & Co. against T. J. Ballard in the sum of $173.75, with interest and costs, and said judgment was docketed in the office of the clerk of the superior court of Anson county, and upon which S. Lowman & Co. caused execution to be issued.

Injunction was issued by Bragaw, judge, at the instance of T. J. Ballard to prevent the service of said execution, claiming that no summons had ever been served on him in the original case of S. Lowman & Co. against T. J. Ballard before the said J. H. Benton, justice of the peace. Upon the return day of the restraining order before Adams, judge, the latter dissolved the injunction and dismissed the action.

We are of opinion that the proper procedure for the plaintiff to pursue is to move before the justice of the peace to set aside the judgment. It is then the justice's duty to find the facts.

[2] Notice of such motion may be given by publication or by service upon the attorney of record. It appears upon the face of the record that the service of the justice's summons was valid. Therefore it cannot be impeached except by motion in that cause to set it aside. McKee v. Angel, 90 N. C. 62; Whitehurst v. Trans. Co., 109 N. C. 344, 13 S. E. 937.

It is said in Thompson v. Notion Co., 160 N. C. 525, 76 S. E. 473: "If the judgment is rendered in the absence of the defendant, and the process is defective, or there is the appearance of service when in fact none, the defendant may move before the justice to set the judgment aside."

[3] When such motion is lodged, the defendant may apply to the clerk and, upon giving the required bond, have the execution recalled until the motion is finally disposed of.

[4] We cannot treat this civil action originating in the superior court, even by consent, as a motion in the cause in a justice's court.

Affirmed.

McNAIR et al. v. BOYD.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1913.)

1. TAXATION (§ 707*)—TAX SALES—NOTICE—DEED.

The provision of the statute authorizing the sale of land for taxes for 1897, requiring the purchaser to serve notices on the owner of the land and persons in possession, and make affidavit of such service before the purchaser should be entitled to a deed, is mandatory, and hence a tax deed issued for the taxes of that year without such affidavit was void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1426-1428; Dec. Dig. § 707.*]

2. TAXATION (§§ 730, 742*)—TAX SALES—PURCHASE BY COUNTY—EFFECT—FORECLOSURE.

The statute authorizing the sale for taxes in 1897 did not permit the county to become the absolute purchaser in default of other bidders, the county being authorized only to foreclose the certificate of purchase or deed by court proceedings for that purpose, and the assignee of the county acquired no better right.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1463, 1481-1484; Dec. Dig. §§ 730, 742.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 746*)—TAX DEEDS—EXECUTION BY SHERIFF—TERMINATION OF OFFICE.

A sheriff after his term could execute a deed to land which he sold for taxes during his term.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1491, 1492; Dec. Dig. § 746.*]

4. TAXATION (§ 805*)—SALE—PERSON IN POSSESSION—REMOVAL OF CLOUD ON TITLE—LIMITATIONS.

The statute of limitations cannot avail a defendant, in an action to cancel a tax deed as a cloud on title of plaintiffs, who were in possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1593-1597; Dec. Dig. § 805.*]

5. TAXATION (§ 788*)—TAX DEED—RECITALS.

The rule that the recitals in a tax deed are evidence, either conclusive or presumptive, does not apply when the deed itself is attacked for noncompliance with the statutory prerequisites as to giving notice to the owner and parties in possession, before the execution of the deed by the sheriff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1555, 1557, 1559-1560; Dec. Dig. § 788.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Richmond County; Bragaw, Judge.

Action by John F. McNair and another against T. F. Boyd. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John P. Cameron, of Rockingham, for appellant. Russell & Weatherspoon, of Laurinburg, and U. L. Spence, of Carthage, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. This is an action to remove a cloud from title by canceling and setting aside the deed executed by J. M. Smith, sheriff of Richmond, to W. K. Strickland January 19, 1900, in pursuance of a sale of land, therein described, for taxes. The lands in controversy were listed for taxation by Peter L. Pate in 1897, and were sold by J. M. Smith, sheriff of Richmond on July 4, 1898, to satisfy unpaid taxes thereon; no purchaser bid for the lands, which were thereupon bought in by the county. Thereafter W. K. Strickland purchased the certificate of sale from the county, and the sheriff thereupon executed a deed to him. The plaintiff introduced deeds, showing that Peter L. Pate owned the land at the time the lands were listed for 1897, and indeed showing a complete paper title back to a grant from the state, unless the same was divested by the tax deed referred to. It was also in proof that the plaintiff D. L. Gore has since succeeded to the title of Pate.

[1] The statute authorizing the sale of land for taxes for the year 1897, and the execution of a deed therefor, required, as now, the purchaser at such sale to serve notices upon the owner of the land and the parties in possession and make affidavit that such notice and acts required by the statute had been complied with before he was entitled to a deed, and such affidavit must be registered and given in evidence along with the tax deed, in order to vest title in such purchaser. No affidavit was made in this case, and the tax deed was therefore invalid. Matthews v. Fry, 141 N. C. 582, 54 S. E. 379; King v. Cooper, 128 N. C. 847, 38 S. E. 924.

[2] The statute in force at the time this tax sale was made and the deed executed did not permit a county to become the absolute purchaser of land at a tax sale. But the county could only foreclose the certificate of purchase or foreclose the deed, if such deed had been made, instead of issuing a certificate, and the assignee of such county is in no better state than the county. Hence the deed from Smith to Strickland was not a conveyance of the land, but at most the assignment of an equity under which to institute proceedings for foreclosure, which was not done. Wilcox v. Leach, 123 N. C. 74, 31 S. E. 374; Collins v. Bryan, 124 N. C. 738, 32 S. E. 975; Whitman v. Dickey, 124 N. C. 741, 32 S. E. 974; Collins v. Pettitt, 124 N. C. 728, 32 S. E. 975; Huss v. Oraig, 124 N. C. 743, 32 S. E. 974; Kerner v. Cottage Co., 126 N. C. 356, 35 S. E. 590; Smith v. Smith, 150 N. C. 84, 63 S. E. 177.

In Collins v. Pettitt, 124 N. C. 727, 32 S. E. 975, there was a dissenting opinion on this last point, and the next Legislature amended the statute (Laws 1901, c. 558, § 18) by requiring the sheriff to execute a deed to the county or its assignee, without foreclosure. This section is now Revised 2905. But this sale took place under the statute in force prior to that time.

[3] The plaintiffs tendered the amount of taxes due on the lands before suit brought. Moore v. Byrd, 118 N. C. 688, 23 S. E. 968; McMillan v. Hogan, 129 N. C. 314, 40 S. E. 63. The deed could, however, be executed by the sheriff after his term expired.

[4] The statute of limitations cannot avail the defendant, since the action is brought to cancel the tax deed in order to remove a cloud from the title of the plaintiffs who are in possession. Cauley v. Sutton, 150 N. C. 330, 64 S. E. 3; Beck v. Meroney, 135 N. C. 532, 47 S. E. 613.

[5] There was no evidence contradictory to the facts above recited, and the court therefore properly charged the jury that if they believed the evidence they should answer the issues as set out in the record, which are in favor of the plaintiffs. The recitals in the tax deed are evidence, either conclusive or presumptive, under the terms of the statute. But this does not apply when the tax deed itself is attacked for noncompliance with the prerequisites as to giving notice to the owner and parties in possession before the execution of the deed by the sheriff (Revisal 2884), and when the evidence is uncontradicted that the lands were bought in by the county and assigned to Strickland who thereby acquired only an equity foreclosure, but not the right to a deed from the sheriff, under the law then in force.

The decree, therefore, properly adjudged upon the issues found that the deed from Smith to Strickland should be canceled upon payment by the plaintiff to the defendant of the taxes due on the land on June 6, 1898, with 20 per cent. per annum interest thereon in accordance with the statute.

No error.

SHEPHERD v. NORTH CAROLINA R. CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1913.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 400*)—ACTIONS FOR INJURIES TO PERSONS ON TRACK—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Where the evidence showed that a bright and intelligent young man while on the way to his home found a crossing blocked by a freight train, that he attempted to cross some distance from the crossing, near a well-known and much-used crossing for pedestrians, this evidently being the best and nearest route to his home under the circumstances, that it was a dark, rainy night, and that he was run down and killed by a freight train on which there was no headlight, and which gave no signal of its approach, defendant's negligence should have been submitted to the jury, and a nonsuit was improperly granted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1365-1381; Dec. Dig. § 400.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 927*)—REVIEW—APPEAL FROM NONSUIT.

On appeal from a nonsuit, the evidence must be taken in the light most favorable to plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2912, 2917, 8748, 8758, 4024; Dec. Dig. § 927.*]

3. RAILROADS (§ 362*)—OPERATION OF TRAINS—EQUIPMENT—HEADLIGHTS.

Under Laws 1909, c. 446, requiring railroad locomotives to carry an electric headlight at night, the failure to do so is unlawful, and constitutes negligence per se.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1245, 1247, 1248; Dec. Dig. § 362.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alamance County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by J. B. Shepherd, administrator, against the North Carolina Railroad Company. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. H. Carroll, of Burlington, for appellant. Parker & Parker, of Graham, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. [1] This is an action for the wrongful death of plaintiff's intestate, Lacy Shepherd. Upon the admissions in the answer and the uncontradicted testimony it appears that Lacy Shepherd died on the morning of February 20, 1911, from injuries sustained by him the night before on the track of the defendant at Elon College. He lived south of the railroad, and about a quarter of a mile west of the station. He was about 14 years of age, a student at Elon College, and was returning home from a Christian Endeavor meeting, which had been held in one of the college buildings some 200 yards north of the track. His usual crossing place going to and returning from the college to his home was at Main street immediately west of the depot building. On approaching this crossing on that night he found Main street blocked by a long freight train; the engine being near the depot building and the rear of the train extending westward. The engine was shifting cars upon the siding by lantern light. The plaintiff's intestate just before reaching the depot left his comrades and attempted to cross the railroad track at a point about 75 yards east of the said depot. There was evidence that he was knocked down and run over by the train which was going east from said station, the engine being without a headlight, and no signal of any kind being given to warn him of its approach. His left leg was cut off entirely. He was a bright young man, having perfect eyesight and hearing, and in good health and vigor. The testimony is uncontradicted that it was a dark, windy, cold, rainy night, and that the train was without a headlight, or light of any kind showing its approach, and that, without any warning or the ringing of a bell or the blowing of a whistle or otherwise, the train moved out from the depot, going east, and immediately after it had passed, the screams and cries of Lacy Shepherd were heard. Parties went immediately to him, and found him lying just north of the railroad track, and his foot was lying inside and just south of the north rail of said track. The place where the accident occurred is within the corporate limits of Elon College, and was very near two foot-paths or crossings, used by pedestrians living on the south side of the track going to and from the college buildings, which are on the north side of the railroad.

In Heavener v. Railroad, 141 N. C. 245, 53 S. E. 513, the court approved an instruction that if the defendant "was running its train through the corporate limits of the town of Concord and the track whereon the train was running was much used by the public, both in crossing the track and walking on it, and the jury should further find that on the night alleged it was running its train at a rapid rate, without any headlight or other proper signal, and while so running ran over and killed the intestate; and if the jury should further find from the evidence that if there had been a proper light on the engine, or if the bell had been ringing, the intestate would have had notice of the approaching train in time to escape the danger, and that the plaintiff by reason of not having such notice or warning was injured—then such failure to have the headlight or other proper signal was continuing negligence, and would be the proximate cause of the injury.” That case cites Stanley v. Railroad, 120 N. C. 514, 27 S. E. 27, in which the defendant was held liable where the intestate was walking at night on the railroad track and was killed by being struck by a train which carried no light and gave no signal, and that it was error to instruct the jury that plaintiff could not recover if his intestate could have discovered the train by ordinary watchfulness and precaution, and by using his senses, since the failure of the defendant’s train to carry a light was a continuing negligence and the proximate cause of the injury. Stanley v. Railroad, supra, has been cited in many cases; see citations in Anno. Edition. Heavener v. Railroad, supra, has been cited with approval in Morrow v. Railroad, 147 N. C. 627, 61 S. E. 621, which held that it was evidence of negligence on the part of defendant if “the plaintiff, when he was injured, was where people in the vicinity were accustomed to walk, and under the circumstances he was entitled to notice of the approach of the train if there was no headlight and it was so dark that he could not see it in time to leave the track” (citing Purnell v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 832, 29 S. E. 953; Heavener v. Railroad, 141 N. C. 245, 53 S. E. 513). It has also been cited in Allen v. Railroad, 149 N. C. 258, 62 S. E. 1079, and Hammett v. Railroad, 157 N. C. 322, 72 S. E. 1077, which held that the defendant company was negligent where the intestate was killed by a freight train backing along its track “on a dark night, without signals or warning,” and without light on the rear car.

Here the train was going forward, but as there was evidence that there was no light on the engine, and no signal given, the law applicable is the same.

[2] This being a nonsuit, the evidence must be taken in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Cotton v. Railroad, 149 N. C. 229, 62 S. E. 1093. But indeed there was no conflicting testimony. The evidence was that, his way home being blocked by a long freight train, the intestate, a bright and intelligent young man, was struck and fatally injured by the defendant’s train about 75 yards east of the depot building, being at the time at or near a well-known and much-used crossing for pedestrians; that he was evidently on his way home, and was going the best and nearest route to get there under the circumstances; that it was a dark, rainy night, and that he was run down and killed by a freight train on which there was no headlight, and by which no signal of any kind was given of its approach. Among the numerous cases to sustain the proposition that this was negligence can be cited, in addition to those already quoted, Holman v. Railroad, 159 N. C. 44, 74 S. E. 577; Whitesides v. Railroad, 128 N. C. 229, 38 S. E. 878; Powell v. Railroad, 125 N. C. 370, 34 S. E. 530; Cox v. Railroad, 123 N. C. 604, 31 S. E. 848; Fulp v. Railroad, 120 N. C. 525, 27 S. E. 74; Pickett v. Railroad, 117 N. C. 637, 23 S. E. 264, 30 L. R. A. 257, 53 Am. St. Rep. 611.

In Snipes v. Railroad, 152 N. C. 42, 67 S. E. 27, the court says: “It is well established that the employes of a railroad company engaged in operating its trains are required to keep a careful and continuous outlook along the track, and the company is responsible for injuries resulting as the proximate consequence of their negligence in the performance of this duty.” How could this duty be performed in the nighttime in the absence of a headlight? To the same effect, Guilford v. Railroad, 154 N. C. 607, 70 S. E. 393; Edge v. Railroad, 153 N. C. 214, 69 S. E. 74; Sawyer v. Railroad, 145 N. C. 29, 58 S. E. 598, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 200; Arrowood v. Railroad, 126 N. C. 629, 36 S. E. 151.

“Where the plaintiff’s intestate was killed by the engine of the defendant while backing on a dark night over a crossing, without light, signals, or other warning, in a thickly settled community, a clear case of negligence is made out, and without other evidence the question of contributory negligence does not arise.” Gerringer v. Railroad, 146 N. C. 82, 59 S. E. 152 (in which the concurring opinion calls attention to the statute authorizing the abolition of grade crossings and the necessity of doing so); Purnell v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 832, 29 S. E. 953; Stanley v. Railroad, 120 N. C. 514, 27 S. E. 27; Mayes v. Railroad, 119 N. C. 758, 26 S. E. 148; Lloyd v. Railroad, 118 N. C. 1010, 24 S. E. 805, 54 Am. St. Rep. 764.

It is a reasonable inference upon this evidence that if the train had been supplied with the proper headlight the plaintiff’s intestate would most likely have seen its approach in time to have saved himself, or the engineer could have stopped the train in time to have saved his life, especially as the train was just pulling out, and could not have attained a very high rate of speed. If the train could have been stopped in time, it was negligence not to have done so. Sawyer v. Railroad, 145 N. C. 24, 58 S. E. 598, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 200; Baker v. Railroad, 144 N. C. 36, 56 S. E. 553.

[3] The statute (Laws 1909, c. 446) now requires every engine of the defendant to carry an electric headlight at night, and failure to do so was unlawful and per se negligence. This of itself entitled the plaintiff to have this case submitted to the jury. Even prior to the statute, failure to carry a headlight was held to be negligence. Willis v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 909, 29 S. E. 941, and cases there cited and citations thereto in Anno. Ed.

This case differs from Royster v. Railroad, 147 N. C. 351, 61 S. E. 179, relied on by the defendant, because in that case the plaintiff stepped "in front of a train known to be approaching." It also differs from the other two cases cited by the defendant (Beach v. Railroad, 148 N. C. 153, 61 S. E. 864, and Exum v. Railroad, 154 N. C. 410, 70 S. E. 845, 33 L. R. A. [N. S.] 169), in that in those cases the deceased were killed in the daytime while walking on the track, and there was evidence that they did not look and listen for the approaching train.

The judgment of nonsuit must be reversed.

DOOLEY v. SEABOARD AIR LINE RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1913.)

1. COURTS (§ 97*)—RULE OF DECISION.

In construing a federal statute the state Supreme Court is bound by the construction placed thereon by the Supreme Court of the United States in so far as it has construed the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 329-333; Dec. Dig. § 97.*]

2. DEATH (§ 31*)—FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY LAW—RIGHT TO RECOVER—DEPENDENCY OF PLAINTIFF.

Federal Employers' Liability Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, § 1, 35 Stat. 65 (U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1322), provides that every interstate carrier shall be liable in damages to any person suffering injury while employed by such carrier or, in case of death, to his personal representative for the benefit of the surviving widow or husband and children of such employé, and, if none, then of such employé's parents, and, if none, of the next of kin dependent upon such employé, for such injury or death resulting from the company's negligence. The act was amended by Act April 6, 1910, c. 143, § 2, 36 Stat. 291 (U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1325), by adding section 9, which provides that any right of action given by the act to a person suffering injuries shall survive for the benefit of the surviving widow or husband and children, and, if none, then of the employé's parents, and, if none, then of the next of kin dependent upon such employé. Held, that a father may recover for the wrongful death of an adult son merely by proving a reasonable expectancy of pecuniary benefit from the son without showing that he was dependent upon the son; proof of dependency being required only when the recovery is for the benefit of the next of kin.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 40-43, 71; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

3. DEATH (§ 75*)—ACTION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—EXPECTATION OF PECUNIARY BENEFIT.

In an action by a father under the federal Employers' Liability Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 (U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1322), for damages for the negligent death of his son while employed on an interstate railroad, evidence held to sustain a finding that plaintiff had a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the continuance of the life of his son.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 154-177; Dec. Dig. § 75.*]

4. DEATH (§ 86*)—DAMAGES—AMOUNT—FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT.

The damages recoverable by a parent for the negligent death of a son under the federal Employers' Liability Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 (U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 1322), are limited to such loss as results to the parent because of being deprived of a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit by the wrongful death of the employé.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. § 182; Dec. Dig. § 86.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, New Hanover County; Justice, Judge.

Action by J. T. Dooley against the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed for new trial in part.

This is an action brought under the federal Employers' Liability Act of 1908, as amended in 1910, to recover damages for wrongful death.

The first section of the act of 1908 is as follows: "Section 1. That every common carrier by railroad while engaging in commerce between any of the several states or territories, or between any of the states and territories, or between the District of Columbia and any of the states or territories, or between the District of Columbia or any of the states or territories and any foreign nation or nations, shall be liable in damages to any person suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in such commerce, or, in case of the death of such employé, to his or her personal representative, for the benefit of the surviving widow or husband and children of such employé; and, if none, then of such employé's parents; and, if none, then of the next of kin dependent upon such employé, for such injury or death resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employes of such carrier, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency, due to its negligence, in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, works, boats, wharves, or other equipment."

The amendment of 1910 leaves this section as it is in the original act and adds a new section to the act as follows: "Sec. 9. That any right of action given by this act to a person suffering injury shall survive to his or her personal representative, for the benefit of the surviving widow or husband and children of such employé, and, if none, then of such employé's parents; and, if none, then of the next of kin dependent upon such employé, but in such cases there shall be only one recovery for the same injury."

The plaintiff's intestate was 23 years of age at the time of his death, was unmarried, and left surviving him a father and mother. The evidence shows that he was a young man of good character and good habits, and that he was strong, healthy, and industrious.

The father testified as follows: "I am foreman for the Tidewater Power Company, rack work and trestle work. I think I have been employed there now about 12 years and am constantly employed. I get fair wages, $100 a month. At present I am not dependent on my son, but I might be in a few years. At present I would be glad to get whatever help I can get. I was not dependent on my son at the time of his death. He never did leave me, but I think he was about 21, as well as I remember, when he began to work for himself. He went to work for the Seaboard at Monroe. His age had nothing to do with his leaving though. Up to the time he was 21, he gave me money when I needed it. If I happened to be short, he would help me sometimes; if I needed money, he would give it to me, the last cent of it. He could not come home but about every six months. Possibly he would come home in a space of about three months; I am not sure about that. He had to come when they let him off."

His honor charged the jury on the measure of damages that: "The measure of damages for loss of life of plaintiff's intestate is the present value of his net income, and this is to be ascertained by deducting his net gross income and then estimating the present value of the accumulation from such net income, based upon this expectation of life." The defendant excepted. The defendant moved to nonsuit the plaintiff upon the ground that it was neither alleged nor proven that the father and mother were dependent on the son. The motion was overruled, and the defendant excepted.

J. D. Bellamy & Son, of Wilmington, for appellant. J. O. Carr, of Wilmington, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. (after stating the facts as above). The appeal presents two questions for decision: (1) Can an action be maintained for the benefit of the father under the federal Employers' Liability Act for the wrongful death of an adult son, without alleging and proving that the father was dependent on the son? (2) If the action can be maintained, did his honor instruct the jury correctly as to the measure of damages?

[1] Both questions would be answered in the affirmative if we were dealing with an action under the statute of this state, but the action is brought under the federal statute, and in so far as it has been construed by the Supreme Court of the United States we are bound by that construction.

[2] We are referred by counsel for the defendant to three recent decisions of that court, which he insists support his position that dependency must be alleged and proven in all cases. Mich. Cent. R. R. v. Vreeland, 227 U. S. 59, 33 Sup. Ct. 192, 57 L. Ed. 417; Am. R. R. Co. v. Didricksen, 227 U. S. 145,

33 Sup. Ct. 224, 57 L. Ed. 456; Gulf, Col. & Santa Fé R. R. v. McGinnis, 228 U. S. 173, 33 Sup. Ct. 426, 57 L. Ed. 785.

The question was not raised or decided in either case that the word "dependent" in the first section of the act of 1908 refers to the beneficiaries named in the statute as well as to the next of kin; and, while expressions appear to the effect that it was the purpose of the act to give a right of action to dependent relatives, it is distinctly held that the right of action exists in favor of those named in the statute, other than the next of kin, if there is a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the continuance of life, although prospective.

In the Vreeland Case, which was an action for the benefit of the wife on account of the death of her husband, the court says: "The pecuniary loss is not dependent upon any legal liability of the injured person to the beneficiary. That is not the sole test. There must, however, appear some reasonable expectation of pecuniary assistance or support of which they have been deprived. * * * The rule for the measurement of damages must differ according to the relation between the parties plaintiff and the decedent, according as the action is brought for the benefit of the husband, wife, minor child, or parent of minor child, for the loss of services or support to which the beneficiary was legally entitled, or is brought for the benefit of a person whose damages consist only in the loss of a prospective benefit to which he was not legally entitled."

In the Didricksen Case: "The damages recoverable are limited to such loss as results to them because they have been deprived of a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefits by the wrongful death of the injured employé,"—and this language is approved in the McGinnis Case.

It would seem, then, that the construction placed upon the act by the Supreme Court of the United States is that the action may be maintained in behalf of widow, or husband, or children, or parents upon proof of a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit, and that, when it is for the benefit of others as next of kin, there must be proof of dependency.

It may be doubted whether the courts should limit and qualify the right of action for the benefit of the widow, etc., when the statute does not do so, and when the effect is to narrow the scope of the act passed for the protection of employés, so that under this construction in most cases the amount of recovery will be greatly reduced, and in many it will be nominal, but, however this may be, the language will not permit the construction that the word "dependent" relates to any of the beneficiaries except the next of kin.

In the first section, after declaring the liability of the employer to the injured employé, it adds: "Or, in case of the death of such employé, to his or her personal representatives, for the benefit of the surviving widow or husband and children of such employé, and, if none, then of such employé's parents; and, if none, then of the next of kin dependent upon such employé, for such injury or death," etc.

The beneficiaries are divided into three classes, and it is only when there is no one belonging to the first and second classes that an action may be maintained in behalf of more remote relatives, next of kin, and they must be dependent. If, then, the parent may maintain an action for the wrongful death of his son, although not dependent, if he has a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the continuance of his life, what is the meaning of this phrase, and how may the fact be proven?

We follow the precedent set by Mr. Justice Lurton, who said in the Vreeland Case: "The statute in giving an action for the benefit of certain members of the family of the decedent is essentially identical with the first act which ever provided for a cause of action arising out of the death of a human being, that of 9 and 10 Victoria, known as Lord Campbell's Act"—and who had recourse to the decisions upon the English statute and upon like statutes in different states to ascertain the meaning of the federal statute.

One of the earliest cases by the English court is Franklin v. South Eastern R. R. Co., 4 Hurl. & N. 511, in which Pollock, judge, says: "It is also clear that the damages are not to be given merely in reference to the loss of a legal right, for they are to be distributed among relations only, and not to all individuals sustaining such a loss; and accordingly the practice has not been to ascertain what benefit could have been enforced by the claimants, had the deceased lived, and give damages limited thereby. If, then, the damages are not to be calculated on either of these principles, nothing remains except that they should be calculated in reference to a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit, as of right or otherwise, from the continuance of the life. Whether the plaintiff had any such reasonable expectation of benefit from the continuance of his son's life, and, if so, to what extent, were the questions left in this case to the jury. The proper question, then, was left, if there was any evidence in support of the affirmative of it. We think there was. The plaintiff was old and getting infirm; the son was young, earning good wages, and apparently well disposed to assist his father, and in fact he had so assisted him to the value of 8s. 6d. a week. We do not say that it was necessary that the actual benefit should have been derived; a reasonable expectation is enough; and such reasonable expectation might well exist, though, from the father not being in need, the son had never done anything for him." This case was approved in Dalton v. S. E. Railway Co., 4 C. B. N. S. 303, and the latter case was cited with approval by Lord Haldane, during the present year, in Taff Vale Ry. Co. v. Jenkins (1913) A. C. 1, in which he says: "The action is brought under Lord Campbell's Act by the father on behalf of himself and the mother for damages for the loss of the daughter. Now we have heard a good deal of authority cited as to what the foundation of such an action is, but I do not think there is much difficulty in coming to a conclusion as to the principle which underlies those authorities. The basis is not what has been called solatium (that is to say, damages given for injured feelings or on the ground of sentiment) but damages based on compensation for a pecuniary loss. But this loss may be prospective, and it is quite clear that prospective loss may be taken into account. It has been said that this is qualified by the proposition that the child must be shown to have been earning something before any damages can be assessed. I know of no foundation in principle for that proposition, either in statute or in any doctrine of law which is applicable; nor do I think it is really established by the authorities when you examine them. As regards the judgment in the court below, I have already indicated that in my view the real question is that which Willis, J., defines in one of the cases quoted to us, Dalton v. South Eastern Ry. Co. (1): 'Aye or no, was there a reasonable expectation of pecuniary damages?'"

These English cases decide that an action may be maintained for the benefit of the parent for the wrongful death of an adult son, when there is a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the continuance of the life of the son, and that it is not necessary to prove that the son has contributed to the support of the parent in order to establish such reasonable expectation, and the American authorities support the same position.

In Tiffany on Wrong Death (2d Ed.) § 159, the author says: "The loss which a man suffers by the death of a relative may be the loss of something which he was legally entitled to receive, or may be the loss of something which it was merely reasonably probable he would receive. The first description of loss is principally confined to a husband's loss of his wife's services, a wife's loss of her husband's support and services, a parent's loss of the services of a minor child, and a minor child's loss of the support of a parent. But the statutes do not confine the benefit of the action to husbands, wives, minor children, and parents of minor children; and hence a person entitled to the benefit of the action may recover damages for the loss of a pecuniary benefit to which he was not legally entitled, but which it is reasonably probable he would have received except for the death. The second description of loss includes the loss by the beneficiary of any pecuniary benefit which he might reasonably have expected to receive during the lifetime of the deceased by gift, and also the loss of any accumulations which it is probable that the deceased would have added to his estate had he lived out his natural life, and which the beneficiary would probably have received by inheritance. Thus the second description of loss may be divided into (1) losses of prospective gifts, and (2) losses of prospective inheritance. The loss sustained by a husband, wife, minor child, and parent of a minor child may be of both descriptions. The loss sustained by an adult child, parent of an adult child, or collateral relative can only be of the latter description." The following cases, among others, support the text: Greenwood v. King, 82 Neb. 22, 116 N. W. 1128; Hillebrand v. Stan. Bldg. Co., 139 Cal. 236, 73 Pac. 163; Dukeman v. Railroad, 237 Ill. 108, 86 N. E. 712; Railroad v. Kindred, 57 Tex. 498; Hopper v. Railroad, 155 Fed. 277, 84 C. C. A. 21.

In the last case (Hopper v. Railroad) the action was brought in Colorado for the benefit of the father for the wrongful death of his daughter, 19 years of age, but an adult under the laws of Colorado, who had never contributed to the support of the father, and Mr. Justice Van Devanter, then Circuit Judge, said: "Another reason assigned by the Circuit Court for directing a verdict for the defendant was that there was no evidence of any pecuniary injury to the plaintiff from the death of the daughter. In substance, the evidence was as follows: When the deceased was two years old, the mother died at the family home in Texas and shortly thereafter the child was taken by the father to an aunt near Greenfield, Mo., with whom she lived until she was 16. He then sent her to a school at Parkville, Mo., that she might prepare herself for teaching, and he paid the expenses incident thereto. She had been in this school three years and was on a visit to a sister in Colorado when she met her death. She was sympathetic, ambitious, industrious, of good health, fond of her father, and wanted to keep house for him, but had not as yet rendered any service to him or made any contribution to his support. After the mother died, the father continued to reside in Texas, but broke up housekeeping. He was chiefly engaged as a traveling machinist, and sometimes as a farm laborer; his earnings being about $50 per month. He had not married again, and was 60 years old. Considering this evidence in the light of natural influence or prompting of filial ties, we think it would have sustained a finding that there was a reasonable expectation of substantial, though not large, pecuniary benefit to the father from a continuance of the life of the daughter. Pierce v. Connors, 20 Colo. 178, 182, 37 Pac. 721, 46 Am. St. Rep. 279; Gibson, etc., Co. v. Sharp, 5 Colo. App. 321, 327, 38 Pac. 850; Swift & Co. v. Johnson, 71 C. C. A. 619, 138 Fed. 867 [1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1161]."

The evidence meets fully this rule of the English and American courts. The deceased was, according to the evidence, strong, healthy, intelligent, and industrious, and he was a young man of good habits and good character. He had helped the father and was so disposed to him that he would give him his last cent if the father needed it, and the father was growing old, and, while not actually dependent on the son for support at the time of death, he did not know how soon he might be.

[3] This furnishes sufficient evidence to sustain a finding that the father had a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the continuance of the life of the son, and the motion for judgment of nonsuit was therefore properly denied.

We do not think the amendment of 1910 affects this action one way or the other, and we forbear discussing it further than to say that it does not purport to deal with any causes of action except those given by section 1, and that it declares that "the right of action given by this act to a person suffering injury shall survive."

[4] The rule for the assessment of damages laid down by his honor, while following the decisions of this court in the construction of Lord Campbell's Act, is erroneous as applied to the Federal Employers' Liability Act, as construed by the Supreme Court of the United States. In American R. R. v. Didricksen, 227 U. S. 145, 33 Sup. Ct. 224, 57 L. Ed. 456, that court says: "The cause of action which was created in behalf of the injured employé did not survive his death, nor pass to his representatives. But the act, in case of the death of such an employé from his injury, creates a new and distinct right of action for the benefit of the dependent relatives named in the statute. The damages recoverable are limited to such loss as results to them because they have been deprived of a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefits by the wrongful death of the injured employé. The damage is limited strictly to the financial loss thus sustained." This language was quoted with approval in Railroad v. McGinnis, 228 U. S. 175, 33 Sup. Ct. 427, 57 L. Ed. 785, and the court adds in the last case: "In a series of cases lately decided by this court, the act in this aspect has been construed as intended only to compensate the surviving relatives of such a deceased employé for the actual pecuniary loss resulting to the particular person or persons for whose benefit an action is given. The recovery must therefore be limited to compensating those relatives for whose benefit the administrator sues as are shown to have sustained some pecuniary loss."

There must therefore be a new trial on the issue of damages.

Partial new trial.

McCONNELL v. NEW YORK CENT. & H. R. R. CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1913.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 177*)—TRANSPORTATION OF GOODS—ORAL CONTRACT—DAMAGES—CARRIER'S LIABILITY.

Where an initial carrier agreed, for consideration, to carry plaintiff's goods from point of shipment to destination under an oral contract, and such arrangement required transportation of the goods over the lines of other carriers, to be selected by defendant, it was liable as an insurer for injuries to the goods resulting on its own line or that of connecting carriers so selected.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 775-789, 791-803; Dec. Dig. § 177.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 177*)—CONNECTING CARRIERS.

At common law carriers are not bound to carry beyond their own line, but by special contract to transport the goods to destination over the lines of connecting carriers they may subject themselves to liability over the whole route.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 775-789, 791-803; Dec. Dig. § 177.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Moore County; Adams, Judge.

Action by S. P. McConnell against the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

This action was brought to recover damages for injury to a car load of household goods, shipped by plaintiff from Oscawana, N. Y., to Carthage, N. C. The goods were shipped under an oral contract for their transportation from the beginning to the end of their journey and their delivery at the terminal point to the consignee. The goods were damaged during the transit, as the jury find, by the negligence of the defendant in transferring them from its car, in which they had been originally and carefully packed, to a car of a connecting line, and also by the careless manner of stowing or arranging them in that car. Defendant alleges that they were shipped under a written contract of carriage, with a specified valuation clause inserted in consideration of a reduced charge or toll for the carriage, it being $10 per 100 pounds, and other stipulations restricting its liability for loss from negligence to its own line or its portion of the through route, and also in other respects, but they need not be dwelt upon, as the decision of the case will turn upon other matters. After the goods had arrived at their destination, plaintiff signed a bill of lading and placed it among the claim papers, as he said, by inadvertence, not meaning thereby to change the contract of shipment, which contained no clause of limitation as to liability or value in case of loss, and that this paper was not signed by him until after the goods arrived in Carthage; that he did not know how this bill got into his files, and he signed it not knowing what it was and by accident or mistake in making up his claim papers. The following is the verdict of the jury: "(1) Did the plaintiff deliver to the defendant for transportation from Oscawana, N. Y., to Carthage, N. C., a car load of furniture and household goods, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes (by consent). (2) If so, were said furniture and household goods damaged by the negligence of the defendant, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes. (3) Did plaintiff and defendant make a written contract for the transportation of said property, as alleged in the answer? Answer: No. (4) What damages, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to recover? Answer: $2,671, with interest from September, 1911." Judgment was entered upon the verdict, and defendant appealed.

W. H. Neal, of Laurinburg, for appellants.
U. L. Spence, of Carthage, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). The decision of this appeal turns upon the question as to what was the contract of the parties.

[1] If the defendant undertook, for a consideration, to carry the goods from Oscawana, N. Y., to Carthage, N. C., and safely deliver them there, without restriction and with no release of its common-law liability, the defendant is undoubtedly answerable to the plaintiff for actual damage to the goods. His liability is that of an insurer, with certain well-defined exceptions. Hutchinson on Carriers (3d Ed.) § 265 (section 170a), says: "The liability of the common carrier by law is, as has been seen, an unusual and extraordinary one, based upon considerations of public policy which have survived the wonderful change in the circumstances under which they first arose. By that law the common carrier is regarded as a practical insurer of the goods against all losses of whatever kind with the exception of (1) those arising from what is known as the act of God, and (2) those caused by the public enemy; to which in modern times have been added (3) those arising from the act of the public authority, (4) those arising from the act of the shipper, and (5) those arising from the inherent nature of the goods." Currie v. Railroad, 156 N. C. 432, 72 S. E. 493. But there was evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant, which was properly submitted to the jury, and they found that the goods had been damaged by its negligence, so that the question of its common-law liability is not important. The serious and vital question arose upon the issue as to damages; plaintiff contending for full damages, and the defendant for an assessment according to the terms of the bill of lading. The court instructed the jury to find whether the goods were shipped under the unlimited oral contract or under the contract as evidenced by the bill of lading, and in a charge which was full and explicit upon this point, and exceedingly clear and forceful, and, we may add, very fair to the defendant and as favorable as it was entitled to ask or could expect, the court explained the issue thus squarely made by the parties, and the jury have found that the contract was as stated by the plaintiff, oral and unrestricted, and was not the one contained in the bill of lading. It was conceded by learned counsel for the defendant (who presented its side of the case with his usual ability and precision, confining himself to the vital issue of the case) that no particular form or solemnity of execution is required for a contract of the carrier to transport goods. It may be by parol, or it may be in writing. Railway Co. v. Patrick, 144 Fed. 632, 75 C. C. A. 434; Railway Co. v. Jurey, 111 U. S. 584, 4 Sup. Ct. 566, 28 L. Ed. 527; Hutchinson on Carriers (3d Ed.) § 411 (242); Berry v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 1003, 30 S. E. 14. In Railway v. Patrick, supra, the court says: "It (the contract of shipment) may be orally made, and when so made, in the absence of fraud or imposition, it is as obligatory upon both the shipper and carrier as a written one. The difficulty generally arises in establishing its terms by parol, but, when once established, it determines the rights and obligations of the parties, except as affected by statutory law, as conclusively as if it had been in writing and in the accepted form of a negotiable bill of lading."

As the jury have found that the parties contracted orally, and not according to the usual terms of bills of lading issued by the defendant, which limited its liability and presented a rule for assessing the damages in case of a loss, we are not called upon to comment upon the course of decision in this court as to the validity of stipulations in bills of lading, used in interstate commerce, restricting the recovery of damages to an appraised value at the initial point where the contract was made; nor need we discuss the effect of recent decisions in the Supreme Court of the United States upon that question (Adams Express Co. v. Croninger, 226 U. S. 491, 33 Sup. Ct. 148, 57 L. Ed. 814), which were mentioned in the charge of the court. We simply determine the rights of the parties according to the oral contract, which the jury have found to be the true one, and not to have been altered in any way or waived by what afterwards transpired. At the present term, in Smith v. Railway Co., 79 S. E. 433, we have dealt with the question involved in this case, though not upon the same facts. That case resembled more in its main features Railway v. Patrick, supra, where the Court of Appeals of the Indian Territory (affirmed by the higher court) said: "But the paper issued and denominated a bill of lading in the case at bar was never signed by the carrier, and by reason of that fact it was not a bill of lading, and consequently the pretended limitation of liability stated therein was not binding on the appellee, and none of its provisions were binding on either the carrier or the shipper. Therefore there is no evidence that any verbal or written contract was made between the parties, limiting the common-law liability of the carrier." But the principle of the cases is the same.

It having been determined that the goods were shipped under the oral contract to transport and deliver without any restrictive features, the defendant is liable for the injury to the goods, according to the principles of the common law, as an insurer. Mitchell v. Railroad, 124 N. C. 236, 32 S. E. 671, 44 L. R. A. 515; Hinkle v. Railroad, 126 N. C. 882, 36 S. E. 848, 78 Am. St. Rep. 685. It was said in Mitchell's Case, supra: "It is the duty of a common carrier, irrespective of contract, but subject to reasonable regulations, to accept, safely carry, and deliver all goods intrusted to it. If the goods are lost, it must show what became of them, and, if they are damaged, it must prove affirmatively that they were damaged in some way that would relieve it from responsibility. The plaintiff has a prima facie case when he shows the receipt of the goods by the carrier, and their non-delivery or delivery in a damaged condition. Any further defense is in the nature of confession and avoidance. If the defendant pleads exemption by virtue of a special contract, it must prove the contract and show that the loss or damage comes within some one of the exceptions. It must appear to the court as matter of law that the contract is reasonable in all of its essential features, and that the exemptions are not contrary to public policy. All such exemptions, being in derogation of common law, should be strictly construed." Currie v. Railroad, 156 N. C. 482, 72 S. E. 498.

Without deciding the question, it may well be doubted whether an agreement to waive or discharge the original contract by parol and substitute another for it, which is made after the loss had accrued or after breach, would be binding on the plaintiff, where not founded upon a new consideration. Hutchinson on Carriers (3d Ed.) § 412 (243); The Delaware v. Oregon Iron Co., 14 Wall (U. S.) 608, 20 L. Ed. 783, and cases cited; Emerson v. Slater, 22 How. 28, 16 L. Ed. 360.

In the absence of any exemption in the contract from its common-law liability, we must hold that defendant was an insurer, who is liable in all events and for every loss or damage, however occasioned, unless it happened by the act of God or the public enemy, or by some other cause or accident, without any fault or negligence on the part of the carrier, and expressly excepted in its contract, whether oral, or written in the form of a bill of lading. The Delaware v. Oregon Iron Co., 14 Wall. 597, 20 L. Ed. 779. This is said by Justice Clifford, in that case, to be the best description of a carrier's obligation.

[2] Something was said in the argument as to the Carmack amendment to the Hepburn Act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. at Large, 584, c. 3591, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1906, p. 1149), providing that, where goods are received for shipment in interstate commerce, the initial carrier shall be liable for damages caused by itself or a connecting carrier, and making void any contract of exemption against such liability, but allowing the initial carrier to recover over against the connecting carrier, on whose line the loss or damage occurred, the amount thereof. We need not decide whether that act is applicable to the facts of this case, as defendant agreed by its oral contract to carry the goods and deliver them at Carthage, choosing its own intermediate agents or connecting lines for the purpose. At common law, carriers are not bound to carry except on their own lines, but they may, by special contract, subject themselves to liability over the whole course of transit. Railroad Co. v. Pratt, 22 Wall. 123, 22 L. Ed. 827; Railway Co. v. McCarthy, 96 U. S. 258, 24 L. Ed. 693; 3 Enc. of U. S. Supreme Ct. Reports, p. 610, and notes. They thus extend their route with the help of others, and their position is the same as to liability for negligence as if the course and means of transportation employed were all their own. Railroad Co. v. Railroad Co., 110 U. S. 667, 4 Sup. Ct. 185, 28 L. Ed. 291. In this case, though, the jury have found, when the verdict is interpreted in the light of the pleadings, evidence, and the charge of the court, that defendant's own negligence caused the damage to the goods.

We have discovered no error in the trial or in the record.

No error.

GIBSON et al. v. BOARD OF COM'RS OF SCOTLAND COUNTY.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1913.)

ELECTIONS (§ 106*)—REGISTRARS—FAILURE TO ADMINISTER OATH.

The fact that the registrar of elections did not administer an oath to any of the electors whose names were registered in the register book would not invalidate an election to determine whether a school tax should be levied, in the absence of fraud or improper motive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. § 103; Dec. Dig. § 106.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Scotland County; Webb, Judge.

Injunction suit by R. D. Gibson and others against the Board of Commissioners of Scotland County. From a judgment dissolving a temporary injunction, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

This is an action in behalf of certain citizens and taxpayers to restrain the levying of a tax for schools in Rockdale public school district, upon the ground that no legal election authorizing the tax has been held. The General Assembly, at its session of 1913, passed an act (Priv. Laws 1913, c. 347), which was ratified on the 6th day of March, 1913, creating Rockdale public school district in Scotland county, and directing an election to be held upon the question of levying a tax to support the schools in said district. The county commissioners of Scotland county, pursuant to the act, ordered the election, and directed that a new registration of voters be had. The election was held, and a majority voted in favor of the tax, and the vote was properly canvassed and returned, and the result of the election declared. At the hearing of the motion to continue the temporary restraining order to the hearing, his honor found the following facts as to the registration of voters, which are not disputed: "That the registrar did not administer any oath to any one of the 122 voters whose names were entered in said registration book, but he did examine each and every one as to his qualifications to register for said election. That no one of the said voters whose names were entered on the registration book offered to be sworn or requested the registrar to administer any oath to him. That the registrar would have administered an oath to any or all the applicants for registration had they requested him to do so. That no voter within the said school district who had the right to register for said election was denied the right to register and vote in said election. That each and every one of the 122 voters whose names were entered in the registration book had the right to qualify and register for said election. That the election was held at the time and place designated in the order of the board of county commissioners. That the registrar and judges canvassed and judicially determined the results of said election and certified the same to the board of county commissioners at a regular meeting of said board, and the said results were by order of the said board of county commissioners recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Scotland county. That the said results as certified and recorded set forth that there were 122 registered electors in said election. That of these 65 cast their ballots in favor of the school and the tax levy, and the remaining 57 were counted in the results of said election against the school and the tax levy, and that a majority of the qualified electors in said election cast their ballots in favor of the school and the tax levy." The motion of the plaintiffs was denied, the temporary restraining order dissolved, and the plaintiffs excepted and appealed.

Cox & Dunn, of Laurinburg, for appellants.
E. H. Gibson and Jonathan Peele, both of Laurinburg, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. Several irregularities in the registration of voters appear in the record, but counsel for the plaintiffs properly admit that none of them are sufficient to vitiate the election unless the failure to administer an oath to those offering themselves for registration has this effect. The question is important, presenting as it does on one hand the possibility of admitting as voters those not legally qualified, if the requirements of the law are not observed, and on the other making it possible for registrars, by neglect or fraud, to disfranchise an entire electorate. In this case there is no evidence of any improper motive on the part of the registrar or of any of the officers connected with the election, but the principle declared cannot be confined to this case, and will be authority in many others.

We have given the question careful consideration, and have concluded, in the interest of a free and full expression of the popular will, to abide by the precedent heretofore established in this court, and to sustain the election.

In Quinn v. Lattimore, 120 N. C. 426, 26 S. E. 638, 58 Am. St. Rep. 797, it was held that the requirement as to the administration of an oath to the elector before registration was directed to the registrar, and that "where a registrar of election registers a person entitled, under the Constitution and laws to vote, but through inadvertence or fraud fails to administer the oath required to be administered, such person shall not be for that reason deprived of his vote." It is true that in the Lattimore Case all the names on the registration books were not involved, as in this case; but, if the principle is admitted as to one voter, it must logically apply to all.

In 15 Cyc. 807, the author adopts the doctrine of this case, and says: "Statutes prescribing the mode of proceeding of public officers are regarded as directory unless there is something in the statute which shows a different intent. Hence as a general rule a statute prescribing the powers and duties of registration officers should not be so construed as to make the right to vote by registered voters depend upon a strict observance by the registrars of all the minute directions of the statute in preparing the voting list, and thus render the constitutional right of suffrage liable to be defeated, without the fault of the elector, by the fraud, caprice, ignorance, or negligence of the registrars; for if an exact compliance by these officers with all statutory directions should be deemed essential to the right of an elector to vote, elections would often fail, and electors would be deprived without their fault of an opportunity to vote. A constitutional or statutory provision that no one shall be entitled to register without first taking an oath to support the Constitution of the state and that of the United States is directed to the registrars and to them alone; and if they through inadvertence register a qualified voter, who is entitled to register and vote, without administering the prescribed oath to him, he cannot be deprived of his right to vote through this negligence of the officers."

We therefore hold that the election was valid, and that the restraining order ought to have been dissolved.

Affirmed.

IN RE SMITH'S WILL.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1913.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 690*)—RECORD—QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

Assignments of error to the exclusion of evidence cannot be considered, where the record does not disclose what the witnesses would have testified to, or what was proposed to be proven.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2897-2899, 2902-2904, 2906, 2908; Dec. Dig. § 690.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 901*)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS—BURDEN OF SHOWING ERROR.

Error in the rulings of the trial court will not be presumed, and appellant must not only show error, but he must make it appear plainly.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1771, 3670; Dec. Dig. § 901.*]

3. WITNESSES (§ 37*)—COMPETENCY—KNOWLEDGE OF FACTS.

Questions asked witnesses were properly excluded, where it appeared that the witnesses did not have the requisite knowledge of the facts to answer them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 80-87; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

4. WITNESSES (§ 245*)—EXAMINATION—QUESTIONS ALREADY FULLY COVERED.

Questions which were fully covered by previous answers of the witness were properly excluded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 827, 828; Dec. Dig. § 245.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 690*)—RECORD—QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

Where the time to which proposed evidence related was material to its pertinency, assignments of error to the exclusion of such evidence cannot be considered, where the record does not show the time to which it related.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2897-2899, 2902-2904, 2906, 2908; Dec. Dig. § 690.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 690*)—RECORD—QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

Assignments of error to the exclusion of a certain record from the evidence cannot be considered, where its contents are not sufficiently stated to permit the appellate court to pass on its admissibility.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2897-2899, 2902-2904, 2906, 2908; Dec. Dig. § 690.*]

7. WILLS (§ 53*)—RELEVANCY—PERSONAL STATUS AND CONDITION.

Where the issue was the competency to make a will a record of proceedings involving the testator's sanity, made some time after the execution of the will, was not in such reasonable proximity in point of time to the fact in issue as to have any tendency to establish the same.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 111, 112, 120-130; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

8. EVIDENCE (§ 590*)—WEIGHT—INTEREST OF WITNESS.

While the testimony of an interested witness who is not biased by his interest, is entitled to the same weight as if he was not interested, such evidence is not necessarily entitled to the same weight as that of any other witness, as there may be other circumstances affecting the relative credibility of the witnesses.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2459; Dec. Dig. § 590.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Peebles, Judge.

Proceedings for the probate of a certain instrument as the will of W. R. Smith. From a judgment admitting the instrument to probate, the caveator, W. A. Smith, appeals. No error.

J. A. Barringer, of Greensboro, for appellant. King & Kimball, of Greensboro, for appellee.

WALKER, J. The caveators in this proceeding alleged that the paper writing, which had been propounded, was not the will of W. R. Smith, because at the time of its formal execution he did not have sufficient mental capacity to execute such an instrument. There was much evidence taken upon the issue joined between the parties, but it is not necessary to set out even the substance of it, as the exceptions principally relate to its competency.

[1] The caveators asked many questions, to which the propounders objected, and they were excluded, but we cannot sustain the assignment of error in respect to them, as it does not appear what the witnesses would have testified, or what was proposed to be proven. Before we can declare that there was an error committed in rejecting evidence, or if there was error, whether it was prejudicial, we, of course, must know what is the nature of the evidence, in order to ascertain whether it is competent and relevant. Besides, the witness may answer in such a way as to render the error perfectly harmless; for instance, that he has no knowledge of the matter inquired about, or he may give an answer which is entirely unfavorable to the party who asked the question, and perhaps other answers might be given, which would show that the error was not a prejudicial one. Suppose we should order a new trial because the judge excluded the question, "Do you know whether he was suffering with a disease?" and when the question was again put to the witness, he should answer it in the negative, it would at once appear that we had done a vain thing. Counsel should state what they expect to prove by the witness, if the question is objected to, unless the question itself gives sufficient indication of it, and even then there should be some probability shown that the witness will testify as expected.

[2] In Dickerson v. Dall, 159 N. C. 541, 75 S. E. 803, we said: "There is no statement as to the answer of the witness when the question was admitted, nor as to the evidence sought to be elicited when it was excluded; and, as we cannot see that the defendant has been prejudiced, the exceptions cannot be sustained. State v. Leak, 156 N. C. 643 [72 S. E. 567]." Appellant must show error; we will not presume it, but he must make it appear plainly, as the presumption is against him. Albertson v. Terry, 108 N. C. 75, 12 S. E. 892; Lumber Co. v. Buhmann, 160 N. C. 385, 75 S. E. 1008.

[3, 4] There is another class of objections in this case, where the judge properly excluded the questions, as it appeared that the witnesses did not have the requisite knowledge of the facts to answer them. Barberry v. Tombacher, 162 N. C. —, 77 S. E. 412; Aman v. Lumber Co., 160 N. C. 389, 75 S. E. 931.

Other questions were ruled out because they were fully covered by previous answers of the witness, which was proper. Baynes v. Harris, 160 N. C. 307, 76 S. E. 230.

[5] There are still others where the time to which they relate is not given, so as to show their pertinency or bearing upon the issue. The court must be able to see that the proposed evidence is both competent and relevant, and this is required by the rule just stated.

[6] Caveators offered a certain record in a proceeding, said to have involved the sanity of the testator, but the same reason for its exclusion applies as in the case of the objections above noted. We are not informed as to its contents, so that we can see its relevancy and give an intelligent opinion as to the validity of the exception now made to the ruling. We may add these authorities to those already cited upon the general question that the party asking the question, which is excluded, must disclose to the court what he expects to prove by the witness. Overman v. Coble, 35 N. C. 1; State v. Pierce, 91 N. C. 606; Boney v. Railroad, 155 N. C. 95, 71 S. E. 87; Whitmire v. Heath, 155 N. C. 304, 71 S. E. 313. The same rule prevails in other jurisdictions. In re Pinney's Will, 27 Minn. 280, 6 N. W. 791, 7 N. W. 144. We said in Whitmire's Case: "A court can never pass intelligently upon evidence unless it knows what the evidence is, in order that its bearing upon the issue may be determined. The defendant should have stated what he intended to prove; * * * otherwise the evidence should be excluded, not because it is incompetent, but because it cannot be seen to be competent. The court must judge of its competency and "materiality—not the witness. This is the well-settled rule, and is also the 'rule of reason.'" It also applies to papers and records offered in evidence, as will appear by reference to State v. Pierce, supra, and Fulwood v. Fulwood, 161 N. C. 601, 77 S. E. 763.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes.

[7] If the record had any relevancy to the issue, the date to which it related was too remote for any legal bearing upon the case. There must, of course, be some rational connection between the two and some reasonable proximity in point of time, so that the proof that is offered will have, at least, some tendency to establish the fact embodied in the issue. Byrd v. Express Co., 139 N. C. 273, 51 S. E. 851. Such was not the case here. The record was made some time after the date of the will.

[8] The only other assignment of error requiring attention is the one taken to the instruction that, in passing upon the testimony of interested witnesses, the jury may consider any bias they may have by reason of their relation to the parties or the cause, it being insisted that the court should have added that if the jury found that they were not influenced by their "bias," and that they are credible, "their testimony should have the same credit as that of any other witness," following State v. Holloway, 117 N. C. 732, 23 S. E. 168, and this view is earnestly pressed in the brief of counsel. The court was not specially requested to qualify its charge in the respect indicated. But we do not think it should have done so in this case, if the request had been made. If the jury had decided that the witnesses were not biased by their interest or relationship, they should not necessarily have received the credit due to other witnesses, and put upon an equality with them, as the credit to which they were entitled depended, not upon their bias or indifference alone, but upon other circumstances as well—as, for example, their intelligence and their appearance and deportment while on the stand; their character, whether good or bad; their means of knowledge; the probability of their story—these and other matters entered into the estimate of the value to be attached to the testimony of the witnesses, and the jury had the right to put them in the scales, in weighing the testimony, for the purpose of separating the true from the false and finally ascertaining where was the preponderance of the evidence. It may be proper for a judge to tell the jury "that if the witness is not biased by his interest, his testimony should have the same weight as if he was not interested," as said in some of the cases, for this is a truism, and a sensible jury would not overlook it. It is a proposition that proves itself, but it does not mean that the witness shall occupy a position of equality with another who has a better character, more sense and knowledge of the facts, a stronger memory, superior judgment, and whose other qualities and advantages inspire the jury with greater confidence in his credibility. Speaking of the rule of the common law, whereby parties to and persons interested in the event of an action were disqualified, this court said in Hill v. Sprinkle, 76 N. C. 353: "For generations past and up to within the last few years, interest in the event of the action, however small, excluded a party altogether as a witness, and that upon the ground, not that he may not sometimes speak the truth, but because it would not ordinarily be safe to rely on his testimony. This rule is still applauded by great judges as a rule founded in good sense and sound policy. The parties to the action are now competent witnesses, but the reasons which once excluded them still exist, to go only to their credibility." We think that this change in the law of evidence was a wise and salutary one, but it did not abolish the other rules of evidence, and the jury should not be handicapped by an imperative instruction that, in the absence of bias of some who are interested, they should give credit to all the witnesses equally, as those who have had no interest may, in other respects and apart from any consideration of bias or impartiality, be more reliable. It is undoubtedly true that interest naturally produces bias, for we have been told that, "If self the wavering balance shake, it's rarely right adjusted"; but, notwithstanding this tendency of our nature and our frailty, the witness may resist the temptation which thus besets him and prove himself to be worthy of credit. Smith v. Moore, 142 N. C. 277, 56 S. E. 275, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 684. If he is not in fact prejudiced by his relation to the cause or the parties, the jury may then consider whether there are other circumstances which impair the strength of his testimony, such as want of intelligence, character, knowledge of the facts, and so forth. The subject has so recently undergone discussion in this court that further comment is unnecessary. Herndon v. Railway, 162 N. C. —, 78 S. E. 287. See, also, State v. Vann, 77 S. E. 295, at the last term.

A careful examination of the entire case discloses no reversible error.

No error.

STATE v. SMITH.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1913.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 313*)—OFFENSES—ABANDONMENT—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to sustain a conviction of a husband for willful abandonment of his wife without providing adequate support for her and her child.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 1110; Dec. Dig. § 313.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 317*)—TRIAL—FAILURE OF ACCUSED TO TESTIFY.

Failure of the accused to testify in a criminal case should not be used against him, and should not be considered to his prejudice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 732; Dec. Dig. § 317.*]

3. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 302*)—OFFENSES—“ABANDONMENT.”

“Abandonment” of a wife, in order to constitute an offense, must be willful, to wit, without just cause or excuse, unjustifiable, wrongful, and without her consent, and it must also appear that defendant has failed to provide adequate support for her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 1100; Dec. Dig. § 302.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 4-13; vol. 8, p. 7559.]

4. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 305*)—ABANDONMENT—DEFENSES—OFFER OF HOME—GOOD FAITH.

Where a husband left his wife with intent not to return to her, and failed to provide adequate support, an offer to provide her a home in another city, not made in good faith, is no defense to a prosecution for abandonment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 1103; Dec. Dig. § 305.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1173*)—APPEAL—WAIVER OF ERROR.

An alleged error not argued in the brief will be deemed waived, as expressly provided by Supreme Court rule 84 (140 N. C. 666, 53 S. E. ix).

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3011-3013; Dec. Dig. § 1173.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1120*)—APPEAL—RULINGS ON EVIDENCE—RECORD.

Error, in receiving in evidence on a criminal prosecution a complaint in a civil action, would not be reviewed where the contents of the complaint was not set out in the record, so as to show prejudice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2931-2937; Dec. Dig. § 1120.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—APPEAL—RULINGS ON EVIDENCE—PREJUDICE.

Where, in a prosecution for wife abandonment, it was not disputed that defendant had actually abandoned his wife without adequate support, he was not prejudiced by the admission of evidence by the sheriff that he could not find him in the county when he attempted to serve his process.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 754, 8088, 8130, 8137-8143; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—RULINGS ON EVIDENCE—PREJUDICE.

Where, in a prosecution for wife abandonment, there was no dispute that accused had actually abandoned his wife and child without adequate support, and there was also ample evidence that he did not intend to return and support them, he was not prejudiced by the admission of a part of his answer in an action for divorce, which had been begun by his wife against him, but not tried.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 754, 8088, 8130, 8137-8143; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Union County; Bragaw, Judge.

John A. Smith was convicted of abandoning his wife without providing adequate support for her and her child, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Adams, Armfield & Adams and Redwine & Sikes, all of Monroe, for appellant. The Attorney General, for the State.

WALKER, J. [1] This is an indictment against the defendant for abandonment of his wife without providing adequate support for her and their child, under Revisal § 3365. The evidence unfolds a very sad, but revolting, story of this unhappy marriage, caused by the persistent indifference of the defendant towards the prosecutrix and his constant neglect of her, which finally culminated in his desertion of his home and his refusal to perform his marriage obligations. He had seduced this woman before their marriage “with studied, sly, ensnaring art,” and pleaded scriptural authority for his betrayal of her and her consequent ruin. He went through the form of redeeming his promise, it is true, and married her, but with evident intent of dissolving the unhallowed union. He plied her with false and repeated accusations of infidelity to him, and refused to support her, in the studied execution of his preconceived design of breaking off their marital relations and forcing her to set him free by suing for a divorce. He saved himself from a prosecution for this seduction by the formal ceremony of marriage, for, so far as he is concerned, it really had no moral sanction. A child was born to them. Shortly after the marriage he began his persecution of his wife by baseless charges of her intimacy with other men, which he himself must have known were without foundation in fact. He proposed that he debauch himself so that she could get a divorce, and, failing in this, he indecently proposed that she do the same thing and give him grounds for severing the marital tie, adding that he would give her $500 to release him in that way. He told her that he had a wife and children in Florida, but this was not true, and seems to have been said to frighten her into submission to his will. The jury might well have found from the evidence, not only that he deserted her willfully after the marriage, and failed to furnish her and their child an adequate support, but that he clearly intended, when he married her, to separate himself from her, and to add the crime of abandonment to that of antenuptial seduction, which she had condoned by the marriage, and which stood as a bar to his criminal indictment. She scornfully resented all of his immoral suggestions and wicked solicitations, and indignantly protested against his evil course towards her, which had grown from bad to worse. When baffled by her steady refusal to defile herself for his vile purposes, or even to listen to his base proposals, he then tried to subject her to temptation, and offered a bribe for the purpose of placing her in a compromising position so that he could use the testimony of his accomplice against her virtue. But he again failed and finally offered to take her to a neighboring city to live, but she declined to go, as his previous treatment and his conduct had convinced her that he was not acting in good faith, after a change of heart and promise of repentance and reform, but solely for the purpose of removing her from the protection of her friends and family, and so isolating her that he might the more easily and successfully continue in his efforts to destroy her character out of the mouths of suborned witnesses of low degree, and, if the evidence is credible, she had good reason to think so and to take counsel of her fears. He complained of her extravagance when she had spent none of his money. For some weeks after the marriage they lived at her grandmother's home. The evidence shows that during this period as the Attorney General puts it, "he squandered on her the sum of 30 cents. Not being able to stand such excessive cost of living, the defendant made arrangements for him and his wife to live in the home of the wife's father. He carried his wife and all of their belongings to the father's home, but after 11 days, during which time he spent only one night with his wife, he moved his own things away, and has never lived with her since." He finally left for Florida, remaining away several months, and stating, while there, that he never expected to live with his wife again, and that the people at his home could do nothing with him, as, "if it got hot, he could go somewhere else and stay," and he repeated this declaration several times, and once admitted that he married the prosecutrix to get rid of trouble he had brought upon himself, alluding to his seduction of her.

[2] The defendant introduced no evidence, but this failure on his part to explain the damaging facts we have recited, and there are more of the same kind in the testimony sent up, cannot be used against him and should prejudice him in no degree.

[3] The abandonment must be willful; that is, without just cause or excuse—unjustifiable and wrongful. State v. Hopkins, 130 N. C. 647, 40 S. E. 973; State v. Toney, 163 N. C. —, 78 S. E. 156. If she consented to the separation, his departure from her home and living apart from her would not be an abandonment. Witty v. Barham, 147 N. C. 479, 61 S. E. 372. There are two ingredients of this crime—abandonment and failure to provide adequate support for wife and child—and both must be alleged and proved. State v. May, 132 N. C. 1021, 43 S. E. 819. The state offered ample evidence to establish the completed offense.

[4] Defendant's offer to provide a home for his wife in Charlotte is no defense, if it was not genuine or made in bad faith. The court submitted this view of the case to the jury by fair, full, and correct instructions, and they found against the defendant. The verdict, in that particular, is well warranted by the evidence, and the defendant has alleged no error with respect to it.

[5, 6] He assigns in the case on appeal four errors: The first, as to the introduction of the complaint filed in a divorce suit brought by his wife, is abandoned, as it does not appear in his brief. Rule of this court No. 34 (140 N. C. 606, 53 S. E. ix); Rogers v. Whiting Manufacturing Co., 157 N. C. 484, 73 S. E. 227. But if it was before us, we could not sustain it, as the contents of the pleading is not set out, and we, therefore, cannot see that the ruling was prejudicial. State v. Pierce, 91 N. C. 606; Whitmire v. Heath, 155 N. C. 304, 71 S. E. 318; Fulwood v. Fulwood, 161 N. C. 601, 77 S. E. 763. In re Pinney's Will, 27 Minn. 280, 6 N. W. 791, 7 N. W. 144; In re Smith's Will, 79 S. E. 977, at this term.

[7] The second exception, which was taken to the testimony of the sheriff that he could not find defendant in the county when he attempted to serve his process, was only relevant upon the ground that there was evidence he was trying to evade the service and had absented himself. But in the view we take of the case, it is an immaterial fact, and was harmless. It was not disputed, either here or below, so far as appears, that defendant had actually abandoned his wife—that is, left her and his child without any adequate support—unless he was justified in so doing, which we have seen was not the case. The same may be said of the third exception relating to the same subject.

[8] The fourth exception, as to the introduction of part of the answer in the divorce suit, would give us some trouble if the record admitted by the court were at all essential as a link in the chain of evidence, but we think it is not, and if error there be, it is harmless. If material evidence is improperly admitted, there should, of course, be a reversal, even though there be enough, or an abundance, of other proof upon which the verdict could have been found for the State. Church v. Hubbard, 2 Cranch (U. S.) 187, 2 L. Ed. 249. A defendant is entitled in law to hear the particular accusation against him, to have the prosecution restricted to that accusation, and consequently the proof, and not to be convicted of any other offense than the one specially charged in the indictment. This is his natural and constitutional right. But there must be prejudicial and not merely theoretical error. Verdicts and judgments should not be lightly set aside upon grounds which show the alleged error to be harmless, or where the appellant could have sustained no injury from it. There should be at least something like a practical treatment of the motion to reverse, and it should not be granted except to subserve the real ends of substantial justice. Hilliard on New Trials (2d Ed.) §§ 1 to 7. The motion should be meritorious and not frivolous. The commentators on New Trials, Graham and Waterman, volume 3, p. 1235, thus state the prevailing rule: "The foundation of the application for a new trial is the allegation of injustice, and the motion is for relief. Unless, therefore, some wrong has been suffered, there is nothing to be relieved against. The injury must be positive and tangible, not theoretical merely. For instance, the simple fact of defeat is, in one sense, injurious, for it wounds the feelings. But this alone is not sufficient ground for a new trial. It does not necessarily involve loss of any kind, and without loss or the probability of loss there can be no new trial. The complaining party asks for redress—for the restoration of rights which have first been infringed and then taken away. There must be, then, a probability of repairing the injury, otherwise the interference of the court would be but nugatory. There must be a reasonable prospect of placing the party who asks for a new trial in a better position than the one which he occupies by the verdict. If he obtain a new trial, he must incur additional expense, and if there is no corresponding benefit, he is still the sufferer. Besides, courts are instituted to enforce right and restrain and punish wrong. Their time is too valuable for them to interpose their remedial power idly, and to no purpose. They will only interfere, therefore, where there is a prospect of ultimate benefit." Tried by this rule, we do not think any reversible error was committed. Defendant says that such evidence is forbidden by Revisal, § 493. "The verification may be omitted when an admission of the truth of the allegation might subject the party to prosecution for felony. And no pleading can be used in a criminal prosecution against the party as proof of a fact admitted or alleged in such pleading." If defendant's construction of this statutory provision is conceded, we are yet of opinion there was no substantial error.

[We do not see how the admission in the answer that defendant had sold his property and paid a part of his debts can have any material bearing upon the issue in this case, nor how the fact that he went to Florida and other places could have prejudiced him in his defense. It made no difference that he went to other states. The fact was not denied that he left his wife in this state before he went elsewhere, and it was immaterial to inquire as to his whereabouts afterwards. If the pleading was introduced to contradict defendant's admission therein by showing that he did not visit those places, we would order a new trial if we could see that he had been harmed by it, but it clearly appears from a careful review of the whole case that such has not been the result. The uncontroverted facts showed a plain case of guilt under the statute, and there was no pretense of legal excuse, apart from the promise of a home in Charlotte, which the jury have found to have been a mere attempt to lure his wife, who was pure and had been faithful, to her own ruin, that he might have cause to put her away. She was too wary for him, and declined to walk into the net he had so vainly spread for her.

There was no error in the trial.
No error.

HENRY et al. v. HEGGIE.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 12, 1918.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 197*)—TRANSFER OF MORTGAGED PROPERTY—ASSUMPTION OF MORTGAGE.

An agreement to purchase property subject to the incumbrances thereon did not constitute an assumption of such incumbrances so as to make the purchaser personally liable to the vendor for an amount paid by the vendor to satisfy an incumbrance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 407; Dec. Dig. § 197.*]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 197*)—TRANSFER OF MORTGAGED PROPERTY—ASSUMPTION OF MORTGAGE.

A covenant in a deed to assume all incumbrances on the property, as a part of the consideration with special reference to particular mortgages, which were excepted from the warranty, constituted an assumption of the mortgage debt by the grantee and an indemnity against its payment by the grantor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 407; Dec. Dig. § 197.*]

3. DEEDS (§ 66*)—DELIVERY—ACCEPTANCE—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Whether a deed was delivered to and accepted by the grantee so as to bind him to a performance of its covenants or stipulations was a mixed question of fact and law; and the jury should find the facts and the judge declare the law arising thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 127, 638; Dec. Dig. § 66.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 235*)—INSTRUCTIONS—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

In a grantor's action to recover the amount of a mortgage, which he had paid, from the grantee, where the grantee denied that he accepted a deed containing an assumption of the mortgage and testified that he rejected it, and the deed was produced and offered in evidence by the grantor, the court erred in directing the jury to find for the grantor if they believed the evidence, as they could not believe all the evidence where it conflicted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 539-541, 543-548, 551; Dec. Dig. § 235.*]

5. DEEDS (§ 208*)—DELIVERY—ACCEPTANCE—EVIDENCE.

On the question of whether a deed was delivered to and accepted by a grantee, the fact that it was produced by the grantee under a notice to him or a rule of the court requiring him to do so might have an important bearing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 625-632; Dec. Dig. § 208.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

6. DEEDS (§ 45*)—PERSONS LIABLE—GRANTEE UNDER DEED POLL.

A grantee who receives and accepts a deed is liable on its covenants to be performed by him, as the consideration of the grant or a part thereof, whether he signed it or not, since the acceptance of the deed is equivalent to an agreement on his part to perform the covenant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 89-94; Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Granville County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by M. Henry and wife against O. C. Heggie. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. New trial granted.

The defendant, desiring to purchase a house and lot from the plaintiff, which were subject to two mortgages, executed by the plaintiff, one in favor of H. M. Gillis for about $900 and the other in favor of W. L. Taylor for about $150, agreed to buy the same for the sum of $25, subject to present incumbrances, as stated above. The price asked by the plaintiff was $1,075, and, in the letter to him agreeing to buy the property, defendant stated that the payment of the $25 for the property, subject to the mortgages, would equal his price; that is, $1,075. Plaintiff caused a deed for the house and lot to be prepared, executed and acknowledged the same, with joinder and privy examination of his wife, and sent it to the defendant. In the deed there is a covenant on the part of the defendant, as a part of the consideration to assume all incumbrances on the property, with a special reference to the Gillis and Taylor mortgages, and they are excepted from the warranty. There was evidence that defendant received the deed and accepted the same, giving a check for the $25 to Mr. Lanier, attorney for the plaintiff, who collected the same. Defendant testified that he had not accepted the deed but delivered it back and had never exercised any control or dominion over the land. The plaintiff paid the Taylor debt, amounting at the time to $165, and brings this action to recover the amount so paid. The property was sold under the Gillis mortgage and brought not more than enough to pay that debt.

The following issue was submitted to the jury, "Is the defendant indebted to the plaintiff, and, if so, in what amount?" and the jury answered it, "Yes, $150, with interest from July 12, 1910," under an instruction of the court that, if they believed the evidence, they should so answer it. Exception and appeal by the defendant.

B. S. Royster, of Oxford, for appellant. T. Lanier and Hicks & Stem, all of Oxford, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] We do not think that the written agreement to buy the lot constituted an assumption of the mortgages, so as to make the defendant liable personally to the plaintiff for the amount he paid to satisfy the Taylor debt. The rule as settled by the authorities, so far as applicable here, is thus stated in 27 Cyc. at pages 1342, 1343, 1344: "Where a conveyance of land is made expressly subject to an existing mortgage, the effect, as between the grantor and the grantee, is to charge the incumbrance primarily on the land, so as to prevent the purchaser from claiming reimbursement or satisfaction from his vendor in case he loses the land by foreclosure or is compelled to pay the mortgage to save a foreclosure; in reality it amounts simply to a conveyance of the equity of redemption. * * * The grantee of mortgaged land does not incur a personal liability for the payment of the mortgage debt, enforceable by the mortgagee, merely because the deed recites that it is made subject to the mortgage; such personal liability is created only by a distinct assumption of the debt or contractual obligation to pay it. Where the land is sold subject to a mortgage, but without an assumption of it by the grantee, the mortgagor remains liable for any deficiency. But still, the contract being one of indemnity and the land being the primary fund for the payment of the mortgage, if the grantor is compelled to pay it, he may require an assignment of the mortgage to himself, or he will be regarded as an equitable assignee so as to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, and so will be enabled to use the mortgage to force reimbursement from his grantee." Hancock v. Fleming, 103 Ind. 533, 3 N. E. 254; McNaughton v. Burke, 63 Neb. 704, 89 N. W. 274; M. C. & M. Co. v. Hand, 197 Ill. 288, 64 N. E. 381; Hartley v. Harrison, 24 N. Y. 170; Loudenslager v. W. H. Land Co., 64 N. J. Law, 405, 45 Atl. 784; Equitable L. Assn. v. Bostwick, 100 N. Y. 628, 3 N. E. 296.

The McNaughton Case holds that: "One who buys land subject to an incumbrance acquires only an equity of redemption; that is, the interest remaining after the incumbrance has been paid. The understanding between the grantor and grantee is that the former reserves for the benefit of the incumbrancer so much of the estate as may be necessary for the satisfaction of the debt. 'A conveyance of land subject to a mortgage * * * is neither more nor less than a simple deed of whatever interest or estate the grantor has after the debt is satisfied out of it.'"

Chief Justice Mitchell, in Hancock v. Fleming, supra, said: "The difference between the purchasers assuming the payment of the mortgage, and simply buying subject to the mortgage, is simply that in the one case he makes himself personally liable for the payment of the debt and in the other case he does not assume such liability. In both cases he takes the land charged with the payment of the debt and is not allowed to set up any defense to its validity.' Jones, Mort. § 736; Atherton v. Toney, 43 Ind. 211; Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. § 1205. The land, nevertheless, remained the primary fund as between the purchaser and the mortgagee, out of which payment of the debt must be made."

It was held in Loudenslager v. W. H. L. Co., supra, that: "A declaration counting upon an express assumption of a mortgage by the grantee in a deed (the deed being made part of the declaration) will not be supported by a clause in the deed 'that the land is conveyed subject to such mortgage'; the words of assumption being absent."

The court ruled in the case of Eq. L. Asso. Co. v. Bostwick, supra, that a personal obligation on the part of a grantee to pay a mortgage upon the premises conveyed may not "be implied from a statement in his deed that the conveyance is subject to the mortgage, and that the amount thereof forms part of the consideration and is deducted therefrom."

The language in the last case we have cited is very much like that used in the letter of defendant offering to buy the lot.

A valuable authority is Shepherd v. May, 115 U. S. 505, 6 Sup. Ct. 119, 29 L. Ed. 456, where the court says: In order "to raise such a liability as is contended for by plaintiff" in error, "there must be words in the deed of conveyance from which, by fair import, an agreement to pay the debt can be inferred. This was expressly held in Elliott v. Sackett, 108 U. S. 132 [2 Sup. Ct. 375, 27 L. Ed. 678], where Mr. Justice Blatchford, in delivering the judgment of this court, said: 'An agreement merely to take land, subject to a specified incumbrance, is not an agreement to assume and pay the incumbrance. The grantee of an equity of redemption, without words in the grant importing in some form that he assumes the payment, does not bind himself personally to pay the debt. There must be words importing that he will pay the debt to make him personally liable.' To the same effect, see Belmont v. Coman, 22 N. Y. 438 [78 Am. Dec. 213]; Flake v. Tolman, 124 Mass. 254 [26 Am. Rep. 659]; Hoy v. Bramhall, 19 N. J. Eq. 74, 78; Fowler v. Fay, 62 Ill. 375. There are no such words in the deed made by the plaintiff in error."

[2] These cases also show that the terms of the deed tendered by plaintiff and alleged to have been delivered to and accepted by the defendant are sufficient to constitute an assumption of the mortgage debt and an indemnity against its payment by the plaintiff.

[3] So that it all comes back to the point whether the deed was delivered by the plaintiff and accepted by the defendant so as to bind the latter to a performance of its covenants or stipulations. This is a mixed question of fact and law. The jury must find the facts and the judge declare the law arising thereon.

[4] We find upon examination of the record, as will appear by our statement of the case, that the evidence upon this matter, the acceptance of the deed, was conflicting, and therefore the court could not direct the jury how to find if they believed the evidence. Rickett v. Railroad, 123 N. C. 255, 31 S. E. 497; Cox v. Railroad, 123 N. C. 611, 31 S. E. 848; Bank v. Nimocks, 124 N. C. 352, 32 S. E. 717. The jury cannot well believe all of the evidence if it conflicts. It amounted to an instruction that there is no evidence to prove defendant's contention, when we see that there is. He denies that he accepted the deed and testifies that he rejected it. Besides, the plaintiff produced the deed at the trial and offered it in evidence. All of this was some evidence.

[5] It was stated on the trial as a fact, though it does not appear in the record, that the deed was produced by the defendant under a notice to him or a rule of the court requiring him to do so. If this appears in the case at the next trial, it may have an important bearing upon the question of delivery and acceptance.

[6] If the defendant received and accepted the deed, he is liable upon its covenants, as the acceptance by the grantee of a deed containing a covenant to be performed by him as the consideration of the grant, or a part thereof, is equivalent to an agreement on his part to perform it, without regard to whether he signed it or not. 11 Cyc. 1045; Maynard v. Moore, 76 N. C. 158, citing Staines v. Morris, 1 Ves. & B. 14; Finley v. Simpson, 22 N. J. Law, 311, 53 Am. Dec. 252; Herring v. Lumber Co., 79 S. E. 876, at this term.

There was error in the charge, as pointed out, and there must be another trial.

New trial.

PENDERGRAST v. DURHAM TRACTION CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 19, 1913.)

CARRIERS (§ 292*)—INJURY TO PASSENGERS—UNAVOIDABLE ACCIDENT.

As the street car on which plaintiff was a passenger approached a certain point, plaintiff asked the conductor to slow up so that he could get off, and attempted to get off while the car was going 3 or 4 miles an hour, when he caught a very thin finger ring in a screw at the bottom of the handhold, 36 inches from the bottom of the step, and his little finger was jerked off by the forward motion of the car. The screw head projected about one-sixteenth of an inch from the surface. Held, that the injury was an unavoidable accident, for which the street car company was not responsible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1168-1170, 1175-1178; Dec. Dig. § 292.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Durham County; Peebles, Judge.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Action by A. T. Pendergrast against the Durham Traction Company. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Bryant & Brogden, of Durham, for appellant. Winston & Biggs, of Raleigh, and W. L. Foushee, of Durham, for appellee.

HOKE, J. The evidence, among other things, tended to show that on the 25th day of September, 1911, the plaintiff, a passenger on a street car of defendant company, in the endeavor to alight from the car while in motion, had the little finger of his left hand torn off by reason of a thin ring on that finger catching on the head of a screw at the bottom of the grab handle on the forward part of the car. The plaintiff testified that he had gone out on the platform for the purpose of alighting as the car entered the switch on Chapel Hill street when it was moving at the rate of 5 to 6 miles per hour, having asked the conductor to slow up, and, at the time of the occurrence, it was moving at the rate of 3 or 4 miles per hour; that the screw was at the bottom of the grab handle in the brass knob or socket in which the handle rested, 36 inches from the bottom of the step, and the purpose was to keep the rod from turning in the socket; that it was on the inside of the knob, and the head projected about one-sixteenth of an inch from the surface; that plaintiff took hold of the handle on the front of the platform with his right hand, and of the handle on the front part of the car with his left hand, and as he attempted to alight his left hand glided down the rod and the ring on his little finger caught in the screw head and was pulled off by the forward movement of the car. The witness testified, further, that he did not know whether the conductor heard witness when he asked him to slow down, and that he did not hear the motorman if he told witness to "wait and he would stop the car." The motorman testified in this connection that, when he saw the plaintiff standing down on the step with his hand on the grab handle, he said to him, "Mister, if you want to get off, wait a minute, and I will stop the car."

On these the controlling facts relevant to the inquiry, we are of opinion that the plaintiff was properly nonsuited. Giving due consideration to the circumstance of the obscure placing of the screw and the slight projection on the inside of the lower end of the rod and only 36 inches from the bottom of the step, and projecting above the surface only one-sixteenth of an inch, that the plaintiff was caught in a very thin finger ring on his left hand, and that the wrench was given by the forward movement of the car, which had never stopped, and from which he was in the act of alighting, we are of opinion that the case comes clearly within the category of inevitable accident, and for which the defendant should not be held responsible. Under the combination of circumstances shown forth in the evidence, the negligence of the defendant, if it existed, could in no sense be regarded as the proximate cause of the injury, and the judgment of nonsuit must therefore be affirmed.

Affirmed.

FARMERS' BANK & TRUST CO. et al. v. SOUTHERN GRANITE CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 5, 1913.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 480*)—NOTICE—MORTGAGES AND BONDS—PRIORITY.

Where a prior mortgage to one who was secretary of a corporation was on record when the corporation issued bonds secured by mortgage on the same property, so that subsequent mortgagees could have ascertained the existence of a prior mortgage, such person was not estopped from asserting the validity of the prior mortgage as against the purchasers of the bonds, though they were executed by him as secretary of the company, and were headed "First Mortgage Bonds" and "Second Mortgage Bonds"; the body of the bonds not representing that there was no other mortgage on the property and the prior mortgage being of record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 480;* Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 307.]

2. ESTOPPEL (§ 22*)—ESTOPPEL BY DEED.

A general recital will not ordinarily furnish the basis for an estoppel.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. §§ 27-51; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

3. ESTOPPEL (§ 25*)—INJURY.

An estoppel can be invoked only by a party who shows that he was misled to his injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. §§ 61, 62; Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

4. REFERENCE (§ 101*)—MOTION TO RECOMMIT—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT.

The granting of a motion to recommit to a referee to take further proof is a matter for the trial court's discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Reference, Cent. Dig. §§ 169-180; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1022*)—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Appellant must satisfy the Supreme Court by a preponderance of the evidence that the trial judge erred in his finding of fact, made in approving the findings of a referee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4015-4018; Dec. Dig. § 1022.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Lancaster County; T. S. Sease, Judge.

Action by the Farmers' Bank & Trust Company and another against the Southern Granite Company and others. From decree for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

The third exception was to the trial court's failure to rule upon plaintiff's motion to recommit the case to the referee, for further proof that the holders of the mortgage bonds relied, in purchasing them, upon the assurances contained therein.

"Referee's Report.

"Alleging that they are the owners and holders of a note and mortgage, executed by defendant Southern Granite Company on May 4, 1908, in the sum of $15,000 in favor of plaintiff T. J. Strait the plaintiffs commenced this action on July 7, 1911, for the foreclosure of said note and mortgage. The defendant Charlotte Trust Company was made a party defendant, as alleged in the complaint, because it holds a deed of trust and an indenture of trust on the real estate covered by the mortgage sought to be foreclosed in this action, to secure certain bonds issued by defendant Southern Granite Company. The other defendants were made parties because, as alleged, they are judgment creditors of defendant, Southern Granite Company. Notice of pendency of this action was duly filed on the 7th day of July, 1911, in the offices of the register of mesne conveyances for the counties of Lancaster and Kershaw, in this state, the lands in question lying partly in both of said counties, but chiefly in Lancaster county.

"The complaint alleges the execution and delivery by the said defendant Southern Granite Company to the plaintiff T. J. Strait of the note for $15,000, under date of May 4, 1908, due June 11, 1908, which note provides for the payment of interest on said principal at the rate of 8 per centum per annum, payable annually, and also for 10 per cent. of the principal thereof additional for attorney's fees in case said note should be placed in the hands of an attorney at law for collection after maturity; alleges the execution and delivery of a real estate mortgage upon the said tract of 1,093 acres of land in Lancaster and Kershaw counties, S. C., to secure the payment of said note; alleges the record of said mortgage in Lancaster and Kershaw counties on September 18, 1908, and September 21, 1908, respectively.

"The complaint further alleges the assignment and transfer of the said note and mortgage on May 5, 1908, by plaintiff T. J. Strait to the Charlotte National Bank, as security for a note of $3,000, given by said T. J. Strait solely for the accommodation and benefit of the said defendant Southern Granite Company; that, subsequently, on November 11, 1910, said note and real estate mortgage for $15,000 so held as collateral security, together with the said $3,000 note for which said former note was held as security, were duly transferred and assigned by the said Charlotte National Bank to the said plaintiff Farmers' Bank & Trust Company, for valuable consideration, and that said plaintiff is the owner of the same to the extent of the consideration so paid by said plaintiff, and that plaintiff T. J. Strait is the owner of the remainder of said original note and the mortgage securing same.

"It is also alleged in the complaint that the Charlotte Trust Company, as trustee, for certain bondholders, and the several judgment creditors named, hold liens on the said real property junior in right to the mortgage sought to be foreclosed herein; and judgment is asked for the sale of the mortgaged premises, and an application of the proceeds to the payment of the several lien debts held by the plaintiffs and the defendants named, in accordance with their respective legal priorities, after first paying the costs and disbursements of this action and the attorney's fees for the attorneys for the plaintiffs herein.

"The answer of the defendant Southern Granite Company admits the execution and delivery of the note and mortgage for $15,000 and the record of said mortgage in Lancaster and Kershaw counties, as alleged, and the transfer of the same to the Charlotte National Bank as already stated, but avers that the said defendant is without knowledge or information as to the alleged transfer of the said note and mortgage to the plaintiff Farmers' Bank & Trust Company, and denies that plaintiff T. J. Strait is entitled to any part of any sum of money that may be due upon said note and mortgage.

"Further answering, the said defendant alleges: 'That on the 18th day of April, 1907, the said T. J. Strait made and entered into a written agreement with this defendant, of which the following is a copy: "Whereas, Southern Granite Company is indebted to me, T. J. Strait, in the sum of fifteen thousand ($15,000) dollars, which indebtedness is secured by a mortgage of one thousand and ninety-three (1,093) acres of land owned by the Southern Granite Company, know all men by these presents, that I, T. J. Strait, in consideration of the agreement made on the part of the Southern Granite Company, hereinafter stated, and in further consideration of the sum of one ($1) dollar to me in hand paid by said Southern Granite Company, do hereby covenant and agree to enter full satisfaction upon said mortgage, and the Southern Granite Company, in consideration thereof, agrees to deliver to the said T. J. Strait its first mortgage bonds to the amount of seven thousand five hundred ($7,500) dollars and its second mortgage bonds to the amount of seven thousand five hundred ($7,500) dollars, which bonds are to be delivered to said T. J. Strait as soon as same are issued; said bonds to be a part of a fifty thousand ($50,000) dollar bond issue of said Southern Granite Company. Witness our hands and seals this 18th day of April, 1907. [Signed] Southern Granite Company, by S. W. Heath, Pres. [L. S.] T. J. Strait [L. S.]. Witness: E. D. Blakeney."'

"The said defendant further alleges: 'That, at the time of the execution of the above agreement, the said T. J. Strait was and is now a director and officer of defendant company, to wit, secretary thereof, and joined in the execution of the bonds and mortgages contemplated in said agreement, which bonds and mortgages were, with the co-operation of said T. J. Strait, placed in the hands of the Charlotte Trust Company, as trustee and custodian for those entitled thereto, including the said T. J. Strait, whereby this defendant has complied with the agreement hereinabove set out, and this defendant is therefore entitled to have canceled the mortgage herein sought to be foreclosed. That, at the time of the alleged assignment of the note and mortgage to plaintiff herein, the same had been fully discharged by virtue of said agreement between T. J. Strait and this defendant, as above set forth, and this defendant is therefore entitled to have said mortgage canceled. That, as this defendant is informed and believes, the note and mortgage sought to be foreclosed were transferred and assigned to the plaintiff Farmers' Bank & Trust Company, after maturity, and that said plaintiff took same subject to the equities existing between the parties thereto. That, heretofore, on the 1st day of May, 1907, this defendant, for value received, executed and delivered and caused to be authenticated by the defendant Charlotte Trust Company, as trustee, as herein set forth, its certain bonds, numbered from 1 to 100, inclusive, dated May 1, 1907, for the sum of $500 each, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per centum per annum, payable semiannually, on the 1st day of January and the 1st day of July in each year thereafter, as evidenced by certain interest coupons attached to each of said bonds, which said bonds were issued and denominated first mortgage bonds. That heretofore, on the 1st day of September, 1907, this defendant, for value received, executed and delivered, and caused to be authenticated by this defendant, as trustee, as herein set forth, its certain bonds numbered from 1 to 100, inclusive, dated September 1, 1907, for the sum of $500 each, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually, on the 1st day of January and the 1st day of July in each year thereafter, as evidenced by certain interest coupons attached to each of the bonds, which said bonds were issued and denominated as second mortgage bonds. That, to secure the payment of the said bonds and the interest accruing thereon, this defendant did, on the 1st day of May, 1907, and the 1st day of September, 1907, deliver to the defendant, Charlotte Trust Company, as trustee aforesaid, for the benefit of the holders of its said bonds, its certain mortgage or deed of trust, wherein and whereby it conveyed by way of mortgage to the defendant Charlotte Trust Company, as trustee, the tract of land described in the sixth paragraph of the complaint herein, together with all personal property, consisting of machinery and tools constituting the operating plant of this defendant, and all rents and profits derived therefrom. Further answering the complaint herein, this defendant alleges that this defendant has defaulted in the payment of the interest upon the bonds hereinabove set forth, and that said interest is now past due and unpaid. That this defendant is heavily indebted and hopelessly insolvent, there being a number of unpaid, outstanding judgments, as well as numerous unpaid claims in the hands of attorneys at law for collection, and that this defendant is threatened with numerous, expensive, and vexatious litigations, which, if permitted to be pressed, will seriously impair its assets to the detriment of its creditors.' The said defendant, therefore, prayed for the appointment of a receiver of its assets and the calling in of creditors to establish their demands.

"The answer of the defendant Charlotte Trust Company, which is made a party defendant as trustee for the bondholders, is substantially to the same effect, said defendant further alleging that by the terms of the said deeds of trust or mortgages securing the said bonds it is stipulated that in the event default be made in the payment of interest or principal of said bonds, or any part thereof, at maturity, the said defendant, as trustee, should be entitled to a commission of 5 per cent. as attorney's fee. This defendant also prays for the appointment of a receiver for the said Southern Granite Company. The other defendants filed no answer.

"On July 27, 1911, by order of Judge S. W. G. Shipp herein, M. C. Heath was appointed receiver for the said Southern Granite Company, and the undersigned was subsequently appointed as special referee to take testimony for the proof of claims, and also to take testimony and report upon all the issues of law and fact herein.

"In obedience to said order of reference, an advertisement for proofs of claims was made as required by said order, and several references were held for that purpose and for the taking of testimony upon the issues of law and fact as raised by the pleadings. The present holders of bonds secured by trust deeds or indentures set up in the answers aforesaid have come in before the referee, and have established the bonds held by them as hereinafter stated.

"Having concluded the taking of testimony, and after hearing argument of counsel, upon consideration of the evidence, the undersigned referee makes the following report:

"Findings of Fact.

"(1) That, on the 4th day of May, 1906, the defendant Southern Granite Company, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the state of South Carolina, for value received, made and delivered to the plaintiff T. J. Strait its promissory note in writing, dated on that day, whereby the said defendant contracted and agreed to pay to the said T. J. Strait or order the sum of $15,000, due and payable on June 11, 1906, with interest from date at the rate of 8 per centum per annum, payable annually. In and by said note it was further stipulated that 10 per centum of the principal thereof additional should become due thereon for attorney's fees, in case said note should be placed in the hands of an attorney at law for collection after the maturity thereof. The consideration of this note was a portion of the purchase price of the tract of land hereinafter described, being the land described in the complaint herein, situated in Lancaster and Kershaw counties, in said state, which lands had been previously conveyed by the said T. J. Strait to the said Southern Granite Company. No part of this note has ever been paid, and after the maturity thereof the same was placed in the hands of the attorneys for plaintiffs herein for collection.

"(2) That, on the 4th day of May, 1906, for the better securing of the payment of said note, interest, and attorney's fees, the said defendant Southern Granite Company duly executed and delivered to the said plaintiff T. J. Strait its deed under seal and thereby conveyed by way of mortgage to the said plaintiff Strait the following described tract of land, to wit: All that certain piece, parcel, or tract of land, situate in the counties of Kershaw and Lancaster, containing 1,093 acres, bounded north by lands of T. J. Strait and lands known as the Stinson place; south by lands commonly known as Patterson lands; east by Stinson lands of J. R. McGill, F. M. Hammond and Wardlaw lands; west by lands of T. J. Strait, land commonly known as Warrenton place, and lands of McDowell, and being the same tract of land conveyed to the Southern Granite Company by T. J. Strait, and dated July 3, 1905.

"(3) That, on the 18th day of September, 1906, the said mortgage was duly recorded in the office of the register of mesne conveyances for the said county of Lancaster, in Real Estate Mortgage Book No. 11, p. 430, and that on the 21st day of September, 1906, the said mortgage was duly recorded in the office of the register of mesne conveyances for the said county of Kershaw, in Real Estate Mortgage Book LLL, p. 345.

"(4) That, on the 5th day of May, 1906, the said T. J. Strait executed and delivered to the Charlotte National Bank, a corporation duly incorporated, his certain promissory note in writing, dated on that day, whereby for value received the said T. J. Strait promised to pay to the said Charlotte National Bank 'or order,' the sum of $3,000, due and payable 30 days from the date thereof, without grace, at the banking house of the said Charlotte National Bank, in Charlotte, N. C. It was proven at the reference that the said note was an accommodation note by the said T. J. Strait for money loaned by the said Charlotte National Bank to the said defendant Southern Granite Company, and the said note was executed by the said T. J. Strait to the said Charlotte National Bank as an accommodation for the said Southern Granite Company, and that the said Southern Granite Company, in consideration thereof, agreed to pay the said note, at the maturity thereof, to the said Charlotte National Bank to the exoneration of the said T. J. Strait. No part of this note has ever been paid, except the interest thereon up to March 1, 1908; and it is admitted that payment of said note was duly demanded from the Southern Granite Company, and payment thereof refused.

"(5) That, on the 5th day of May, 1906, the said plaintiff T. J. Strait, for the better securing the payment of the accommodation note aforesaid, and with the knowledge and consent of the said defendant Southern Granite Company, by indorsement thereof assigned and transferred to the said Charlotte National Bank the said note for $15,000 of the Southern Granite Company to him made payable, dated May 4, 1906, and due June 11, 1906, as above stated, and, on the same day, likewise, as collateral security as aforesaid, assigned and transferred to the said Charlotte National Bank in due form the said mortgage securing the said $15,000 note.

"(6) That, on the 11th day of November, 1910, for value received, the said Charlotte National Bank, duly sold, assigned, and transferred to the plaintiff Farmers' Bank & Trust Company, the said $3,000 note, and also the said $15,000 collateral note and mortgage executed, as aforesaid, by the said defendant Southern Granite Company to the said T. J. Strait. It is admitted that the plaintiff Farmers' Bank & Trust Company is the owner of the said notes and mortgage so transferred to it by the said Charlotte National Bank, to the extent of the consideration paid by it therefor, to wit, the sum of $3,721.67, being principal and interest to date of said transfer, November 11, 1910, on said $3,000 note, besides interest thereon from November 11, 1910, at the rate of 8 per centum per annum from said last-mentioned date. It is also conceded that the said Farmers' Bank & Trust Company, being assignees for value of the said Charlotte National Bank, and the said Charlotte National Bank, being purchasers for value before maturity, and without notice, are bona fide holders for value without notice in so far as concerns their interest in the said collateral note for $15,000 aforementioned, since they stand in the shoes of the said Charlotte National Bank.

"(7) It is also conceded by defendants in argument before me that the portion of the said mortgage owned by the said bank is a valid first lien on the mortgage premises above described, and should be allowed as such, together with $300 as reasonable attorney's fees to the attorneys for plaintiff Farmers' Bank & Trust Company, for the prosecution of this action on their behalf, such attorney's fees being secured by said mortgage as stipulated in the note.

"(8) The right of the plaintiff Strait to recover the remainder of the amount due on the said $15,000 note, as well as the right to the remainder of the amount of the attorney's fees thereby stipulated and secured by the said mortgage, is contested.

"The agreement already recited between plaintiff T. J. Strait and the defendant Southern Granite Company dated April 18, 1907, was offered in evidence by the defendants, and was marked and will hereinafter be referred to as 'Exhibit L.'

"(9) The bonds styled 'first mortgage bonds,' represented by the defendant Charlotte Trust Company, as trustee for the bondholders, bear date the 1st day of May, 1907, and the bonds styled 'second mortgage bonds,' represented by the same trustee, are dated September 1, 1907; and the deed of trust and indenture of trust, respectively, securing said bonds, bear dates of May 1, 1907, and September 1, 1907, respectively. These deeds and indentures of trust cover the tract of land already described, and also 'all other properties, franchises, and rights owned by the said Southern Granite Company.' The bond issues and indentures of trust just mentioned were for amounts of bonds as follows: (1) One hundred bonds of the par value of $500 each, dated May 1, 1907, and due May 1, 1927, with coupons for semiannual interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, secured by said deed of trust of date May 1, 1907, as above mentioned; (2) 100 bonds of the par value of $500 each, dated September 1, 1907, and due September 1, 1927, with coupons attached for semiannual interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, secured by indenture of trust, dated September 1, 1907, above mentioned.

"(10) The present holders of these bonds have come in as parties to this action and have established their claims as holders of said bonds as follows: First. Holders of bonds dated May 1, 1907: Springs Banking & Mercantile Company, 5 of said bonds; H. Well & Co., 2 of said bonds; Isaac Strouse, Sr., 10 of said bonds; Dr. Lee Cohen, 2 of said bonds; Wm. H. Bloddorn, 1 of said bonds; Isaac Strouse, Jr., 2 of said bonds; Abe Strouse, 4 of said bonds; estate of Samuel Strouse, 4 of said bonds; Ben Strouse, 2 of said bonds; Isadore Rothschild, 2 of said bonds; Morton Kauffman Sons, 2 of said bonds; R. A. Morrow, 1 of said bonds; J. F. Solomon, 2 of said bonds; O. P. Heath, 5 of said bonds; Heath Hardware Company, 1 of said bonds; W. C. Heath, 2 of said bonds; M. C. Heath, 4 of said bonds; E. Heckheimer, 4 of said bonds; Bank of Kershaw, 21 of said bonds; Mrs. A. J. Blackmon, 3 of said bonds; L. T. Gregory and Bank of Winnsboro, 3 of said bonds; Warner, Moore & Co., 3 of said bonds. In addition to the above, the attorney for the defendants deposited with the referee, on the 18th day of September, 1911, at reference held on that day, 15 of the said bonds, which were on said last-mentioned day offered to the plaintiff Strait, by defendant's attorney, but then refused to be accepted by him. Second. Holders of bonds dated September 1, 1907: O. P. Heath, 21 of said bonds; Mrs. Mary B. Zemp, 16 of said bonds; Heath Supply Company, 28 of said bonds. In addition to the above, the defendant deposited with the referee, on the 18th day of September, 1911, 15 of the said bonds, which were on the last-mentioned day offered to plaintiff Strait by defendant's attorney, but said plaintiff refused to accept same.

"(11) The following unsecured claims were established before me against the said Southern Granite Company: First. The following claims, although unsecured, are admitted by all parties to be preferred claims as against all creditors except the liens held by the plaintiffs, to wit: Account of D. M. Jones for salary due him $400; account of W. McD. Jones for $175.07 for salary due him; and account of Jones & Sons for $940.84 for wages advanced at the request of the defendant Southern Granite Company, for payment of laborers; also judgment claim of W. M. Gooch for $191.87, dated October 29, 1910, judgment roll 7860, common pleas court, Lancaster. Second. The following are claims in judgment, not preferred: Casparis Stone Company for $961.83, dated November 1, 1910, judgment roll No. 7866; Tyson & Jones Buggy Company, $182.08, dated November 5, 1909, judgment roll No. 7804; Bailey Brothers (Inc.) $263.80, dated November 5, 1909, judgment roll No. 7798; the M. O. Mayer Grocery Company, $143.52, dated November 5, 1909, judgment roll No. 7792; Gibbs Machinery Company for $203.70, dated June 28, 1910, judgment roll No. 7852; Max Pincus & Co., $251.68, dated October 29, 1910, judgment roll No. 7861; Southern Coal & Coke Company, $472.73, dated October 29, 1910, judgment roll No. 7862; Winnsboro Granite Corporation, $874.90, dated March 30, 1911, judgment roll No. 7901. Third. The following notes and accounts were also established: Note by Southern Granite Company to Heath-Jones Company, $165.35, dated December 6, 1909, due January 1, 1910, interest after maturity at 8 per cent., payable annually; note by same to Heath-Elliott Mule Company, $281.98, dated June 12, 1908, due at one day, interest after maturity at 8 per cent., payable annually; account of Robert S. Harper for $35.85; account T. W. Wood & Sons, $43.08; C. E. Baldwin, $45.82; Revere Rubber Company, $18.73; Philip Cary Company, $26; Valvoline Oil Company, $12.80; Stone Barringer Company, $32.14; L. Sonnesborn Sons (Inc.), $63.51; New England Annealing Company, $25.44; R. S. Dunn & Co., $75; account Bewley Darsett Coal Co., $76.05; Red 'C' Oil Co., $33.76; Sullivan Machinery Co., $46.15; note due Bank of Kershaw, dated November 25, 1910, $4.985; note due Bank of Kershaw, dated March 8, 1907, $2,933.12; note due L. T. Gregory, dated June 27, 1908, $1,000; note due Almetta J. Blackmon, dated December 8, 1907, $1,500; note payable to order of Southern Granite Company and indorsed by S. W. Heath, O. P. Heath, W. C. Heath, E. Heckheimer, E. D. Blakeney, M. O. Heath, and paid by said indorsers, and now held by them, $5,000; note of Excelsior Granite Company, dated July 29, 1905, indorsed by S. W. Heath and E. D. Blakeney and paid by them, $1,520; note due F. W. Wagner & Co., dated March 2, 1907, indorsed by S. W. Heath and E. D. Blakeney and transferred to them by F. W. Wagner & Co., $483.07; note due Warner, Moore & Co., dated October 27, 1908, $500.

"(12) From the evidence in this case I find that no valid tender or delivery was ever made to the plaintiff T. J. Strait of the bonds stipulated to be delivered to him as a condition of the agreement contained in Exhibit L, already cited. By the terms of this agreement such bonds were to be delivered to the said T. J. Strait 'as soon as issued,' and it is apparent from the evidence that the said bonds were issued on the 1st day of May, 1907, as to the first series thereof, and the 1st day of September, 1907, as to the second series thereof. The first attempt at a tender of these bonds was made in the summer of the year 1909, long after the issue thereof, and at a time when the same were depreciated in value. Furthermore, at the time of such tender, nearly two years had elapsed since such issue of the bonds in question, and there were then past-due interest coupons upon said bonds for interest due January 1, 1908, July 1, 1908, January 1, 1909, and July 1, 1909, and no tender of the payment of such past-due interest coupons was made, nor has any payment of any such interest coupons ever been made or tendered. Moreover, as has been already stated, it appears from the testimony in the case that the true agreement between the plaintiff T. J. Strait and the defendant Southern Granite Company was that the said Southern Granite Company should pay the $3,000 debt aforesaid to the Charlotte National Bank, represented by the note aforesaid, dated May 5, 1906, and falling due 90 days after said date, which was collaterally secured by the mortgage which was given to secure the indebtedness to the plaintiff Strait of the said Southern Granite Company, as already stated; and no such payment or tender of the said amount so due on the said debt to the Charlotte National Bank has ever been made. Under the said agreement such payment was a condition precedent to the right of the defendant Southern Granite Company to demand the entry of satisfaction upon the said $15,000 mortgage.

"Conclusions of Law.

"(1) The principal question in the case is as to the effect of the agreement aforesaid between plaintiff T. J. Strait and the defendant Southern Granite Company for the acceptance of certain bonds in satisfaction of the said $15,000 mortgage debt due to plaintiffs. As to this matter, the conclusion has been reached that, as the agreement (Exhibit L) stipulated for a total issue of $50,000 of first and second mortgage bonds in the aggregate, and since, as matter of fact, the bond issue actually made was to an aggregate of $100,000, the plaintiff Strait could not be required to accept any part of such issue of bonds, such issue being in excess of the amount specified in the agreement; and as no tender or delivery of the bonds to plaintiff Strait was made at the time stipulated in the agreement (Exhibit L), a tender thereof at a later date, at a time when said bonds had become greatly depreciated in value, was not such a legal tender as to be a compliance with the requirements of said agreement. The contract expressly stipulated that these bonds should be delivered to plaintiff Strait 'as soon as issued,' and this requirement appears to have been of the essence of the contract, and a tender made for the first time some two years after the time stipulated, and when said bonds were much depreciated in value, was not a compliance with the true intent of said agreement. The plaintiff Strait could not therefore be then required to accept such depreciated bonds in satisfaction of said mortgage debt.

"Furthermore, the evidence shows that the defendant Southern Granite Company, instead of tendering or delivering said bonds to plaintiff in accordance with said agreement (Exhibit L), was using the same for its own purposes, and did put up $5,000 of said bonds as collateral security for a loan by the First National Bank of Lancaster, S. C., on February 4, 1908, and in May, 1907, did hypothecate some of the said bonds with the Springs Banking & Mercantile Company as security for a loan. Since the defendant Southern Granite Company was so making use of the bonds for its own purposes and so failing to comply with the agreement, said defendant cannot, at this late day, be permitted to tender said bonds as a compliance with its agreement to deliver the same as 'soon as issued.'

"It thus appears that the agreement in question (Exhibit L) was broken by the defendant Southern Granite Company long before the commencement of this action, and therefore cannot operate as a defense. This contract, as shown by the evidence, was partly written and partly oral. It is true that the defendants objected to some of the oral evidence as not being admissible; but this objection cannot be sustained.

"Where a written contract is silent as to certain matters of the agreement between the parties, oral evidence may be admitted as to such matters, and such oral evidence does not vary the written contract. Colvin v. Oil Co., 66 S. C. 61 [44 S. E. 380]; Crawford v. Owens, 79 S. C. 59 [60 S. E. 236]; Chemical Co. v. Moore, 61 S. C. 166 [39 S. E. 346];

Buist v. Mercantile Co. [68 S. C. 523, 47 S. E. 978].

"Even the defendant's evidence shows that it was a part of the contract that the defendant Southern Granite Company should pay the debt to the Charlotte National Bank, which is now held by the plaintiff Farmers' Bank & Trust Company, and that such debt was really the debt of the said Southern Granite Company, and was to be paid by it before it could ask the plaintiff Strait to accept any bonds in satisfaction of his mortgage. The very mortgage in question was held as collateral security for the Southern Granite Company's debt, and, this debt to the bank having never been paid by the said Southern Granite Company, there was a failure by it to comply with a condition precedent of its agreement, since plaintiff Strait could not accept the bonds or mark his mortgage satisfied until the debt of the Charlotte National Bank (now held by the plaintiff Farmers' Bank & Trust Company) was paid by the defendant Southern Granite Company in accordance with said defendant's agreement, while the said bank held the mortgage in question as collateral to such debt of the Southern Granite Company.

"The evidence also shows that, as a part of said agreement, the defendant Southern Granite Company was also bound to pay the interest on the said $15,000 mortgage debt held by plaintiff Strait against said defendant, up to the time of the issuance and delivery of the said bonds, before said plaintiff could be required to accept said bonds in satisfaction of the said $15,000 mortgage. Having failed to do this, as well as to pay the said $3,000 debt to the bank, the defendant Southern Granite Company failed to comply with its contract, and the plaintiff Strait could not be required to accept a tender of said bonds as in satisfaction of said mortgage debt.

"Moreover, from the very terms and nature of the agreement in question, it was essential that the defendant Southern Granite Company should comply with its agreement to deliver the bonds 'as soon as issued'; and the failure to do so was a failure to comply with an essential part of the contract, and a failure to perform such a prerequisite of the contract on the part of the defendant Southern Granite Company which relieved the plaintiff Strait of all obligations to surrender his original mortgage security. See 9 Cyc. 605, 606; 4 Pom. Eq. Juris., 1407, and note. It seems to be clear, also, that the agreement to accept $15,000 of first and second mortgage bonds out of a total issue of $50,000 of such first and second mortgage bonds cannot bind the plaintiff Strait so as to require acceptance by him of $15,000 of bonds out of a total issue of $100,000 of such first and second mortgage bonds.

"For the reasons stated, therefore, it must be concluded that the defense herein interposed and founded upon the agreement aforesaid must be overruled; and it must be adjudged that the said mortgage debt held by the said plaintiff Strait is a valid outstanding first lien upon the said mortgaged premises.

"(2) It is claimed by the defendants that the plaintiff Strait is now estopped from enforcing his said mortgage by reason of the fact that, as secretary of the defendant Southern Granite Company, he signed officially the bonds and mortgages of May 1, 1907, and September 1, 1907, now held by the defendant Charlotte Trust Company, as trustee for the bondholders already named. As to the matter of such alleged estoppel, there is no evidence whatever that any bondholder has been misled by any such signing by the said plaintiff Strait, in his official capacity or otherwise; and it is well settled that, in order to an estoppel by any representations contained in a bond or mortgage, it must appear that the party seeking to invoke the same was misled to his injury by such representations. See Diller v. Brubaker, 52 Pa. 498, 91 Am. Dec. 177; Jewett v. Miller, 10 N. Y. 402, 61 Am. Dec. 755, and cases cited in note at page 756; Mills v. Graves, 38 Ill. 455, 87 Am. Dec. 316; Earl v. Stevens, 57 Vt. 474.

"Furthermore, there is no language used in said bonds or mortgages amounting to any representation that the plaintiff Strait did not hold a prior mortgage upon the lands in question, while such prior mortgage, being in fact of record in the proper offices, was notice to all the world of its existence and contents. The only words relied upon consist merely of the headings characterizing the bonds in question as 'First Mortgage Bonds' and 'Second Mortgage Bonds' of the Southern Granite Company; and there is no representation in the bonds or in the mortgages that the same are prior and preferred liens on the premises in question, and superior to the lien of the prior mortgage on the land duly recorded in favor of the plaintiff Strait.

"In order to constitute an estoppel, the words used in the instrument must be certain to every intent, and must not be taken by way of argument or inference. There must be a precise affirmation of that which creates the estoppel and not by way of recital. Mills v. Graves [38 Ill. 455] 87 Am. Dec. 314, 316, 318; 16 Cyc. 700; Bigelow on Estoppel, 302; 16 Cyc., 709.

"In the bonds here in question, or the mortgages securing the same, there is plainly no such certainty of intent. The only matter upon which it could be claimed that there was any representation as to the bonds and mortgage of May 1, 1907, is the mere use of the phrase, 'first mortgage bonds,' of the Southern Granite Company, the same being manifestly a mere characterization of the bond issue as being the first bonds issued by the said company. It is a mere statement of the fact that such bonds belong to a series denominated 'First.' There is certainly no 'precise affirmation' that the mortgage is a first mortgage or a first lien upon the premises in question. It cannot be held to be a definite representation that there was not a prior mortgage then existing upon a part of the property in favor of the plaintiff Strait individually, of the existence of which prior mortgage there was notice by the record. The recital in question cannot work an estoppel; that same being merely words of nomenclature of the series to which the bonds belong.

"It further appears, however, that the plaintiff Strait merely signed these bonds and mortgages officially, as secretary of the Southern Granite Company, and he was required officially to so sign the same by resolution of the stockholders and directors of the said Southern Granite Company. As is said by the Supreme Court of this state in its latest deliverance upon the subject by Mr. Justice Woods: 'An officer of a corporation is not estopped as an individual by signing a deed for the corporation under the direction of the board of directors or superior officer of the corporation.' Forbes v. Bowman, 87 S. C. 508 [70 S. E. 165]. See, also, Kern v. Chalfant, 7 Minn. 487 [Gill. 393]; Harper v. Little [2 Greenl. (Me.) 14] 11 Am. Dec. 25; Bigelow on Estoppel (3d Ed.) 275.

"It appearing that plaintiff Strait merely signed these bonds and mortgages officially a secretary of the Southern Granite Company, in pursuance of the requirements of a resolution of the stockholders and directors of the corporation as recited in the mortgage, plaintiff Strait could not be held individually bound by any recitals therein. The forms of the bonds and mortgages given were fixed by the stockholders and directors of the Southern Granite Company, and by resolution of the company's stockholders and directors the plaintiff Strait was required to sign his attestation officially to same, and his performance of that duty in an official capacity as so required of him cannot operate to his prejudice individually, or work an estoppel against him as an individual.

"Even, however, if the words used were sufficient to create an estoppel, there is no evidence that any of the bondholders were misled thereby, and if the bondholders were not misled, then no estoppel could arise in any event. It was incumbent upon those seeking to avail themselves of this doctrine of estoppel to show that they were actually misled to their injury, and, having failed to make such showing, there is no ground upon which an estoppel could be based. See Bethune v. McDonald, 35 S. C. 88, 14 S. E. 674; Scarborough v. Woodley, 81 S. C. 331, 62 S. E. 405; Diller v. Brubaker, 52 Pa. 498, 91 Am. Dec. 177, and other cases already cited.

"It must, therefore, be concluded that the said plaintiff Strait is not estopped from est-ting up his said mortgage debt, and that the same is a first lien upon the lands described therein. The referee, therefore, concludes:

"(1) That the mortgage by the defendant Southern Granite Company to the plaintiff T. J. Strait, dated 4th day of May, 1906, is a first lien upon the tract of land containing 1,093 acres, described in the complaint, to secure the payment of the amount due upon the said mortgage debt, to wit, the sum of $15,123.33, besides interest thereon from the 11th day of June, 1906, at the rate of 8 per centum per annum, payable annually, besides the further sum of $1,500 as attorney's fees to the attorneys for plaintiff herein, as stipulated in said mortgage.

"(2) That the condition of the said mortgage has been broken, and that the said lands should be now sold and the proceeds, after paying the costs and disbursements of this action to the said plaintiffs, should be applied first to the payment of the said mortgage debt.

"(3) That, out of the proceeds going to pay the said mortgage debt, the plaintiff Farmers' Bank & Trust Company is entitled to receive first the sum of $3,000, with interest thereon from the 4th day of May, 1906 (as bona fide holders for value and without notice of the said debt to the Charlotte National Bank), the amount due to said plaintiff thereon being admitted at the hearing before me to be the sum of $3,721.67, with interest thereon from the 11th day of November, 1910, and the said plaintiff T. J. Strait is entitled to receive the remainder of the amount due upon the said $15,000 mortgage debt, the said attorneys for the plaintiff being entitled to receive, as a part of the said mortgage debt and as attorney's fees in addition thereto, the said sum of $1,500 out of said proceeds of sale, of which amount the sum of $300 is as attorneys for the Farmers' Bank & Trust Company, and the remaining $1,200 as attorneys for the said plaintiff Strait.

"(4) That, after the payment of the said costs and disbursements and attorney's fees and the said mortgage debt to the plaintiffs, the remainder of the proceeds of the said lands should be applied towards the payment of the preferred claims set out in subdivision 'first' of paragraph 11 of this report, and any remainder thereof should be applied towards the payment of the mortgage bonds to the various persons holding bonds, as aforesaid, secured by the mortgage or trust deed of May 1, 1907, and any overplus then remaining should be applied towards the payment of the mortgage bonds to the various persons holding bonds, as aforesaid, secured by the mortgage or trust deed of date September 1, 1907. If any overplus of said proceeds of sale should then remain, the same should be applied to the satisfaction of the other claims as already mentioned.

"Supplemental Report of Referee.

"By an oversight, the referee herein, in his report dated September 23, 1912, failed to report that the attorney for defendant Charlotte Trust Company is entitled to a commission of 5 per cent. on the amount of the first and second mortgage bonds of the Southern Granite Company, as attorney's fee. There is no controversy as to this matter, and the referee amends his report of the above date by changing the last paragraph of said report so that same shall read as follows:

"(4) That, after the payment of the said costs and disbursements and attorney's fees and the said mortgage debt to the plaintiffs, the remainder of the proceeds should be applied towards the payment of the preferred claims set out in subdivision "first" of paragraph eleven of this report, and any remainder thereof should be applied, first, to the payment of the attorney's fee of the attorney for defendant Charlotte Trust Company, as provided for in the deed of trust of date May 1, 1907, and then towards the payment of the mortgage bonds to the various persons holding bonds as aforesaid, secured by the mortgage or trust deed of said date, and any overplus then remaining should be applied, first, to the payment of the attorney's fee of the attorney for the defendant Charlotte Trust Company, as provided for in the deed of trust of date September 1, 1907, and then towards the payment of the mortgage bonds to the various persons holding bonds, as aforesaid, secured by the mortgage or trust deed of said date. If any overplus of said proceeds of sale should then remain, the same should be applied to the satisfaction of the other claims as already mentioned."

"Second Supplemental Report of Referee.

"The attention of the referee herein, having been called to the fact that in his report dated September 23, 1912, no findings were made covering the fees, costs, disbursements, and other expenses of the receiver heretofore appointed, on behalf of all parties interested in the affairs of the defendant Southern Granite Company, the failure to report upon these matters being an oversight, the referee hereby amends his said report by amending the last paragraph of said report, and any other paragraph therein that may be inconsistent with the findings herein submitted, that said amendment consists of the following: I conclude that the receiver should first be reimbursed for any amounts that he may have paid out by way of taxes, costs, or other necessary and proper expenses, together with his lawful commissions, and a reasonable attorney's fee to his attorney for services rendered him herein, and that the payment of same is a charge upon all the property and assets of the Southern Granite Company, and constitutes a prior and paramount lien thereon.

"It has also been called to the attention of the referee herein that the agreement between all the attorneys in this case that the claim of D. M. Jones for $400 for salary due by the company, and one W. McD. Jones for $175.07 for salary due him by the company, and one of Jones & Son for $940.34 for wages advanced at the request of the company for the payment of laborers, and the judgment claim of W. M. Gooch shall be paid as preferred claims was understood by all parties to mean that claims were to be preferred to all other claims against the Southern Granite Company. The referee, therefore, amends his report of date September 23, 1912, as follows: By striking out the words 'except the liens held by plaintiffs,' in paragraph 11 on page 11 of said report, and by providing in his conclusion that the above-mentioned claims should be paid first out of all the assets and property of the Southern Granite Company, after paying the costs and disbursements of this action, and, before the payment of the mortgage debt of the plaintiffs."

The decree was as follows:

"This cause comes on to be heard before me upon the original and two supplemental reports by the referee, and upon exceptions by certain defendants to the original report, and by the plaintiffs to the second supplemental report.

"No question is made by these exceptions as to the priority and enforceableness of so much of the mortgage here in question as is held by the plaintiff Farmers' Bank & Trust Company; but the defendants do contest the priority and enforceableness of so much of the said mortgage as is held by the original mortgagee, T. J. Strait.

"Substantially but two main questions are presented by the exceptions taken by the defendants, and the determination of these two questions are conclusive of all the exceptions on the part of the defendants. These questions are: First. Whether there was error by the referee in failing to hold that the paper writing recited in the report as 'Exhibit L' was such an agreement and so binding upon the plaintiff Strait as to constitute a contract and operate, as against the plaintiff Strait, as a satisfaction of the mortgage debt held by him. Second. Whether there was error by the referee in failing to hold that, by reason of the action of the said plaintiff Strait in officially signing certain bonds and mortgages issued by said Southern Granite Company, the said plaintiff is now estopped from setting up the said mortgage originally held by him. The paper in question, which is recited in the report of the referee and is denominated 'Exhibit L,' is an agreement signed by the plaintiff Strait, and also appearing to be signed in the name of the 'Southern Granite Company, by S. W. Heath, President.' There is no evidence, however, that the affixing of the name of 'Southern Granite Company' to this paper was ever authorized by the stockholders or directors of said company, or that S. W. Heath, as president of said company or otherwise, was ever given power to sign the name of the Southern Granite Company to such paper, or that he had any such power by virtue of his office.

"The agreement proposed in said Exhibit L was that the plaintiff Strait would enter satisfaction upon the mortgage here in question, in consideration that the defendant Southern Granite Company would give and deliver to said plaintiff, Strait, 'its first mortgage bonds to the amount of seven thousand five hundred dollars, and its second mortgage bonds to the amount of seven thousand five hundred dollars, which bonds are to be delivered to the said T. J. Strait as soon as same are issued; said bonds to be a part of a fifty thousand ($50,000) dollar bond issue by said Southern Granite Company.' This paper bears the date of April 18, 1907, at which time no issue of bonds by the Southern Granite Company had ever been authorized or made.

"There is no evidence whatever of any authority, at that time had or ever thereafter given to S. W. Heath, to make any such agreement binding upon the company; and certainly no such authority can be implied in him. Since, therefore, S. W. Heath, had neither express nor implied authority to bind the Southern Granite Company by any such signing of its name to such an agreement, it follows that the same, not being binding upon the company, could not be binding as a contract upon the plaintiff Strait. At the time of the signing thereof, it amounted merely to a proposal on the part of the plaintiff Strait that if it, the Southern Granite Company, would do certain things within a certain time, the plaintiff Strait would do certain other things in consideration thereof.

"No subsequent action was taken by the stockholders or directors of the Southern Granite Company in any way ratifying or confirming the unauthorized agreement made in the name of the company by S. W. Heath, as its president, and therefore the character of the paper thereafter remained as it originally stood when signed by plaintiff Strait as a mere proposal, subject to acceptance or ratification by authorized action on the part of the company within the time therein stipulated. It follows, therefore, that Exhibit L, never having been so accepted or ratified by any action of the company, never constituted a contract binding upon the Southern Granite Company, and since, in order to constitute a complete contract, both parties thereto must be bound thereby, the said proposal in Exhibit L never became binding as a contract upon the plaintiff Strait. It is doubtless true that, by reason of the nominal consideration expressed and the consideration implied from the seal, Exhibit L would have been binding upon the plaintiff Strait as a contract, had its terms been accepted, or had it been ratified by the Southern Granite Company by any authorized action of its stockholders or directors, provided such acceptance or ratification had been made within the time stipulated by that instrument, or, perhaps, within a reasonable time. But no such action by way of acceptance or ratification, by the Southern Granite Company, by its stockholders or directors or other authorized officer, was ever had, so far as appears; and therefore Exhibit L never became a contract, but remained and still remains a mere proposed agreement, not accepted, acted upon, or ratified by the Southern Granite Company. Whether it be considered that the contract fixed a time limit for its acceptance by the Southern Granite Company, or that the Southern Granite Company was entitled to a reasonable time for acceptance of the proposal thereby made, the time for acceptance or ratification of the proposed contract had expired before the commencement of this action. For these reasons, therefore, if for no other, the conclusions of the referee, as to the matter of the non-effectiveness of Exhibit L, as a defense to this action, should be confirmed.

"But the conclusions of the referee upon the question of the effect of Exhibit L must be confirmed also upon the grounds stated by the referee, and especially upon the ground that the proposed agreement, Exhibit L, contemplated a total issue by defendant Southern Granite Company of first and second mortgage bonds aggregating $50,000, whereas, the bond issue actually made was to an aggregate of first and second mortgage bonds to the amount of $100,000. The proposal made by plaintiff Strait in Exhibit L being an offer to accept $7,500 of first mortgage bonds, and $7,500 of second mortgage bonds out of a total contemplated issue of $50,000 of bonds of the company, and the bond issue actually made being a total issue of $100,000 of bonds—that is to say, $50,000 of first and $50,000 of second mortgage bonds—it follows, that even if the Southern Granite Company had accepted or ratified said proposed agreement contained in Exhibit L, such an acceptance or ratification would not have been effective to bind the plaintiff Strait to accept any part of such total issue of $100,000 of mortgage bonds of the company. In other words, it having been proposed by plaintiff Strait merely that he would accept certain definite parts of an aggregate issue of $50,000 of bonds, it was no acceptance or ratification of that proposal for the Southern Granite Company to make an aggregate issue of twice that amount of bonds, and propose then to Strait to accept a portion of such double issue. Even if the Southern Granite Company had offered to deliver to plaintiff Strait a part of such un contemplated issue of bonds, such an offer would not have been an acceptance or ratification of the proposal by Strait to accept a portion of a smaller issue of bonds. In other words, the contract which plaintiff, Strait, proposed to make was contingent upon an issue by the defendant Southern Granite Company of first and second mortgage bonds to an aggregate amount of $50,000, whereas the only issue of bonds ever proposed by the company was the actual issue made to an amount double that proposed by plaintiff Strait. Such action by the defendant Southern Granite Company was far from being an acceptance or ratification of the contract proposed by the agreement contained in Exhibit L between the plaintiff Strait and President S. W. Heath. There was thus no meeting of the minds of the respective parties to the proposed contract, the plaintiff Strait, on the one hand, and the defendant Southern Granite Company, on the other; and therefore the proposal contained in said paper never became a contract between the said parties. In order to constitute a contract, there must be a meeting of the minds of the parties as to all the terms of the agreement. 9 Cyc. 245, 247.

"The situation at the signing of Exhibit L by plaintiff Strait and President Heath was that the former thereby proposed to the latter that said plaintiff would agree to mark his mortgage 'Satisfied' if the Southern Granite Company would agree, among other things, to issue first and second mortgage bonds to a total amount of $50,000, and would give and deliver to plaintiff Strait certain specified amounts of such bonds. This proposition, however, as we have seen, was never accepted by the Southern Granite Company, and, on the contrary, this company proposed to issue, and did issue, bonds to double the amount specified in the proposal made by Dr. Strait. There was consequently no meeting of the minds of the parties as between the plaintiff Strait and the defendant Southern Granite Company, no acceptance by the latter of the proposal made by the plaintiff Strait (which had been attempted to be accepted by President Heath in the name of the company, but ineffectively attempted for the reason that he had no authority to bind the company), and consequently no contract between the plaintiff Strait and the defendant Southern Granite Company.

"It must therefore be concluded that there was no error by the referee in the holding that the proposed agreement contained in Exhibit L, never having been accepted, ratified, or acted upon by the defendant Southern Granite Company, never became a contract so as to operate as a satisfaction or discharge of the mortgage held by the plaintiff Strait, and therefore the same is not a bar to the foreclosure of the said mortgage.

"As to the second question, already mentioned as being presented by the exceptions of the defendants, it must be concluded, for the reasons stated by the referee, that the doctrine of estoppel has no application in this case under the facts as here appearing. The action of the plaintiff Strait in signing the bonds and mortgages of the Southern Granite Company was merely an official act, which he was required and directed to perform by the resolution of the stockholders and directors of the said company. It was not therefore the voluntary act of plaintiff Strait, but was a duty imposed upon him, and which he was required to perform, and did perform, in his capacity as secretary of the Southern Granite Company. The forms of the bonds and mortgages were prescribed by resolution of the stockholders and directors of the Southern Granite Company, and the said plaintiff Strait officially was directed and required to sign these bonds and mortgages in that form. His performance of that duty imposed upon him by virtue of his office was not such an act as can be regarded as being voluntary so as to bind him individually by way of estoppel.

"It is the general doctrine of all the cases that where the act of the official of a corporation in signing an instrument in writing is a compulsory official act, or performed in obedience to resolutions or requirement of the stockholders, directors, or other superior authority, such an act cannot be considered as the voluntary act of such official, and the same, therefore, is not binding upon him individually, and cannot operate to estop him from asserting his individual rights. This is the doctrine established by all the authorities, and it appears to be the true meaning of the language used by Mr. Justice Woods in Forbes v. Bowman, 87 S. C. 508 [70 S. E. 165]. See, also, the authorities cited by the referee and Bigelow on Estoppel (3d Ed.), page 275.

"There is, moreover, no evidence whatever to show that any of the bondholders was misled to his injury by this official act of the plaintiff Strait; and it is well settled that no estoppel will arise in such cases unless it be made affirmatively to appear that the person seeking to invoke the doctrine of estoppel has actually been so misled and thereby suffered injury. Ketchum v. Duncan, 96 U. S. 659, 24 L. Ed. 868; Scarborough v. Woodley, 81 S. C. 331 [62 S. E. 405]; Bethune v. McDonald, 35 S. C. 93 [14 S. E. 674]; Diller v. Brubaker [52 Pa. 498], 91 Am. Dec. 177; Jewett v. Miller [10 N. Y. 402] 61 Am. Dec. 755, and note; Mills v. Graves [38 Ill. 455] 87 Am. Dec. 316; Earl v. Stevens, 57 Vt. 474.

"The burden of proof was upon the defendants to show that they were misled to their injury, and, no such proof having been adduced, there is no basis for the plea of estoppel. See cases just cited.

"For these reasons, as well as upon the other grounds mentioned by the referee, the finding and conclusion by the referee must be affirmed, that the plea of estoppel cannot avail the defendants in this case.

"These conclusions substantially dispose of the exceptions taken by the defendants to the report of the referee, all of said exceptions being dependent upon the conclusions reached upon the questions already discussed. The defendants' exceptions to the report must therefore be overruled.

"There remains to be considered only the exceptions by the plaintiffs to the second supplemental report. As to these exceptions it is to be noted that there was no finding by the referee that any specified amount had been paid out by the receiver of the defendant Southern Granite Company, or that any ascertained commissions were due him, or that any attorney's fees were due or had been paid by the receiver on account of any legal services rendered. Indeed, no account whatever has been filed by the receiver, and there is no showing as to what action, if any, has been taken by him, or as to whether he has done any work or performed any service entitling him to compensation. The receiver is entitled to reasonable compensation by way of commissions on any moneys which may have come into his hands, and is also entitled to be reimbursed for any moneys which may have been reasonably and necessarily expended by him in the discharge of his duties as such receiver. Such being the case, the exceptions of the plaintiffs to the second supplemental report of the referee are overruled.

"It is therefore ordered and adjudged that the original report and the two supplemental reports of the referee herein be confirmed.

"It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed: That the mortgage held by the said plaintiff upon the lands here in question be foreclosed, and that the equity of redemption in the said premises be barred, and that the said premises be sold at the courthouse door, in said county and state, on the first Monday in November, 1913, or upon some convenient sales day thereafter, by and under the direction of the receiver heretofore appointed by this court, during the legal hours of sale, and that the said receiver do give the usual notice of the time and place of such sale by advertisement in the Lancaster News. That such sale be made upon the following terms, to wit: The purchaser to pay one-third of the purchase money in cash on the day of sale, and that the remainder of the purchase money be secured by the notes of the purchaser due in one and two years, in equal amounts, with interest from the day of sale, secured by a mortgage of the premises so sold, with the privilege to the purchaser to pay all cash on the day of sale. That upon failure of the purchaser to comply with the terms of sale, the said premises shall be forthwith resold at the risk of such former purchaser, and that, upon compliance by the purchaser with the terms of such sale, the said receiver do execute a deed to him for the said premises, and that such purchaser be let into possession upon the production of said deed, which shall be recorded at the expense of the purchaser, both in Kershaw and Lancaster counties, and the said purchaser shall also pay the charges for recording the said mortgage in like manner.

"It is further ordered and decreed: That out of the proceeds of such sale the said receiver do pay, first, the costs and disbursements of the plaintiffs in this action, and the costs and expenses of such sale, and any lien for taxes due upon the said premises for the years 1912 and 1913, and also any amount paid by the receiver for taxes upon said premises for the year 1911, and the interest upon the same, and the commissions of the receiver on the amount so paid for taxes, if the same has not heretofore been retained by the said receiver out of moneys coming in to his hands as such receiver, upon the proceeds of such sale at the same rate as is fixed by law for commissions on sales in like cases made by the clerk or sheriff. That he do next pay to the attorneys for plaintiffs, as attorney's fees stipulated to be paid in the said mortgage to the plaintiffs, the sum of $300 as attorney's fees to the attorneys for plaintiff Farmers' Bank & Trust Company. That he do next pay the preferred claims as follows: To D. M. Jones, $400; to W. McD. Jones, $175.07; to Jones & Son, $940.34, and to W. M. Gooch, the judgment for $191.57, dated October 20, 1910, the same being the claims reported by the referee as preferred, and that he next do pay to the plaintiff Farmers' Bank & Trust Company the sum of $4,721.67, with interest thereon from the 11th day of November, 1910, being the amount due the said plaintiff Farmers' Bank & Trust Company, as reported by the referee upon their debt herein. That he next do pay to the attorneys for the plaintiff T. J. Strait the sum of $1,200, as balance attorney's fees for services in foreclosing the mortgage to plaintiff herein, as stipulated therein, and that he then do pay to the said plaintiff Strait the balance of the amount remaining due upon the said mortgage of $15,123.33, besides interest thereon from the 11th day of June, 1906, at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, payable annually, as reported by the referee, after the amount due plaintiff Farmers' Bank & Trust Company, as herein stated, has been deducted. That any remainder of said proceeds of sale be applied to the payment of the attorney's fee to the attorney for the defendant Charlotte Trust Company, as provided in the deed of trust of May 1, 1907, as reported in the supplemental report of the referee, and then toward the payment of the mortgage bonds to the various persons holding bonds, secured by said deed of trust of date May 1, 1907, as represented by the referee; and any overplus then remaining shall be applied to the payment of the attorney's fee to the attorney for the defendant Charlotte Trust Company, as provided in the trust deed of date September 1, 1907, as reported by the referee, and then toward the payment of the mortgage bonds to the various persons holding bonds secured by the mortgage or trust deed of said date, as reported by the referee; and if any overplus of said proceeds of sale should then remain, the same should be applied to the satisfaction of the claims by judgment reported in the second subdivision of paragraph 11 of the referee's report; and any overplus then remaining should be applied to the payment of the claims reported in subdivision 3 of the same paragraph of the referee's report.

"The said receiver will report to this court his actions under this decree.

"The following is a description of the premises hereby ordered to be sold: All that certain piece, parcel or tract of land situate in the counties of Lancaster and Kershaw, in the said state, containing 1,093 acres, more or less, now or formerly bounded—north by lands of T. J. Strait and lands known as the Stinson Place, south by lands commonly known as Patterson lands, east by Stinson lands of J. R. McGill, F. W. Hammond and Wardlaw lands, west by lands of T. J. Strait and lands commonly known as Warrenton Place and lands of McDowell, being the same tract of land conveyed to Southern Granite Company by T. J. Strait."

E. D. Blakeney, of Kershaw, and Kirkland & Kirkland, of Camden, for appellants. W. P. Robinson and Ernest Moore, both of Lancaster, for respondents.

WATTS, J. This action was commenced by the respondents as complainants to foreclose a mortgage for $15,000, securing a note for that amount executed and delivered on May 4, 1906, by the Southern Granite Company to T. J. Strait, covering 1,093 acres of land, on the line of Kershaw and Lancaster counties, whereon the Granite Company operated its rock quarry. The mortgage was recorded in both counties, in September, 1906. On May 5, 1906, the said Strait made a 30-day promissory note to the Charlotte National Bank for $3,000, and assigned as security for the same the aforesaid $15,000 given him by the Granite Company. This note, with the collateral mortgage, on November 11, 1910, was transferred by the Charlotte National Bank to the Farmers' Bank & Trust Company, which, as holder of this note, joined with Strait to foreclose said mortgage. After issue was joined the cause was referred to Paul Moore, Esq., as special referee, to hear and determine all issues of law and fact. The said referee made his report in favor of the plaintiffs. Exceptions were duly taken to this report by the Charlotte Trust Company and Southern Granite Company, and these exceptions were heard by his honor, Judge Sease, who overruled these exceptions and sustained the report of the referee. From this decree of his honor, Judge Sease, the appellants appeal. The reports of the special referee and the decree of his honor should be set out in the report of the case, for a proper understanding of the same.

[1] The first exception is: "For that his honor erred in holding that the execution and subscription of the mortgage bonds of the Granite Company by T. J. Strait, as secretary of said company, which bonds proffered on their face to be secured by first and second mortgages did not operate as an estoppel upon said Strait individually, so as to preclude him from asserting the priority of his mortgage; whereas, his honor should have held that the said Strait, by participating and co-operating with the stockholders and directors in the proceedings of said company leading up to and resulting in issuance of said mortgage bonds, and in subscribing the execution of same, and in placing them before the public, is, in equity, by such conduct, estopped from asserting as prior the mortgage of the company held by him." This exception cannot be sustained. The mortgage of Strait was on record in the proper offices, both in Kershaw and Lancaster counties, and the purchasers of these bonds issued by the exercise of the slightest care could have ascertained that this mortgage, given for purchase money, was open and unsatisfied. The mere keeping silence in regard to it on the part of Strait cannot operate so as to find an estoppel against him. It was incumbent on the purchasers of the bonds, or those intending to make loans on mortgages, to examine the title and make an inspection of the record, and the presumption is that this was done. Mills v. Graves, 38 Ill. 455, 87 Am. Dec. 317; Brinckerhoff v. Lansing, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 65, 8 Am. Dec. 538.

[2] The alleged misrepresentation consists solely in the bond headings, "First Mortgage Bonds" and "Second Mortgage Bonds"; such words are mere general recitals by way of nomenclature of the bond issues of the company. Nowhere in the bonds are there any affirmations or statements that there is no other mortgage on the property in question, and that no prior mortgage existed in favor of Strait. It is a characterization that the bonds are a certain issue designated, "first" and "second," issued by the company and secured by mortgage. There is nowhere in the body of the bond any affirmation that it is the first mortgage or lien on the property in question, and a general recital does not furnish a basis for estoppel. Bigelow on Estoppel, 302.

The mere fact that Strait signed the bonds in his official capacity as secretary of the Southern Granite Company in pursuance of a resolution of the stockholders of the company is not such a voluntary act on his part as would estop him from asserting his individual claim, as his mortgage was on record, notice to the whole world, and there is no evidence that the holders of any of the bonds claim that they relied on any statement, representation, or act of Strait that would estop him, other than the mere general recital in the bonds' nomenclature of "first" and "second" mortgage. There is no evidence that they examined the records, and no evidence that they took the trouble to ascertain whether the T. J. Strait, who held the mortgage on record in two counties, was the same T. J. Strait, who signed the bonds as secretary of the Southern Granite Company. Strait's signing the bonds in question under the circumstances he did was an official, and not an individual act, and it was not necessary, and in fact he could not, by any authority or power, put in any statement of his individual rights in the premises in any instrument signed by him in the discharge of an official duty, and under the direction of the stockholders so as to operate as an estoppel upon him. Bigelow on Estoppel (3d Ed.) 275; Wright v. DeGroff, 14 Mich. 164.

[3] The second exception assigns error on the part of the circuit judge in holding that the burden was upon the appellants of showing affirmatively that they had been misled to their injury. The referee and circuit judge both concluded that the doctrine of estoppel can be invoked by the party setting it up showing that he had been misled to his injury. This conclusion of the referee and circuit judge is fully supported by the following authority: Bigelow on Estoppel (3d Ed.) 494; Bethune v. McDonald, 35 S. C. 98, 14 S. E. 674; Gaston v. Brandenburg, 42 S. C. 348, 20 S. E. 157; Scarborough v. Woodley, 81 S. C. 329, 62 S. E. 405—and for this and the reasons in overruling exception 1 this exception is overruled.

[4] The third exception is overruled for the reason that this was a matter purely within the discretion of the court, and we see no abuse of discretion on the part of his honor.

The fourth, fifth, and sixth exceptions are overruled for the reason that no exceptions were made to his honor's finding of facts, and we see nothing erroneous in his conclusions of law as to these matters.

[5] The referee and circuit judge concurred in their findings of facts and it is incumbent on the appellants to satisfy this court by the preponderance of the evidence that his honor, the presiding judge, erred in his findings of fact, and this they have failed to do. Lumber Co. v. Stallings, 91 S. C. 476, 74 S. E. 1072; Leland v. Morrison, 92 S. C. 501, 75 S. E. 889.

Judgment affirmed.

GARY, C. J., and FRASER, J., concur.
HYDRICK, J., concurs in result.

DAVIDSON v. DAVIDSON et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 30, 1913. Rehearing Denied
Nov. 14, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. WILLS (§ 58*)—CONTRACT TO MAKE WILL.—CONSIDERATION—WARRANTY.

A parol contract between an unmarried woman and her seducer, a man of large property, shortly after the birth of her child, upon consideration that if she would not prosecute him for bastardy he would "provide for her and her child by will and that he would make the same provision for them as if he were married" to her, considered in the light of the surrounding facts and circumstances, is supported by a sufficient consideration and is sufficiently definite and certain in terms, to be binding on his estate and enforceable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 166; Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

2. WILLS (§ 58*)—CONTRACT TO MAKE—ENFORCEMENT.

An oral contract to make a will, if certain and definite in its terms, and upon sufficient consideration, if equitable, is valid, and enforceable against the estate of a decedent, as any other valid contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 164, 165; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

3. WILLS (§ 58*)—CONTRACT TO MAKE—EVIDENCE.

Contracts of this character, however, are viewed by courts with suspicion, are not favored, and to be enforceable must be upon sufficient consideration, be equitable, and definite and certain in their terms, and clearly proven.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 164, 165; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Monroe County.

Bill by William A. Davidson, administrator, against George T. Davidson and others. Decree for plaintiff, and defendants French Shultz, his next friend, and others appeal. Affirmed.

J. W. Arbuckle, of Lewisburg, and G. C. Osborne, of Keenan, for appellants. Sanders & Crockett, of Bluefield, and J. L. Rowan and Clark & Keadle, all of Union, for appellee.

MILLER, J. Appellants, Susan Shultz and French Shultz, an infant, by Susan Shultz, his next friend, intervened by petition in the suit by plaintiff to convene the creditors and marshal the assets of C. H. Davidson, deceased, and because of deficiency of personal assets, to obtain a decree for the sale of sufficient of decedent's lands to pay creditors in full.

French Shultz, as the petitions show, is the illegitimate son of Susan Shultz, by the deceased C. H. Davidson. The object of the petitions was to enforce specific performance of an alleged contract between Susan Shultz and said Davidson in his life time, made for her own and the benefit of her infant son, as it is alleged in consideration of her forbearance to sue Davidson for breach of promise of marriage and in bastardy proceedings proposed or threatened by her.

According to her individual petition the alleged contract between petitioner and Davidson was, substantially, that said Davidson, being at the birth of her child possessed of a large estate, and being desirous of concealing from his father the paternity of the child, for fear that his father would disinherit him, shortly after the birth of the child, promised and agreed with her, in consideration that she would not institute such bastardy proceedings "to provide for her and the child by will and that he would make the same provision for them as if he were married to petitioner." She alleges that decedent reiterated this promise to petitioner's mother and to her sisters, "telling them to tell and assure her for him that he would provide for her and her child, if she would not swear the child to him." She further alleges that in consideration of said promises and the love and affection had for and confidence and trust reposed in him she abstained from bringing suit or taking any action in the courts against decedent, and so continued and remained true to him up to the time of his death.

Another allegation of her petition is that "in pursuance of this contract and agreement the said C. H. Davidson executed a will and in it made provision for petitioner and left to her said son * * * the sum of $10,000 of which said will he duly informed this petitioner"; "that afterwards he destroyed this will and declared his intention of increasing this legacy to the sum of $30,000, but if he made another will it has not been found." She charges "that at the time the said C. H. Davidson destroyed said will, he was not in a mental condition to know or understand what he was doing." The petition contains a charge that by reason of said contract to provide for her, as if married to him, petitioner has the right to charge his estate with a large sum, to-wit one third of the value of said estate for her life.

The prayer of the petition is that the personal representatives and heirs of decedent be treated as trustees holding for her benefit the estate of which the said C. H. Davidson died seized.

In the petition of the infant petitioner, by his mother as next friend, the inducement and consideration for the alleged contract are stated substantially as in her petition, and the contract alleged to have been made on behalf of petitioner coincides in part with the contract as alleged in her petition, as follows: "That the said Charles H. Davidson then promised the mother of this petitioner that if she would not institute the said proceedings against him that he would provide for her and this petitioner by will the same as if they were married." But following that allegation is this charge: "That he afterwards promised her to leave this petitioner $15,000.00 by his will, if she would not sue him, and repeatedly sent these promises to her by others," and that he repeated this proposition to petitioner's grandmother and aunts.

The prayer of this petition is that petitioner "be allowed his claim of $15,000.00 as aforesaid against the estate of Chas. H. Davidson, deceased."

There was a demurrer to these petitions by the adult defendants, who also answered, putting in issue every material allegation therein; and the infant defendants also answered formally by their guardian ad litem, and on final hearing on pleadings and proofs taken and the report of the master commissioner, and exception thereto, by defendants, the court below denied petitioners any relief and dismissed their petitions out of the cause, and that is the decree which they seek to have reversed on this appeal.

The commissioner in his report found that C. H. Davidson agreed with Susan Shultz to provide for her in his will a comfortable support for her life time, provided she would not sue him for breach of promise of marriage or bastardy, "that it will take $181.25" per year, and which on the basis of her life expectancy, 10.705 years, would amount to $1,940.28, which sum he found in her favor, to be paid out of decedent's estate as a general lien; and he found in favor of the infant petitioner the sum of $15,000.00 to be likewise paid out of the estate of decedent.

[1] It is conceded by counsel that a contract to make a will, if certain and definite in its terms and upon sufficient consideration, is valid, and like any other contract, and that by the same rules it will be enforced. For this there is abundant authority. Page on Wills, §§ 70-83; Gardner on Wills, Ch. IV, §§ 19-21; 1 Underhill on the Law of Wills, §§ 285-294; Johnson v. Hubbell, 10 N. J. Eq. 332, 66 Am. Dec. 773, and note, p. 783; Rice v. Hartman, 84 Va. 251, 4 S. E. 621; Cox v. Cox, 26 Grat. (Va.) 305, Anno. 107, and note. The law in such cases is the same, substantially, as in the cases of parol contracts for deeds. Frame v. Frame, 32 W. Va. 463, 9 S. E. 901, 5 L. R. A. 323; Burkholder v. Ludlam, 30 Grat. (Va.) 255, Anno. 94, and note, 32 Am. Rep. 668; Townsend v. Vanderwerker, 160 U. S. 171, 16 Sup. Ct. 258, 40 L. Ed. 383.

[2] It is practically conceded, also, that the consideration for the alleged promise set forth in the petitions would be sufficient to support a valid promise by decedent to provide for petitioners by will. So the controversy here is narrowed to three questions, namely: First, is the contract alleged definite and certain so as to be enforceable? Second, if it is, is the contract proven as alleged, or does the proof show any contract with decedent which is enforceable? Third, if a valid contract is alleged and proven, is it affected by the statute of frauds, or taken out of the statute of frauds by part performance of the contract by petitioner Susan Shultz?

On the first proposition, according to the petitions, the alleged promise of decedent, for the consideration alleged, was to provide for petitioner and her child by will, making the same provision for them as if he was married to her. What is the meaning of such a promise? Does it amount to a promise by decedent, as the petitions imply, to will to petitioner all the property of which he might die seized? If so, in what proportion? Or does it mean such parts of decedent's estate as petitioners would take, if marriage had followed, and without will? Decedent, if married, might have disposed of his estate by will so as to wholly cut out his child, but not his widow. Would the alleged contract have prevented such disposition of his estate? These are some of the questions naturally presented in connection with the alleged contract. Mr. Page in his work on wills, on the subject of the certainty of such contracts, referring in foot note to the decisions, gives illustrations of contracts which have been held invalid and of others held to be valid, as follows: "A contract to bring up a child, educate it and make it the 'heir' of promisor has been held to be unenforceable in Kentucky. And an ante-nuptial contract by which the husband agrees to adopt his wife's children by a former marriage as his 'heirs' has been held not to be a promise to make a devise of the husband's property to them, but to leave the husband with the same power of excluding them from a share in his Illinois realty that he would have had of excluding his own children. A similar contract has been held valid and enforceable in Missouri. Or the promisor may definitely intend to make some testamentary disposition of his property in favor of promisee, but he does not decide what provision he will make. Thus, he may agree to leave promisee 'as much as any relation he had on earth,' or that while promisor lived promisee should have a good home, and at his death she should be provided for so that she should never want as long as she lived; or that he will provide for the adopted child as he does for his own children, and his will makes his own children residuary legatees. These agreements are too indefinite to be enforced.

"An agreement in writing to leave by will to an employé as much as he would lose by declining an offer of a partnership in a competing firm, in consideration of his declining such offer and remaining in the employ of promisor was held to be too indefinite for enforcement in law or in equity. But a promise to leave promisee so much property 'that she need not to work,' or to leave her 'independently rich,' or to make her 'his heir,' or to leave promisee all the property that promisor owned at his death; or to leave promisee 'a child's share' in the estate of promisor, where promisor was at the date of the contract and always remained childless; or to make 'adequate compensation,' have been held to be definite enough to maintain an action upon.

"A contract to bequeath so much of an annuity as should remain unexpended at the death of the annuitant is enforceable, although the amount is uncertain."

In the interpretation of contracts we must always keep in mind that it is the policy of the law to give force and effect thereto, if possible, and within well recognized canons. On the question of the definiteness and certainty necessary to give effect to a contract, one salutary rule is that that will be regarded definite and certain which by reference to the facts and circumstances surrounding the parties, and which were evidently in mind when making the contract, can be rendered certain and definite. In this case the parties to the contract were not married. According to the petitions marriage was contemplated after the death of decedent's father. What was evidently intended by the parties to the contract was that decedent would in the mean time so provide by will that in the event of his death the woman he had seduced, and the child by that act, should be provided for, and in case of his death should have of his estate what they would naturally take without will if marriage had ensued, and the relation of husband and wife and parent and child had thereby been established. So interpreted, is not the contract alleged sufficiently definite and certain to be enforceable? We are disposed to hold, in the light of the facts alleged attending the making of the contract, and the situation and circumstances of the parties, that the contract was valid and binding, and enforceable, and with the circuit court to hold the demurrers properly overruled.

While it is true the mother in her petition alleges, rather inconsistently with the terms of the contract as alleged, that decedent in pursuance of the contract executed a will making provision for her and leaving to her son $10,000; and in the petition filed on behalf of the son, alleges that decedent afterwards promised to leave him $15,000.00, these alleged acts and promises of decedent could not take away the rights of petitioners under the contract, unless they should elect to accept such provisions in full performance of the contract as originally made.

[3] The next inquiry is, does the proof establish the contract as alleged, or any contract enforceable against decedent's estate? We do not think it arises to the dignity of full and clear proof, required in all such cases. It is conceded that the evidence of Miss Shultz, objected to, is wholly incompetent. But if it could be considered, what does it amount to? The substance of it, so far as it applies to any contract with decedent, is that some two days after the birth of the child decedent visited her at her room, and in the presence of her sister Mrs. Heavener, and with the child in his arms, acknowledging it to be his own, said to her that he did not want any trouble, and did not want her to swear the child to him, that he meant to take care of her and the child, and told her sister to take care of them, that he meant to take care of them, and meant to give them every thing he had, and that he did not want any trouble for fear his father would disinherit him, and that he meant to marry her after his father's death. She also swears that he stated the same thing to her mother and requested her not to allow witness to swear the child to him, or sue him, and that he meant that all he had was for her and the child, and that he meant to will or give it to them. Did this language of decedent amount to more than the expression of a then present purpose to so provide by will for petitioners? We hardly think so. True we may say it evinced great anxiety on his part not to be exposed, and he evidently meant by representing his purposes to provide for her to persuade Miss Shultz not to sue him. But did it all amount to a contract? Did both parties understand that they were entering into a solemn contract that was to be enforceable and legally binding on him in the courts, cutting off other disposition of his property by will or otherwise for all time? We cannot so interpret their conversation as detailed by the witness. Nor is the case strengthened by her testimony, that decedent afterwards told her he had provided for her and her child by his will.

But now as to the evidence of Mrs. Heavener, the sister, present at the time of the alleged contract. The whole of her evidence as to what took place between decedent and her sister, in the latter's room on the occasion of the alleged contract is in substance this; addressing the witness, decedent said, "I want you to be good to Susan and take good care of the boy for I have made promises to her and mean to fulfill them." She says there was no one present but Susan, herself, Mr. Davidson and the baby. What promises he is supposed to have referred to does not appear. The witness had heard all the conversation between deceased and her sister, as detailed by the latter in her evidence, which we do not think amounted to a contract, though imposing on him moral obligations. He may have been referring to his previous promises of marriage, for Miss Shultz does not swear that deceased had ever before that promised to make provision for her and her child by will. Mrs. Heavener further swears that Davidson left her sister's room on the occasion just referred to, and as he left the house, he said to her "be good to Susan and take good care of the child and not let her swear the child for it might cause trouble at home, that he was afraid his father would disinherit him and for me to go back upstairs and tell Susan not to trouble for he intended to do everything for them he had promised."

But this witness gives evidence of another agreement some six weeks after the birth of the child, when her brothers James and Phineas had come to see her sister Susan and to have her swear the child to Davidson. She says Davidson was there, and took her out and requested her to go to her sister Susan and tell her not to swear the child to him, and that he would give her and the child everything that he possessed; that she communicated these promises of Davidson to her sister, and persuaded thereby she was prevented from instituting suits against him. She says Davidson knew on this occasion the purposes of her brothers who were present on that day. Mrs. Heavener also swears that later Davidson said to her he wanted her to quit worrying about Susan and the child, for he had willed the boy and her thirty thousand dollars, that she told him she did not want money without protection, that he replied that he had willed them the money and intended to protect them too.

We must admit that the alleged proposition of Davidson to Miss Shultz, through Mrs. Heavener, on the latter occasion rises more nearly to the dignity of a contract than the former, given in evidence by petitioner and this witness. But how he was to give them his property, whether by deed or will does not appear. But this witness says Davidson subsequently told her he had willed petitioner thirty thousand dollars. Phineas Shultz, the brother, swears, that on the occasion of his and his brother's visit, the same upon which Davidson is represented by Mrs. Heavener to have communicated through her the proposition to her sister, that when told something would have to be done, his sister said she would see Davidson, that she went to him and after they had talked some little time she came back and reported that Davidson did not want her to swear the child to him, and that "he would either marry her or would make them entitled to what he possessed." This statement he repeated on his cross-examination. This evidence of what occurred on the occasion in question, and the theory of a proposition made by Davidson to Miss Shultz, through Mrs. Heavener, is not exactly in harmony. According to Mrs. Heavener the alleged proposition made through her, was the accepted one, and the one on which her sister acted. The proposition according to her brother was that deceased would either marry her or give her all he possessed.

According to the mother, Mrs. Mary Shultz, Davidson said to her, on the occasion of his first visit, after the birth of the child: "Take good care of Susan and the boy, I am going to marry Susan and you tell her not to sue or swear the child to me," and that he had thirty thousand dollars that he intended for them. She says Davidson requested her to communicate this message to her daughter, which she did. The testimony of Mrs. Burd, the other sister, is substantially the same as that of the mother. Other witnesses swear to conversations with and declarations of Davidson in his life, that he had willed his property or money to petitioners, and that he intended to marry her, etc.

Many letters from Davidson were introduced, in connection with the evidence of Miss Shultz, covering a period of eight or nine years, before his death, which were objected to, all expressing great love and affection for mother and son, and holding out assurances of his purpose to fulfill his promises. In none of them, however, is any reference made to his alleged promises to make a will, or leave petitioners his property.

Again, we inquire, is all this competent evidence sufficient to establish the contract as alleged, or any contract enforceable in law or equity? Certainly it does not clearly establish a specific contract to make provision for petitioners by will, giving them the same as they would take by marriage. But from all of it may we properly extract a definite and certain contract or promise based on good consideration, such as is alleged, or one which by proper amendment might be alleged, and enforceable as such? We acknowledge great temptation, under the circumstances of this case, to strain every rule and principle, and every exception thereto, in order to so interpret the evidence. But we have been unable to reach the conclusion that any definite and certain contract was ever made which can be enforced. We are bound by the rule that such contracts are viewed by courts with suspicion, are not favored, and to be enforceable must be upon sufficient consideration, and be equitable, and clear and definite in terms. Page on Wills, §§ 71, 73; Freeman v. Morris, 131 Wis. 216, 109 N. W. 983, 120 Am. St. Rep. 1038, 11 Ann. Cas. 481; Swann v. Housman, 90 Va. 816, 20 S. E. 830; Dicken v. McKinley, 163 Ill. 318, 45 N. E. 134, 54 Am. St. Rep. 471; Wall's Appeal, 111 Pa. 460, 5 Atl. 220, 56 Am. Rep. 288; Wood v. Evans, 113 Ill. 186, 55 Am. Rep. 409.

As is often said, courts cannot make contracts for parties, or render by judicial decision, contracts enforceable, which have not been rendered so by the previous voluntary acts of the parties. The hardship in this case is great, but the parties should have reduced their contract to writing, or made it clear and certain; that they did not do so during the long period that intervened between the date of the birth of the child and the death of decedent, is a circumstance evincing the fact that petitioners relied on deceased to fulfill his expressed purpose and intention to make provision for them by will, but without a contract enforceable by the courts. It is unfortunate that they were not better advised—a misfortune which cannot be remedied by the courts by unwarranted judicial action.

No legal contract having been established it is unnecessary for us to consider the question of the statute of frauds.

Our conclusion is to affirm the decree below, and we will so order.

RESERVE GAS CO. v. CARBON BLACK MFG. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Sept. 30, 1913. Rehearing Denied
Nov. 14, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 461*)—BOUNDARIES (§ 11*)—LEASE—DESCRIPTION OF PREMISES.

A call for an adjoining tract of land as a boundary of the leased premises in a lease containing but one description of the premises demised, which description is clear, certain, and unambiguous, cannot be ignored or rejected, in the judicial interpretation and application of the description to its subject-matter; nor is it permissible to show, by parol evidence, facts and circumstances tending to prove intent, on the part of the lessor, not to lease part of the land included by the description.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2129–2133; Dec. Dig. § 461.* Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 92–94; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 441*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Nor is it permissible to show, in contradiction of the terms of the lease, that it was verbally understood or agreed that the lessee was not to have a portion of the land its terms include.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1719, 1723–1763, 1765–1845, 2030–2047; Dec. Dig. § 441.*]

3. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 77*)—OIL LEASE—FORFEITURE.

An oil and gas lease binding the lessee to drill a well on the leased premises within a certain period, or, in lieu thereof, make periodical payments of rental or delay money, and containing no clause of forfeiture, is not forfeitable merely by nonpayment of the rental. It can be terminated only by surrender, abandonment, or expiration of the term.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 204; Dec. Dig. § 77.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Lewis County.

Bill by the Reserve Gas Company against the Carbon Black Manufacturing Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and the Manufacturing Company appeals. Affirmed.

Robert L. Bland, of Weston, and Davis & Davis, of Clarksburg, for appellant. A. B. Fleming, Charles Powell, and Kemble White, all of Fairmont, for appellee.

POFFENBARGER, P. Upon the bill of the Reserve Gas Company, praying cancellation of a lease, for oil and gas purposes, upon a small area of land, containing one acre, three rods, and one-half a pole, executed by Charles Butcher and wife to the Carbon Black Manufacturing Company, a corporation, and an injunction to restrain the defendants from operating or drilling upon said tract of land for oil and gas or from taking or removing any oil or gas therefrom, the circuit court of Lewis county decreed cancellation of the lease and perpetually enjoined operations thereunder; and from this decree the Carbon Black Manufacturing Company has appealed.

The conflicting claims set forth in the pleadings and the issues made arise out of the following facts: Owning two parcels or lots carved out of a tract of land formerly belonging to Thomas Butcher, one containing 25.5 acres and the other 11 acres, according to the specifications of quantity in the deeds, Granville A. Butcher, on September 13, 1889, executed to one Fretts an oil and gas lease thereon, representing the combined area to be 49 acres. This lease for a term of 20 years was afterwards assigned to one Ira De Witt, of Pittsburgh. On the 23d day of November, 1893, Granville A. Butcher, by a deed from Louis Bennett, special commissioner, obtained another small portion of the Thomas Butcher land, which had been conveyed by Thomas Butcher to Emmanuel Butcher. Between what he had previously owned, and the lot obtained by the Bennett deed, containing one acre, three roods, and one-half a pole, there was a county road; the small lot lying north of it, and the large tract south. On the northeast of the larger tract, the one included in the Fretts lease, ran the West Fork river, and on the southeast it was bounded for the most part by a tract of land owned by Elizabeth Ervin. On the southwest lay lands of O. D. Devinney and C. A. Peters, and on the west and northwest were lands of H. B. Butcher and M. E. Butcher. The small tract acquired by the Bennett deed was bounded on the north and the west by a tract of land containing 21.98 acres which had been conveyed by Thomas Butcher to Wm. A. Arnold, who devised it to Wilson A. Arnold, by his will probated July 23, 1890. Granville A. Butcher did not own the one acre, three roods, and one-half a pole tract at the date of the Fretts lease, but he did own it on the 8th day of August, 1900, the date of the oil and gas lease to the South Penn Oil Company for a term of ten years or as long as oil or gas or either of them should be produced from the land, and describing the premises as "bounded substantially as follows: On the north by the lands of Wm. A. Arnold and others. On the east by lands of A. W. Woodford and others. On the south by lands of M. Ervin and others. On the west by lands of O. D. Devinney and others. Containing 49 acres more or less." The Fretts lease gives the boundaries as follows: "On the north by West Fork river. On the east by lands of M. Ervin. On the south by lands of C. Flesher & C. Devinney. On the west by lands of Wm. Arnold & Brothers,"—containing 49 acres more or less. On the 4th day of June, 1897, Granville Butcher leased the small lot north of the road to E. W. Boyd for oil and gas purposes for a term of five years, and, on the 1st day of June, 1899, to the Eastern Oil Company for like purposes for a term of ten years. On January 1, 1907, he conveyed the land by deed to his son Charles Butcher. The Eastern Oil Company's lease having expired, Charles Butcher, on July 12, 1909, executed a new lease on this lot, to the Carbon Black Manufacturing Company, which company began a well on the premises March 16, 1910, and completed the same April 20, 1910.

Though there is no proof of the assignment of the Fretts lease to the South Penn Oil Company, John Butcher, a son of the lessor, says Thos. H. Kemper, one of the agents of the South Penn Oil Company, who took the lease of August 8, 1900, said, on the occasion, he had come to re-lease the property at $1 an acre instead of 10 cents an acre, the rental provided for in the Fretts lease, and further that Kemper had the Fretts lease with him at the time. John Butcher further testified that Kemper was informed on that occasion by the lessor, Granville A. Butcher, that the small tract of land in question was already under a lease to the Eastern Oil Company. Practically all of this testimony is denied by Kemper.

As recorded, the lease of August 8, 1900, contains this clause, relating to the payment of rentals or delay money: "Such payments may be made direct to the lessor or deposited to ——— credit in ———." The original lease, put in evidence along with a certified copy of it as recorded, contains this clause: "Such payments may be made direct to the lessors or deposited to their credit in the National Exchange Bank of Weston, W. Va." The rentals were paid regularly, but not always to the lessor in person. Some time before this controversy arose, the lessor died, and, after his death, some of the rentals were paid into the bank to the credit of his heirs.

The oil and gas rights vested in the South Penn Oil Company by its lease were assigned to the Hope Natural Gas Company in April, 1902, and by it to the Reserve Gas Company November 1, 1902.

In February, 1910, the Reserve Gas Company, having discovered preparations by the Carbon Black Company for drilling on the small tract of land in question, gave notice of its adverse claim under the South Penn Oil Company lease and advised that any operations by the Carbon Black Company under its lease would be at its own peril. At this time, the Carbon Black Company had done very little towards the development of the property. Later, it expended about $6,000 in the drilling and equipment of the well, which produced about 4,000,000 feet of gas a day, and about $30,000 in the erection of its plant on the lot. Process was issued in this cause on May 3, 1910, and the bill was filed at June rules, 1910.

Alleged ambiguity in the description of the leased land is relied upon in argument as justification for consideration of the surrounding and attendant facts and circumstances within the knowledge of the parties as showing their intention and authorizing rejection of the call for the Arnold tract of land as the northern boundary. If that call is to be respected and applied literally, the lease includes the small tract north of the county road, the one on which the Carbon Black Manufacturing Company has its lease and upon which it has drilled a producing gas well, for, if that tract is omitted, the Arnold tract does not touch nor bound the property at any point. It lies directly north of the remaining land owned by Granville A. Butcher at the date of the lease, but the small tract purchased at the judicial sale, conveyed by Bennett, special commissioner, lies between them. Though the call is for the lands of Wm. A. Arnold and others, and there are no lands of others lying directly north, except the Charles Butcher lot, the Arnold land is called for as a boundary with others, and, if the Charles Butcher lot is excluded from the lease, the Arnold land is not a boundary at all.

[1] As there is a definite and positive call for that land as a boundary, we are unable to perceive how it can be rejected on the ground of uncertainty or indefiniteness. The western boundary line is irregular, the general course being northeast and southwest; wherefore it may be reasonably said the call for the Arnold land and others is intended to include lands of H. B. Butcher which in some respects is the western boundary and in others a northern boundary. A plat filed in the cause by one of the surveyors has the word "Arnold" on it at a point east of the West Fork river and rather northeast of the original Granville A. Butcher land; but there is no proof of the existence of any Arnold land at that point, and, if there were, it would not lie directly north of the Butcher land. Some of the other calls for boundaries are less apt and accurate than that of the ones just discussed. The lands of M. Ervin and others are called for as the southern boundary. The Ervin land constitutes more nearly an eastern, than a southern, boundary, but it lies to the southeast. The lands of C. D. Devinney and others are called for as the western boundary. The Devinney land lies more nearly south than west, and the western boundary would be more accurately expressed by calling for the lands of H. B. Butcher and M. E. Butcher. However, the Granville A. Butcher tract, lying south of the county road, can be located by these calls without doing any violence to the terms used, and the description, as a whole, including the Chas. Butcher lot, has all the certainty the law requires. Nothing found in the terms used or disclosed by extraneous evidence creates any uncertainty or ambiguity in it. On the face of the paper, we find no repugnance or inconsistency. Effect can be given to every part of the description, notwithstanding the slight inaccuracies adverted to, and, literally and fully applied, it includes the small tract of land in controversy. It cannot be excluded without rejecting the call for the Arnold land. If the lease contained two descriptions, one general and the other particular, and the two differed as to the quantity or identity of the land in question, the circumstances and situation of the parties, evincing intent, might be permitted to control. Mylius v. Lumber Co., 89 W. Va. 346, 361, 71 S. E. 404; Baxter v. Tanner, 35 W. Va. 60, 12 S. E. 1094; Smith v. Chapman, 10 Grat. (Va.) 445; Rutherford v. Tracy, 48 Mo. 325, 8 Am. Rep. 104; Masterson v. Munro, 105 Cal. 431, 38 Pac. 1106, 45 Am. St. Rep. 57. But this lease contains only one description. Butcher had formerly leased his two tracts south of the county road as a single one, specifying 49 acres as the quantity, and his lease to the South Penn Oil Company again specified 49 acres as the quantity, notwithstanding the description inserted includes the small tract which he had purchased between the dates of the two leases, but he had no land popularly known as a 49-acre tract. The mere circumstance of a single lease of two tracts as containing 49 acres is wholly insufficient to establish a reputation or designation for general purposes. The terms "Home Farm," or farm on which the grantor or testator resides, give a means of identification which, differing from the particular description, may control; or, if the granted, devised or leased premises is designated by the name of a former owner from whom it has been purchased or inherited, the words give an unerring index to the location and boundary. But the statement of a quantity is a very uncertain one. It does not purport to be a designation or description. It is a mere statement of the quantity of land otherwise described and is often immaterial. The specification of the quantity or area in the lease, taken in connection with the fact that the land had formerly been leased as containing the same quantity, is the only thing in the lease or the evidence that might be regarded as in any sense a general description, and, as it does not amount to that, for the reasons stated, there is no ambiguity, justifying the admission of the circumstances relied upon as ground for rejection of the particular description or any portion thereof.

[2] All the circumstances relied upon as indicating intent contrary to that expressed in the lease rest in parol evidence. The lease does not in any manner mention or refer to them. It does not show any separation of the Charles Butcher lot from the other lands of Granville Butcher by county road or fences, nor that it was never considered or used by Granville Butcher as a part of his home farm, nor that there were other leases on it, nor that it was under lease to the Eastern Oil Company at the time the South Penn Oil Company lease was executed. Being inconsistent with the written terms of the lease and contradictory thereof, and the lease itself being free from ambiguity, these circumstances are inadmissible in evidence. Oil Co. v. Knox, 68 W. Va. 362, 69 S. E. 1020; McCoy v. Ash, 64 W. Va. 655, 63 S. E. 381; Long v. Perine, 41 W. Va. 314, 23 S. E. 611. Nor is it permissible to show contradiction of the terms of the lease by a parol understanding or agreement that the small tract was not to be included. Neither antecedent nor contemporaneous parol agreements are permitted to vary or contradict the terms of a written contract which is legally deemed to be the final and deliberate repository of the terms and provisions of the contract. McCoy v. Ash, cited; Knowlton v. Campbell, 48 W. Va. 294, 37 S. E. 581; Howell v. Behler, 41 W. Va. 610, 24 S. E. 646.

[3] An averment and claim of forfeiture of the South Penn Company lease as to the Charles Butcher tract are founded upon failure of the claimants under it to pay the rentals directly to the heirs of the lessor after his death, instead of payment thereof into the National Exchange Bank to their credit, under that provision of the original lease authorizing such payment which was only partially recorded, as has been shown. The lease was on a printed form in which space was left for designation of a bank for such purpose. A large amount of evidence tending to prove the blanks in question were filled before the lease was recorded, consisting of the testimony of the agent who took the lease, and agents, clerks, and officers in the office of the South Penn Company, and books and papers from its files, is unopposed by anything except the failure of the clerk to enter upon the deed book, in copying the lease, the words written in the blanks. For all that appears, these words were omitted by mere inadvertence, and the testimony just referred to very strongly tends to show they were so omitted. But the admissibility of this evidence is denied in argument under the rule forbidding collateral attack upon judicial and quasi judicial acts and proceedings, such as were performed by the clerk in admitting the lease to record. The evidence was neither offered nor introduced for the purpose of impeaching the record or amending it, but only to show the contents of the original lease. The purpose was not to change the character of the lease as a recorded one, but to prove it as an unrecorded lease. The original lease was admissible in evidence, notwithstanding admissibility of a certified copy thereof under the provisions of the statute and the rule adopted by the Virginia court before the passage thereof. Thrasher v. Ballard, 33 W. Va. 285, 10 S. E. 411, 25 Am. St. Rep. 894; Carper v. McDowell, 5 Grat. (Va.) 212; Baker v. Preston, Glimmer (Va.) 235. The rentals accruing under the lease were all paid to Granville A. Butcher until the date of his death, some time in 1908. Afterwards, they were paid in part to his heirs and partly into the bank to the credit of his heirs and devisees, but no payments were made to Charles Butcher, the owner of the lot here involved. Both the South Penn Oil Company and the Reserve Gas Company, by way of excuse for nonpayment to him, deny notice of his ownership of this lot. He gave them no actual notice thereof, and, as they are not subsequent purchasers, recordation of his deed is not constructive notice to them.

Without entering upon an inquiry as to whether there was a technical forfeiture, and, if so, whether equity will relieve under the circumstances of the case, treating the lease as one terminable by failure to drill a well within a stipulated time or pay commutation money, it suffices to say the lease in question was not of that character. It contains no forfeiture clause, and the lessee covenanted and agreed to drill a well within a certain time or pay a stipulated rental. There was a right of surrender on the part of the lessee, guaranteed by a stipulation in the lease, but no clause of forfeiture. Until termination of the lease by surrender, or expiration of the term, the lessee was bound by an express covenant to pay the rental, in default of drilling a well. Under familiar principles frequently declared by this court, there might have been a termination by abandonment; but all the facts and circumstances adduced in evidence negative any intent on the part of the lessee to abandon the lease, and the lessor, acting at his peril, attempted to assert a claim of termination by abandonment, as did all owners claiming under him. Clearly there was no forfeiture, nor is there evidence sufficient to make out a case of termination by abandonment.

Upon these principles and conclusions, the decree complained of will be affirmed.

Affirmed.

LYNCH, J., absent.

STATE v. EDWARDS.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 21, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 101*)—JURISDICTION—PREMATURE TRANSFER.

Upon an indictment for murder the circuit court was not without jurisdiction, because the clerk of the criminal court prematurely certified the same to that court, section 2, of chapter 12, Acts 1911, abolishing such criminal court, having operated proprio vigore to effect such transfer, and give the circuit court jurisdiction at the time of the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 199-205; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1153*)—APPEAL—DISCRETIONARY RULING—ORDER OF PROOF.

A judgment of conviction in such case is not reversible because the trial court exercising

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

a reasonable discretion refused to admit evidence of the good character of defendant at a particular stage of the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3061-3066; Dec. Dig. § 1153.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1170*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

Though on the trial of an indictment for murder the court may err in refusing to admit at a particular time evidence of a material fact, the judgment will not be reversed on that account when the record shows that the evidence was subsequently admitted in the progress of the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3145-3153; Dec. Dig. § 1170.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 300*)—INSTRUCTIONS—SELF-DEFENSE.

When on the trial of an indictment for murder there is appreciable evidence on the subject it is reversible error for the court to reject instructions proposed by defendant properly presenting the law of self-defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 614, 616-620, 622-630; Dec. Dig. § 300.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Mingo County.

Will Edwards was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he brings error. Reversed, and new trial awarded.

F. H. Evans and Sheppard, Goodykoontz & Scherr, all of Williamson, for plaintiff in error. A. A. Lilly, Atty. Gen., and John B. Morrison and J. E. Brown, Asst. Attys. Gen., for the State.

MILLER, J. On a verdict of not guilty of first degree murder, but guilty of murder in the second degree, as charged in the indictment, the judgment complained of was that the defendant be confined in the penitentiary for the period of seven years.

The grounds for reversal relied on here are: First, the case was prematurely ordered to be transferred for trial from the criminal court to the circuit court, in accordance with section 2, chapter 12, Acts 1911: Second, that defendant on the trial was denied the right to prove his own good character: Third, that he was also denied the right to prove the existence of an ax at the place of the homicide, and within the reach of the deceased, in support of his theory of self-defense: Fourth, that the court erroneously rejected his instructions to the jury numbered 4 and 5.

[1] We see no merit in the first point. True an order of the criminal court, entered November 26, 1912, the prisoner being present and not objecting, directed the case to be certified to the circuit court for trial, but the Act required no such order. The Act itself without action by the criminal court transferred all cases pending therein from the criminal to the circuit court. While the Act directs the clerk on and after December 31, 1912, as a ministerial duty, to certify and transfer the cases in his court to the circuit court for trial, we do not think performance of that duty was necessary to give the circuit court jurisdiction. By a subsequent provision of said section 2, "All indictments, suits, actions and proceedings of every kind pending in said criminal court on the day last aforesaid * * * shall * * * be docketed and proceeded in and tried and determined, and such further proceedings as may be proper, had therein by the said circuit court in all respects as if the same had been found or originated in said circuit court. * * *" The effect of this provision, we think, was to transfer such cases to the circuit court, whether regularly certified by the clerk as provided or not, and that such certificate was not a pre-requisite to the jurisdiction of the circuit court to try and determine an indictment, provided of course the circuit court actually had possession of the papers and otherwise proceeded regularly in the case.

[2] The second point we think is without substantial merit. The court did not reject finally proof of defendant's good character. When this evidence was offered the court was of opinion, for some reason not disclosed, that it was not proper to admit such evidence at that stage of the trial. There was here a plain intimation that if offered at some other stage the evidence would be admitted; but no such evidence was subsequently proposed. We can not reverse the judgment of a trial court on such matters of discretion, unless it has been abused to the prejudice of the complaining party.

[3] On the third point it is only necessary to say that the court, after the ruling complained of, admitted abundant evidence of the presence of the ax at the place of the homicide, and defendant could not possibly have been prejudiced by the first ruling, or by the order in which the evidence was admitted. Brooks v. Wilcox, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 417. So we must overrule this point.

[4] Lastly, in rejecting defendant's instructions numbered 4 and 5, we think the court plainly erred. It is not denied that these instructions are good in point of law. They are the same as defendant's instructions numbered 5 and 7, approved in State v. Clark, 51 W. Va. 468, 41 S. E. 204, and correctly state the law of self-defense relied on. The only justification offered by the Attorney General for their rejection is that there was no evidence warranting them. In this we can not concur. We do not pretend to say what weight or effect the jury should have given the evidence, but there was certainly some appreciable evidence upon which the prisoner was entitled to these instructions. He did not deny the killing. He admitted it. His own evidence, corroborated to some extent by other witnesses, was that before he fired the fatal shot the deceased in great anger had hit him on the head with a hammer, threatened to chop his head off, and at the moment he fired was making for an ax near at hand to execute his threat, as he had reason to believe and did believe, and that it was necessary for him to kill deceased to save his own life.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

As much as we regret to reverse judgments in such cases, we cannot see our way clear to deprive defendant of a substantial right to have the law of his case properly propounded to the jury.

The judgment below will therefore be reversed, the verdict set aside, and a new trial awarded.

LOVETT v. WEST VIRGINIA CENTRAL GAS CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 21, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. BOUNDARIES (§ 3*)—CONFLICTING ELEMENTS—OIL AND GAS LEASE—CONSTRUCTION.

While a call for quantity will never control other definite description of land, yet when all other elements of description lose their superiority through ambiguities and uncertainties the quantity called for in a deed may be considered in ascertaining the land intended to be conveyed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 3-41; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

2. CONTRACTS (§ 170*)—CONSTRUCTION—INTENT.

If a written contract is ambiguous in meaning, the practical construction put on it by the parties thereto may be considered in explanation of its true meaning.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 753; Dec. Dig. § 170.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 213*)—OFFER OF COMPROMISE—ADMISSION.

Where, in an offer of compromise, a plain concession is in fact made, and not stated merely hypothetically for the purpose of buying peace, it is allowable in evidence as an admission.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 745-751, 753; Dec. Dig. § 213.*]

4. EJECTMENT (§ 16*)—RIGHT OF RECOVERY—POSSESSION.

The doctrine that a plaintiff in ejectment may recover on the strength of prior possession without more has no application where the defendant has acquired the possession peaceably and in good faith under claim of title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. §§ 30-41; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 139*)—DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

In a case not turning on conflicting oral testimony involving the credibility of witnesses, the court may properly direct a verdict for the party in whose favor the evidence plainly and decidedly preponderates.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 332, 333, 338-341, 365; Dec. Dig. § 139.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Lewis County.

Action by James B. Lovett against the West Virginia Central Gas Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Robert L. Bland, of Weston, for plaintiff in error. Brannon & Stathers, of Weston, for defendant in error.

ROBINSON, J. Defendant, claiming under an oil and gas lease, entered on plaintiff's land. By this action in ejectment plaintiff sought to oust defendant from possession. At the trial, when the evidence was all in, the court directed a verdict for defendant, and judgment in its behalf followed. Assigning that the court erred in the admission and refusal of evidence and in directing a verdict, plaintiff seeks reversal of the judgment.

The lease under which defendant entered was executed by plaintiff and his wife to the Eastern Oil Company. It is the same lease that plaintiff and his wife sought to have cancelled by a suit in chancery which was ended adversely to them by a decision of this court reported in 68 W. Va. 667, 70 S. E. 707, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 360. In that suit the lease was attacked as one forfeited and void. But it was adjudged that the lease was a valid, subsisting one. That suit raised no question as to what parcels of land were embraced in the lease. After the determination of the chancery cause, plaintiff, who had failed therein to relieve all of the land from the force of the lease, for the first time claimed that a parcel of about eleven acres, adjoining the two other parcels which are unquestionably within the description of the lease, was not covered by that description. Defendant, as assignee of the lease, had theretofore entered on the premises and drilled a producing gas well on one of the parcels. When defendant came to begin operations on the eleven acre parcel, the gates thereto were barred. Nevertheless defendant's servants entered and drilled another gas well. Thereafter plaintiff began this ejectment suit.

The description of the land in the lease is the general one ordinarily found in oil and gas leases. It calls for a tract of land containing ninety-three acres, bounded as follows:

"On the North by lands of Wilmer Norris,

"On the East by lands of Polk and Ceph Butcher,

"On the South by lands of Geo. N. Butcher and Bailey Bros.,

"On the West by lands of Geo. W. Dean."

Plaintiff and his wife who executed the lease owned three parcels of land, all adjoining. Together these three parcels make up the same acreage called for in the lease. Title to the parcel of eleven acres involved in this ejectment suit, and to one of the other parcels, much larger than the eleven acres, is in plaintiff; title to the remaining parcel is in his wife. The larger parcel belonging to plaintiff and the parcel belonging to his wife make a long but fairly regular boundary of land. But the parcel of eleven acres adjoins plaintiff's other parcel by only a narrow neck and juts out therefrom so that it alone is nearly surrounded by lands of others. The location of the eleven acres is to the east of the body of the other two parcels. Plaintiff says that the call for adjoiners on the east line of the land as given in the lease will not allow the eleven acres to be included. In other words, he says that the lands of Polk and Ceph Butcher as called for in the description are not on the east of the eleven acres. True, by reason of the peculiar jutting out of the eleven acre parcel from the body of the other two parcels, the Butcher lands are to the west and north of the eleven acres. But at the same time they are directly to the east of a portion of the remaining body of the land, and the call does to an extent answer for a boundary of the whole. It is not totally inconsistent with an inclusion of the eleven acre parcel. However we may look at the land, whether as a tract containing the two parcels or the three, the description for the northern and eastern boundary is incomplete. In either case, there are other adjoiners that might have been named. Still, the calls for the north and east as given in the lease are not contrary to the taking in of the eleven acres. Then when we look at the call for the south, we find it particularly in harmony with an inclusion of the eleven acres; for, the land of Geo. N. Butcher is squarely and regularly south of the eleven acres. It is also true that the Geo. N. Butcher land might be considered a proper call for the southern boundary even if we exclude the eleven acres, but that call plainly indicates that the eleven acres is to be included. The call for the east is incomplete and leaves it uncertain whether the eleven acres is to be included. The call for the south speaks an intention to take in the small parcel, but it is not conclusive in that regard. Thus we observe that the boundary lines given in the lease are insufficient for the purpose of locating the land definitely and certainly. They are indeed consistent with either the inclusion or the exclusion of the parcel of eleven acres. Whither then may we look for further indicia of the intention of the parties?

[1] This case is plainly one where a consideration of the quantity is proper in determining whether the parties intended that the lease should cover all of the three parcels. While a call for quantity will never have effect as controlling other definite description of land, yet when there is plainly such ambiguity in description as we have here, quantity may be considered for the purpose of finding the intention of the parties. When the general boundaries given may mean the inclusion of a parcel or the exclusion of it, as in this case, certainly the number of acres which the parties have fixed in describing the land may be looked to. Particularly so is this in relation to an orinary oil and gas lease. In such a lease the acreage is usually stated with certainty because of the relation that it ordinarily has to the fixing of the commutation money to be paid. The land owner is particular to see that the acreage of the land he intends to lease is all that it really is, while the lessee is interested in having it stated no larger than the actual acreage of the land. Now, in the case before us the parties say by the lease that the land intended to be leased is a tract containing ninety-three acres. If the parcel of eleven acres is included, the acreage is what the parties said it should be; otherwise it is not. The stating of the quantity of ninety-three acres is further indicia that the parties intended to cover the small parcel by the lease. Where all other elements of description lose their superior value through ambiguities and uncertainties resort may be had to quantity. "Where the description of land by monuments, distances or otherwise is vague and indefinite, by reason of conflicting lines or omission of a line, or from any other cause, the statement of the acreage is an essential part of the description." Smith v. Owens, 63 W. Va. 60, 59 S. E. 762.

[2] But, perhaps, the clearest insight into what the parties mean by indefinite and ambiguous terms in a contract may be had from the practical construction put on it by themselves. "If a contract is ambiguous in meaning, the practical construction put upon it by the parties thereto is of great weight, even though the contract is in writing, and, ordinarily, is controlling." 2 Page on Contracts, sec. 1126. Now, plaintiff, by a letter which he wrote to an agent of defendant while the chancery cause to which we have referred was pending, in specific terms recognized this very lease as embracing all of the three parcels. Here is what he says: "The tract of land embraced in the lease in controversy in the chancery cause referred to, is made up of three parcels, one containing 33 $\frac{1}{2}$  acres, one containing about 11 or 12 acres, and one containing about 48 acres. The first named tract is owned in fee simple by my wife, B. E. Lovett; the other two tracts are owned by myself in fee simple." Surely this construction of the description of the lease by the plaintiff himself needs no comment. He was too explicit in his statement ever to be misunderstood. Besides, the letter was accompanied by a pencil sketch showing the three parcels of land.

[3] It is submitted, however, that the court erred in admitting the letter and sketch in evidence, because they relate only to a compromise proposition. The letter was one offering a proposition for the compromise of the chancery suit then pending. That suit did not at all involve the question whether the small parcel was embraced in the lease. As we have said, it sought a wiping out of the lease in entirety on the ground that the lease was void. The proposition of compromise related only to the issue in that suit. This suit in ejectment at that time had not been conceived. The admission in the letter and its accompanying sketch that the lease embraced all of the three tracts was in no wise material to the proposition submitted in the letter for a settlement of the issue in the chancery cause. Plaintiff was not, in an effort to buy peace, admitting something then in issue. The admission he made was not induced by the effort to compromise, since it was wholly unnecessary to any settlement of the litigation then pending. It was stated as a fact, and not merely hypothetically. "If a plain concession is in fact made, it is receivable, even though it forms part of an offer to compromise." 2 Wigmore on Evidence, sec. 1061. The book just cited contains an enlightening discussion on this point. The court did not err in allowing the letter and sketch to go in evidence.

Nor did the court err in admitting the record of the chancery cause and the evidence of witnesses for the purpose of further showing plaintiff's practical construction of the terms of description in the lease. As we have shown, the description was ambiguous. Admissions and acts of plaintiff tending to establish his understanding of the meaning of the description were allowable in evidence to clear away the ambiguity.

[4] It is further submitted that plaintiff should have been permitted to prove, by a copy of a deed or assignment which he offered, that defendant had parted with title to the lease before it entered on the eleven acres, and that therefore it was a mere intruder thereon. The evidence, however, shows that the entry on the land was made by defendant not as a mere intruder. As between plaintiff and defendant, the latter was in rightful possession of the whole of the land, including the eleven acres, under claim by the lease, at the time plaintiff says his peaceable possession was ousted by an intrusion. The rule enunciated in Tapscott v. Cobbs, 11 Grat. (Va.) 172, relied on by plaintiff, does not apply under the evidence herein, and the refusal to admit the paper offered was proper. The doctrine that a plaintiff in ejectment may recover on the strength of prior possession without more has no application where the defendant has acquired the possession peaceably and in good faith under claim of title. Marshall v. Stalnaker, 70 W. Va. 394, 74 S. E. 48.

[5] Plaintiff did not testify. He denied none of the practical construction which it was proved he had placed on the terms of the lease. In other particulars, and upon the whole, the evidence did not appreciably tend to support his case as against the evidence of defendant. A verdict against defendant could not rightly have stood on a motion to set the same aside. In such a case as this one, not turning on conflicting oral testimony involving the credibility of witnesses, the court may properly instruct the jury to return a verdict for the party in whose favor the evidence plainly and decidedly preponderates. White v. Hoster Brewing Co., 51 W. Va. 259, 41 S. E. 180.

An order will be entered affirming the judgment.

MILLER and LYNCH, JJ., absent.

BASHAR v. PITTSBURG, C. C. & ST. L. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Oct. 21, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ASSUMPSIT, ACTION OF (§ 19*)—DECLARATION—SUFFICIENCY.

A declaration in assumpsit, based on a promise and undertaking safely to carry and deliver goods, needs no averment of a promise to pay money.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assumpsit, Action of, Cent. Dig. §§ 81-99; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 548*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—EVIDENCE.

Evidence introduced at the trial of an action but not made part of the record by bill of exceptions will not be considered on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2433-2440; Dec. Dig. § 548.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Ohio County.

Action by William Bashar against the Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

J. B. Sommerville, of Wheeling, for plaintiff in error. John J. Coniff, of Wheeling, for defendant in error.

ROBINSON, J. [1] The demurrer to the declaration was properly overruled. The pleading is not subject to the criticism that it does not allege a promise to pay, and therefore is not good in assumpsit. It is a declaration on a contract to carry goods. The promise and undertaking safely to carry and deliver is plainly averred. The declaration as a whole has been copied from the form given in 4 Minor's Institutes (3d Ed.) pt. 2, page 1682. It is undoubtedly good. Plaintiff's counsel seems to think it is not good because it does not allege a promise of payment. But it is not based on a case for the payment of money. It is based solely on a case for the carriage of goods. The promise to carry, not a promise to pay, is therefore the gist of the assumpsit. The failure to fulfill a promise safely to carry and deliver the goods is the breach laid. From the promise and its breach impliedly arises the obligation for damages.

[2] The other questions presented can not be decided without a consideration of the evidence introduced at the trial of the action. The evidence is certified and printed with the record, but has not been made a part thereof by a bill of exceptions. We are therefore precluded from looking to the same. The judgment will be affirmed.

MILLER, J., absent.

CUMBERLEDGE v. CUMBERLEDGE et al.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 7, 1913. Rehearing Denied Nov. 18, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DEEDS (§ 210*)—CONSIDERATION—VERBAL CONTRACT.

Although a deed of grant recites as consideration therefor "one dollar in hand paid," a prior verbal agreement between the parties thereto for maintenance and support, when properly pleaded and sufficiently proved, will be deemed and held the actual consideration for the grant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 635, 636; Dec. Dig. § 210.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1009*)—DECREE—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

A decree based upon conflicting evidence, unless apparently erroneous, will not be disturbed on appeal therefrom.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3970-3978; Dec. Dig. § 1009.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Doddridge County.

Bill by George Cumberledge against Godfrey G. Cumberledge and others. From a decree for plaintiff, the defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

J. V. Blair, of West Union, and Homer Stronider, of Clarksburg, for appellant. G. W. Farr, of West Union, for appellee.

LYNCH, J. The plaintiff, a man about 75 years old, his wife, Lucretia, being about the same age, both infirm and physically unable to endure labor, on December 1, 1906, conveyed 190 acres of land owned by him to a young and remote kinsman, at the time unmarried, in consideration of maintenance and support of the grantors during their lives. The deed of grant does not recite the real consideration; it recites only "one dollar cash in hand paid, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged." But the bill alleges that on November 15, 1906, the plaintiff and defendant entered into a verbal contract, whereby plaintiff agreed to convey his land to defendant, and the latter to live in plaintiff's home and fully support him and his wife during the period stated, and at the demise of each of them to provide proper interment, etc., fully setting out in detail what the latter should do, and that the grant was made accordingly. While the defendant in his answer to the bill, which seeks cancellation of the deed and other general relief, denies the agreement, and asserts that the real consideration was prior services rendered plaintiff, yet in his testimony taken in the cause and read on final hearing he substantially admits the averments relating to the agreement, that it was in fact the real consideration, and that plaintiff promptly paid him cash in full for all services rendered prior to its date. That such an agreement is a sufficient consideration for the deed is held in Wilfong v. Johnson, 41 W. Va. 283, 23 S. E. 730.

As the circuit court found for defendant on all the charges of the bill upon which relief is sought, except abandonment of the premises by defendant and his failure to comply with the obligations assumed by virtue of the agreement, our investigation is properly limited to the one inquiry: Whether the decree of cancellation pronounced in this cause on November 28, 1910, and from which defendant appealed, is erroneous.

[1] The defendant admits that he quit the home of the plaintiff, but denies that he intended thereby to avoid performance of any obligation toward the grantors assumed by him as a consideration for the land. On the contrary, he seeks to excuse his absence from the home, and his failure to comply with the contract, because of the conduct of the female grantor toward his wife, whom he married and took with him to plaintiff's home, as he charges, with the assent of both grantors, and with whom they lived harmoniously until the attitude of plaintiff's wife toward his wife became so intolerable that he was obliged to move and seek a home for the latter elsewhere; and he claims that he moved with plaintiff's consent.

[2] Plaintiff perhaps assented, at least did not object, to defendant's marriage subsequent to the date of the grant, and his joint occupancy thereafter of plaintiff's home. But within a few weeks the strife arose, apparently to the discomfort and annoyance of both plaintiff and defendant, who by reason thereof finally concluded that the latter should live elsewhere, and, inferentially at least, that they should consider the agreement for support terminated. This much is certain, that, pursuant to this arrangement, defendant in fact moved from the land, and that thereafter he did nothing by way of compliance with his undertaking. His failure to comply he attributes to plaintiff's rejection of his repeated offer to perform his part of the original agreement. By its decree, the circuit court evidently found for plaintiff on the evidence touching this feature of the defense. We are unable to say it erred in its conclusion, at least that error is clearly apparent. There is conflict in the testimony, the witnesses for each litigant directly contradicting the statements of those testifying for the other, especially upon the important issues. While different minds, equally impartial and capable, might, upon a careful analysis, reach different conclusions, we think the evidence is amply sufficient to sustain the finding expressed by the circuit court in its decree. The general rule is that the holding of a circuit court or other inferior tribunal upon conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal unless plainly erroneous. Naughton v. Taylor, 50 W. Va. 233, 40 S. E. 352; Frederick v. Frederick, 31 W. Va. 566, 8 S. E. 295; Reger v. O'Neal, 33 W. Va. 159, 10 S. E. 375, 6 L. R. A. 427; Bartlett v. Cleavenger, 35 W. Va. 719, 14 S. E. 273; Dorr v. Dewing, 36 W. Va. 466, 15 S. E. 98. See, also, Shaffer v. Shaffer, 51 W. Va. 126, 41 S. E. 166.

That relief in equity in such cases may be granted, though this is not now questioned by the defendant, clearly appears from Wilfong v. Johnson, supra; Goldsmith v. Goldsmith, 46 W. Va. 426, 33 S. E. 266; Fluharty v. Fluharty, 54 W. Va. 407, 46 S. E. 199; White v. Bailey, 65 W. Va. 573, 64 S. E. 1019, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 232; Wampler v. Wampler, 30 Grat. (71 Va.) 454; Lowman v. Crawford, 99 Va. 688, 40 S. E. 17.

For the reasons stated, we affirm the decree.

LIGHT v. E. M. GRANT & CO. et al.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 21, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 55*)—SALE OF COAL IN PLACE—RIGHT TO RESCIND.

The grantee of coal in place in a deed conveying all the coal in a tract of land cannot rescind the sale merely because the coal area in the land is not as large as he had hoped or expected to obtain, provided there is a substantial quantity of coal in the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. §§ 153-165; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

2. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 55*)—SALE OF COAL IN PLACE—RIGHT TO RESCIND.

Nor can rescission of the sale executed by such a deed be had because of nonexistence of a particular coal vein or measure in the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. §§ 153-165; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 413*)—PAROL—DEED TO COAL IN PLACE.

On a bill for such rescission, parol evidence to prove expectancy of a particular vein or a representation of the presence thereof in the land is inadmissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1855-1857, 1859-1860; Dec. Dig. § 413.*]

4. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 55*)—SALE OF COAL IN PLACE—DEFICIENCY IN QUANTITY—ABATEMENT FROM PRICE.

Under a sale of land or coal by the acre, there may always be an abatement from unpaid purchase money, or a recovery of purchase money paid, in case of a deficiency in the quantity of the land or coal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. §§ 153-165; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

5. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 55*)—DEED TO COAL IN PLACE—AMBIGUITY.

A deed for coal, conveying a certain number of acres as acres of coal in consideration of a sum of money which is an exact multiple of the number of acres specified, is ambiguous on its face as to whether it is a sale by the acre or a sale in gross.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. §§ 153-165; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

6. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 55*)—DEED TO COAL IN PLACE—CONSTRUCTION.

In such case the purpose of the vendee to obtain coal, not land, nonexistence of coal in a large portion of the land and an option for purchase of the coal in the land at a certain price for each and every acre of the coal, under which the deed was made, may be considered in seeking the intent of the parties; and the deed read in the light thereof is properly construed as embodying a contract of sale by the acre.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. §§ 153-165; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Preston County.

Action by J. M. Light against E. M. Grant & Co. and others. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

P. J. Crogan, of Kingwood, and Goodwin & Reay, of Morgantown, for appellants. Hughes & Conley, of Kingwood, for appellee.

POFFENBARGER, P. To the bill for the enforcement of a vendor's lien in this cause, the answer set up two alternative defenses, a right of rescission of the contract of sale, with a recovery of the purchase money paid, and an abatement from the unpaid purchase money for a deficiency, both of which were disallowed by the court, and a decree was entered for the full amount claimed by the plaintiff, with interest thereon.

The deed in which the lien was reserved conveyed "all the coal in, on, and underlying all that certain tract of land owned by the grantors," described as containing 244.55 acres, out of which there was reserved a strip containing 4.157 acres which had been conveyed to a railroad company out of the tract and 6 acres of coal to be located in a contiguous body under and around the dwelling and outbuildings on the property, leaving 234.4 acres of coal. The consideration was $2,812.80, of which one-third was paid in cash and the balance deferred in two equal payments for one and two years, respectively. The conveyance was made March 30, 1907, pursuant to an option dated October 12, 1905, several extensions of which had been granted, the last one until January 2, 1907.

[1, 2] Unsustained by proof, the prayer for rescission was properly denied. The answer set up two grounds therefor, the nonexistence of any coal in the land of the kind contracted for, and fraud on the part of the plaintiff, consisting of misrepresentation as to the kind and quantity of coal in his land. Though neither the option nor the deed specifies any particular vein of coal as the subject-matter of the contract, the answer charges the contract was for coal of the Upper Freeport vein, which averment is denied by a special replication. Some witnesses were of the opinion that none of that vein of coal is found in the land, while others believed it contains five or six acres of such coal. That the quantity thereof, if any, is meager is an undisputed fact in the case. A witness for the defendant testifies to a representation of the existence of a large quantity of such coal by the plaintiff, but this the plaintiff denies, saying he made no claim of that sort, but, on the contrary, had said there was very little of the Upper Freeport vein of coal in his land. To strengthen the evidence of the claim or representation contrary to the fact, evidence was adduced tending to show the Upper Freeport vein of coal was the only one in that section of the country at that time deemed to have a commercial or marketable value.

[3] The general terms used in the option and deed, calling for all of the coal in the land, clearly negative any intention to limit the conveyance to a particular vein. To admit parol evidence of intention so to limit it would clearly violate a well-established rule of evidence. The terms of the deed are certain and definite. It contains not a word upon which any claim of ambiguity or uncertainty can rest, and no latent ambiguity is disclosed by the oral testimony. Hence there is no basis or ground for the admission of parol evidence. It could perform no office other than contradiction of the plain terms of the written contract, and that is inhibited by a firmly established rule of evidence. Poling v. Williams, 55 W. Va. 60, 46 S. E. 704; Troll v. Carter, 15 W. Va. 567. Having contracted for all of the coal in the land, the defendants are not entitled to rescission of the contract on account of the absence or nonexistence of a particular vein. Shackleford v. Fulton, 139 Fed. 97, 71 C. C. A. 295. Nor is the testimony adduced sufficient to show they were induced to enter into the contract by any representation as to the existence of the vein of coal in question. On this issue the evidence consists of the testimony of two witnesses only, and they squarely contradict each other. Moreover, a preponderance of the evidence favors the presence of the Upper Freeport coal in the land, and there is no pretense of a representation that the Freeport vein underlies the whole thereof. That the land contains less coal than was expected or represented constitutes no ground for rescission, for the quantity was not in any way made an essential element of the contract. Its plainly expressed purpose was to take and pay for such coal as the land contained, whether much or little, provided there should be a substantial quantity of it.

[4] If the sale was one by the acre, as regards the coal, and not in gross, there should have been a large abatement from the price, for 234.4 acres were sold, and, as a matter of fact, the land contained at the most not more than 125 acres of coal in veins, the existence of which has been ascertained and shown. In all cases of sale by the acre, there may be an abatement from the purchase price for deficiency in quantity. Butcher v. Peterson, 26 W. Va. 447, 53 Am. Rep. 89; Bartlett v. Bartlett, 37 W. Va. 235, 16 S. E. 450; Thompson v. Catlett, 24 W. Va. 524; Board v. Wilson, 34 W. Va. 609, 12 S. E. 778; Neal v. Logan, 1 Gratt. (Va.) 14, 15. Right to abatement or compensation for a deficiency in the case of a sale of land in gross stands upon the existence of a warranty of quantity or fraud and misrepresentation on the part of the vendor, respecting the quantity. Crislip v. Cain, 19 W. Va. 438; Hansford v. Coal Co., 22 W. Va. 70; Newman v. Kay, 57 W. Va. 98, 49 S. E. 926, 68 L. R. A. 908, 4 Ann. Cas. 39; Winton v. McGraw, 60 W. Va. 98, 54 S. E. 506.

[5, 6] As the consideration agreed upon and recited in the deed is an exact multiple of the number of acres conveyed, it is ambiguous on its face as to whether it was a sale in gross or a sale by the acre. Newman v. Kay, cited; Hansford v. Coal Co., cited. On the question of the construction of such a deed or determination of the question of intent, only evidence of the circumstances which surrounded the parties, their situation when the deed was made, and their conduct in carrying the contract into execution is admissible. Winton v. McGraw, cited; Newman v. Kay, cited; Hansford v. Coal Co., cited; Crislip v. Cain, cited. A mere declaration of intention cannot be considered. In this instance the vendees were purchasing coal, not land, and it would be unreasonable to suppose they intended to pay coal prices for land in which there was no coal, or, in other words, to pay for what did not exist. The option they had taken upon the land provided for payment of $12 an acre for each and every acre of coal, not for the land, nor any supposed quantity of coal, and also for ascertainment of the coal acreage in the land, and the deed itself represents "a net coal area * * * of 234.4 acres." The force of these facts and circumstances stand unopposed by anything indicative of a sale in gross, and they must be accorded their legal effect, making plain and obvious an intention on the part of the parties to effect a sale of the coal by the acre.

The land was mountainous and steep. Near the top there is a coal area of five or six acres in the Upper Freeport vein. Some distance below this there is another area which contains about 40 acres which is supposed to be in the Lower Freeport vein. Still lower down there is an area of about 120 or 125 acres which is said to be in one of the Kittanning measures. Such is the testimony of the witnesses for the plaintiff. That of the witnesses for the defendants classes the upper area as the Lower Freeport, the next one as the Kittanning, and the third one a Mercer coal bed of the Pottsville measures or series. The deficiency established by this evidence is the difference between 125 acres and 234.4 acres, amounting to 109.4 acres, which, at $12 an acre, amounts to $1,312.80. This deducted from the full amount of the purchase money received $2,812.80, leaves a balance of $1,500, of which $937.60 has been paid, leaving a balance of $562.40, bearing interest from March 30, 1907.

In conformity with this conclusion, the decree will be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the trial court to enter a decree for said sum of $562.40, with interest thereon from the 30th day of March, 1907, to be added to the principal and included in the decree as of the date thereof, and for further proceedings in accordance with the rules and principles governing courts of equity.

MILLER, J., absent.

BLAND et al. v. RIGBY et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 21, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 277*) — ACTION TO SET ASIDE—DEFENSE—PROOF.

In a suit to set aside a conveyance or transfer of property or a charge thereon for fraud, payment of full, fair, and adequate consideration for the property or claim is an affirmative defense on the part of the purchaser or claimant of the lien, to be established by clear proof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 799, 809-814; Dec. Dig. § 277.*]

2. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 300*)—ACTION TO SET ASIDE—DEFENSE—PROOF.

To sustain the claim of payment of consideration in such case, when the amounts are large, the testimony of the grantee, if uncorroborated by receipts, memoranda, or other documentary evidence, must be clear, positive, definite, consistent with other evidence offered by him, and free from self-contradiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 806-903; Dec. Dig. § 300.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1178*)—DISPOSITION OF CAUSE—DEFECTIVE PLEADING.

If, in a suit by creditors to set aside a conveyance or charge as fraudulent, the evidence establishes the fraud, but the bill is deficient in its allegations, the decree subjecting the property to sale will be reversed, and the cause remanded, with leave to amend the bill.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4604-4620; Dec. Dig. § 1178.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wetzel County.

Action by J. A. Bland and others against C. F. Rigby and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and certain defendants appeal. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part and remanded.

Dave D. Johnson, of Parkersburg, for appellants.

POFFENBARGER, P. Certain town lots in the town of New Martinsville and some patent rights were decreed to be sold in this cause to satisfy the claims of Harry Wade, J. A. Bland, and M. B. McGee, judgment and execution creditors of C. F. Rigby and E. A. McCabe, late partners as machinists under the firm name of the Rigby Manufacturing Company. At the time of the decree, the real estate was claimed by Emmett C. Rigby, to whom it had been conveyed pendente lite, the patent rights by Mrs. C. F. Rigby, and prior liens on the real estate, amounting to about $9,000, by Frank P. McCabe.

The decree stands upon the hypothesis of fraud in the transfers, inferable from the following relations and transactions among the parties: On March 25, 1901, Wash Dunn and wife conveyed to E. A. McCabe and C. F. Rigby a lot in the town of New Martinsville, 60 feet by 100 feet in size. On April 27, 1901, D. W. Gamble and wife conveyed to them another lot 40 by 159 feet. On September 29, 1902, McCabe and Rigby conveyed the two lots, together with certain personal property, consisting of machinery and tools in the buildings thereon, to S. Bruce Hall, trustee, to secure to A. Leschen & Sons Rope Company a debt of $2,000. On November 19, 1902, Rigby and his wife conveyed to M. R. Morris, trustee, Rigby's one-half interest in the two lots to secure to Frank P. McCabe an alleged debt of $7,000, represented as having been evidenced by a negotiable promissory note, executed by C. F. Rigby. On April 12, 1904, Rigby and wife and E. A. McCabe conveyed the two lots and the machinery, tools, and appliances therein to Frank P. McCabe by a deed which was admitted to record on the 26th day of May, 1904. On or about July 11, 1904, S. Bruce Hall sold, under the deed of trust given to secure A. Leschen & Sons Rope Company, the two lots here involved to Frank P. McCabe for the sum of $2,305, of which sum $768.34 was paid in cash, and for the residue of which McCabe gave his two notes, payable, respectively, in 6 and 12 months. One of the notes was paid February 9, 1905, and the other May 20, 1905. On the 16th day of September, 1904, Rigby, for the stated consideration of $5, assigned to his son, Benj. E. Rigby, 12 separate and distinct United States Letters Patent granted to him for inventions. On the next day, or one month later, as to which the evidence conflicts, Benj. E. Rigby, for the stated consideration of $5, assigned said letters patent to his mother, Achsah M. Rigby. By a deed dated September 13, 1905, Hall, trustee, conveyed the lots purchased from him as trustee by Frank P. McCabe to Achsah M. Rigby, describing her in the deed as having been the purchaser. In point of fact, Achsah M. Rigby assigned to Frank P. McCabe three of the letters patent received from her husband through her son Benj. E. Rigby, in consideration of which he directed a deed for the lots to be executed to her. By a deed dated July 12, 1906, Achsah M. Rigby and her husband conveyed them to Emmett C. Rigby for the recited consideration of $1,800.

The dates of the creation of the debts of the three attacking creditors are not disclosed. Wade obtained his judgment for $216 September 26, 1904, Bland obtained his for $589.12, and McGee his for $328.05, April 6, 1905. Executions on them were issued May 22, 1905, and this suit was commenced September 29, 1905. The record establishes no firm indebtedness at the date of the execution of the deed of trust in favor of Frank P. McCabe, and there is no proof of the existence of any at the date of the conveyance of the lots to him, April 12, 1904. But as Wade procured his judgment September 26, 1904, and Bland and McGee theirs on April 6, 1905, these debts may have existed at the time of the conveyance to Frank P. McCabe, and they may have been insisting upon payment. The record of the judgments of Bland and McGee indicates incurrence of their debts, or rather their maturity, on the 19th day of May, 1904, after the execution of the deed and just prior to its admission to record.

The oral testimony in the case consists of the depositions of Frank P. McCabe, C. F. Rigby, and Achsah M. Rigby. Neither E. A. McCabe nor Benj. E. Rigby nor Emmett C. Rigby testified, although parties to the transactions complained of. Professing the status of a creditor for more than $9,000, Frank P. McCabe was unable to state in detail how he acquired it. He claims to have advanced the $7,000, to secure which the deed of trust was executed, and filed a statement with his deposition, showing the dates and amounts of his alleged advancements, aggregating $7,282.51; but this statement was made up and filed some time after his deposition was taken, and he admits having made such advancements as he did make without any personal knowledge as to the value of the property or information respecting it other than that given him by the debtors. He knew nothing of the existence of the prior deed of trust on it in favor of the A. Leschen & Sons Rope Company. Moreover, his lien was on only Rigby's one-half of the property, the total value of which is set forth in the deed of trust at $10,750. He says part of the money he claims to have advanced was represented by notes he gave and part of it by checks, but he produces none of the notes or checks, nor shows any payment of notes, nor gives the relative amounts of the checks and notes. Though he claims to have paid the purchase money under the sale made by Hall, trustee, $2,305, he was not present when the sale was made and could have had no personal knowledge of the character or amount of the property he was paying the money for. His purchase and payment of the money must have been made by some one else in his name. This he admits in connection with his claim in general terms of payment of the money, but, for all that appears, he may have first received the money from the debtors or one of them. Notwithstanding he claims to have put more than $9,000 into the property, he permitted the deed of the trustee, made in pursuance of the sale under the deed of trust, to be made to the wife of C. F. Rigby in consideration of three letters patent, admitted to be of practically no value, without any inquiry or advice as to how that deed would affect his title to the property or his claim for $7,000 or the $2,305 he claims to have paid to Hall, trustee. The legal effect of that sale and deed, unqualified by any agreement, was the destruction of his deed of trust upon the equity of redemption and of the conveyance made to him by his father and C. F. Rigby. His advancements, if any, were induced, according to his own testimony, by his father, who presumably conducted all of the transactions in which his name appears. It must have been he who made the purchase under the trust deed sale and actually handled the money received by the trustee. His testimony was not taken, and the omission thereof is unexplained. C. F. Rigby, the other partner, testified, but was unable to state any of the particulars of the transactions between the firm and Frank P. McCabe. His part in these transactions also seems to have been left to the care of E. A. McCabe. Mrs. Rigby has no knowledge of any of these vital matters. The principal purpose of her testimony was to show she took the property under the deed from Hall, trustee, subject to the claims of Frank P. McCabe, contrary to the legal effect of the deed. McCabe also makes this claim, but neither of them testified to any express agreement to that effect. He allowed the deed to be made to her at the suggestion of his father and C. F. Rigby and says he is unable to explain why it was made to her and not to himself. He negatives any express agreement for preservation of his claim by the admission of his ignorance of the effect upon them of the sale under the deed of trust. The principal purpose of the testimony of C. F. Rigby was to show the worthlessness of the letters patent in the condition in which they were at the time they were assigned by him to his son Benj. E. Rigby and the indebtedness of the firm to his son for labor in the sum of about $400 as consideration for the assignment. The son's testimony was not taken, but the father and mother both say the firm was indebted to him for 80 days' work in the month of May, 1908, as a tool dresser, at $4 per day, amounting to $120, and work at the shop thereafter and up to September 6, 1904, at $2.50 a day, amounting to $247.50.

[1, 2] Frank P. McCabe assumed the attitude of a purchaser in good faith and without notice of the fraud of the debtors. To prevail over him, the creditors must establish the fraud, the transfer to him, and his notice of the fraud, but it is incumbent upon him both to allege and prove payment of full, adequate, and fair consideration. The issue of payment is an affirmative defense which he must make out by clear and satisfactory proof. Colston v. Miller, 55 W. Va. 490, 47 S. E. 268. His transactions with the insolvent firm involved considerable sums of money. Ordinarily such amounts do not pass from one man to another without a certain degree of formality and preservation of documentary evidence thereof, wherefore a mere claim of payment without the production of written evidence thereof, giving dates, amounts, and other particulars, is looked upon with suspicion and generally regarded as unsatisfactory and insufficient to prove the fact. Lack of corroborative evidence of the kind and character usually kept by the parties to important financial transactions is regarded as a badge of fraud. Colston v. Miller, cited. Reason concurs with authority in declaring insufficiency of the evidence submitted by McCabe to sustain his claim of payment as against creditors of the fraudulent debtors.

[3] Though the manifest purpose of the bill is to subject the property hereinbefore described to the satisfaction of the claims of the plaintiffs, as having been disposed of by the debtors with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud their creditors, and to do this in such manner as to exclude the claims of Frank P. McCabe, the bill does not in terms impeach the $7,000 deed of trust nor the conveyance subsequently made to Frank P. McCabe, nor question his claim of payment of the purchase money under the sale by Hall, trustee. Ignoring the conveyance to him, in satisfaction of the alleged trust debt of $7,000, the bill prays that he be required to release his trust deed. Treating the A. Leachen & Sons Rope Company debt as having been paid by him, it prays that said company be required to release its lien. It then prays that the tangible property, real and personal, and the letters patent held by Mrs. Rigby be subjected to sale for satisfaction of the debts of the plaintiffs.

Only in the transfer by McCabe to Mrs. Rigby of the benefit of his purchase at the sale made by Hall, trustee, effected by mere direction of the trustee to make the deed to her, does the bill charge any fraud. Its theory is that the assignments of the letters patent by C. F. Rigby to his son Benj. E. Rigby and by the son to his mother were voluntary, and that in this manner C. F. Rigby furnished the consideration of the transfer of the property, in the manner stated, from Frank P. McCabe to his wife. The second proposition seems to be that the sale under the A. Leachen & Sons Rope Company trust deed extinguished the right of Frank P. McCabe under his subsequent deed of trust and the subsequent conveyance to him, and that, by his transfer to Achsah M. Rigby, she obtained full, legal, and equitable title to the property, stripped and freed from all claims against the same on his part. But this charge of the bill is met by McCabe's answer, denying any intention on his part to release, or treat as satisfied, his $7,000 debt or the $2,305 he claims to have paid to Hall, trustee, and this averment of the answer is sustained by his testimony. Moreover, Mrs. Rigby, in her testimony, disclaims any purpose or intention to exclude his claims. On the contrary, she distinctly and emphatically says she took the property by the deed from Hall, trustee, subject thereto.

As this deed was made to her, not by Frank P. McCabe himself, but by the trustee, there is no legal impediment to his proof by oral testimony of an equitable interest in the property. According to his testimony, he purchased and paid for it and caused the deed to be made to Mrs. Rigby in trust for himself to the extent of his claims against it. If he had conveyed it to her himself, he might not be permitted to prove such an equity, for the parol evidence offered to establish it contradicts the terms of the deed, a written contract. Troil v. Carter, 15 W. Va. 567; Poling v. Williams, 55 W. Va. 69, 46 S. E. 704. If the plaintiffs were creditors of Mrs. Rigby, it might not be permissible to establish it against them, because the deed from Hall, trustee, to her passed the legal title, acquired under a deed of trust prior to the claims of McCabe, to which the lien of the judgment would likely have attached the moment the title passed into her hands; but they are not creditors of hers, and the purpose of the suit is to subject the property as that of the debtors, E. A. McCabe and C. F. Rigby. Therefore only such interest in the property is liable to claims of these creditors as Mrs. Rigby acquired, and that, according to her own testimony and admissions and the evidence adduced by McCabe, was what may be called an equity of redemption. Of course the plaintiff could subject that, but nothing more. But the decree goes beyond this, treating the property as standing in the hands of Mrs. Rigby free of all claims, equities, or liens in favor of Frank P. McCabe, and accordingly subjects it wholly and unconditionally to sale for satisfaction of the judgments against the insolvent firm.

In the absence of impeachment of Frank P. McCabe's claims, he became the owner of the lots, in equity as well as in law, by his deed from E. A. McCabe and Rigby and his purchase at the trust deed sale. Mrs. Rigby swears she got nothing and claims nothing under the deed from Hall but a sort of an equity of redemption, and, although this was not fixed by express agreement at the date of the conveyance to her, no reason is perceived why McCabe cannot hold as against her such interest as she does not claim nor any ground upon which the plaintiffs, who are not her creditors, can complain of her admission of his equitable claims, founded upon such large payments and such solemn instruments, the validity and genuineness of which are not challenged by the pleadings.

The purpose of this suit, as disclosed by the bill and the decree entered, was to subject the property to satisfaction of the debts of the plaintiffs, and the evidence is insufficient, as we have indicated, to sustain McCabe's claim of a bona fide purchase, although introduced for that purpose. Both he and the plaintiffs seem to have regarded the suit as one intended to sell the property, free and discharged of his claims, and, if the allegations of the bill were broad enough to impeach the bona fides of his deed of trust, the conveyance to him, and his claim of payment of purchase money at the sale made by Hall, trustee, the decree entered would have to be affirmed. The omission of these necessary allegations has resulted in a decree standing upon sufficient evidence and an insufficient bill in so far as it affects the lots and personal property other than the patents. In such cases the well-established practice is to reverse the decree and remand the cause with leave to the plaintiff to amend the bill.

The patent rights in the hands of Mrs. Rigby were properly held liable for the debts of the plaintiffs. As to them the bill is sufficient, and the evidence of indebtedness to the son as consideration for the assignment thereof to him is very unsatisfactory. He did not testify, and his father, testifying to the indebtedness, admits McCabe kept the books, and he had nothing from which to make up a statement between McCabe and the firm. It is highly improbable that the young man drew no wages from May 1st to September 6th, if he really worked for wages; and he assigned the patents to his mother very soon after he got them in consideration of $1 and "other bills" he owed her. These transactions between father and son and mother and son belong to a class that are always closely scrutinized when found in the way of creditors, and as to the existence of which very clear proof is required, when attacked by them. Such as has been adduced in support of the assignments of the patents by C. F. Rigby to his son and by the latter to his mother has been held insufficient by the trial court, and no ground is perceived upon which his finding can be disturbed.

For the reasons stated, so much of the decree as holds the two lots and personal property, conveyed to Frank P. Rigby or purchased by him at the trust deed sale made by Hall, trustee, liable for the debts due the plaintiffs and costs of the suit and orders sale thereof will be reversed. In all other respects it will be affirmed and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

DIXON v. DIXON.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 21, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DIVORCE (§ 157*)—APPLICATION FOR ABSOLUTE DECREE—PRACTICE.

An application, under section 13, c. 64, Code 1906, for an absolute divorce, subsequent to a decree of divorce a mensa et thoro, must be by petition or bill averring grounds for relief, and upon the usual process and proceedings at rules, as prescribed by the ordinary principles of equity practice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 517; Dec. Dig. § 157.*]

2. DEPOSITIONS (§ 7*)—ADMISSION IN EVIDENCE—DIVORCE.

Depositions taken before the filing of the bill or other pleading, and before process or appearance, cannot be read on the final hearing of a cause. They should be suppressed on the motion of the opposite party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Depositions, Cent. Dig. §§ 13-22; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

3. HOLIDAYS (§ 5*)—TAKING DEPOSITIONS—ADMISSION IN EVIDENCE—NOTICE.

Nor can depositions taken on a legal holiday, under a notice specifying that day, be read on final hearing, except with the consent of parties; the notice, by virtue of chapter 15L, Code 1906, being taken to intend the following day.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Holidays, Cent. Dig. §§ 2-5; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Fayette County.

Action by Samuel Dixon against Annie Dixon. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Osenton & Horan, of Fayetteville, and Couch & Briggs, of Charleston, for appellant. Dillon & Nuckolls, of Fayetteville, for appellee.

LYNCH, J. This is a proceeding instituted by plaintiff, under section 13, c. 64, Code, for an absolute divorce, pursuant to a prior decree granting him a divorce a mensa et thoro. From a decree awarding the relief sought, the defendant appeals. By her assignments of error, she presents two interdependent questions for determination: Whether the circuit court had jurisdiction to pronounce the decree complained of; and whether the depositions read on behalf of plaintiff should have been suppressed as irregularly taken.

As disclosed by the record, the original suit was instituted in April, 1903. A final decree therein was entered October 1, 1904, granting plaintiff a limited divorce, awarding to each parent custody of certain of the minor children, and making provision for alimony of $100 per month. It was "further ordered that the plaintiff pay the costs of this suit, and that the same be stricken from the docket." Apparently there was neither pleading nor proof sufficient to support this decree. But, no appeal having been taken therefrom, it cannot now be disturbed. Chapman v. Chapman, 70 W. Va. 522, 74 S. E. 661. Nothing further was done in the cause until September 1, 1911, when the plaintiff caused to be served upon the defendant two notices—one that he would, on the 19th of that month, apply to the circuit court "for an absolute divorce from the bonds of matrimony"; the other that he would, as he in fact did, on September 4th ensuing, take depositions in support of such application. On the day designated in the first notice the defendant appeared specially and moved to quash the notice "on the ground that there was no suit pending." The motion was overruled. The defendant then moved to suppress the depositions of plaintiff filed on the previous day; but that motion was likewise overruled. "Thereupon," as the order of the court of September 19th recites, "the plaintiff tendered his said petition and application for an absolute divorce from the defendant, notice of which had been duly served on the defendant, which said notice and petition are ordered filed." The petition recited the former proceedings in 1904, averred compliance by plaintiff therewith and the absence and improbability of a reconciliation, and prayed for an absolute divorce. By the same order the court, without further pleading or proof, granted the prayer of the petition, and "decree[d] that the said plaintiff continue to carry out, perform, and comply with the said decree of October 1, 1904; in respect to the support and maintenance of the defendant and in all other respects."

Appellant assigns only two grounds of error, either of which, in our opinion, warrants reversal of the decree entered September 19, 1911: First, lack of proper notice; and, second, the court's refusal to suppress plaintiff's depositions.

[1] The only information afforded appellant of the relief sought was an informal, unofficial notice, signed by appellee, that on the day named he would ask a decree for absolute divorce from her. It did not summon her to answer any pleading filed or to be filed. No pleading was in fact tendered or filed until the day and at the time of the entry of the decree granting relief. The appellee seeks to defend this informal method on the ground that the statute does not specifically require any process or pleading; that it only requires an "application." It is true there is no prescribed procedure, no definite direction in the statute. But its failure to prescribe or direct does not authorize each suitor to determine for himself, contrary to the regular and orderly procedure, the course he may pursue to attain his purposes. Such liberality would be subversive of and discordant with all the requirements of orderly procedure, and therefore cannot be tolerated. All proceedings for divorce, or the annulment or affirmation of marriages, are to be by suits instituted and conducted as other suits in equity, with the exception noted in sections 7 and 8, c. 64, Code. Therefore the rules of chancery practice must be observed; otherwise the proceedings are abortive. "It is within the power of courts, in administering statutes, to adopt such practice or procedure as will attain the ends of justice, avoid surprise, and give parties opportunity to answer charges seeking to impose liability upon them. Where a statute allows a judicial proceeding to a man's prejudice, though it do not provide for notice, it is understood to intend it, as no judgment can be given under it without process, and process is necessary. The statute does not dispense with notice." Goff v. Price, 42 W. Va. 384, 389, 26 S. E. 287; Cooper v. Bennett, 70 W. Va. 110, 73 S. E. 260; Railroad Co. v. Railroad Co., 17 W. Va. 812. When thus speaking in the Goff Case, Judge Brannon had under consideration the provisions of section 85, c. 125, Code, allowing answers to be filed as cross-bills, setting up new matter, and praying relief thereon; the section being silent as to notice. Again, it has been said that "at the door of every temple of law in this broad land stands justice with her preliminary requirements upon all administrations." So that, except where a statute definitely provides the necessary procedure, the courts will adopt that which will best serve the legislative intent and protect the personal and property rights sought to be affected. As was said in Phillips v. Phillips, 24 W. Va. 591: "Where a petition is filed in a divorce case, under section 11, c. 64, Code, unless the defendant to the petition appears thereto in court, it should be sent to rules for process to be issued thereon and to be matured for hearing." There the court was dealing with the rights of parents to the custody of their minor children subsequent to the dissolution of marriage. The course pursued was by petition, as prescribed; but the court found in the section a requirement for process to answer pleadings at rules and the usual proceedings thereat. Again, in Railroad Co. v. Railroad Co., supra, this court said: "Where a statute authorizes a legal proceeding against any one, and does not expressly provide for notice to be given, it is implied that an opportunity shall be offered him to appear in defense of his rights, unless the contrary clearly appears." It there discusses the necessity for notice to the landowner in proceedings to condemn a right of way for a railroad. In the opinion, at page 835 of 17 W. Va., the court held that: "It is an essential principle of natural justice that every man have an opportunity to be heard in a court of law upon every question involving his rights or interests before he is affected by any judicial decision of the question." "The summons and proceedings at rules cannot be dispensed with by notice of an intention to apply to a court of equity for a final decree." Cooper v. Bennett, supra. Nelson on Div. & Sep. § 815, likewise holds that, where statutes relating to divorce contain no special provision concerning the notice in divorce suits, the summons must conform to the statutes or provisions of the Code relating to suits in general.

By "notice" in the cases cited is meant process to answer some pleading stating some grounds as a basis for relief, some charge, which the defendant as advised may admit or deny, or against which he may present some counter charge or claim, thus demanding from his adversary full and competent proof, and not ordinarily a mere notice prepared, signed, and served by the plaintiff or at his instance, as in this case, of a motion in anticipation, without such pleading, except where the statute expressly authorizes that course, as of a motion for judgment under chapter 121, § 6, Code, or as now in condemnation proceedings.

Besides, the original cause had long since terminated. It was not thereafter reinstated on the docket for any purpose, not even at the date of the last decree. A final decree ends the cause—puts it out of court. After adjournment of the term, no further order as to the parties can be made therein, unless they are again brought into court by some recognized legal method. Green v. Railroad Co., 11 W. Va. 686; Ruhl v. Ruhl, 24 W. Va. 279; Barbour v. O'Neal, 42 W. Va. 295, 26 S. E. 182. They cannot be reassembled by a mere notice from one to the other, as undertaken by the plaintiff—a method not sanctioned by any authority cited by appellee or found on this examination. On the contrary, as noted, it is against authority here as well as elsewhere. An application by a party who has obtained a limited divorce for a divorce from the bonds of matrimony is a new proceeding, requiring notice to the adverse party, and a hearing by the court. Garnett v. Garnett, 114 Mass. 379, 19 Am. Rep. 369; Graves v. Graves, 108 Mass. 314; Edgerly v. Edgerly, 112 Mass. 53. The statute construed in these cases, as appears reasonably certain, is similar to ours, and in each of them there was a petition and personal service of process. Where the object of the suit is to obtain a final decree of divorce, either party has the right to require the case to be set down on the ordinary docket of suits, and tried in the ordinary way, under averments such as would authorize a decree. Donato v. Frillot, 116 La. 199, 40 South. 634. The court said: "Under our Civil Code the proceedings for a separation from bed and board are separate and distinct from the proceedings for a divorce a vinculo matrimonii, and the one is not a mere continuation of the other. Hence, when a judgment of separation from bed and board has been obtained, it is not sufficient for the party obtaining it to go into court 12 months thereafter, and by proof of the fact that no reconciliation has taken place obtain a judgment of divorce. The party must be cited to answer this new demand; the judgment of separation from bed and board being the mere basis for final judgment of divorce. The defendant is entitled of right to be notified of this new demand, and to be accorded an opportunity to be heard on the issues of fact therein raised." Jurgielewicz v. Jurgielewicz, 24 La. 77, holds that: "A judgment of divorce a vinculo matrimonii, rendered on a rule taken by one of the parties on a judgment of separation from bed and board, is absolutely null and void, if the opposing party has not been cited nor has appeared to defend the suit." The court in the opinion says: "The judgment is a nullity, because the defendant was not legally cited." The same procedure and holding are found in Gernon v. Hickey, 18 La. 454. See, also, Graves v. Graves, supra; Hill v. Hill, 196 Mass. 509, 82 N. E. 690.

[2] Our conclusion, also, is, as stated, that the court erred in refusing to suppress the depositions taken on notice to defendant. As we have seen, there was nothing to prove. No pleading of any character had been filed; no affirmations made; no cause of action, asserted; no effort for reconciliation alleged, nor its improbability stated. What was there to prove? We need only cite Cooper v. Bennett, 70 W. Va. 110, 73 S. E. 260, which, although an injunction suit, discusses the right to read on final hearing depositions taken before the bill was filed. There it is said: "Technically, there was no suit pending when the depositions were taken. No summons was issued, no bill had been filed, and there had been no appearance." See, also, Goldsmith v. Goldsmith, 46 W. Va. 428, 33 S. E. 266; Edgell v. Smith, 50 W. Va. 349, 40 S. E. 402; James v. Pigott, 70 W. Va. 436, 74 S. E. 667.

[3] Against the reading of the depositions filed in the case, appellant also properly urges irregularity, in this, that they were taken on the 4th of September, that day being the first Monday of the month, and therefore, under chapter 15L, Code, a holiday. The provisional clause of the chapter seems to indicate that, while the notice on its face names the 4th as the return day, the return day was in fact on the 5th of September. That clause provides that: "When the return day of any summons or other court proceeding, or any notice, or the time fixed for the holding of any court or doing any official act, shall fall on either of said holidays, the next ensuing secular day shall be taken as meant and intended."

We therefore reverse the decree, and remand the cause for further proceedings, in accordance with the principles herein announced.

MILLER, J., absent.

SELVEY'S EX'RS v. ARMSTRONG'S ADM'R.(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 21, 1913.)(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 199*)—CONTRIBUTION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

A bank, upon a renewal note by B., with A. and S. as sureties, instituted its action at law against the makers, pending which A. died and as to whom the action thereupon was dismissed on plaintiff's motion, but thereafter was prosecuted to final judgment against B. and S. B. having become insolvent, and S. having died, the executors of the latter discharged the judgment, and subsequently, on motion and notice thereof, under section 5, c. 101, Code 1906, and after verdict, obtained judgment against A.'s administrator for half the amount so paid by them. Held, upon the record, the evidence, though meager, was sufficient to support the verdict and the judgment thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. §§ 636-640; Dec. Dig. § 199.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1149*)—JUDGMENT—CORRECTION.

The judgment, being by proper construction personal against the administrator, is correctible, and may be amended here, so as to read, "against K., administrator of Adolphus Armstrong, to be levied of the goods and chattels in his hands to be administered."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4483-4496; Dec. Dig. § 1149.*]

3. AMENDED JUDGMENT AFFIRMED.

The judgment, as amended, should be affirmed, with costs to defendant.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

4. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 199*)—JUDGMENT FOR CONTRIBUTION—NOTICE—SUFFICIENCY.

A notice of a surety's motion under Code 1906, c. 101, § 5, for a judgment of contribution against a cosurety on the note was sufficient, where it described the note by naming the parties, and recited payment of the judgment and costs, though it did not state the date or amount of the note.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. §§ 636-640; Dec. Dig. § 199.*]

5. APPEARANCE (§ 25*)—GENERAL APPEARANCE—WAIVER OF IRREGULARITY.

Any irregularities in making a successor of the defendant administrator a party to a surety's proceeding by motion for a judgment of contribution under Code 1906, c. 101, § 5, were waived, where such successor, after the overruling of his motion to dismiss, appeared generally by filing pleas and proceeding to trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appearance, Cent. Dig. §§ 144-153; Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

6. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 199*)—CONTRIBUTION—EVIDENCE—JUDGMENT.

On a surety's motion under Code 1906, c. 101, § 5, for a judgment of contribution, the judgment previously obtained against the sureties was properly admitted in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. §§ 636-640; Dec. Dig. § 199.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Taylor County.

Motion under Code 1906, c. 101, § 5, for contribution, by James W. Selvey's Executors against Adolphus Armstrong's Administrator. Judgment for moving party, and, Armstrong dying thereafter, G. H. A. Kunst, administrator of his estate, brings error. Corrected and affirmed.

John L. Hechmier, of Grafton, for plaintiff in error. Warder & Robinson, of Grafton, for defendant in error.

LYNCH, J. On the last renewal of a former note payable to it, the First National Bank of Grafton sued Burnside, Selvey, and Armstrong; the last two being sureties. Burnside was then, and for some years prior had been, insolvent. Armstrong having died before judgment, the action as to him was dismissed, but the plaintiff prosecuted the action to final judgment against the other defendants. After Selvey died, his executors paid the judgment, interest, and costs, amounting to $770.20. They subsequently, by motion under section 5, c. 101, Code, recovered judgment against Armstrong's administrator for one-half the amount so paid by them, and the latter obtained this writ of error.

[4] He assigns several grounds for reversal. The first is error in refusing his motion to quash the notice, because insufficient in its description of the note. The notice describes the note as the one given by Burnside, Selvey, and Armstrong to the First National Bank, not stating the date or amount, on which the bank obtained judgment against Burnside and Selvey on March 26, 1907, with interest from August 9, 1906, and costs, and recites payment by Selvey's executors, for one-half of which it notifies defendant of a motion for judgment before the circuit court on the day specified therein. We think the notice in this respect is sufficient.

[5] The notice as prepared named Means, who it appears was curator and "committee administrator" of Armstrong's estate, as the person against whom judgment would be asked. His powers having ceased, the plaintiffs attempted to revive against Kunst, who in the meantime had become administrator. For this purpose they sued out a writ of scire facias, which was returned executed November 22, 1909, although the action had been revived in the usual manner on plaintiff's motion, by an order entered October 27, 1909. However, the proceeding was not, by any other order at any time, revived pursuant to the writ. But on January 30, 1911, Kunst appeared specially, and moved to "dismiss the action for the reason that no order reviving this motion as to him had theretofore been entered." The court having overruled the motion, he appeared generally, filing pleas and proceeding to trial, which terminated in a verdict for plaintiffs and judgment thereon. This, being a general appearance, operated as a waiver of the irregularity. Moore v. Estes, 23 Ark. 152; Greer

v. Powell, 1 Bush (Ky.) 489; Judy v. Ice Co., 60 Mo. App. 114. The revival "being an order which the court would have granted, the case will be treated as if the court then and there granted the order." Ferguson v. Wilson, 122 Mich. 97, 80 N. W. 1006, 80 Am. St. Rep. 543.

[1, 6] Defendant discusses the evidence introduced by plaintiffs, first, as to its competency, and, second, its sufficiency to establish the identity of the note, Armstrong's signature, and plaintiffs' payment of the judgment against Selvey and Burnside. There is, it is true, some evidence clearly incompetent, in addition to that excluded by the court—that of Nina Selvey, daughter of James W. Selvey. But other proof touching the same subject, not incompetent, but ample to sustain the finding of the jury, was introduced by plaintiffs. The court, not improperly, admitted in evidence the judgment obtained by the bank against Burnside and Selvey. This judgment ascertained and fixed the liability of these persons on the note, and formed the basis for Selvey's payment of the whole debt. The notice also mentioned it as the medium of enforced payment by the Selvey executors.

Although perhaps not necessary, as the informal pleadings, purporting to deny execution of the note by Armstrong, were not verified in any form, plaintiffs introduced witnesses who, after stating their familiarity with Armstrong's handwriting, expressed their belief in the genuineness of his signature to the note. Likewise Mallonee, president of the bank loaning the money on the note and cashier when the loan was first made, testifies as to repeated renewals thereof by all the makers, and that Selvey and Armstrong both said they were sureties for Burnside. This proof fully establishes the identity of the note, the relationship of the makers to one another, and their liability to the payee.

The evidence tending to establish payment by plaintiffs, while meager, is sufficient for that purpose. Nina Selvey, executrix, with Rector, of the James W. Selvey will, produces as a witness a note by J. W. Selvey, Sallie E. Selvey, and Charles H. Rector, dated February 18, 1908, for $770.20, and payable to the First National Bank of Grafton, which bears indorsement, "paid by the executors of J. W. Selvey $771.36 Aug. 27, 1908." She also produces and files a check dated August 27, 1908, for $771.36, signed by herself and Rector as executors, and drawn in favor of the payee in the note, both note and check being, as she says, in payment of the bank judgment. Defendant did not object to this testimony because incompetent or for any other reason, nor does it in fact appear to be subject to criticism. But it is the sole proof of payment in discharge of the original liability of Selvey and Armstrong on the Burnside note. The jury being satisfied to find thereon favorably to plaintiffs, and the court to sustain its finding, its verdict will not now be disturbed, as the record in its entirety carries a reasonable degree of assurance that the trial resulted in no injustice to either party.

[2] But reversal is also urged because the judgment on the verdict is against Kunst personally, as it merely describes him as administrator, and does not contain the additional words "to be levied of the goods and chattels of Adolphus Armstrong in his hands to be administered." It is in fact, by proper construction a personal judgment. Jones v. Reid, 12 W. Va. 350, 370, 29 Am. Rep. 455; Thomson v. Mann, 53 W. Va. 432, 435, 44 S. E. 246; Hanson v. Blake, 63 W. Va. 560, 562, 60 S. E. 589. The words quoted, or their equivalent, should have been inserted. The omission, however, is only a formal defect, readily correctible in this court.

[3] As we find no other reason requiring reversal, the judgment, will be entered here in proper form; and, as so corrected, the judgment below is affirmed.

MILLER and ROBINSON, JJ., absent.

CLARK v. NICKELL et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. BONDS (§ 55*) — CASHIER'S BOND — CONSTRUCTION—INDEMNITY—"As."

A bond executed by a bank cashier, reciting his previous election as such, and stating the condition to be that he "shall well and faithfully apply and account for all moneys which may come into his hands as such cashier," is, when properly construed, an indemnity to the bank against loss by his default, although its officers are therein named as obligees, as president, and as directors of the bank in its corporate name.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bonds, Cent. Dig. § 58; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 518-521.]

2. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 152*)—ACTION ON CASHIER'S BOND—PARTIES.

A suit in equity, by the bank, to enforce the obligation of such bond, should be brought jointly against the surviving, and the personal representatives of the deceased, obligors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. §§ 416-419; Dec. Dig. § 152.*]

3. LOST INSTRUMENTS (§ 16*) — ACTION IN EQUITY—DISCOVERY PENDING SUIT.

If after diligent and unavailing search therefor plaintiff sues, when allowable, in equity, upon a lost bond, its discovery and production thereafter is immaterial upon his right to relief in a suit then pending.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Lost Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 31-34, 39, 40; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

*(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)4. LOST INSTRUMENTS (§ 14*) — CASHIER'S BOND—JURISDICTION IN EQUITY.

Equity has jurisdiction to enforce the liability of the obligors on the lost bond of a defaulting bank cashier.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Lost Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 27-29; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

5. EQUITY (§ 48*)—JURISDICTION — ENFORCEMENT OF CASHIER'S BOND.

Equity has jurisdiction to enforce the bond of a defaulting cashier according to its real intent and purpose, where the bond names a bank's officers as obligees instead of the bank; equity being the only sufficient source of relief in such case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. §§ 156, 158; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

6. INDEMNITY (§ 15*)—ACTION BY BENEFICIAL OBLIGEE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where plaintiff sues as beneficial obligee on a bond of indemnity, he must prove that he had an interest in the performance of the duty and that the duty was imposed either for his sole benefit or jointly for the benefit of himself and others.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indemnity, Cent. Dig. §§ 36-40, 42-47; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Monroe County.

Action by R. L. Clark, trustee, etc., against C. P. Nickell and others. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

John W. Arbuckle, of Lewisburg, G. C. Osborne, of Keenan, and R. L. Clark, of Union, for appellant. T. N. Read, of Hinton, and John L. Rowan, of Union, for appellees.

LYNCH, J. Denied relief upon a bill seeking to charge liability against the obligors on the lost bond of a defaulting bank cashier, plaintiff has appealed to this court. The defendants also cross-assign errors, the principal of which relate to the refusal of the court to sustain their demurrer to the bill.

The bond was executed in 1889 by J. W. McNeer, who had theretofore been elected and was at the time, and for two years prior thereto had been, cashier of the Bank of Union. The obligees were Frank Hereford as president and Cary P. Nickell, W. L. Swope, H. T. Houston, and J. D. Logan as directors of the bank. The obligors were McNeer, the cashier, Nickell, Swope, Logan, A. A. McNeer, and H. M. Brown. Thus, as readily appears, three of the parties to the obligation occupied the dual relation of obligors and obligees. The bill names, as defendants against whom recovery is sought, Nickell, Brown, Logan, and A. A. McNeer. McNeer, the principal, and Swope died before suit. The bill did not name their personal representatives as parties, or offer any excuse, as insolvency or other cause, for their absence as parties. Two grounds are assigned in support of the demurrer: Want of jurisdiction in equity, and the absence of the personal representatives of Swope and J. W. McNeer.

[4] The bill alleges loss of the bond and plaintiff's inability to find it after diligent search. This allegation is supported by affidavit. Equity has jurisdiction to enforce payment of a lost obligation. Lyttle v. Cozad, 21 W. Va. 183; Hall v. Wilkinson, 35 W. Va. 167, 12 S. E. 1118; Yates v. Stuart, 39 W. Va. 124, 19 S. E. 423. By their answers the defendants deny loss of the bond. They copy it into their answers and aver its cancellation by an order of the board of directors and delivery to C. P. Nickell. But they do not produce the original. Of course, in passing upon a demurrer, the court ordinarily confines its examination to the pleading whose sufficiency is thus challenged. But these answers reflect light to some extent upon the question of jurisdiction. They tend to establish the necessity for resort to a forum whose rules and mode of procedure allow greater liberality than is permissible in actions at law. In an action to recover the penalty of a bond, the pleading must ordinarily make profert. If the bond is lost, its production is not possible. Of course the pleader may even then declare on it as a lost or destroyed instrument; or he may demand its production by his adversary, if in his possession, as it perhaps is in the case now under consideration. But the procedure in equity is more flexible and affords greater freedom. Consequently resort to it is frequently, though not always, permitted to establish and enforce payment of a lost instrument.

[3] As stated, the defendants do not produce the original bond. But even the subsequent production of a lost obligation will not operate to defeat jurisdiction, when once properly assumed. Lyttle v. Cozad, 21 W. Va. 183.

[1, 5] But still other important reasons besides loss support plaintiff's right to resort to equity to establish the bond and enforce its payment. The existence of the bond, it may be said, is sufficiently established. But from the copy it appears: (1) That the obligation is not directly payable to the bank but is payable to its officers as president and as directors, three of whom are also obligors; and (2) that, as appears from the answers, the three obligors who are also obligees assert cancellation of the bond and delivery thereof after cancellation to the defendant Nickell. These grounds make resort to equity the only sufficient and appropriate source of relief.

Although the bond does not expressly name the bank as obligee, yet, having evidently been executed to secure it against the cashier's default, a court of equity will construe it according to its real intent and purpose. The bond describes the obligees as president and directors of the bank and is therefore apparently for its and not their protection. A bond was executed to Yeates and others, then overseers of the poor of Franklin county, Pa., who by statute were a corporation, and not to the corporation by name. The court held that the bond inured to the benefit of the corporation. Greenfield v. Yeates, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 158. In that case the successors of Yeates and others, as overseers, recovered judgment in an action at law on the bond. Besides, as seems reasonably obvious from its language and from the construction given to it by Ross v. Milne, 12 Leigh (Va.) 204, 37 Am. Dec. 646, Clarksons v. Doddridge, 14 Grat. (Va.) 42, Jones v. Thomas, 21 Grat. (Va.) 96, Johnson v. McClung, 26 W. Va. 359, and Railway Co. v. Wilson, 52 W. Va. 852, 44 S. E. 169, section 2, c. 71, Code, contemplates a remedy to the bank by suit or action upon the bond now under consideration. As paraphrased in Johnson v. McClung, cited, it provides that, "if a covenant or promise be made for the sole benefit of a person with whom it is not made, * * * such person may maintain in his own name any action thereon which he might maintain in case it had been made with him only and the consideration had moved from him to the party making such covenant or promise."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

The consideration for the bond in this case moved directly from the corporation. McNeer was elected its cashier, not the cashier of its board of directors, the officary acting for it and not for themselves. The act of the board in the election of a cashier is an election by the bank. When elected, the cashier was an officer of the bank, and, by the bond, the board sought the bank's protection against the default of the cashier. Hence the conclusion that the bond, on its face, indicates an intent to indemnify the bank against loss occasioned by the dereliction of McNeer, its cashier. This conclusion is reinforced by the language of the obligation itself. The obligees are Hereford as president and Nickell and others as directors of the Bank of Union. "As president" and "as directors" are not words of mere description or identification of the person. The word "as" designates the official relation of the obligees to the real beneficiary, the bank. The word is so defined in Hayes v. Crane, 48 Minn. 39, 50 N. W. 925. There Crane, acting as assignee under an assignment for the benefit of creditors, without authority of the court, under proceedings to foreclose a mortgage, entered into an agreement for the purchase, or redemption from enforced sale under a decree of court, of the property assigned. Having refused to comply therewith, the plaintiff sought by suit to enforce specific performance. The court held that his agreement as assignee was in effect an agreement in his character as trustee and not in his own right and therefore refused to grant the relief sought. The obligation, by its condition providing that, "if J. W. McNeer shall well and faithfully apply and account for all moneys which may come into his hands as such cashier, then and in that case his bond is to be null and void otherwise to remain in full force and effect," further strengthens this construction. Whose money was to be protected from defalcation? Plainly not the money of the president and directors so nomine; their money, of course, when by deposits it is commingled with that of other depositors and placed in the custody of the bank, then becoming, for all proper purposes, its money, subject to its control and disposition in the due administration of its legitimate business, by its proper officer, the cashier. He was its custodian for the bank; and the bond was required to secure its wrongful appropriation directly by him or indirectly by others through his disloyalty to the trust reposed in him. The president and the directors were the mere agents of the bank, its managing officers. What they did in their official capacity, they did for the bank. In taking McNeer's bond, they acted for the bank, not for themselves. Many authorities so hold, under like circumstances. "Where one subscribed for a certain share in a turnpike and promised to pay on demand to the agent of the corporation all assessments levied thereon, it was held that the corporation could bring assumpsit to recover the amount of such assessments." Taunton Turnpike v. Whiting, 10 Mass. 327, 6 Am. Dec. 124; Worcester Turnpike v. Willard, 5 Mass. 80, 4 Am. Dec. 39; Essex Turnpike v. Collins, 8 Mass. 292. "An action upon a note payable to the cashier of the Commercial Bank may be maintained by the bank as promisee; it appearing that the consideration proceeded from the bank." Bank v. French, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 486, 32 Am. Dec. 280, and cases cited in note; Gilmore v. Pope, 5 Mass. 491.

In order to maintain an action or suit as a beneficial obligee, it seems necessary to allege and prove plaintiff's interest in the performance of the duty the failure of which gives rise to the remedy.

[6] When the plaintiff sues as beneficial obligee on a bond of indemnity, by reason of damage resulting from a breach of its condition, he should allege and prove that he had an interest in the performance of the duty and that the duty was imposed either for his sole benefit or jointly for the benefit of himself and others. Teall v. Felton, 1 N. Y. 537, 49 Am. Dec. 352; Id., 12 How. (U. S.) 284, 13 L. Ed. 990; Ware v. Brown, 2 Bond (U. S.) 267, Fed. Cas. No. 17,170; State v. Harris, 89 Ind. 363, 46 Am. Rep. 169; Harrington v. Ward, 9 Mass. 251; Raynsford v. Phelps, 43 Mich. 342, 5 N. W. 403, 38 Am. Rep. 189; Wood v. Ruiland, 10 Mo. 143; Rome Bank v. Mott, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 554; Houseman v. Girard, 81 Pa. 256. In Brown v. Lester, 13 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 392, the appellate court held the clerk of a court liable on his official bond for his failure to place on the trial docket in its proper order, as required by statute, a case the trial of which was thereby deferred until after the defendant became insolvent, thus resulting in loss of plaintiff's debt. We have no doubt of the propriety and justness of our conclusion that the bank in its corporate capacity may sue on the bond.

[2] But, in our opinion, all the surviving obligors, and the representatives of those who are dead, should be named as parties to the suit, unless their absence may be excused by reason of insolvency or other substantial cause; none being averred as the case now stands. Such joinder in equity we find sustained by reason and by competent authority. In a suit by the holder of a note to subject the estate of a deceased indorser to satisfy it, the representatives of the deceased maker and of another indorser should be made parties. Duerson v. Alsop, 27 Grat. (Va.) 230. Again in White v. Kennedy, 23 W. Va. 221, it is held that, "in a creditor's bill against the administrator and heirs of a decedent to enforce the collection of a debt secured to the plaintiff by the joint and several obligation of the decedent and another obligor, such obligor is a necessary party to such bill, although he may be a nonresident," because he "has the right to appear and make defense to such bill, and the administrator and heirs of such decedent have the right to require him to be made a party to the suit, so that, in case he should appear, his liability for such debt may be ascertained and determined as between him and such decedent." In Mayor v. Murray, 44 Eng. Rep. (reprint) 194, a suit in equity by one of three sureties on a treasurer's bond, some of whom had died, the purpose of which was to charge a fund received by one surety from the treasurer for his indemnity, it was held that "for the purposes of the suit a representative of the deceased surety was a necessary party." The chancellor said: "I shall not dispose of the case without having a personal representative of Renton before the court; and, though it is not the plaintiff's fault that there is not one, yet, as it is his business to procure one he must do so." See, also, Findley v. Smith, 42 W. Va. 300, 26 S. E. 370; Jaluka v. Matejek, 55 S. W. 395; Roane v. Pickett, 2 Eng. (7 Ark.) 510; Loop v. Summers, 3 Rand. (Va.) 511; Foster v. Crenshaw, 3 Munt. (Va.) 515; Tidball v. Bank, 98 Va. 768, 37 S. E. 318; Ice & Dairy Co. v. Frick Co., 96 Va. 141, 30 S. E. 491. In cases of this character it is necessary to name as parties all persons living, and the personal representatives of those who are dead, whose interests are to be affected by the final determination of the cause, to the end that all matters may be adjusted and complete justice done in one suit. Otherwise, if liability is fixed as to one or more and not all of the several obligors, those required to discharge and who do discharge the liability are obliged to seek by other litigation contribution from those jointly liable with them. And the fact that some are dead does not in equity excuse failure to join the personal representatives with those still living, although at law such joinder is not allowable. Where a creditor applies to a court of equity for its aid in the collection of his debt against sureties, the simple allegation of the death of the principal debtor or a cosurety and his insolvency will not excuse the omission to make his representative a party to the bill, unless it appears that no part of the debt could be made out of his estate. Roane v. Pickett, supra. The principal if living, and his estate thereafter, by the very nature of the undertaking, assumes the chief burden of payment.

While a judgment obtained in an action at law against all the obligors when sued jointly, as they may be, is enforceable against any one of them, it inures to the benefit of the one so discharging the obligation, who may enforce it by any proper process or proceeding against the principal or his estate or ratably against the cosureties. If at the date of the action or during its pendency the principal or any surety dies, separate actions against the survivors and the personal representatives of the deceased obligors may proceed to final judgment in both. But in equity, by reason of its flexible rules and procedure, all may with propriety be joined in the same suit and should be joined, unless completely insolvent at the time; and, to excuse the omission even for this cause, there must be averment and proof of insolvency, unless admitted by defendants.

The circuit court should therefore have sustained the demurrer on the ground of want of necessary parties. All persons interested in the subject-matter of the litigation, where rights may be affected by the final decrees, should be before the court, to the end that complete justice may be done and the litigation may be final and conclusive. Deeming this defect as to parties material, nothing need be said touching the merits of the case as presented to the court for final decree. The case, as presented on final hearing, was not perhaps, in some respects, fully sustained by proof. But the court's finding does not preclude plaintiff from an effort to charge the estates of other obligors on the bond.

We therefore reverse the decree of November 10, 1910, sustain the demurrer, and remand the cause.

SLAVEN v. RILEY et al.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 28, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 187*)—WIFE'S SEPARATE ESTATE—SALE OF REALTY.

A contract by a married woman, living with her husband, for the sale of her real estate, to be enforceable, must not only be in writing, but signed and acknowledged by both of them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 722, 723; Dec. Dig. § 187.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pocahontas County.

Action by Mary F. Slaven against J. W. Riley and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Price, Osenton & Horan and T. S. McNeel, all of Marlinton, for appellant. L. M. McClintic, of Marlinton, for appellees.

LYNCH, J. The plaintiff, by bill to which her brother, J. W. Riley, and the children of a deceased sister, are the only parties defendant, asks partition of 150 acres of land, set apart in 1868 as dower of her mother, who resided thereon until her death in 1906. The brother denies her right to partition, and, as ground therefor, alleges a written contract with her in 1871 by which, as he claims she agreed to convey to him her interest for $400, and with which he asserts compliance on his part and refusal by her to execute to him a deed in accordance with the agreement. He does not, however, pray any affirmative relief by specific performance. The court, on final hearing, dismissed the bill.

The sole question on this appeal, therefore, is whether the defense by J. W. Riley is sufficiently established to bar plaintiff's right to partition, even if properly pleaded. While he does allege that the contract with his sister was in writing and that her husband joined with her therein, he does not prove that either of them signed and acknowledged it, as required by section 3, c. 66, Code. Therefore, without detailing the evidence, these facts alone determine the case adversely to the defense so asserted by defendant.

The decisions of this court firmly establish the principle that a married woman, living with her husband, can neither sell nor convey her real estate except in the manner prescribed by the statute cited—by deed or contract in writing, signed and acknowledged by her and her husband. Otherwise, it is ineffectual for any purpose, even where the purchaser has performed his part of the agreement and is in possession of the land sold. McMullen v. Eagan, 21 W. Va. 233, 246; Watson v. Michael, 21 W. Va. 568, 571; Moore v. Ligon, 22 W. Va. 292, 296; Rosenour v. Rosenour, 47 W. Va. 554, 557, 560, 35 S. E. 918; Amick v. Ellis, 53 W. Va. 421, 44 S. E. 257; Simpson v. Belcher, 61 W. Va. 157, 56 S. E. 211; Pickens v. Stout, 67 W. Va. 422, 426, 68 S. E. 354; Wiseman v. Orislip, 78 S. E. 107, 110. See, also, Radford v. Carwile, 13 W. Va. 572, 669, 682; Land Co. v. Laidley, 32 W. Va. 134, 9 S. E. 61, 3 L. R. A. 826, 25 Am. St. Rep. 797; Railway Co. v. Honaker, 66 W. Va. 136, 66 S. E. 104, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 388.

The conclusion is that the court erred in dismissing the bill on final hearing. The decree of December 29, 1910, is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings therein, in accordance with the principles herein announced and otherwise according to law.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

DICKENSON et al. v. RAMSEY et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 20, 1913.)

1. ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 29*)—EVIDENCE—WRIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY.

In a suit wherein complainants charged that a deed conveying land to their mother for life with remainder to themselves was despoiled, mutilated, and changed after its execution and before its recording by striking out the grant of the remainder, clear, cogent, and convincing evidence in support of such allegations was required.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Alteration of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 259-263; Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

2. FRAUD (§ 41*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Fraud must be clearly alleged and proved, as every presumption is in favor of innocence and not of guilt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 36, 37; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

3. ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 29*)—REMEDIES.

Where a deed granting land to a person for life, with remainder to her children, was altered after its execution and before its recording by striking out the grant of the remainder, a court of equity could grant relief to the remaindermen.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Alteration of Instruments, Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

4. ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 29*)—EVIDENCE—WRIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY.

In a suit wherein complainants claimed that a deed conveying land to their mother for life with remainder to themselves was altered after its execution and before its recording by striking out the grant of the remainder, evidence held insufficient to show that the deed when originally executed was as claimed by them; the record thereof purporting to convey a fee simple to the mother.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Alteration of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 259-263; Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Russell County.

Suit by Charles Ramsey and others against Caroline Dickenson and others. From a decree for complainants, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Routh & Routh, of Lebanon, Vicars & Peery, of Wise, and R. S. Graham, of Norton, for appellants. W. W. Bird, of Lebanon, for appellees.

KEITH, P. The bill in this case is filed by the children of Eliza Ramsey, and in it they set out the following case: That Polly Ramsey, their grandmother, by deed date July 25, 1884, conveyed to their mother, during her life, and at her death to themselves as her children, in fee, a tract of land containing 150 acres, in Russell county, with reservation of a life estate to the grantor, and granting also a life estate to William Ramsey, the father of complainants; that the purpose of the said deed was, after the reservation of a life estate in Polly Ramsey, to convey the said tract of land to their mother for life, with a life estate to their father in case he should survive their mother, and then to complainants, as the children of Eliza Ramsey, in fee simple absolute; that what purports to be this deed is of record in the clerk's office of Russell county, and a copy of it is exhibited as a part of the bill. The complainants charge, however, that this is not a true record of the deed as executed by their grandmother, Polly Ramsey; as this deed contains no reference to themselves as the children of Eliza Ramsey; that portion of the deed having been fraudulently blotted out after the death of their grandmother and before the deed was admitted to record. The bill alleges that the deed was altered by striking or blotting out of it so much as referred to the children of Eliza Ramsey, and passed to them the fee-simple estate in the land in remainder, and that the fraud was perpetrated for the purpose of enabling their father and mother to convey a fee simple in the land to the purchasers thereof. The bill further charges that after the deed had been altered, their father and mother conveyed the land in dispute to divers persons, and these grantees and their alienees are made parties defendant.

The answers of the defendants deny every material allegation in the bill, and upon the issues thus made many witnesses were examined, the case was heard and the decree rendered in accordance with the prayer of the bill, and is before us for review upon an appeal awarded by one of the judges of this court.

The law applicable to such cases has been recently and frequently the subject of consideration by this court.

In Thomas v. Ribble, 24 S. E. 241, 2 Va. Dec. 321, this court said: "Where the instrument rises to the dignity and importance of a muniment of title, every principle of public policy demands that the proof of its former existence, its loss, and its contents, should be strong and conclusive, before the courts will establish a title by parol testimony to property which the law requires shall pass only by deed or will. That courts of equity have the jurisdiction to set up lost deeds and wills, and establish titles under them, can certainly not be denied; but it is a dangerous jurisdiction, and so pregnant with opportunities of fraud and injustice that it will not be lightly exercised, nor except upon the clearest and most stringent proof."

"* * * It is the policy of the law, adopted with a view to prevent frauds, that title to lands shall pass only by written instruments; and the difference is more in name than in fact between giving effect to a parol conveyance of lands and establishing a title to lands under an alleged lost deed, upon parol testimony of its contents and loss, unless the proof be clear and conclusive. Certainly, the opportunities for fraud are just as great in the one case as in the other." See, also, Barley v. Byrd, 95 Va. 316, 23 S. E. 329.

Thomas v. Ribble has been cited with approval by this court in numerous cases, the most recent of which is that of McLin v. Richmond, 114 Va. 244, 76 S. E. 301.

[1] The case before us is not that of a lost deed, but the charge is that the deed as originally executed has been so despoiled, mutilated, and changed since its execution by the grantor as to amount to a forgery.

[2] It is a fundamental principle of law that fraud must be clearly alleged and proven. Every presumption is in favor of innocence and not of guilt. Engleby v. Harvey, 93 Va. 445, 25 S. E. 225; Schoemaker v. Chapman Drug Co., 112 Va. 612, 72 S. E. 121; Johnson v. Lucas, 103 Va. 36, 48 S. E. 497. But the citation of authority for so elementary a proposition is wholly superfluous.

To the same effect is the law as to lost instruments, and every consideration of policy which influences the courts to require clear and convincing proof in such cases applies with full force to the case before us.

[3] There is no question as to the jurisdiction of the courts to grant the relief prayed for by plaintiffs, but the proof must be clear, cogent, and convincing.

[4] A careful examination of the testimony in this case satisfies us that it falls far short of the degree of proof which the law requires. There is no occasion to impugn the sincerity and veracity of the witnesses. They are ignorant people, speaking of transactions which occurred more than 25 years ago. One of the principal witnesses, Mrs. Kiser, testified in chief that she had seen the original deed, of which that filed with the bill purports to be a copy, at her father's house, with whom it had been left for safekeeping, and that the original deed was "to Eliza Ramsey, and to her children, and to William Ramsey a lifetime estate." Upon cross-examination she says, in answer to the question, "Do you know or not whether the deed you saw is the one in controversy?" "I do not know it, but I believe it from what people say. Q. You do not know, as I understand you, whether the deed you saw at your father's house is the one in controversy? A. No, sir; I do not know, but it appears to me that it must be that way." And again: "You do not undertake to say that the deed you saw was the same as the deed in controversy today? A. I do not. I do not know it, but I believe it awful strong. Q. How do you happen to believe it so awful strong? A. From what people say. Bill said it."

Another witness for the plaintiffs, Joseph Fraley, testifies that after Polly Ramsey's death, when negotiations were going on for a sale of a part of this land to one Hensdill, he heard the contents of this deed discussed, and that Hensdill was told by William Dickenson, with whom he advised with respect to the title, to take the deed back to Barnett, by whom it had been written, "and have it doctored on," for if he should buy it, "them heirs would give him trouble, and that the deed was doctored and returned to Hensdill and Dickenson, and then Hensdill bought it." Barnett utterly denies that the deed was ever brought to him for such a purpose, and it is only adverted to as throwing light upon the general character of the testimony relied on. The testimony of both Barnett and Amburgey is very vague and indefinite, though they both say that by the deed as written Eliza Ramsey was to have a life estate and at her decease then to her children.

If we turn to the deed as recorded, it will be seen that after the lapse of 27 years witnesses, however honest and intelligent (and these witnesses, however honest, were certainly not intelligent), might well be confused and mistaken with respect to its phraseology. The first clause of the deed recites that Polly Ramsey, in consideration of the natural love and affection she has for her daughter, Eliza, doth grant, with general warranty, unto her a certain tract of land. The second clause describes the land conveyed, and then follows: "Yet upon the following conditions, to wit: The said Polly Ramsey first reserves to herself a life interest in the above subscribed lands during her natural life, then the aforesaid lands go to Eliza Ramsey and her husband William Ramsey a life estate and full control of thereof in the land described above thereof, with all the appurtenances, forever." It may be that it was the intention of the grantor that Eliza Ramsey and her husband should take only a life estate, and that the scrivener failed properly to express that intention; but that is not the case made by the pleadings, nor does the evidence support it, and still less does it maintain the theory of spoliation and forgery with that certainty which the law demands.

For these reasons, we are of opinion that the decree of the circuit court should be reversed. Reversed.

WHITTLE, J., absent.

MAY et al. v. SHERRARD'S LEGATEES et al. (Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 20, 1913.)

1. WILLS (§§ 194, 751*)—REVOCATION—BEQUESTS AND DEVISES SUBJECT TO ADEMPMENT.

A testatrix gave a dwelling house and lot to be sold and equally divided between two grandnephews. In another clause she provided that, in the event of the death of one of such grandnephews, she willed one-half of such house when sold to a grandniece. A codicil stated that she had sold such house, and invested the proceeds in two other houses and lots. Held, that the gift to the grandnephews, whether treated as a gift of the house and lot itself, or as a gift of the proceeds of a sale thereof, was a specific legacy or devise, and in either case was revoked by the sale of the house and lot by the testatrix in her lifetime.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 431-439, 1933; Dec. Dig. §§ 194, 751.*]

2. WILLS (§ 750*)—LEGACIES—SPECIFIC LEGACIES.

As a general rule, a legacy will not be construed as specific unless it appears clearly to have been so intended, and whether or not it is specific depends wholly upon the language of the will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1936, 1937; Dec. Dig. § 750.*]

3. WILLS (§§ 194, 757*)—REVOCATION—DISPOSITION OF SUBJECT BY DEVISE OR LEGACY.

That a testatrix, who gave a house and lot to be sold and equally divided between two grandnephews, and who thereafter sold such house and lot and invested the proceeds in part in other real estate, stated in a codicil to the will that she had sold such house and lot and invested a portion of the proceeds in other real estate, did not prevent a revocation or ademption of the devise or bequest, since ademption depends upon a rule of law, and not upon the intention of the testator.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 431-439, 1936-1939; Dec. Dig. §§ 194, 757.*]

4. WILLS (§ 461*)—CONSTRUCTION—INTENTION OF TESTATRIX.

A testatrix, after giving a $600 certificate in a corporation to be equally divided between two grandnephews, stated that she had also a $1,400 certificate in the same corporation on which no interest had been drawn, and added: "See that it is drawn by check. That I wish to go to." Held, that the provision as to this last-mentioned certificate was so vague and indefinite that it could not be determined with any degree of certainty what the testatrix meant, and hence it passed under the residuary clause, since there was no such manifest or clear intent to give it to the legatees of the $600 certificate as would authorize the court to substitute "too" for "to," or to give "to" the meaning of "too."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 390; Dec. Dig. § 461.*]

5. WILLS (§ 461*)—CONSTRUCTION—INTENTION OF TESTATRIX.

Where a testator's intention is manifest from the whole will and surrounding circumstances, but is endangered and obscured by inapt and inaccurate modes of expression, the language used will be subordinated to the intention, and to give effect to such intention one word may be substituted for another; but words cannot be rejected, supplied, transposed, or substituted, unless the testator's intention is clear or manifest from the context and the surrounding circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 390; Dec. Dig. § 461.*]

Appeal from Corporation Court of Staunton. Suit by Maria L. Sherrard's executor against Maria L. Sherrard's legatees and others. From the judgment, J. H. May, guardian ad litem of certain defendants, and others appeal. Affirmed.

Quarles & Pilson, of Staunton, for appellants. Timberlake & Nelson, Robertson & Robertson, and W. H. Landes, all of Staunton, for appellees.

BUCHANAN, J. [1] The principal object of this suit, which was brought by the executor of the last will and testament of Mrs. Maria L. Sherrard, was to have a construction of that instrument. The will is one of considerable length, containing 20 clauses and a codicil. The controversy here, however, is only as to the construction to be placed upon the second clause and a portion of the codicil. The provision of the second clause is as follows:

"Second—I give, bequeath and devise my dwelling house and the lot on which the same stands, situated on North New street, in the city of Staunton, Virginia, and now known by the street number of 307 North New street, to be sold and equally divided between Tate Boys Sterrett, of Hot Springs, Virginia, and John Bishop of Charlestown, West Virginia, great nephews of mine, and sons of Maria B. Sterrett of Hot Springs, Virginia, and Margaret Bishop of Charlestown, West Virginia."

The only other portions of the will which, it is claimed, throw any light upon the meaning to be given the clause quoted are contained in the fifth clause, which, after making certain bequests to Margaret Bishop, a grandniece of the testatrix, provides that, "in the event of the death of her brother, John Bishop, I will one-half of the 307 North New street house, when sold, to pass in fee simple absolute to Margaret Bishop of Charlestown, West Virginia;" and the codicil, which states, among other things, that the testatrix had sold the house No. 307 North New street for $3,500, and invested $2,650 thereof in two houses and lots in the city of Roanoke, which were worth $3,000 at the time the codicil was written. The trial court held that the devise or bequest made in the second clause was specific and not demonstrative, and that by the sale of house No. 307, mentioned therein, in the lifetime of the testatrix the gift made by that clause was adeemed or revoked, and that the devisees or legatees named therein took nothing under it.

The distinction made between specific and demonstrative gifts is well understood; but it is sometimes difficult to determine whether a particular gift belongs to the one class or the other. Definitions of these two kinds of legacies are found in the decisions and text-books, varying somewhat in phraseology, but generally substantially the same in meaning.

Mr. Pomeroy, in his work on Equity Jurisprudence, which is relied on largely by the appellants to sustain their contention that the legacy in question is not specific but demonstrative, defines a specific legacy as "a bequest of a specific article of the testator's estate, distinguished from all others of the same kind, as, for example, a particular horse, or piece of plate, or money in a certain purse, or chart, a particular stock in the public funds, a particular bond or other instrument for the payment of money." Volume 3 (3d Ed.) § 1130. He defines "demonstrative legacies" as "bequests of sums of money, or of quantity or amounts having a pecuniary value and measure, not in themselves specific, but made payable primarily out of a particular designated fund or piece of property belonging or assumed to belong to the testator." Same volume, § 1133.

[2] The general rule is that a legacy will not be construed as specific unless it appears clearly to have been so intended (Corbin v. Mills, 19 Grat. [60 Va.] 438, 468), and that whether or not it is specific depends wholly upon the language of the will (3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1130).

Tested by these definitions and rules of construction, to which class does the gift in question belong? The language of the second clause is, "I give, bequeath and devise my dwelling house and the lot on which the same stands" (describing it so that there could be no doubt about its location and identity) "to be sold and equally divided between" the beneficiaries named. Whether this be a gift of the house and lot itself, and the sale directed was merely for the purposes of partition between the devisees, as the appellee insists, or a gift of the proceeds or fund arising from the sale of the house and lot, there can be no question that the thing given is so described, pointed out, and identified as to distinguish it from all the other property of the testatrix. It is not a gift of a certain sum of money or other thing "payable primarily out of a particular designated fund or piece of property." There is nothing in the language of the clause or of the will which manifests any intent to give the persons named in that clause any particular sum, or amount, or quantity, to be paid primarily out of the proceeds of the sale of the house and lot, and, if for any reason that fund should fail, then to be paid out of the general estate; but, on the contrary, the gift is either of the house and lot, or it is a gift of the fund arising from the sale. If it be a gift of the house and lot, it is manifestly a specific devise; if it is a gift of the fund arising from the sale directed, it is equally specific as it seems to us. That the testatrix intended the gift made by that clause as specific, either of the house and lot, or of the fund produced by its sale, is emphasized and made clearer, if possible, by the fifth clause of her will, which provides: "That in the event of the death of her brother John Bishop" (one of the beneficiaries under the second clause) "I will one-half of 307 North New street house, when sold, to pass in fee simple to Margaret Bishop. * * *

The conclusion that we have reached, that the gift in question is specific, and not demonstrative, is fully sustained by the case of King v. Sheffey, 8 Leigh (35 Va.) 614, in which the provision of the will construed was substantially the same as that now under consideration. In that case the testator, after having given to his wife one-third of the rents and profits of his Fincastle property for life, devised and bequeathed to the children of his son and daughter, Conally and Nancy Finley, "one-half of my personal property in the county of Washington aforesaid, also two-fifth part of the net proceeds of my estate in Fincastle aforesaid, which is to be sold at my beloved wife's death, at the discretion of my executors." He then gives two other fifths of the Fincastle property to Mitchell and wife, and the remaining one-fifth to Allen and wife. The testator's estate in Fincastle consisted of several houses and lots, which he sold within less than a year before his death upon one, two, three, and four years' credit, and he was the owner of the purchase-money bonds at the time of his death. The question in that case was whether or not the devise or bequest of the Fincastle estate or its proceeds was revoked or adeemed by the alienation of the testator in his lifetime. President Tucker, in delivering the opinion of the court, said, among other things: "It seems to have been assumed by the counsel for the appellee that these devises of the proceeds of the Fincastle estate were to be considered as legacies; but it was very properly admitted that as legacies they came within the description of specific legacies. And if they are legacies at all, in the strict sense of the term, they are strictly specific, and are not of that class of legacies of money or quantity which are said to be only in the nature of specific legacies, and which, if the fund be called in or fail, will be paid out of the general estate. 1 Roper on Legacies, 169. For here it is clear the testator had no design that his general estate should ever be charged with those legacies. * * * Moreover, it was not a bequest of a certain sum (as of $500) chargeable upon the land, which, according to the case of Fowler v. Willoughby, 2 Sim. & Stuart, 354, might be charged on the general assets, if the land failed; but it was a devise of an uncertain interest, which would be more or less, according to the price for which the land might sell, the amount of which did not admit of being ascertained except by sale."

After holding that, if the gifts in that case were treated as legacies, they were specific, and were adeemed by the alienation of the Fincastle estate by the testator, he continues: "To come to a just understanding of this case, however, we must consider it more closely. This is a case of a devise, and a devise of real estate." After giving the reasons why the claim in question was a will of real estate, and citing authorities to sustain that view, he says: "So completely, indeed, is it a devise of the land to the three beneficiaries that, if it had not been sold, Finley, Mitchell, and Allen might now by their concurrent act demand a conveyance of the land itself, and arrest the sale, for a right to the whole proceeds of the estate is a right to the estate itself." After citing authorities to sustain that view, he says: "The devise, then, being of real estate—that is, of an equitable interest in land—was revoked by alienation. This principle is too plain to require support."

An attempt is made to distinguish that case from this, in this, that in the one the property to be sold is specifically designated, and in the other it is not. The fact that the testator in King v. Sheffey did not name or designate each house and lot which he directed to be sold, but described them as his "Fincastle estate," whereas, in this case the property is specifically designated and described, does not affect the question under consideration, for the property was as fully identified in the one case as in the other. It is also insisted that King v. Sheffey is contrary to the weight of authority in other jurisdiction, is a very old case, and has never been cited or relied on by this court, and is in conflict with Myers v. Myers, 88 Va. 131, 13 S. E. 346.

If the gift in this case be treated as a devise of real estate, the whole current of authority is that it was revoked by the alienation of the house and lot by the testatrix. If it be regarded as a bequest or legacy, then the weight of authority is, it seems, in favor of the conclusion reached by this court in King v. Sheffey. The text-books generally, as we understand them, so state the rule, and the decided cases sustain that statement.

In discussing the subject of specific legacies, Mr. Roper, in his work (4 Am. Ed. p. 200), says that: "If a testator direct his freehold or his leasehold estates to be sold, and dispose of the proceeds in such a form as to evince an intention to bequeath them specifically, the testamentary disposition will be specific, the money is sufficiently identified and severed from his other property, and, since he has sufficiently marked his intent to distribute the identical proceeds, the bequests are accompanied with all the requisites of specific legacies"—citing Page v. Leasingwell, 18 Vesey, 403.

In a note to 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1130, at p. 2210, it is said that: "Where the testator deals with specific property belonging to himself, not by giving legacies or sums of money out of it, but by dividing and apportioning out the very property itself, or the proceeds of it, if it is directed to be sold and converted into money, then the bequests of the parts thus apportioned among the legatees will be specific"—citing Page v. Leasingwell, and other English cases.

In Redfield on Wills, it is said: "A distinction is made between legacies out of the issues of real estate, whether resulting from sale or otherwise, and legacies merely chargeable upon real estate. In the former case it has been regarded the same in effect as a devise of a specific proportion of real estate, and consequently as creating a specific devise, the same as if a portion of the real estate itself had been devised." 2 Redfield on Wills, p. 145.

In 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) p. 716, it is said: "A gift on a specific thing to be sold and divided in certain shares among several persons is a specific bequest." Also note 4, p. 720. See, also, note to the case of Weed v. Hoge, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 543, 546, etc., where numerous cases are cited. In the case to which that note is appended, it was held that a will directing the executors to sell the testatrix's property situated in the state, and to give a specified part of the proceeds to her husband absolutely, creates a specific legacy. It lays down the rule as general that "a gift or the proceeds of the sale of specific real estate or chattels is specific."

It is true, as contended, that King v. Sheffey is an old case, and that it has never been cited by this court, so far as we know. The fact that it is old does not affect its value or authority; that it has not been cited may be because our Reports do not contain many cases involving the question of the distinction between specific and demonstrative legacies, and none which involve the precise question involved in that case and in this, unless it be the case of Myers v. Myers, 88 Va. 131, 13 S. E. 346. That case makes no reference to King v. Sheffey, though the opinion seems to be in conflict with the decision in that case. The opinion in Myers v. Myers shows on its face that the question whether or not the gift in that case was specific or demonstrative was not very fully considered, and it can hardly be supposed that it was intended in that case to overrule King v. Sheffey without even referring to it, its reasoning, or the authorities upon which it was rested—a case in which the opinion was rendered by President Tucker, one of the most distinguished jurists that ever sat on this bench, and concurred in by all the other members of the court—Cabell, Carr, Brockenbrough, and Brooke.

The conclusion in King v. Sheffey that the gift in that case was specific, whether treated as a devise of real estate or a bequest of the proceeds of its sale, seems to us to draw the true distinction between specific and demonstrative gifts by will, and is in accord with the weight of authority, and should not be regarded as having been overruled by a subsequent case which makes no reference to it, and in which the question does not appear to have been carefully considered. There is nothing in our other cases referred to, as we understand them, which is not in harmony with the principles announced in King v. Sheffey.

Having reached the conclusion that the gift in question was specific, it follows that the appellants can take nothing under the second clause of the will, whether the gift be treated as a devise or a bequest; for the alienation of the property by the testatrix worked a revocation if it was a devise, and an ademption if it was a bequest. Liability to ademption is said to be the most distinctive feature of a specific legacy.

In Hood v. Haden, 82 Va. 588, 599, it was held that if the identical thing bequeathed was not in existence, or had been disposed of by the testator, so that it does not form a part of the testator's estate at the time of his death, the legacy is extinguished and the legatee's rights are gone.

In Skipwith v. Cabell's Ex'r, 19 Grat. (60 Va.) 758, in which one of the questions was whether or not certain stock given had been adeemed, it was held that a mere nominal or formal change in the thing given did not work an ademption. In that case the gift was of "my guaranteed bonds of the James River & Kanawha Company to be equally divided between" the beneficiaries. After the date of the will an act was passed which authorized the holders of the bonds of that company, for which the state was bound, to surrender them and receive in lieu thereof bonds of the state for the same amount, and under this act the testatrix exchanged her guaranteed bonds for state bonds, which she held at her death. While it was held in that case that there was no ademption, it was upon the ground that the thing given had been changed in name and form only and was substantially the same; but Judge Joynes recognizes fully the general rule that where the thing given is not in existence or has been alienated the bequest is adeemed. He says: "Where stock specifically bequeathed has been sold by the testator, * * * the subject of the bequest is extinguished or annihilated; nothing exists upon which the will can operate, and the legacy is adeemed and gone. But 'where the thing specifically given has been changed in name and form only, and is in existence, substantially the same, though in a different shape, * * * it will not be * * * adeemed by such nominal change.'" Page 795.

There are cases in other jurisdictions which hold that the sale or disposition by the testator in his lifetime of the thing given does not always work an ademption; but they are contrary to the general rule (see 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1131, and notes 2 and 3; Slater v. Slater, 8 Ann. Cas. 141, and note p. 144, etc., and cases mentioned), and to the doctrine of our own decisions. In King v. Sheffey the purchase-money bonds of the property directed to be sold and the proceeds divided between the beneficiaries belonged to the estate, and yet, treating them as legacies, it was held that they were adeemed. This case is a stronger one for the ademption of the bequest than that, since in this case not only was the house and lot, given and directed to be sold and its proceeds divided, sold during the lifetime of the testatrix, but the proceeds in part were invested in other real estate, and the residue of the proceeds otherwise used or disposed of.

[3] The fact that the testatrix states in the codicil to her will what she had done with the Staunton property, and the disposition she had made of a portion of the proceeds, does not affect the question of ademption. Ademption with us, and generally, depends upon a rule of law, and not upon the intention of the testator. King v. Sheffey, 8 Leigh (35 Va.) 617; Skipwith v. Cabell, 18 Grat. (60 Va.) 794, 795; 1 Roper on Legacies, 329.

[4] The remaining question to be considered is whether or not the $1,400 certificate of stock mentioned in the codicil was bequeathed to the appellants, Tate Boys Sterrett and John Bishop.

So much of the codicil as bears upon this question is in the following language: "Since then I have a \$600 hundred certificate Clover Manfc. Co., Clover S. Carolina invested May 10th, 1910, at 7 per cent, Mr. M. L. Smith, Treas. invested it. I wish that to be collected and equally divided with Tate Boys Sterrett of Hot Springs, Va., Bath County, son of Tate Sterrett and Maria Boys Sterrett, niece of mine. The other  $\frac{1}{2}$  half of property I mention to go to John Bishop of Hagerstown, Md., son of Mrs. Margaret Smith now and mother of John Bishop, my nieces son of Hagerstown, Md. This is change must be I have also \$14 hundred certificate at Clover S. C. Manfc. Co., M. L. Smith, Treas. put there the 11th of April, 1910, and no interest as yet drawn at 7 per cent. See that it is drawn by check. That I wish to go to."

It is conceded by the appellants that if "to," the last word in the codicil, is to be treated as correctly spelled, the clause or sentence as to the $1,400 certificate is meaningless; but it is insisted that, if the word "to" be treated as intended for the adverb "too," then the meaning is plain. The last property bequeathed in the codicil immediately before the clause in question was precisely the same kind of a chose in action as that disposed of, or attempted to be disposed of, by the last clause. The persons to whom the $600 certificate, or its proceeds, is given are the same persons who claim that they are the beneficiaries intended under the last clause. If it had been the intention of the testator to give both certificates to the same parties and in the same proportions, why was it not done in one clause? The fact that she did not so dispose of them would tend to show that she did not intend to give the $600 certificate and the $1,400 certificate to the same persons. The codicil is wholly in the handwriting of the testatrix, and she was the owner of both certificates when it was written. Instead of the codicil, taken as a whole, showing a manifest intention on the part of the testatrix to give the $1,400 certificate, as well as the $600 certificate, to the same persons, it shows, as it seems to us, an intent not to do so.

[5] It is well settled that where the testator's intention is manifest from the whole will and surrounding circumstances, but is endangered and obscured by inapt and inaccurate modes of expression, the language used will be subordinated to that intention, and in order to give effect to such intention one word may be substituted for another, as it asked to be done in this case. Brewer v. Opie, 1 Call (5 Va.) 212; East v. Garrett, 84 Va. 523, 9 S. E. 1112. 2 Minor's Inst. (1st Ed.) 1114-1116; 40 Cyc. 1399, 1401. But the right of the court in construing a will to mould its language by rejecting, supplying, transposing, or substituting words only exists where the testator's intention is clear or manifest from the context and the surrounding circumstances. 40 Cyc. 1399, 1400; 2 Min. Inst., 1112, 1114, 1115, and authorities cited. But in this case no such manifest or clear intent, or any intent at all, appears to give the $1,400 certificate to the appellants, as would authorize the court to substitute "too" for "to," or give "to" the meaning of "too." Indeed, if such a change was made, it would not then clearly appear that the testator intended to give the $1,400 certificate to the appellants.

We are of opinion that the corporation court did not err in holding that the clause in question is so vague and indefinite that it cannot be determined with any degree of certainty what the testatrix did mean, and that the $1,400 certificate passes under the residuary clause.

Upon the whole case, we are of opinion that there is no error in the decree complained of, and that it must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

ALPHIN v. LOWMAN.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 20, 1915.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 420*)—JOINT INDORSEMENT—AGREEMENT BETWEEN INDORSERS—STATUTES.

A showing allunde that joint payees of a note jointly indorsed it on an agreement of one of them to indemnify the others, in case of default of the maker, is not prevented by the last sentence of the Negotiable Instruments Law (Code 1904, § 2841a) § 68, providing: "As respects one another indorsers are liable prima facie in the order in which they indorse; but evidence is admissible to show that as between or among themselves they have agreed otherwise. Joint payees or joint indorsers are deemed to indorse jointly and severally."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1732, 1796, 1800, 1804, 1815, 1821, 1923-1944; Dec. Dig. § 420.*]

2. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 21*)—PROMISE TO ANSWER FOR DEBT OF ANOTHER—INDemnITY AGREEMENT BETWEEN INDORSERS.

The agreement of one of several joint accommodation indorsers of a note, whereby he induced the others to join in the indorsement, that he would indemnify the others in case of default of the maker of the note, is not within the statute of frauds (Code 1904, § 2840), as an undertaking to answer for the debt or default of another, but is his original undertaking or promise to answer for his own debt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. § 33; Dec. Dig. § 21.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Bath County.

Action by one Lowman against L. C. Alphin. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Geo. A. Revercomb, of Covington, and John W. Stephenson, of Warm Springs, for plaintiff in error. John T. Delan and H. H. Byrd, of Warm Springs, for defendant in error.

KEITH, P. The Citizens' National Bank of Covington, Va., held two votes, one for $3,000 and one for $5,000, drawn by one Gillespie and made payable to Alphin, Blakey, and Lowman as joint payees. These notes were renewed from time to time, but ultimately went to protest. Suit was brought upon them, and judgment recovered, upon which executions were issued and placed in the hands of the sheriff, who levied upon the property of Alphin, Blakey, and Lowman. The property of Lowman, which was levied upon, was sold and brought $988.90, that of Blakey brought $216, and the balance of the judgment was paid by L. C. Alphin; Gillespie, the principal, having in the meantime become a bankrupt. Lowman then instituted an action of assumpsit against Alphin to recover the amount which he had paid, and a like suit was instituted by Blakey.

To these suits Alphin pleaded nonassumpsit, and a special plea, in which he claimed that Lowman, Blakey, and he were joint indorsers on the notes, and as between themselves were each liable for one-third of the judgments and executions, and in this special plea Alphin set up the amount due him, and asked that judgment be given against Lowman for the sum of $1,904.53%, which he claimed he had paid for Lowman, the plaintiff, on said executions.

At the trial Lowman proved that there was a verbal agreement between himself and Blakey, on the one hand, and L. C. Alphin, on the other, whereby Alphin was to be responsible as between the indorsers for the whole of said notes, and was to stand liable for any amount that might be asserted against the plaintiff by reason of his becoming an indorser upon said notes. The specific promise was about in this form: That when Alphin approached Blakey and Lowman, and requested them to become joint payees or indorsers with him upon the note, he said to them: "Go ahead and indorse it; you need not be uneasy; Gillespie is all right. If he did not have a thing, you will never have a dollar to pay as long as I have got a dollar's worth of property."

The plaintiff in error objected to the admission of evidence tending to prove the verbal promise, and after the evidence was concluded the court at the instance of the plaintiff gave the following instruction:

"The court instructs the jury that they shall find for the plaintiff if it has been proven by a preponderance of the evidence that on or about April 26, 1906, the plaintiff at the request of the defendant indorsed the notes of C. D. Gillespie for $5,000 and $3,000 in order to help the defendant to get the Citizens' National Bank of Covington, Va., to loan said Gillespie the sum of $8,000, and that at the time the plaintiff indorsed the said notes the defendant represented unto him and assured him that if he would indorse said notes he would never have to pay a cent on them so long as he—the defendant—owned a dollar's worth of property."

The plaintiff in error objected to the giving of this instruction; and, the jury having rendered a verdict on behalf of the plaintiff, plaintiff in error moved to set it aside, which the court refused to do, and entered the judgment which is now before us.

The entire defense of plaintiff in error turned upon the question whether or not the promise which the evidence shows that he made to Blakey and Lowman, and which induced them to become payees and indorsers of the notes, is within the statute of parol agreements, commonly known as the statute of frauds.

It may be well to state before going further that while both of these notes were originally given to the Citizens' National Bank of Covington, Va., one of them—the $5,000 note—was finally transferred to the Bath County National Bank; but this circumstance we regard as immaterial, as the same rights and duties remain in the parties to the transaction when the note is in the hands of the Bath County National Bank as attached to it when in the hands of the first holder.

The question for decision is whether the promise made by Alphin, that he would save Lowman harmless if he would join him as indorser upon the note drawn by Gillespie, is within the statute of parol agreements, as being an undertaking to answer for the debt or default of another, or whether it is an original undertaking or promise upon the part of Alphin to answer for his own debt.

The statute reads as follows: "No action shall be brought in any of the following cases: * * * Fourth, to charge any person upon a promise to answer for the debt, default, or misdoings of another; * * * unless the promise, contract, agreement, representation, assurance, or ratification, or some memorandum or note thereof, be in writing and signed by the party to be charged thereby, or his agent; but the consideration need not be set forth or expressed in the writing, and it may be proved (where a consideration is necessary) by other evidence." Code, § 2840.

[1] It is earnestly contended by the plaintiff in error that the decision of this question is controlled by section 68 of the Negotiable Instruments Law (Code 1904, § 2841a), which reads as follows: "As respects one another, indorsers are liable prima facie in the order in which they indorse; but evidence is admissible to show that as between or among themselves they have agreed otherwise. Joint payees or joint indorsees who indorse are deemed to indorse jointly and severally"—the contention being that, the statute having declared that joint payees or joint indorsees who indorse are to be deemed as having indorsed jointly and severally, no evidence is admissible to show a different order or extent of liability; but to this argument we cannot accede.

The object and effect of that section is but to give statutory force to a principle already established.

In Bank of United States v. Beirne, 1 Grat. (42 Va.) 271, 42 Am. Dec. 551, the law upon this point is thus stated: "The legal effect of several successive indorsements is that each indorser has a right to look for indemnity to all the indorsers who precede him, whether they indorse for accommodation of the drawer or for value received, unless there be an agreement aliunde, different from that evidenced by the indorsements"—citing Chalmers v. McMurdo, 5 Munf. (19 Va.) 252, 7 Am. Dec. 684, and Bank v. Vanmeter, 4 Rand. (25 Va.) 553. "By a joint indorsement," says the same case, "for accommodation of the drawer, all the indorsers are cosureties, bound to contribution; and if such an indorsement had been made in this case, Beirne would have a right, by virtue thereof, to call on the others to share the burden, unless there was an agreement, proved by evidence aliunde, that he should bear the whole, or more than an aliquot part."

The first clause of the section under consideration establishes the prima facie order in which indorsers are to be held liable, but among themselves they are permitted to show that they have agreed otherwise. The clause with respect to joint payees or joint indorsees was added, not to deprive them of the right to prove by evidence aliunde that they had made an agreement among themselves which varied the liability imposed by law, but we think out of abundant caution, to negative the conclusion that they were to be liable in the order in which they became indorsers; for when there are two or more joint indorsers, it is, of course, apparent that the mere affixing of their signatures must have been successive, one after the other.

[2] The principal defense, however, is that the promise relied upon is within the statute above quoted, and can only be maintained when evidenced by a written memorandum.

It is amazing how language, apparently so plain, should have been the cause of such interminable controversy and contrariety of opinion. Among the earliest cases dealing with the subject is that of Thomas v. Cook, 8 Barn. & C. 728, in which it was held that such a promise was not within the statute and could be proved by oral evidence. Shortly thereafter, in the case of Green v. Cresswell, 10 Adol. & E. 453, a contrary conclusion was reached, and Thomas v. Cook was overruled. The conflict between these two cases has led to the diversity of opinion which exists among the states of the Union; and, without a particular discussion of the English cases which have followed those cited, it may be conceded that subsequent English decisions have settled the law within their jurisdiction in accordance with Thomas v. Cook. It may be further conceded that the American cases, in number at least, preponderate upon the same side of the controversy; but among the cases which maintain that such promises of indemnity are not within the statute of frauds the most discordant reasons are given—reasons as irreconcilable among themselves as they are to those given in cases which adopt the opposite conclusion. The principal controversy seems to be waged around the proposition whether the promise of indemnity is an original or a collateral promise—whether or not, in the case before us, the promise of Alphin was to answer for his own debt, default, or miscarriage, or was collateral to the promise of Gillespie to pay the debt which he owed to the bank. Without doubt the primary obligation to pay the debt rested upon Gillespie. If he discharged that obligation, the debt was satisfied, and no burden was imposed upon the sureties or indorsers. If Gillespie failed to pay the debt, then the obligation arose, and the duty devolved upon the sureties.

In Wolverton v. Davis, 85 Va. 64, 6 S. E. 619, 17 Am. St. Rep. 56, the question was before this court, only three judges being present. In that case Thomas K. Davis was elected sheriff of his county, and executed an official bond, with W. W. Davis and Samuel Wolverton and others as his sureties. W. W. Davis had requested Wolverton to execute the bond as a surety, and promised orally to indemnify him against any loss arising from the suretyship. By reason of the default of the sheriff, Wolverton had to pay a sum of money as such surety. He sued W. W. Davis on the parol promise of indemnity to recover that sum. At the trial he offered evidence of the parol promise, which the court excluded. There was a judgment for the defendant, and Wolverton appealed. The judgment was affirmed, the court resting its opinion chiefly upon Green v. Cresswell, 10 Adol. & E. 453, supra.

It appears, therefore, that that case is in principle identical with the one before us. It is true that Wolverton v. Davis was with respect to the liability of sureties upon a bond, while in the case before us it is as to the liability inter sese of indorsers; but the same principles are believed to apply to both cases.

In Smith's Leading Cases (8th Am. Ed.) p. 538, after discussing a number of cases bearing upon the subject, it is said: "Amidst the diversity of decision, it may be difficult to discover the true principle; but the result of the authorities, as a whole, seems to be as follows: A promise by a stranger to the debt, to indemnify a surety, is prima facie within the statute, because the principal is bound by an implied obligation to do that which the promisor agrees to do expressly, and the promise is, therefore, really to answer for the default of the principal. When, however, the promisor is directly or indirectly answerable for the debt independently of the promise, any engagement which he may make that it shall be paid, or that the surety shall not be compelled to pay it, will be regarded as contracted on his own behalf, and not for the debt or default of another, in the sense in which the term is used in the statute."

Now in the case before us the promisor, Alphin, is not a stranger to the debt, but is answerable for the debt, independently of the promise to Lowman, and therefore, when he undertook that Lowman should not be compelled to pay it, he is to be regarded as contracting in his own behalf, and not for the debt or default of another.

In Barry v. Ransom, 12 N. Y. 462, Judge Denio, delivering the opinion of the court, held, after citing the different adjudications upon the point, that those where the promisor was himself bound for the third person's default are uniform in holding that the contract is not affected by the statute.

In Throop on the Validity of Verbal Agreements, § 474, after an exhaustive consideration of the cases bearing upon the question, it is stated: "As the result of the conflict of authority upon this question, nothing can be regarded as definitely settled, except, perhaps, that where the promisor and the promisee are about to unite in an instrument as sureties for the third person, the promise to indemnify is not within the statute. With respect to the weight of argument, the side to which the balance preponderates is even more difficult to discover. If the question was merely whether the general policy of the statute embraces such cases, probably few lawyers would hesitate to answer it in the affirmative."

Treating of this subject, at section 162, Browne on the Statute of Frauds (5th Ed.) uses the following language: "It would be unprofitable to trace the course of the American decisions here cited. It has manifestly resulted in the rejection, by the great preponderance of authority, of the doctrine of Green v. Cresswell, and the acceptance of the doctrine of Thomas v. Cook, a result reached after much vacillation on the part of courts of the same state, and not, it must be confessed, by reference to any clear and satisfactory ground of principle. Indeed, most of the decisions which reject the doctrine of Green v. Cresswell waive altogether the question of principle, and put it as a matter settled by authority that the 'promise to indemnify' is not within the statute. In other cases, it is put upon the ground that the plaintiff makes his engagement, relying upon the defendant's special promise, and not upon the third party's implied liability, that the former and not the latter is the foundation of the special contract, and that the decisive question is to whom credit was given by the plaintiff. But, as we shall have occasion to see hereafter, the application of the statute cannot safely be determined by the consideration that the plaintiff relied upon one obligation to himself rather than upon another, or even that he relied wholly upon the obligation of the defendant's special promise, giving 'credit' solely to him, if still a third party was really liable to the plaintiff to the same extent."

In 20 Cyc. pp. 178, 179, it is said: "In England it is practically settled that if one person, at the request of another and on his oral guaranty of indemnity against loss, assumes a responsibility for the discharge of a third person's obligation to a fourth, he may recover against the guarantor, although there is on the part of the third person a coexistent implied obligation to indemnify the promisee; and the weight of authority in this country is in accordance with the English view. In many states, however, a contrary view has been adopted, and a promisee of indemnity given under such circumstances is held to be within the statute."

One of the most recent cases we have seen is that of Rose v. Wollenberg, 31 Or. 269, 44 Pac. 382, 39 L. R. A. 378, 65 Am. St. Rep. 826, in which it is held that a contract between cosureties, fixing the proportion and extent of their several or correlative liability as between themselves, is not within the statute of frauds. The court in its opinion said: "Seek where you will for a plausible footing upon which to found the obligation, so as not to come within the purview of the statute of frauds, the distinction, taken in Green v. Cresswell, of Thomas v. Cook, that the promisee became likewise bound upon the obligation with the promisor, as cosureties, and for this reason, if not also for the reason upon which the second class is supported—that it is not an undertaking with the creditor—the indemnity is not within the statute, whether adequate or not, has taken deep hold in the judicial mind, and the undoubted weight of authority in this country is grounded upon it. Indeed, the doctrine is even regarded as settled. Mr. Throop, in his treatise on the Validity of Verbal Agreements (section 474), says: 'As the result of the conflict of authority upon this question (speaking generally of contracts of indemnity against a surety's liability), nothing can be regarded as definitely settled, except, perhaps, that, where the promisor and promisee are about to unite in an instrument as sureties for the third person, the promise to indemnify is not within the statute.' If a cosurety can, by a verbal undertaking, indemnify another in whole against the obligation of the latter, without suffering the interdiction of the statute, he may also in part, as the greater includes the less; and thus it is that cosureties may, by contract, agreement, or understanding between themselves, limit and fix the proportion and extent of their several or correlative liability, and it is competent to establish the agreement by parol. So we conclude that it was competent for the plaintiff and defendant to enter into such a contract or agreement as is set forth in plaintiff's complaint, and the fact that it is not in writing cannot be taken as an objection against its enforcement."

Turning for a moment to section 68 of the Negotiable Instruments Law, already cited, it is to be observed that the right of indorsers to show the order and extent of their real liability among themselves is recognized by the statute, a right which has been firmly established by the decisions. See Bank v. Beirne, supra. And speaking of this principle, at section 475, Throop on Verbal Agreements says: "It cannot be restricted within the bounds implied by the rule, that several sureties upon the same instrument may regulate by contract their liability to contribution. For if it will suffice to defend an action for contribution, in favor of the several promisor against the promisee, we fail to see upon what principle it will not also suffice to maintain an action in favor of the promisee against the promisor, to recover the whole amount of damages which the plaintiff has sustained through a breach of the verbal promise. And no substantial reason is perceived why the right to maintain such an action should depend merely on the fact that the plaintiff and the defendant had united in the execution of the same instrument."

We have not undertaken to discuss the various authorities, but have contented ourselves with stating what seemed to be beyond question, that the great weight of authority has followed the English decision of Thomas v. Cook, supra, and held that such a promise of indemnity as that with which we are here dealing is not within the statute of frauds.

There are cases of great weight that hold to the contrary. Among the most notable are May v. Williams, 61 Miss. 125, 48 Am. Rep. 80; Macey v. Childress, 2 Tenn. Ch. 138; Draughan v. Bunting, 31 N. C. 10; Bissig v. Britton, 59 Mo. 204, 21 Am. Rep. 379; Hartley v. Sandford, 66 N. J. Law, 627, 50 Atl. 454, 55 L. R. A. 206. But the arguments pro and con are well balanced, and the authorities, as we have more than once said, strongly preponderate in favor of the validity of such agreements. We have not deemed it profitable to cite or comment upon the wilderness of cases touching the subject discussed, but have been content to ascertain and to state in what direction they preponderate. Those who desire to explore the matter still further will find them duly mustered and arrayed in Browne on Stat. of Frauds (5th Ed.) § 161c; Throop on Validity of Verbal Agreements, §§ 440-473; and most recently in 20 Cyc. p. 178.

Upon the whole case, it is not without hesitation that we have reached the conclusion that the case of Wolverton v. Davis, supra, must be disapproved, and the judgment of the circuit court affirmed.

Affirmed.

DAVIS v. COLE BROS.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia,
Nov. 20, 1913.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 187*)—DOCUMENTS—BEST AND SECONDARY EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to show that an instrument offered in evidence was an original and not a copy and therefore was not objectionable on the ground that the original had not been sufficiently accounted for.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 674, 675; Dec. Dig. § 187.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—EVIDENCE—PREJUDICE.

Defendant was not prejudiced by the answer to a question where he himself testified to the same fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1068, 1069, 4153-4157, 4166; Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

3. WITNESSES (§ 268*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION—SCOPE.

Where, in an action on notes for the price of a sawmill, defendant claimed that the mill had not been delivered, a question on cross-examination of one of the original parties to the transaction calling for the amount of money the witness had to pay for the mill on the day it was advertised to be sold, where he got the money, and what he did with it, was proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 931-948, 959; Dec. Dig. § 268.*]

4. WITNESSES (§ 330*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION—EVIDENCE—FOUNDATION FOR IMPEACHMENT.

In an action on notes for the price of a sawmill, a question asked one of the parties to the transaction on cross-examination whether he did not give one of the plaintiff's as collateral to secure the notes sued on, a note signed by the witness' grandfather, and whether the latter had not afterwards denied his signature and claimed that the note was a forgery, was admissible to lay a foundation for attacking the credibility of the witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1106-1108; Dec. Dig. § 830.*]

5. SALES (§ 358*)—RECOVERY OF PRICE—EVIDENCE.

In an action on notes for the price of a sawmill "outfit," a letter written by plaintiffs admitting an offer to throw off $150 if defendants would pay the whole debt and declining to take the "outfit" off defendants' hands showed on its face that it related to the transaction in question and was therefore relevant and admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1049-1055; Dec. Dig. § 358.*]

6. SALES (§ 358*)—ACTION FOR PRICE—EVIDENCE.

In an action on notes for the purchase price of a sawmill outfit alleged to have been secured by a note purporting to have been signed by defendants' grandfather but which he claimed never to have signed, whether one of the plaintiffs handed this note back to defendants and in doing so said that he had taken the note to defendants' grandfather and he had repudiated it and said it was a forgery was relevant and properly allowed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1049-1055; Dec. Dig. § 358.*]

7. SALES (§ 358*)—ACTION FOR PRICE—EVIDENCE.

In an action on notes for the price of a sawmill outfit, a question asked one of plaintiffs as to his knowledge concerning whether defendant D. sold any timber to his codefendants, S. Bros., to which the witness replied that he understood that he did sell a quantity of timber to S. Bros. for $2,000, was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1049-1055; Dec. Dig. § 358.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 499*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—SUFFICIENCY—REVIEW.

A bill of exceptions to the admission of a letter in evidence, stating a general objection without any reason therefor, is not reviewable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2295-2298; Dec. Dig. § 499.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Russell County.

Action by Cole Bros. against A. W. Davis and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant Davis brings error. Affirmed.

W. W. Bird, H. L. Kidd, and S. B. Quillen, all of Lebanon, for plaintiff in error. Finney & Wilson, of Lebanon, for defendant in error.

KEITH, P. In this cause we are called upon to review the proceedings upon a notice filed in the circuit court of Russell county by Cole Bros. against C. B. Smith, J. K. Smith, and J. W. Davis. Neither of the Smiths filed any plea, so that Davis is the only active defendant. The claim against him was based upon three notes, each for the sum of $275, part of a series of six notes, three of which were not due when the suit was instituted and which were given for the purchase price of a sawmill with the various attachments belonging to it.

Davis filed a special plea, which is sufficiently stated by him in his petition as follows: That Cole Bros. sold to Davis "the sawmill in the plea described in consideration that he would sign and assume payment of the notes sued upon, less $150; that they failed to deliver him the sawmill, in consequence of which he was damaged, and which damage he offers to set off," etc.—to which plaintiffs replied generally.

The petition further states that the errors mainly relied upon by petitioner to obtain a reversal of the judgment against him grow out of rulings made by the judge in the admission of certain letters.

[1] The first bill of exceptions relates to a question asked the defendant J. W. Davis when testifying in his own behalf. After giving in full his version of the transaction, he goes on to say that H. C. Cole, one of the defendants, gave witness a paper at Bristol certifying that he (witness) was to have credit on the notes for $150; that witness objected to the way the paper was written; that Cole said to witness, "You sign the notes and I will deliver the mill, put you in possession of the mill;" that Cole signed the paper; that witness objected to the paper and did not accept it but took the paper; that Cole said the paper would give witness credit for $150, and that he (Cole) would give witness possession of the mill, and that he would come shortly and deliver the mill; that witness was to pay $1,500 for the mill; that the mill had been on witness' place from May until October; that it had not been hurt; that witness did not suppose that the Coles would charge him interest until they turned him over the mill; that the paper above referred to was written by H. C. Cole; that he guessed that the paper could be found; that H. C. Cole wrote and handed him a paper that looked like a copy of the paper handed him by plaintiff's counsel; and that he (witness) thought it was a copy of the paper Cole wrote and handed to witness. After the introduction of this testimony plaintiff's counsel offered to read in evidence to the jury said copy and avowed that plaintiff would prove by further evidence the paper to be a true copy, which is in the words and figures following, to wit:

"In consideration of J. W. Davis indorsing four notes for $275 each, dated April 7, 1911, and due as follows: One due July 20, 1911, one October 20, 1911, one January 20, 1912, and one April 20, 1912, executed by C. B. Smith and J. K. Smith for sawmill outfit, we hereby agree to give $150 credit on note for $275 dated April 7, 1911, and due July 20, 1912, when the series of six notes executed for the sawmill outfit by above Smith Bros. are paid in full. This October 25, 1911. Cole Bros."

To the reading of this copy the defendant, by counsel, objected; the court overruled the objection; and thereupon the defendant excepted.

H. C. Cole, one of the defendants in error, referring to the paper which is the subject of the exception under consideration, says that he drew up a paper showing the transaction between them and handed the same to Davis, retaining a copy, being the same paper that was read in evidence to the jury over the defendant's objection and set out in bill of exceptions No. 1; that J. W. Davis took the paper and made no objection to and did not object to receiving it. It appears, therefore, from the evidence of Cole that the paper given to Davis and the reading of which was excepted to was not a copy but the original, and the account given by H. C. Cole does not at all contradict, but really confirms, the statement made by J. W. Davis in his testimony, and there was no error in allowing the paper to be read in evidence.

[2] Bill of exceptions No. 2 is taken to the ruling of the court permitting the witness J. K. Smith to answer the following question: "The sawmill was advertised under deed of trust for sale, wasn't it?" to which he replied: "Yes, the sawmill was advertised. We were there with the money to pay for it on the day it was to be sold, but nobody was there to sell the mill though."

This question and answer could not have injuriously affected the plaintiff in error, and in addition the same fact is testified to by the plaintiff in error himself. The assignment of error is overruled.

[3] Bill of exceptions No. 3 is taken to a question asked J. K. Smith as follows: "How much money did you have to pay for the sawmill on the day it was advertised to be sold, where did you get it from, and what did you do with it?" To which question and the answer of the defendant showing the source from which he claims to have derived the money with which to pay for the mill the plaintiff in error excepted.

The question was asked upon cross-examination of one of the original parties to the transaction, and we think it was properly admitted by the court; and this assignment of error is overruled.

[4] The fourth bill of exceptions was to the following question asked J. K. Smith upon his cross-examination: "Did not you give Mr. H. C. Cole, as collateral to secure the notes sued on, a note signed by your grandfather, Thomas Smith, and did not your grandfather afterwards say that he never signed the note, and that his signature to the note was a forgery?" To this question the defendant by counsel objected; the court overruled the objection and allowed the question to be answered as follows: "We told Mr. H. C. Cole we would give him a note signed by our grandfather, Thomas Smith, who lives in Scott county, Va., as collateral to secure the notes sued on. We sent this note to our grandfather to sign and then send it on to Cole Bros. We sent him the note to sign and after signing it to send it to Cole Bros., and I never saw the note any more. Mr. Cole told me that Thomas Smith said he never signed the note. I think my brother, C. B. Smith, has the note. I don't know how he got it back, whether he got it from Mr. J. W. Davis or not."

This was admissible, if for no other reason, to lay the foundation for attacking the credibility of the witness; and the assignment of error to its admission is overruled.

[5] Bill of exceptions No. 5 is taken to the ruling of the court permitting a letter to be read in evidence which was addressed by Cole Bros. to Smith Bros. The bill of exceptions is as follows:

"Be it remembered that upon the trial of this cause and after the introduction of the evidence and the ruling of the court as set out and shown in bill of exceptions No. 1, in bill of exceptions No. 2, in bill of exceptions No. 3, and in bill of exceptions No. 4, the witness J. K. Smith, on his further cross-examination by plaintiffs by counsel, was offered by plaintiffs copies, or what purported to be copies, of two letters written by Cole Bros. to Smith Bros. under dates of October 30, 1911, and November 27, 1911, which were handed to the witness by counsel for plaintiffs. And thereupon counsel for the plaintiffs read to the witness before the jury what purports to be a copy of a letter purporting to have been written by Cole Bros. to Smith Bros., dated November 27, 1911, and which is in the words and figures following, to wit:

"Nov. 27th, 1911.

"Mess. Smith Bros., Castlewood, Va.

"Dear Sirs: Answering yours of 20th inst. sorry that we cannot help you and Mr. Davis further than we have.

"We have laid out of our money all summer, have two notes past due, and have been out of money and time without receiving a cent in return.

"If you cannot deal with the lumber firms with whom you have been in touch, we would not know where to cite you.

"We did tell Mr. Davis if he would get up the money and pay off the whole debt, we would give him $150 off, and he said he would give you the benefit of the rebate if you got it paid.

"We do not know of any one who would take the outfit off your hands and pay us, and we are sorry we cannot take it off your hands ourselves. We have advertised your outfit twice, and we will say to you frankly, the next time it goes, and we cannot hold but a short time longer, trusting you can help us, we are,

"Yours truly, Cole Bros."

"This being the same copy offered and read to jury as shown hereafter in defendant's evidence.

"To the reading of which letter in evidence before the jury the defendant by counsel objected, because no defense was being made to this suit by Smith Bros. and because the Davis transaction was an independent transaction from the one with Smith Bros.; and the court thereupon overruled said objection and permitted said letter to be read in evidence before the jury, and the defendant then and there, before the jury retired to consider of their verdict, excepted and tenders this his bill of exceptions No. 5 and prays that the same may be signed, sealed, and made a part of the record, which is accordingly done this the 19th day of October, 1912."

It will be observed that the objection to the reading of the letter is not put upon the ground that it was a copy and no foundation had been laid for its introduction. The objection rests upon the proposition that no defense was made to the suit by Smith Bros. and because the Davis transaction was an independent transaction from the one with Smith Bros. We think that the contents of the letter itself show the propriety of its being introduced before the jury; and this exception is overruled.

[6] The sixth bill of exceptions sets out that Davis, being recalled as a witness for further cross-examination, was asked the following question: "Did not Smith Bros. send to Cole Bros., as collateral security, a note purporting to be signed by their grandfather, Thomas Smith, as security, which notes Thomas Smith never signed, and which he said his name had been forged to, and did not Mr. H. C. Cole afterwards hand you this note to be returned to Smith Bros., and did he not say to you in handing you this note that he had taken the note to Thomas Smith and that Thomas Smith had said that he never signed the note and repudiated it as a forgery?" And to this question the witness gave the following answer: "After the controversy between Mr. H. C. Cole and myself as to which notes I signed, Mr. Cole told me that he would give Smith Bros. a note for $550, and if they would get their grandfather, Thomas Smith, to sign the same with them, as security, he would take it in the place of the notes I had signed and release me. He afterwards told me that he had given them the note; that it had been sent to him with Thomas Smith's name signed to it; that he became dissatisfied with it; that he went to see Thomas Smith about it; that Thomas Smith said that he did not sign the note and repudiated it; Mr. Cole then brought the note to me to give to Smith Bros., and prepared a new one for the same amount, and requested me to go with Smith Bros. to get Thomas Smith to sign same, and witness the signature of Thomas Smith, and then forward the note to Cole Bros., and notify them at once if the matter was so arranged. I gave Mr. H. C. Cole a receipt for the first-mentioned note which he said Thomas Smith had repudiated and returned the note to Smith Bros. as requested; and I tried to get C. B. Smith to go with me down to his grandfather's to get him to go on the note. He did not go; said that his mother was sick and he could not leave her. I then wrote to Mr. Cole that I could not get the note fixed. The Thomas Smith note was to release me on the two notes I had signed for Smith Bros. as security." The plaintiff in error, by counsel, excepted to the question and answer, and its admission by the circuit court constitutes an assignment of error.

We think that the ruling speaks for itself; and this assignment of error is overruled.

H. C. Cole, having been introduced as a witness for defendants in error, was asked the following question: "After the mill was advertised for sale, did Smith Bros. give you a note with their grandfather, Thomas Smith, as security, for the sum of $550, which note Thomas Smith repudiated as a forgery?" Cole then goes on to give substantially the same recital with respect to this transaction that we have just set out in the statement made by Davis; and this assignment of error is also overruled.

[7] The ninth bill of exceptions shows that H. C. Cole upon his examination was asked the following question: "Do you know whether J. W. Davis had sold Smith Bros. any timber?" to which he replied: "I understood from J. W. Davis and Smith Bros. that J. W. Davis sold timber to Smith Bros. for $2,000." To the question and answer objection was made, which was overruled by the court, and the plaintiff in error excepted. We think the evidence was proper; and the assignment of error is overruled.

[8] The subject of the tenth bill of exceptions is as follows: H. C. Cole, being on the stand, proved that he had mailed to Smith Bros. two letters, one dated October 30, 1911, and one dated November 27, 1911. The letter dated November 27, 1911, was the subject of bill of exceptions No. 5, and the propriety of reading it before the jury was there decided. The letter of October 30, 1911, which is the other letter embraced in bill of exceptions No. 10, is proved by Cole to have been written by him and addressed to Smith Bros., at Castlewood, Va. It is not specifically stated that Castlewood, Va., was the post office of Smith Bros., or that the proper postage was placed upon the letter, nor was any objection made on these grounds. The bill of exceptions only states a general objection, without stating any reason whatever. Under date of Castlewood, Va., November 20, 1911, Smith Bros. addressed a letter to Cole Bros., which is a reply to their letter of October 30, 1911. We are of opinion that there was no error in the ruling of the court in this respect; and this assignment of error is overruled.

Bill of exceptions No. 11 sets out copies of a number of letters written by Cole Bros. to Davis. They are chiefly letters urging a settlement of their demands upon him and are proved to be copies of letters written and mailed to J. W. Davis, none of which were replied to except those of October 21, 1911, and December 12, 1911, and which are the same letters set out in bill of exceptions No. 2, in which Davis promises to do what he can to meet his obligations. It is safe to say that their admission could not have prejudiced the plaintiff in error or have influenced the verdict of the jury.

The twelfth assignment of error is to the refusal of the court to set aside the verdict of the jury and grant a new trial. We are of opinion that the evidence fully warrants the verdict, and that there is no error in the judgment complained of, which is affirmed.

BUCHANAN and WHITTELL, JJ., dissent.

YELLOW POPLAR LUMBER CO. v. GOBLE

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.

Nov. 20, 1913.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 265*)—NEGLIGENCE—PROOF.

The happening of an accident is not evidence of negligence by the master; that being an affirmative fact to be established by the injured servant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 877-908, 955; Dec. Dig. § 265.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 278*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

The evidence offered to show negligence by a master must show more than a mere probability of negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 954, 956-958, 960-961, 971, 972, 977; Dec. Dig. § 278.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 97*)—MASTER'S DUTIES.

An employer is not bound to foresee and evade things which prudent men would not expect to happen.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 163; Dec. Dig. § 97.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 276, 278*)—ACTIONS FOR INJURIES—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—NEGLIGENCE.

Evidence, in an action by an employee for injuries sustained while making a tramway by a stump blown from the right of way striking him, held to show that defendant could not have reasonably anticipated or provided against the occurrence, and that it was an unavoidable accident.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 950-952, 954, 956-958, 960-972, 976, 977; Dec. Dig. §§ 276, 278.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Dickenson County.

Action by Frank Goble, by his next friend against the Yellow Poplar Lumber Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

J. C. Smith, of Clintwood, W. H. House, of Bristol, and E. M. Fulton, of Wise, for plaintiff in error. Sutherland & Sutherland and Chase & Daugherty, all of Clintwood, for defendant in error.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep.'s Index

CARDWELL, J. This action was brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged by the plaintiff, Frank Goble, suing by next friend, to have been sustained by him as a result of the negligence of the defendant, the Yellow Poplar Lumber Company. Here was a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff, which this writ of error brings under review.

In the view we take of the case it is only necessary to consider the last of the several assignments of error, which calls in question the action of the trial court in refusing to set aside the verdict as contrary to the law and the evidence.

It appears from the record that the plaintiff, a well-developed youth, at least 19 or 20 years of age, and of average intelligence, sought and obtained employment with the defendant company in its work of constructing a tram or logging road on Russell Prater creek, in Dickenson county. He was a man in size and appearance, and was therefore presumably capable of knowing and appreciating the dangers of the work in which he thus obtained employment, and he had worked for the defendant company a year before on like work upon another creek, and had been working at this particular place where he was injured about three days. The work of building this tramroad consisted mainly in first digging and blasting out the material, so as to make the roadbed, then in putting down the stringers and other superstructures. The work of making the roadbed was necessarily to be done first, and was followed by the laying of the stringers, etc., so as to make a complete superstructure over which logging trucks or cars were to be run, and the work of construction required a grading force or crew, a blasting crew, and behind them a stringer crew.

The plaintiff's employment was with the stringer force, and on the occasion of the injuries to him he had been at work with this force some distance behind, but in plain view of the place where the grading force were at work, and where the blast under a stump, which caused his injuries, was let off, of which timely notice and warning were given to him as well as to all others engaged in the work who might be or remain in a place of danger by reason of the blast. This blast was to be let off about 6 o'clock p. m., "quitting time," and the foreman of the grading crew, Ed. England, sent two men down to the point where the stringer crew was to tell them that the blast was to be let off, and all hands should get "plum out of the way." It was an established custom in such conditions to give the alarm of "fire" (which plaintiff clearly understood meant that a blast was to be set off), and when given the cry was taken up and repeated by others, and it was also the well-established rule of the defendant company (known to all engaged in the work) that, upon the alarm of "fire" being given, all employees were to see that every one was gotten out of danger. With every crew engaged in this work there was a foreman and a number of other laborers of long experience; one Orville Belcher being the foreman of the stringer crew with which the plaintiff was at work. Ample time to get out of the way of danger from said blast was unquestionably given, and the warning "fire" was taken up and repeated by others, including one Tackett, another workman engaged with a grading crew further down the creek from where Belcher's crew had been at work, and it is upon this repetition of the alarm by Tackett that the plaintiff mainly relies for a recovery of damages in this action, since it is practically conceded that there was no cause of complaint of the conduct of England or his men.

Tackett's deposition was taken on behalf of and read in evidence by the plaintiff, and the reason for repeating the alarm is thus stated by him:

"Q. Why did you holler 'fire'?

"A. There were fellows below us coming up that way. I knew they were going to shoot up there, and didn't know whether they heard them or not."

All of the witnesses for the plaintiff as well as for the defendant company testify that, according to the established rules governing the conduct of this work, employees engaged therein were to run and get away as fast as possible when notice that a blast was to be set off was given, or the alarm "fire" heard, and that it was from four to five minutes after such notice or alarm was given until the blast would go off. The grading crew to which Tackett belonged were working in sight of plaintiff's crew the day of the accident to him, and there had been no blasting by Tackett's crew on that day, or within three or four days before, when England, who had been in charge of the blasting crew at work up the creek from where plaintiff's crew were at work, had "sent two men down the line to tell everybody to get out of the way," and had seen Belcher's men (including the plaintiff) quit work, hang up their tools, and start away before he left the stump that was to be blown out, came on down the line to about where Belcher's crew had been working, and then crossed over the creek, giving the signal to set fire to the blast just as he crossed over, and then went on till he reached a public road, a safe distance away, and about two minutes before the blast went off. The creek was somewhat swollen from a recent rain; but there was little or no trouble in crossing it as England did. Some of plaintiff's witnesses who at the time had been working with England's crew came down the line of work, and along with the plaintiff and others got under a cliff, or shelving rock (called the "Goble cliff"), where they considered themselves safe. Belcher got out from under a rock where he first stopped, and sought shelter 35 feet lower down, and asked the men under the "Goble cliff" to come down to where he was; but "they said they were all right." These men under the "Goble cliff" had not only ample time to have gone to where Belcher was before the blast went off, but could have gone on 350 or 400 yards further away and beyond all possible danger.

The distance from the blast to where plaintiff had been at work was about 410 feet; from the cliff where plaintiff sought safety to the cliff under which Belcher, his foreman, and others stopped, was about 39 feet; from the cliff under which the plaintiff took shelter to the end of the spur where Tackett repeated the alarm of "fire" was 169 feet; and from the log drift in the creek over which England passed, just above where plaintiff had been at work, across through a bottom, and up the hillside to the county road, 455 feet. Plaintiff himself states that Tackett's crew "was working in sight that day, and there had been no blasting, and that he had passed up and down the creek two or three times that day before being hurt." He further states that "he was entirely under the rock ('Goble cliff'), but the stump bounced under and hit him." Other witnesses for the plaintiff who were with him at the time say that they got under the "Goble cliff" because they thought it safe, and the time fixed by them that they were under this cliff before the blast went off was about five minutes.

When the blast went off, the stump under which it had been placed and fired was blown into the air, and upon coming to the earth hit on the top or side of a cliff and caromed under it, striking and injuring only the plaintiff and that part of his body, viz., his legs, which were not fully protected by the overhanging cliff.

The foregoing are the salient facts shown in the evidence certified in the record, considered under the rule governing its consideration by this court, and upon which the defendant company is charged with negligence in causing the injury for which compensation is sought in damages.

The essential grievances stated in the declaration are that the defendant company failed to provide a suitable and safe place for the plaintiff to work; that sufficient rules and regulations had not been adopted by the company and enforced for the protection of the plaintiff while engaged in the work.

The evidence proves nothing in the situation to suggest danger to any one engaged in the defendant company's work at the time and on the occasion of the accident to the plaintiff which had not been duly guarded against by well-known rules governing employes engaged in carrying it on, and, as remarked, his right to a recovery in this action must rest alone upon the theory that the repetition of the alarm "fire" by Tackett confused the plaintiff and others, which caused them to seek shelter under the "Goble cliff," and not try to get further away from danger. No one knew better than the plaintiff, as his statement shows, that no blast had been prepared by Tackett's crew that day, and it is therefore inconceivable that he could have been confused by Tackett's repetition of the alarm given by England's men, and which Tackett, prompted by the dictates of humanity, repeated to those whom he saw approaching from below, and that, too, upon the most reasonable assumption by Tackett, that those to whom his warning was directed had not heard the cry of "fire" that had been put out by England and his men, and there was not the slightest reason for him to suppose that this act of his would be misinterpreted by any one, especially as the stringer crew could see where he had been at work, and in the ordinary course of events would know, by observation, that there was no blast to be let off by his crew; certainly that there was no blast to be let off by him or his crew without, in accordance with the established rules of the company, sending some one up the line of work to give warning, as England had done.

It is inconceivable, as it appears to this court, that any management could have anticipated that an employe engaged in the work, as was the plaintiff, would become panic-stricken under such circumstances, and the fact, as disclosed by the plaintiff's own statement, is that he was not panic-stricken or confused by Tackett's cry of "fire," and thus prevented from seeking protection elsewhere than under the "Goble cliff," but stopped where he did because he considered it safe to do so. It was clearly not for the want of time that the plaintiff got no farther away from the blast. England, after sending out notice of the impending blast, had crossed the creek, and gone 455 feet, 150 yards, and over, out into a public road, and Belcher had gotten out from under the rock where he first stopped, and gone farther away, and could have gone 350 or 400 yards farther before the blast went off; therefore the plaintiff remained, as did others, under the "Goble cliff," not because of the want of time to go elsewhere and farther away, but because they considered themselves fully protected, and they were, with the exception of the plaintiff, who was injured by an occurrence which could not have been foreseen or expected to happen by the exercise of ordinary or even extraordinary care.

[1] It has been over and over repeated in the decided cases in this and other courts that the negligence of the master cannot be inferred from the mere occurrence of an accident by which his servant is injured. That fact alone does not raise even a prima facie presumption that the master has been guilty of negligence or a breach of duty to his servant. Negligence of the master is an affirmative fact to be established by the injured servant.

[2, 3] "Negligence must be established by affirmative evidence, which must show more than a mere probability of a negligent act. The existence of negligence must not be left wholly to conjecture, and, in determining whether or not an act or omission of the master was negligent, it must be borne in mind that the master is not compelled to foresee and provide against that which reasonable and prudent men would not expect to happen." N. & W. Ry. Co. v. Witt, 110 Va. 117, 65 S. E. 489; N. & W. Ry. Co. v. McDonald, 106 Va. 207, 55 S. E. 554, and authorities cited.

[4] Our view of the evidence in this case is that it but shows that the plaintiff's injuries resulted from a pure accident that was not to be anticipated or provided against by reasonably prudent men, and for which injuries the defendant company cannot be held liable.

The judgment complained of must therefore be reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the cause remanded for a new trial thereof, if the plaintiff be so advised, to be had not in conflict with the views expressed in this opinion.

Reversed.

KEITH, P., absent.

CROGHAN v. WORTHINGTON HARDWARE CO., Inc.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.
Nov. 20, 1913.)

1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 108*)—CONTRACTS—MEMORANDUM.

A letter signed by the vendor of land stating that she would accept the offer made by complainant which was in writing is a sufficient memorandum to take the case out of the statute of frauds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 192-198, 200-208; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 53*)—RIGHT TO SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—IMPOSITION.

Specific performance of a contract for the sale of realty will not be denied on the ground that the agent whom plaintiff had engaged to sell the property had wrongfully acted as agent for both parties, where the agent merely transmitted complainant's offer to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 160-171½; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

3. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 65*)—RIGHT TO SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Where no fraud or imposition was practiced on a vendor of land and the contract was fairly entered into, the purchaser is entitled to specific performance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. § 196; Dec. Dig. § 65.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Rockbridge County.

Suit by the Worthington Hardware Company, Incorporated, against Anna Croghan. From a decree for complainant, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. & Duncan Curry, of Staunton, for appellant. Fitzhugh Elder, of Staunton, for appellee.

KEITH, P. The appellant was the owner of a house and lot in Staunton, which she listed with the firm of Tannehill & McCray, real estate brokers, for sale, at the price of $2,000. A short time after the property was placed in their hands, Tannehill & McCray wrote to appellant that they had a cash offer of $1,200 for the property, which she declined to take, and some time thereafter they again wrote to her, stating that the person who had offered $1,200 had increased his offer to $1,500 cash, and in this letter the real estate agents stated that "the property is in a bad condition, and is full of very bad tenants; only a few days ago they were up in the police court and heavily fined for keeping a disorderly house. In our opinion this house will never be very desirable for a residence and considerable money will have to be spent to make it into a warehouse." Relying upon the representation that the property was in bad condition and depreciated in value, she wrote Tannehill & McCray as follows:

"I accept the offer you made me for $1,500.00 cash. Thanking you, I am "Respectfully,

"Mrs. Anna Croghan."

Before the sale was closed, Mrs. Croghan went to Staunton, examined the property, and made inquiries about it, and found, as she claims, that the property was not in such condition as the agents had represented; that it was in good condition and repair, and was worth a good deal more money than she had been offered for it; and that on the market at public auction it would have brought from $2,200 to $2,500; and she declined to close the sale. Thereupon suit was instituted at the March term, 1913, of the circuit court of Rockbridge county by the purchaser, the Worthington Hardware Company, to compel a specific performance of the contract.

[1] The demurrer and answer of the defendant sets up two defenses: First, that no written memorandum of sale of the real estate in the bill mentioned is shown by the bill; in other words, she relies upon that provision of the statute of frauds which provides that "no action shall be brought upon any contract for the sale of real estate unless some memorandum or note thereof be in writing and signed by the party to be charged thereby or his agent." At the hearing, however, this ground of defense was very properly abandoned, as the letter from Mrs. Croghan just quoted is a sufficient compliance with the statute.

The second ground of demurrer is that Tannehill & McCray were acting as agents both for the complainant and the respondent, without it being made to appear from any avertment in the bill that they were so acting with the intelligent consent of both complainant and respondent. This defense will be more fully dealt with when we come to consider the proofs in the cause.

A number of depositions were taken by the plaintiff and defendant, with the result that the court entered a decree in accordance with the prayer of the bill, specifically enforcing the contract, and from that decree this appeal was awarded.

[2] Looking to all the facts of the case, we are of opinion that there is no merit in the defense based upon the proposition that Tannehill & McCray were agents for both the buyer and the seller. It is true that in their depositions, both Tannehill, one of the agents, and Worthington stated that the real estate firm were the agents of the hardware company, if we look merely to an isolated question and answer; but when their depositions are considered as an entirety, and we perceive just what idea the witnesses mean to convey, it is plain that they merely mean to say that the firm of Tannehill & McCray, who had been employed by appellant to make sale of the property, and with whom she had listed it for sale, were also the agents of the Worthington Hardware Company to this extent, and to this extent only that they were to transmit the offer of the purchaser for acceptance or rejection to Mrs. Croghan. In this there was no impropriety.

The principal question in this case grows out of the statements in the letter from Tannehill & McCray to Mrs. Croghan in which they inform her that her property is in bad condition and is full of very bad tenants, who had recently been heavily fined in the police court for keeping a disorderly house. We have carefully considered the evidence bearing upon this matter, and we think that it fully warrants the statements and representations as to the condition of the property in question, and the statement as to the character of tenants by whom it was occupied is fully borne out by the proof.

[3] Upon the whole case we are of opinion that no fraud or imposition was practiced upon Mrs. Croghan, either actual or constructive; that the contract was fairly entered into with a purchaser who was ready, able, and willing to comply with its terms; and that the decree of the corporation court, specifically enforcing it should be affirmed.

Affirmed.

YATES v. YATES.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.
Nov. 20, 1913.)

1. DIVORCE (§ 184*)—ACTIONS—NONRESIDENT.

Unless the record on appeal shows that proper constructive service has been had on a nonresident defendant, the action of the trial court in dismissing the case for want of jurisdiction will not be disturbed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cas. Dig. §§ 570-573; Dec. Dig. § 184.*]

2. DIVORCE (§ 78*)—ACTIONS—JURISDICTION.

In view of Code 1904, § 2259, declaring the circuit and corporation courts shall have jurisdiction of suits for divorce, but that no suit shall be maintainable unless one of the parties has been domiciled in the state for at least one year preceding the suit, which shall be broken in the county or corporation in which the parties last cohabited, or in the county or corporation in which plaintiff resides, the court's without jurisdiction to grant a divorce against a nonresident wife, where it appeared that the complainant husband had been domiciled in the state only since the separation from his wife, and that he had taken up his domicile in another county, wherein he began the action of constructive service by publication, notwithstanding the fact that he knew the address of his wife in the foreign city.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cas. Dig. §§ 258-263; Dec. Dig. § 79.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Rockingham County.

Bill by John C. Yates against Betsey Yates. From a decree dismissing the complainant appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. A. Hammer, of Harrisonburg for appellant. Sipe & Harris, of Harrisonburg for appellee.

KEITH, P. John C. Yates filed his bill in the circuit court of Rockingham county, charging that his wife had deserted him for more than three years prior to the institution of the suit, and that she is now a nonresident of Virginia. The defendant was not served with process, and did not appear or plead in person or by attorney. Depositions were taken to prove the allegations of the bill, and when the case came on to be heard the circuit court entered the following decree:

"For reasons expressed in writing and filed with the papers of the cause as part of the record, the court declines to enter jurisdiction of this cause and the same is dismissed from the docket of the court."

The opinion of the court, referred to in the decree, is in part as follows:

"The native domicile of these parties, plaintiff and defendant, was the District of Columbia, which was also the matrimonial domicile. The defendant is still a resident in the District of Columbia. The process was served on the defendant by order of publication, and there has been no appearance by defendant. * * * The plaintiff claims to be domiciled at Harrisonburg. He testifies that he resided in Alexandria from June, 1908, shortly after the separation with his wife in Washington, until December, 1911, when he became a resident of Harrisonburg. He is a Pullman car conductor. There is but one Pullman car running between Harrisonburg, and that one runs between Harrisonburg and Washington city, leaving

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-Note Series & Rep. Index

Harrisonburg at 6:40 a. m., and leaving Washington city on the return trip about 1 o'clock in the afternoon and getting back to Harrisonburg at 9:00 p. m. What kind of a domicile the plaintiff has established at Harrisonburg, or what caused him to establish a domicile there, he does not say. He does say, though, that Harrisonburg became his place of residence in December last, and he record shows that he commenced this suit for a divorce in January. In his deposition he gives the exact place of residence of his wife in Washington city, but he proceeded against her by order of publication, though it would have been cheaper and quite as effectual, under our statute, to give her personal service of notice by an officer in the District of Columbia. He took depositions in Washington city, where his wife lives, but without notice to her, resting upon the sufficiency of the order of publication. He brings his mother and father from their home in Alexandria to Harrisonburg to testify as witnesses in his behalf, though it would have been as convenient for them to take their depositions at their place of residence, and probably more economical also.

"The court considers the fair inferences and implications from the facts stated to justify the conclusion that the plaintiff has sought this jurisdiction for the purpose of getting as far away from his wife as possible and of concealing this suit from her, and that he has come to this jurisdiction for the purpose of bringing this suit, and that he has not established a bona fide domicile in this county.

"The court will decline jurisdiction and dismiss the suit. Besides the reasons already mentioned for refusing to entertain jurisdiction of the cause, it may be further pointed out that the affidavit on which the order of publication was based is unintelligible and therefore insufficient."

[1] To these reasons moving the circuit court, we may add that there is no order of publication before us at all. There is a statement made by the notary public in the caption to the depositions taken by him on the 16th day of March, 1912, that the defendant had been proceeded against as a nonresident, and the order of publication against her had duly matured; but there is not one word from the clerk, the order of publication itself is not before us, there is no appearance of defendant by counsel, in person or otherwise, and the decree does not state upon what papers the cause was heard in the circuit court.

[2] The statute fixing the jurisdiction of courts in matters of divorce is found in section 2259 of the Code: "The circuit and corporation courts, on the chancery side thereof, shall have jurisdiction of suits for annulling or affirming marriages, and for divorces. No suit for annulling a marriage or for divorce shall be maintainable, unless one of the parties has been domiciled in this state for at least one year preceding the commencement of the suit; nor shall any suit for affirming a marriage be maintainable, unless one of the parties be domiciled in this state at the time of bringing such suit. The suit, in either case, shall be brought in the county or corporation in which the parties last cohabited, or (at the option of the plaintiff), in the county or corporation in which the defendant resides, if a resident of this state, and if not a resident, in the county or corporation in which the plaintiff resides."

It seems that the parties never cohabited in this state, that the defendant is a non-resident of the state, and that the plaintiff claims a residence in Rockingham county, under the circumstances which we have already stated.

We agree with the circuit court that it properly refused, under the facts appearing in this case, to grant the decree prayed for. Its order refusing the divorce is affirmed.

Affirmed.

McCAULEY et al. v. GRIM et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 20, 1913.)

1. ACKNOWLEDGEMENT (§ 55*)—IMPEACHMENT.

The taking and certifying of acknowledgments to a deed is a judicial act, and therefore the officers' determination has the force of a judgment and cannot be collaterally impeached on the ground that one of the grantors did not execute the instrument, even by the testimony of the certifying justice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Acknowledgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 290-300, 303-314; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 198*)—COVERTURE—EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL.

Where a married woman, who had not joined in a conveyance of property in which she was a tenant in common by descent, stood by and saw the innocent purchaser make valuable improvements without the slightest intimation of her purpose to bring suit, waiting until after the death of her father, who was a tenant by the curtesy, she is estopped from claiming the land; the removal of the common-law disabilities of married women increasing their moral responsibilities of ownership at least in a court of conscience.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 733, 944; Dec. Dig. § 198.*]

3. JUDGMENT (§ 743*)—CONCLUSIVENESS—TITLE.

One whose right to land had been adjudicated in a previous suit wherein she claimed

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes that she conveyed it when an infant and so was entitled to disaffirm is concluded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1252, 1253, 1275-1277, 1284; Dec. Dig. § 743.*]

4. INFANTS (§ 99*)—ACTIONS TO DISAFFIRM—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action by an infant to disaffirm a conveyance of land, where at the time of making the deed he had nearly reached his majority and acted as an adult, making his own bargain and receiving the purchase money, the proof of infancy must be clear and satisfactory to warrant the court in depriving an innocent purchaser of the land of which he and his predecessors in title had been in undisputed possession for over 30 years, and the testimony of the complainant himself supplemented by his unsworn statement, made after the execution of the deed on which he obtained a marriage license, is insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Infants, Cent. Dig. § 294; Dec. Dig. § 99.*]

5. INFANTS (§ 31*)—ADVERSE HOLDING—MERGER OF TITLE.

Where all of the heirs entitled to land in remainder after the life estate of their father, who was tenant by curtesy, joined in a conveyance to defendants' predecessors in title, and the grantees remained in undisputed possession under claim of title for many years, their possession in 15 years ripened into prescriptive title against the life tenant and the two estates merged, and hence one of the heirs, who claimed that at the time of the conveyance he was an infant, must disaffirm the contract within 15 years after the title of the life tenant has been barred by prescription.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Infants, Cent. Dig. §§ 41, 46, 50-63; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

6. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 104*)—LOST GRANT—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where the origin of a possession is not accounted for, and would be unlawful unless there had been a grant, length of possession is prima facie evidence from which the jury may presume a conveyance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 595-602; Dec. Dig. § 104.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Rockingham County.

Bill by Amanda C. McCauley and others against Jacob Grim and others. From a decree for defendants, complainants appeal. Affirmed.

Chas. A. Hammer, of Harrisonburg, and Bumgardner & Bumgardner, of Staunton, for appellants. Conrad & Conrad and Sipe & Harris, all of Harrisonburg, for appellees.

WHITTLE, J. Appellant Amanda C. McCauley filed her bill at the May term, 1911, of the circuit court of Rockingham county, against the appellees, Deihl and Baugher and wife and others, for partition of 120 acres of land situated on Shenandoah river in that county.

Plaintiff asserts title to an undivided share in the land as one of the heirs of her mother, Elizabeth Grim, who intermarried with her father, Thomas Becks. The bill contains no specific denial that the plaintiff united with her husband and brothers and sisters in the deed of August 20, 1869, conveying the land in controversy to Polly Eutaler, Benjamin Rice, and Jacob Grim, under whom the present owners claim; but contents herself with the allegation that the parties referred to executed the deed, and exhibits what purports to be a copy, presumably for the purpose of showing that she was not a party to the instrument. During the progress of the case, however, the original deed was put in evidence, from which the plaintiff's name appears as one of the grantors.

Appellees demurred to the bill and set answers in which they averred that the deed was duly executed by the plaintiff and acknowledged before two justices whose certificates showed that on being examined by her privately and apart from her husband and having the writing fully explained to her she acknowledged it to be her act and declared that she had willingly executed the same and did not wish to retract it; that being the form of certificate required by statute at that time. The present owners also alleged that they were innocent purchasers of the land for value and without notice of plaintiff's claim, and Deihl proved that he had erected permanent improvements upon his part of the tract at a cost of upwards of $3,000.

Though, as observed, no such case is expressly made by the bill, the plaintiff, over the objection of the defendants, sought to prove by parol evidence that she neither executed nor acknowledged the deed. Among other witnesses introduced for that purpose one of the justices was relied on to impeach his own certificate. His deposition was taken 37 years after the date of the deed, and after the death of his associate.

[1] It is settled law in this state that taking and certifying acknowledgments to a deed is a judicial act, and therefore the certifying officers' determination of the matters involved has the conclusive force and effect of a judgment and imports absolute verity, and cannot be collaterally attacked.

"It cannot * * * be impeached, even directly, save in a court of equity, and not then except for fraud." 2 Minor on Real Property, § 1398.

Carper v. McDowell, 5 Grat. (46 Va.) 221, is a leading case in Virginia on the subject. Judge Baldwin, in his opinion, emphasizes the importance of giving conclusive effect to such certificates, and says: "It follows from the nature and purposes of such a jurisdiction (probate jurisdiction) that though its proceedings are often, and most generally, ex parte, yet that when perfected they are evidence for and against the whole world; that they cannot be impeached by xtrinsic evidence in collateral controversies concerning the rights to property; and that, as a general rule, they cannot be so impeached even directly in a suit instituted for the very purpose. If this were otherwise, the obvious result would be to defeat, in a great measure, the object of the probate jurisdiction, and to introduce much uncertainty and confusion into the administration of justice."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Index

In Building Association v. Groves, 96 Va. 38, at page 140, 31 S. E. 23, Judge Buchanan remarks: "The object of the registry laws is to secure titles, and to prevent frauds. The certificate of acknowledgment is required to perfect the deed for recordation. As the record when made is constructive notice to all the world, public policy requires that it should import as near absolute verity as is consistent with a due regard to the rights of the parties interested. It would open the door to great abuses and gross frauds to make the validity of the registration of a deed depend upon the recollection, or the subsequent conduct of the party who took the acknowledgment." Bank v. Paul, 75 Va. 394, 40 Am. Rep. 740; Murrell v. Diggs, 84 Va. 900, 6 S. E. 461, 10 Am. St. Rep. 893.

The present case furnishes an apt illustration of the mischievous consequences that would result from the relaxation of the rule which forbids that such certificates shall be drawn in question by parol evidence in collateral proceedings. The bill wholly fails to advise the defendants of the real ground upon which the plaintiff rests her case. The suit was brought 42 years after the date of the deed, and the evidence chiefly relied on to sustain plaintiff's contention is furnished by the depositions of herself and husband and one of the certifying justices, who was 79 years old when he gave his deposition, and he was testifying to a transaction which occurred 37 years before; and, besides, the developments in the case strongly tend to discredit him as a witness.

[2] Plaintiff lived in the immediate vicinity of the land, and stood by and saw an innocent purchaser making valuable improvements thereon, without the slightest intimation of her purpose to claim a share in the estate until she brought her suit. She seeks to excuse her conduct and long delay on the plea that she is a married woman, and also that her father, Thomas Becks, was tenant by the curtesy of the land, and that she filed her bill within four years after the life estate fell in. The common-law disabilities of married women with respect to their property rights have in large measure been removed by statute, and, in a court of conscience at least, their moral responsibilities of ownership should be proportionately increased. The effect of the alleged intervention of Thomas Becks' life estate will be considered in connection with Isaac T. Becks' petition.

Our conclusion upon this branch of the case is that the plaintiff is not entitled to relief, either upon the pleadings or evidence, and that her bill was properly dismissed.

[3] Elizabeth F. Tate and Isaac T. Becks, two of the other heirs, both filed petitions in the main case. They admit that they conveyed their interest in the land to grantors of the appellees, the former by her separate deed, and the latter by uniting in the deed of August 20, 1869, but they allege that they were infants when these conveyances were executed; and the object of their petitions is to repudiate their respective deeds on that ground, and to have partition of the land.

With respect to the claim of Elizabeth F. Tate, the record shows that she was a party to another litigation in which her title to the land was put in issue, which issue was determined against her by the court and her petition dismissed; hence the matter as to her is res adjudicata.

[4] The only direct evidence of Isaac Becks' age is furnished by his own deposition, supplemented by his unsworn statement, made after the execution of the deed, upon which he obtained a marriage license. The family Bible, in which was registered the ages of himself and his brothers and sisters, is in the possession of the plaintiff Mrs. McCauley; but the age register has been torn out, and was missing, it is said, when she received the book from her father. Isaac, at the date of the deed, was on the border line of his majority, and acted as an adult, making his own bargain and receiving his share of the purchase money. In such case it is no hardship to require that the proof of his infancy should be clear and satisfactory to justify a court in depriving an innocent purchaser for value and without notice of land of which he and his predecessors in title had been in undisputed possession for 30-odd years without any intimation of an adverse claim, though the claimant lived in the neighborhood. In a somewhat analogous case this court recently held the proof of infancy insufficient. Hurt v. Blankenship, 112 Va. 574, 72 S. E. 117.

[5, 6] But the decision need not be rested alone upon that consideration. Assuming that petitioner's statement that he was 21 years old on February 16, 1871, is true, and also conceding that he had the right to disaffirm his deed at any time within 15 years from that date (Wilson v. Branch, 77 Va. 65, 46 Am. Rep. 709; Birch v. Linton, 78 Va. 534, 49 Am. Rep. 381), nevertheless upon that basis his right would have expired on February 16, 1886, and he did not file his petition until July 30, 1906, a period of more than 20 years after he became of age.

But he seeks to avoid the effect of that limitation on the theory that his father, as tenant by the curtesy, was entitled to a life estate in the land, and that his petition was filed within 15 years after his death.

If that contention be sound as a general proposition, as to which we need express no opinion, it cannot prevail under the facts before us. The predecessors of the appellees took complete possession of the land at the date of their deed, on August 20, 1869, with the knowledge of all concerned, including the life tenant, Thomas Becks. The land was transferred to them on the land books for the ensuing year, and they and those claiming under them have continuously paid taxes thereon, and have remained in the open, adverse, and undisputed possession until now. Thomas Becks never questioned their title or possession, and substantially declared that they were the rightful owners of the property. It is true no deed from him was produced; yet the court, under the circumstances, might well presume a conveyance.

"Where the origin of the possession is not accounted for, and would be unlawful unless there had been a grant, length of possession is prima facie evidence, but only prima facie, from which a jury might or might not have presumed a conveyance." 2 Minor on Real Property, § 1035.

The defendants' possession was unquestionably under claim of title, and after the lapse of 15 years, to wit, on August 20, 1884, it ripened into a perfect title. On that date their title was as complete as if they had held the life estate by deed from Thomas Becks. They already had title to the remainder in fee simple, and the two estates in the same land having become vested in the common owners, under the common-law doctrine of merger, the lesser estate merged in the greater (1 Minor on Real Property, § 375), and the statute of limitations began to run against Isaac Becks at the time of the merger and not at the death of Thomas Becks. Upon this hypothesis, his right to disaffirm expired August 20, 1899.

In every aspect of the case the decree of the circuit court is plainly right and must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

GENT'S EX'X v. PRUNER'S ADM'R et al.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 20, 1913.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 133*)—WIFE'S SEPARATE ESTATE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to require a finding that defendant's decedent had no interest in certain real property purchased by his wife, but that the purchase money was furnished by her and borrowed by her from her stepson, so that no part of the property was subject to decedent's debts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 487-494; Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Russell County. Action by J. C. Gent's executrix against Pruner's administrator and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

S. B. Quillen and H. A. Routh, both of Lebanon, for appellant. W. W. Bird, of Lebanon, for appellees.

KEITH, P. J. C. Gent, at the March term, 1887, of Russell circuit court, recovered a judgment against George A. Pruner for $125, with interest from the 20th day of April, 1882, until paid. This judgment was docketed and has been kept alive by the issuance of executions, and at the second November rules of the circuit court of Russell county a bill was filed to subject to its payment a tract of land which it is alleged Pruner owned after the judgment was obtained against him.

This land had been sold during Pruner's lifetime to one J. P. Speer, and a deed was made for it, in which Fields and wife, from whom the land had been purchased, united with George A. Pruner and his wife so as to convey Speer a complete title. Speer sold the land to Hensdill, and the bill makes the representatives and heirs of George A. Pruner, deceased, J. P. Speer, W. A. Fields, J. D. Hensdill, and Virginia Pruner, the widow of George A. Pruner, parties defendant. None of the parties answered except Speer, Fields, and Hensdill. They deny that Pruner purchased from Fields or any one else the tract of land in the bill mentioned, but aver that the property was purchased by Mrs. Pruner, the wife of George A. Pruner, who paid the purchase money out of her own separate estate, and that George A. Pruner had no money with which to buy this or any other tract of land; and they claim that Mrs. Jennie Pruner was the sole purchaser of the property from W. A. Fields.

The facts seem to be as follows: Mrs. Virginia Pruner negotiated with Fields, who was the original owner of the house and lot in dispute, for its purchase. The bargain was made with her and the money in large part paid by her. Her husband was in very narrow circumstances, and the strong tendency of the evidence is to show that he never had the means to make, and did not make, payment for the land. As we have said, the negotiation for the purchase from Fields was made by Mrs. Pruner; the purchase price was $825; she was unable to pay the whole of it and called upon Joseph A. Pruner, re son of George Pruner by a former marriage, to aid her in the matter, which he did; and the whole purchase price was paid to Fields, but for some cause a deed was not promptly made to the purchasers by him. After a time the property was sold by Mrs. Pruner to J. P. Speer for the price of $1,500, who paid for it by two checks on the Citizens' National Bank, Lebanon, Va., both of which are dated November 21, 1906, one payable to J. A. Pruner for $800, and the other to Jennie Pruner for $700. This distribution of the purchase money between Joseph A. Pruner and Jennie Pruner was in accordance with her direction. She made the sale to J. P. Speer, and she apportioned the purchase money between Joseph A. Pruner, her stepson, and herself, and Speer gave her checks in accordance with her direction. As far as we can gather from the facts, this was a just and proper settlement of the transaction by which Joseph A. Pruner was reimbursed for the advances that he had made, and Mrs. Pruner received that which he had paid. When the deed came to be made, the title still being in W. A. Fields, who had been fully satisfied by the payment to him of the price at which he had sold the land to Mrs. Pruner, he and his wife united in the deed to Speer in order to give him a complete title.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes.

There is no satisfactory evidence that we have been able to discover of any money passing from George A. Pruner to his wife, or to W. A. Fields, or to any one else. He was a very old man, was a saddler and harness maker by trade, and so far as this record shows never had any money in advance of necessities of life which he could have applied to the purchase of this property. The only evidence of his having any money at all is that prior to his marriage to Virginia Pruner, which occurred when both he and she were well stricken in years, he sometimes gave to her trifling sums of money, the amount of which is nowhere stated. We have been unable to fasten upon anything in the record which shows that he ever made any such payment upon the land, or ever had any such interest in it as could be bound by the lien of the judgment against him. On the other hand, the strong preponderance of proof is that Mrs. Pruner bought the land in her own name; that she paid for it in part; that the residue of the purchase price was paid by her stepson, Joseph A. Pruner; that she negotiated the sale to J. P. Speer; that she was at that time regarded as the owner of the property; and that when sold the purchase price was properly divided between Joseph A. Pruner and herself, in accordance with their respective equities.

So that, upon the whole case, we are of opinion that the decree of the circuit court is right and should be affirmed.
Affirmed.

BUCHANAN and WHITTLE, JJ., absent.

TRIPLETT v. GUDEBROD.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.
Nov. 20, 1913.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 121*)—ACTION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—TERMS OF CONTRACT.

Evidence, in a suit of specific performance of an agreement to sell complainant a tract containing an orchard, held to show that the option to purchase contemplated that complainant paid the cost of certain labor, performed on the orchard tract, while the option was in force.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 387-395; Dec. Dig. § 121.*]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 18*)—OPTION—ACCEPTANCE—COMPLIANCE WITH TERMS.

An option to purchase land could only be accepted upon the terms contained therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 10; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

3. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 121*)—ACTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—COMPLIANCE WITH CONTRACT.

Evidence, in a suit for specific performance of an agreement to sell a tract containing an orchard, held to show that the complainant never offered to pay the cost of certain labor performed on the orchard tract, as required by complainant's option to purchase, and had no intention of doing so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 387-395; Dec. Dig. § 121.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Shenandoah County.

Suit by C. E. Gudebrod against J. I. Triplett. From a decree for complainant, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Tavener & Bauserman, of Woodstock, for appellant. R. T. Barton, of Winchester, and Walton & Walton, of Woodstock, for appellee.

BUCHANAN, J. This suit was brought by the appellee for the specific performance of an option for the sale of a tract of land containing about 68 acres. The trial court decreed specific execution, and from that decree this appeal was granted.

The option set up in the complainant's (appellee's) bill is as follows:

"Mt. Jackson, Va., March 11, 1911.

"Mr. C. E. Gudebrod, New York.

"My dear Sir:

"Referring to the memorandum agreement I gave you this A. M. I notice your arrange-

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

ment of the payment of the $60 M falls short $10 M and if agreeable to you, may make this amount in two equal payments maturing in 300 and 360 days in keeping with the previous payments. Regarding other omissions made in our hastiness, viz.: The sale of the 68 acres of land of mine lying opposite my orchard and immediately east of the R. R., I herewith grant you an option on it in connection with that given on my orchard at seventy-five (75.00) per acre on terms equivalent to cash, the growing crops reserved. Then as the season for seeding the orchard to clover, the spraying of the trees and the setting of fillers, &c., is at hand it must be understood that I am to be reimbursed with the expense of same, at cost, as incurred during the existence of the option. Awaiting your reply, I am,

"Yours very truly, J. I. Triplett."

The following is a copy of the "memorandum agreement" (which was also in the form of a letter) referred to in the paper upon which this suit is based:

"March 11, 1911.

"In consideration of one dollar paid to me receipt of which is hereby acknowledged I hereby give you thirty days option to purchase my orchard situated east of land owned by the Strathmore Orchard Co. including 27 acres of land in northwesterly part thereof including all improvements and containing in all about two hundred and twelve acres of land more or less, together with right to operate a ram for obtaining water during such time as water flows over the dam of the pond adjoining said property owned by me, together with all crops and labor performed on said property together with the ram and piping now connected with the water supply four mules and all tools and 3 wagons, implements of all kinds including 4 sets harness for the sum of sixty thousand dollars, payable

$ 1,000 one thousand dollars in	30 days.
4,000 four thousand	" " 60 "
5,000 five thousand	" " 120 "
5,000 five thousand	" " 180 "
5,000 five thousand	" " 240 "
10,000 ten thousand	" Oct. 1, 1912.
10,000 ten thousand	" Oct. 1, 1913, at 6%.
10,000 ten thousand	" Oct. 1, 1914."

Within 30 days after these options were given the appellant and appellee entered into a contract for the sale and purchase of the 212-acre parcel of land, known as the "Orchard tract" upon terms somewhat different from those set out in the option under which it was acquired. After the agreement for the sale of the orchard tract had been signed by the parties, and on the same day, the appellee claims that he exercised his right to purchase the 68-acre tract under his option on that tract and paid the appellant the sum of $20 thereon, as shown by a receipt given by the latter in the following language: "Received of Mr. C. E. Gudebrod twenty dollars on option of 68 acres and acct."

As will be seen from the option given upon the 68-acre tract, it provides, among other things, that "as the season for seeding the orchard, to clover, the spraying of the trees and the setting of fillers, &c., is at hand it must be understood that I am to be reimbursed with the expense of same, at cost, as incurred during the existence of the option." It is a concession in the case that there was no orchard on the 68-acre tract.

[1] The first question to be considered is whether or not the appellee accepted the offer for the 68-acre tract upon the terms submitted in the option; or, in other words, whether or not the minds of the parties met in making and accepting the offer. The appellee claims that when he agreed under his option to purchase the 68-acre tract, paid the $20, and took the receipt therefor, his understanding of the matter, and his intention, was to pay $75 per acre for the land in cash, or its equivalent, and to pay $20 additional on account of certain ploughing, etc., that had been done on the 68-acre tract during the existence of the option. The appellant, on the other hand, claims that his understanding of the matter, and his intention, was that he was to receive for the 68-acre tract of land the price of $75 per acre in cash or its equivalent, and the cost incurred by him in seeding the orchard tract in clover, spraying the trees, and setting out fillers, amounting to about $500 during the 30 days the orchard tract option was in force.

After the receipt for the $20 had been given, the attorney of the appellant, who was present, was directed to prepare an agreement embodying the terms of sale and purchase. On the next day, when the appellee returned to the office of the appellant to sign the agreement of sale, the parties differed as to that provision in the writing which provided for the payment of $500, the orchard account or claim of the appellant. The appellee refused to agree to pay that account, and the appellant refused to enter into an agreement for the sale of the 68-acre tract unless the appellee did pay, or agree to pay, the orchard tract account, and the parties separated. Within the next 30 days the appellee, as he claims, made a tender of $5,085.75, the purchase price of the 68-acre tract (67.81 acres) at $75 per acre. The appellant declined to receive the money. Thereupon the appellee made a special deposit of the same money, or the same amount of money, in bank. The language of the special deposit and the receipt of the bank therefor is as follows:

"Memo. of Instructions.

"To the Shenandoah Valley National Bank of Winchester, Va. Winchester, Va.

"I, the undersigned, C. E. Gudebrod, herewith deposit as a special deposit the sum of $5,085.00 in gold coin of the United States, and seventy-five cents ($.75) silver coin of the United States, to be held by said bank under the following instructions:

"1. Pay over and deliver the same to said J. I. Triplett, or his order, upon delivery by him to said bank for C. E. Gudebrod of a deed conveying in fee simple to the said C. E. Gudebrod the tract of 67.81 acres of land lying near Mt. Jackson, in Shenandoah county, Virginia, covered by the option and letter dated March 11th, 1911, free from all incumbrances, and with general warranty of title and covenant that the said grantor has the right to make a good and perfect conveyance thereof; and upon examination of said deed by the attorney of said C. E. Gudebrod.

"2. That upon the failure of said J. I. Triplett to deliver said deed then the said Shenandoah Valley National Bank shall pay over said fund to the clerk of the circuit court of Shenandoah county, Va., upon the institution of any suit by said C. E. Gudebrod hereafter against said J. I. Triplett for enforcement of the contract with regard to said 67.81 acres of land, to be held by said clerk subject to the orders of the court in said suit.

"Given under my hand this 11th day of May, 1911. Christian E. Gudebrod."

"Winchester, Va., May 11, 1911.

"Received May 11, 1911, of C. E. Gudebrod a special deposit of $5,085.00 in gold coin of the United States, and 75 cents in silver coin of the United States, making in all the sum of $5,085.75, with the following instructions:

"(1) Pay over and deliver the said to said J. I. Triplett, or his order, upon the delivery by him to said bank for said C. E. Gudebrod of a deed conveying in fee simple to the said C. E. Gudebrod the tract of 67.81 acres of land lying near Mt. Jackson, in Shenandoah county, Va., covered by the option and letter dated March 11th, 1911, free from all incumbrances, and with general warranty of title and covenant that the said grantor has the right to make a good and perfect conveyance thereof; and upon examination of said deed by the attorney of said C. E. Gudebrod.

"(2) That upon the failure of said J. I. Triplett to deliver said deed then the said Shenandoah Valley National Bank shall pay over said fund to the clerk of the circuit court of Shenandoah county, Va., upon the institution of any suit by said C. E. Gudebrod hereafter against said J. I. Triplett for enforcement of contract with regard to said 67.81 acres of land, to be held by the said clerk subject to the order of the court in said suit.

"Given under my hand this 11th day of May, 1911. Jno. W. Rice, Cashier,

"Shenandoah Valley Nat'l Bank,
"Winchester, Va."

The appellant was notified of this action by the appellee. Upon the appellant's declining to comply with the terms and conditions of the special deposit, the money was turned over to the clerk of the court, when this suit was instituted, which was in June following.

According to the appellee's evidence, he never agreed to the terms of the option contract for the sale of the 68-acre tract. He testifies that when the proposition was made to him to pay the cost of sowing clover seed, spraying, etc., on the orchard tract, whether made when closing the option on the orchard tract or when the option on the 68-acre tract was accepted by him, he continuously and positively refused to entertain the proposition, and that the $20 paid on option of 68-acre tract and account was made for plowing on that tract. The testimony of the appellant and his brother, who was present when the $20 was paid and the receipt given, is equally positive that the "account" referred to in that receipt was for labor performed on the orchard tract.

[2, 3] The weight of evidence is in favor of the appellant's contention on this question. He and his brother sustain it. The appellee alone testifies to his understanding and intention when he paid the $20 and took the receipt. The receipt itself tends to sustain the appellant's view. It shows that the $20 was paid and received "on the option of the 68-acre tract and acct." There was no option on that tract except that which provided for the plaintiff's reimbursement of the expense incurred on the orchard tract. In the absence of parol evidence, the natural, if not the necessary, meaning to be placed upon the receipt is that the $20 was paid on account provided for in the option on the 68-acre tract. Without the appellant's assent the appellee could not acquire the 68-acre tract, except upon the terms contained in the option. The fact that the labor, etc., the payment of which was provided for in the option, related to the orchard tract could not, as it seems to us, affect the question. The appellant had the right to impose such terms and conditions in that option as he saw proper; indeed, it appears that the principal object the appellant had in writing the letter of March 11, 1911, giving the option on the 68-acre tract, was to secure the payment of the expense, which he testified he knew had to be, or should be, incurred in caring for the orchard tract during the existence of the option upon it. The option on the orchard tract, as prepared by the appellee, not only did not provide for the payment of that expense, as the appellant claims it should have done, but used language which excluded that item of expense in the purchase price of the land. This fact the appellant claims he did not know when he signed the option on the orchard tract. That paper shows on its face that it was prepared hurriedly, as does the parol evidence, certainly without much care, for it wholly fails to make provision for the time when the last $10,000 of the purchase price was to be paid, or to make any reference to the 68-acre tract, which both parties seem to have considered had some connection with the orchard tract in their offers to buy and sell. It is true that when the terms of the agreement for the sale and purchase of the orchard tract were being considered, the item of expense for labor, etc., was mentioned, and the appellee refused to pay it. This, under the terms of his option on that tract, he clearly had the right to do, but when he determined to accept or take up the option on the 68-acre tract, he could not accept it upon any other terms than those which the option contained. He did not, at the time he claims to have accepted the option, offer or agree to pay the labor, etc., account; and he did not do so when he made the tender of the purchase price of the 68-acre tract, nor when he made the special deposit of the money so tendered in bank, nor when he filed his bill. On the contrary, the conduct of the appellee, as well as his words, clearly shows that he not only never offered or agreed to pay the labor, etc., account, whose payment was required by the terms of the option, but that he had no intention of doing so. The appellee never having accepted the terms of the option which gave him the right to purchase the 68-acre tract of land, he was not entitled to a specific execution thereof, and the trial court erred in so holding.

The decree complained of must be reversed, and the bill dismissed, with costs to the appellant, subject to a credit of $20, the amount paid by the appellee to the appellant, as evidenced by the receipt of April 10, 1911.

Reversed.

DEVERS v. DEVERS.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.
Nov. 20, 1913.)

1. DIVORCE (§ 37*)—GROUNDS—DESERTION.

Where complainant, who had promised to send his wife on a visit to her relations, failed to do so but consented to her making the trip upon the money being furnished by them and broke off a correspondence between them, complainant is not entitled to divorce on the ground of desertion, even though the wife stated she would not live with him at the place he had made his home.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 27, 107-134, 136-138; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

2. DIVORCE (§ 11*)—ALLOWANCE—PUBLIC POLICY.

It is against public policy to encourage divorce litigation, for the well-being and good order of society demand that husbands and wives shall endeavor in good faith to dwell in unity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 13, 472; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Rockingham County.

Bill by Albert Warren Devers against Etta Pearl Devers. From a decree denying a divorce, complainant appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. A. Hammer, of Harrisonburg, for appellant.

WHITTLE, J. This case is satisfactorily discussed in the opinion of his honor, the judge of the circuit court, as follows:

"The parties are both natives of this county. They were married at Atlanta, in New York state, the home of the defendant at that time, on July 22, 1906. After they were married they lived at Newport News, Va., for a year, then at Cincinnati for a while, then returned to Tenth Legion, in this county, where both had formerly lived. Whether the parties were ever domiciled together after their return to Tenth Legion does not appear from the evidence. The plaintiff lived with his mother, and the wife, for a couple of weeks before she went away, was with her aunt. Whether a home was provided for the wife at the home of her mother-in-law or elsewhere has not been put in evidence. At the time the desertion by the wife is alleged to have taken place, the plaintiff testifies his wife came over to his mother's home from her aunt's where she was then staying and asked the plaintiff to help her to pack her trunk, whereupon he asked her, 'Where are you going?' to which she replied, 'I am going home.' And the witness testified this is all she said, and he asked her no more questions, and nothing more was said at the time.

"The witness testified that he and his wife were living in Cincinnati when the plaintiff decided that, on account of the state of his mother's health, he would have to return to his old home to care for her. His wife objected to this course, but he overruled her objections and persuaded her to come along with him, promising her that if she would wait until April he would send her home. He says she gave him no rest from the time he got home until she left, and that when he got back he did not have the money to send her home, and that she left before he could supply it, sending to her home for the money. All of this looks very much like the plaintiff consented to his wife's going to her old home, whether because of her insistence or because he was not able to settle her in a home, or from the two causes combined, or from some other cause, makes no difference. The further conduct of the parties is to the same effect. The testimony of the plaintiff shows that his wife wrote to him on her arrival at her old home in New York, and he says he answered the letter. He also says he got other letters which he did not answer; the last one being received in October, 1908, nearly a year after she left. These letters were not put in evidence. The plaintiff says they were friendly. He also says he and his wife parted friends. He also says he never asked his wife to return to him. It is true the plaintiff testifies that either before they left Cincinnati or elsewhere, perhaps by letter (he does not specify), his wife said she would never live with him at Tenth Legion, but it does not at all appear that she meant to separate herself permanently from her husband or even contemplated that result as the probable consequence of her conduct. It seems pretty plain that the husband consented to her going. He has not only not sought to have her return but he discouraged and broke off the correspondence which she tried to keep up with him by letter, even to the extent of writing to him several letters that he never answered, and he seems never, either before or after her departure, to have made any provision to house her or take care of her."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[1] It is clear from appellant's own version of the matter, as given in his deposition, that the circumstances attending his wife's departure from Virginia did not amount to willful desertion or abandonment of her husband. He had agreed that, if she would defer her visit to her parents in the state of New York until the following April, he would pay her traveling expenses. With this promise he failed to comply, alleging by way of excuse that he did not have the money. She afterward obtained the necessary means from her own people and with the knowledge of her husband, who was present and assisted in packing her trunk, and who interposed no objection whatever to her going, left for the home of her parents. Appellant also testified that their parting was friendly. Continuing, he says: "She wrote me when she got home, and I answered the letter. I got something like two or three letters from her. The same as I would get from one of my relatives." Yet he admits that without cause he discontinued the correspondence and never wrote to her again. In answer to the question why he made no effort to induce his wife to return to Virginia and live with him, he replied: "I did not think it was any use, and the way she left me I was just like you would have been, or any one else, a little too stout to ask her." This was his attitude toward his wife, whose only offense was that, with his consent, she had gone on a visit to her parents. He ignored her friendly letters and was too proud to admit that he wished her to return; but he was not ashamed to use her absence, brought about, in part at least, by his own misconduct, as an excuse for a suit for divorce on the ground of willful desertion.

[2] Under the circumstances detailed it was and still is the duty of appellant earnestly to endeavor to bring about a reconciliation with his wife, to prepare a home, however humble, for their habitation, and to invite her to return to her duty and share it with him. The well-being and good order of society demand that husbands and wives shall in good faith endeavor to reconcile their differences and dwell together in unity and peace rather than to make occasion for resort to the courts for redress. It is against public policy to encourage such litigation, and it is not the province of a court to grant relief to a plaintiff whose misconduct has contributed to bring about, if indeed he did not connive at, the condition of which he complains.

The decree of the circuit court is without error and must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

HOUSE v. UNIVERSAL CRUSHER CORPORATION.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.
Nov. 20, 1913.)

1. COURTS (§ 116*)—RECORD—AMENDMENT.

Process to commence a suit is part of the record for the purpose of amendment, and the court will look to the return thereon, when necessary, not only to show the date of the return, but also the date of its execution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 369, 371-373; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 41*) — JUDICIAL NOTICE — TERMS OF COURT—COMMENCEMENT.

The time for the commencement of the terms of the several courts is fixed by general law, of which the court takes judicial notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 56-60; Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

3. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT (§ 58*)—POWER OF CLERK—DECLARATION—FAILURE TO FILE—TIME.

Code 1904, § 3241, provides that if one month elapses after process is returned executed as to any one or more of the defendants without the declaration being filed, the clerk shall enter the suit dismissed, although none of the defendants have appeared. Section 3236 provides that rules shall be held on the first and third Mondays in every month, but where the term of a circuit court of Richmond commences on the first or third Monday in a month, the rules which would otherwise have been held the first or third Monday, as the case may be, shall be held on the Monday of the preceding week. The December term of the circuit court of Richmond county commenced on the Tuesday after the first Monday, so that the December rules of that county were thrown back to the last Monday in November, which occurred on the 25th. Held, that, process having been returned on Monday, November 4th, the clerk had no power to dismiss the case for failure to file the declaration at the December rules; a month not having elapsed between the execution of the process and such rules.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dismissal and Nonsuit, Cent. Dig. §§ 134-139; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Russell County.

Action by C. W. House against the Universal Crusher Corporation. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

S. B. Quillen and W. A. Ayers, both of Lebanon, for plaintiff in error. Burns & Kelly, of Lebanon, for defendant in error.

KEITH, P. Plaintiff in error instituted in the circuit court of Russell county an action of trespass on the case against the Universal Crusher Company. Process was issued, returnable to the first November rules, 1912, and the clerk made the following entry upon his rule book:

"1912. 1st Nov'r Rules. Process executed and continued for declaration. 1912. 2nd Nov'r Rules. Continued for declaration. 1912. 1st December Rules. Dismissed for want of declaration."

At the ensuing term of the circuit court the plaintiff in error moved the court to be permitted to file his declaration, to which the defendant objected, whereupon the court rejected the motion and refused to permit the declaration to be filed, and the suit stood dismissed, and thereupon a writ of error was awarded by one of the judges of this court.

The petition insists that the return of the process "executed" is not sufficient, but is wholly void under section 3227 of the Code.

[1] We do not deem it necessary to pass upon the question thus raised, for its decision is immaterial to the proper disposition of this case. Process to commence a suit is part of the record for the purpose of amendment, and the court will look to the return thereon, when necessary, not only to show the date of the return, but also the date of its execution. Sands v. Stagg, 105 Va. 444, 52 S. E. 633, 54 S. E. 21.

Section 3241 of the Code provides that "If one month elapse after the process is returned executed as to any one or more of the defendants, without the declaration or bill being filed, the clerk shall enter the suit dismissed, although none of the defendants have appeared."

In this case the writ was returnable on Monday, November 4th, which was the first rule day. The service of process was then noted and the case was continued for a declaration. At second November rules it was again continued for a declaration, and at December rules it was dismissed.

Now section 3236 of the Code provides that rules shall be held on the first and third Mondays in every month and shall continue for three days, but that where the term of a circuit court or the chancery court of the city of Richmond, or of a corporation court designated for the trial of civil cases in which juries are required, happens to commence on the first or third Monday in a month, or on either of the two following days, the rules which would otherwise have been held on the first or third Monday, as the case may be, shall be held on the Monday of the preceding week.

[2] The time for the commencement of the terms of the several courts is fixed by general law, of which the court takes judicial notice.

[3] The December term of the circuit court of Russell county commences, according to law, on the Tuesday after the first Monday, so that the December rules were thrown back to the last Monday in November, which occurred on the 25th. The process having been returned on Monday, November 4th, and December rules occurring on Monday, November 25th, and the clerk having entered, as appears by the record, the dismissal of the case for want of declaration at first December rules, one month had not elapsed after the process was returned executed, and it follows that the case should have been restored to the docket and plaintiff in error permitted to file his declaration.

We are of opinion that the judgment must be reversed, and the case remanded, for further proceedings to be had not in conflict with this opinion.

Reversed.

WHITTLE, J., absent.

BURNER v. BURNER.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.
Nov. 20, 1913.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 120*)—PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT.

